THIS BOOK
MUST NOT BE REMOVED FROM THE LIBRARY

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON LIBRARY

REFERENCE ONLY

Mx. North Gallery

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2026

https://archive.org/details/weekly-law-reports_1958_1

THE WEEKLY LAW REPORTS 1958

The House of Lords

The Privy Council

The Supreme Court of Judicature

Assize Courts

and

Ecclesiastical Courts

VOLUME 1

London

THE INCORPORATED COUNCIL OF LAW REPORTING FOR ENGLAND AND WALES

BIBL.
LONDIN
UNIV.

Published by the Incorporated Council of Law Reporting for England and Wales · 3 Stone Buildings, Lincoln's Inn, London, W.C.2, and printed by The Eastern Press, Ltd., London and Reading

THE INCORPORATED COUNCIL OF LAW REPORTING FOR ENGLAND AND WALES

MEMBERS OF THE COUNCIL

Chairman—The Hon. Mr. Justice McNair

Vice-Chairman—Sir Leslie Farrer, K.C.V.O.

*

EX-OFFICIO MEMBERS

The Rt. Hon. Sir Reginald Manningham-Buller, Q.C., M.P.
Attorney-General

The Rt. Hon. Sir Harry Hylton-Foster, Q.C., M.P.
Solicitor-General

L. E. Peppiatt, Esq., M.C.
President of the Law Society

*

ELECTED MEMBERS

Lincoln's Inn
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Jenkins C. Montgomery White, Esq., Q.C.

Inner Temple
J. V. Nesbitt, Esq. R. T. Monier-Williams, Esq., O.B.E.

Middle Temple
W. Latey, Esq., M.B.E., Q.C. Montague L. Berryman, Esq., Q.C.

Gray's Inn
The Hon. Mr. Justice McNair The Hon. Mr. Justice Edmund Davies
* A. G. P. Johnson, Esq.

Appointed on the nomination of the General Council of the Bar
R. E. Megarry, Esq., Q.C. G. W. Tookey, Esq., Q.C.

The Law Society
Sir Leslie Farrer, K.C.V.O. (Firm: Messrs. Farrer & Co.)
Kenneth D. Cole, Esq. (Firm: Messrs. Linklaters & Paines)

* Co-opted Member.

*

Secretary—F. G. Hudson, Esq. Assistant Secretary—F. E. Smith, Esq.
3 Stone Buildings, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.2

EDITORS AND REPORTERS

*

Editor—R. P. Colinvaux, Barrister-at-Law

Assistant Editor—Charles Clayton, Barrister-at-Law

*

REPORTERS

House of Lords
F. H. Cowper

Privy Council
Charles Clayton

Court of Appeal No. 1
B. A. Bicknell E. Dangerfield

Court of Appeal No. 2
A. W. Grant M. M. Hill

Court of Appeal No. 3
F. R. Dymond J. A. Griffiths

Chancery Division
K. R. A. Hart I. G. R. Moses P. Price

Queen's Bench Division, Court of Criminal Appeal and Courts-Martial Appeal Court
J. D. Pennington J. F. Lamb C. J. Ellis
E. M. Wellwood

Probate and Divorce
J. B. Gardner E. Jones

Admiralty Division
A. L. G. Stewart-Richardson

Restrictive Practices Court
J. F. Lamb

Barristers-at-Law

HOUSE OF LORDS

Lord Chancellor: Lord Kilmuir

Lords of Appeal in Ordinary

Lord Simonds
Lord Morton of Henryton
Lord Reid
Lord Radcliffe
Lord Tucker
Lord Cohen
Lord Keith of Avonholm
Lord Somervell of Harrow
Lord Denning

COURT OF APPEAL

Lord Chancellor: Lord Kilmuir

Lord Chief Justice of England: Lord Parker of Waddington

Master of the Rolls: Lord Evershed

President of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division: Lord Merriman

Sir David Llewelyn Jenkins
Sir Francis Lord Charlton Hodson
Sir John William Morris
Sir Charles Robert Ritchie Romer
Sir Frederick Aked Sellers
Sir Benjamin Ormerod
Sir Edward Holroyd Pearce
Sir Henry Gordon Willmer

CHANCERY DIVISION

Lord Chancellor: Lord Kilmuir

Sir Harry Bevir Vaisey
Sir Ronald Francis Roxburgh
Sir Henry Wynn-Parry
Sir Charles Eustace Harman
Sir Harold Otto Danckwerts
Sir George Harold Lloyd-Jacob
Sir Gerald Ritchie Upjohn

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION

Lord Chief Justice of England: Lord Parker of Waddington

Sir Malcolm Hilbery
Sir Wintringham Norton Stable
Sir James Dale Cassels
Sir Gonne St. Clair Pilcher
Sir Austin Ellis Lloyd Jones
Sir Laurence Austin Byrne
Sir Donald Leslie Finnemore
Sir Geoffrey Hugh Benbow Streatfeild
Sir Gerald Osborne Slade
Sir Patrick Arthur Devlin
Sir William Gorman
Sir Patrick Redmond Joseph Barry
Sir Terence Norbert Donovan
Sir William Lennox McNair
Sir Cecil Robert Havers
Sir Colin Hargreaves Pearson
Sir Hildreth Glyn-Jones
Sir John Percy Ashworth
Sir Kenneth Diplock
Sir George Raymond Hinchcliffe
Sir Gilbert James Paull
Sir Cyril Barnet Salmon
Sir Herbert Edmund Davies
Sir Richard Everard Augustine Elwes
Sir Gerald Alfred Thesiger

PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION

President: Lord Merriman

Sir Hubert Joseph Wallington
Sir Henry William Barnard
Sir Charles Arthur Collingwood
Sir Seymour Edward Karminski
Sir William Arthian Davies
Sir Eric Sachs
Sir Aubrey Melford Steed Stevenson
Sir Geoffrey Walter Wrangham
Sir Joseph Bushby Hewson

Attorney-General

Sir Reginald Edward Manningham-Buller

Solicitor-General

Sir Harry Braustyn Hylton-Foster

TABLE OF CASES

(VOL. 1)

A

PAGE

ADAIR, REGINA v. 786
ADEY, RECTOR AND CHURCHWARDENS OF BISHOPWEARMOUTH v. In re ST. MICHAEL AND ALL ANGELS, BISHOPWEARMOUTH 1183
AEROMARINE OF EMSWORTH LTD., MCDOUGALL v. 1126
AIREY v. AIREY 729
ALDERMAN v. ALDERMAN AND DUNN 177
ALLAN, DECD., In re. CURTIS v. NALDER 220
AMERICAN JURIST, THE, AND THE CLAYCARRIER 792
ASSIMAKIS, FICK & FICK LTD. v. 1006
ATTORNEY-GENERAL, ALLIANCE ASSURANCE CO. LTD. v. In re SAHAL'S WILL TRUSTS 1243
ATTORNEY-GENERAL, DINIZULU v. 1252
AUTEN v. BAKER TODMAN & CO. 1300
AUTEN v. RAYNER 1300
AYU, REGINA v. 1264

B

B. (ORSE. S.) v. B. 619
BAKER v. T. E. HOPKINS & SON LTD. 993
BAKER TODMAN & CO., AUTEN v. 1300
BAKER (G. L.) LTD. v. MEDWAY BUILDING AND SUPPLIES LTD. 1216
BARBER v. MANCHESTER REGIONAL HOSPITAL BOARD 181
BARFORD (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), WESTMINSTER BANK LTD. v. 406
BASTIAN, REGINA v. 413
BAYLIS BAXTER LTD. v. SABATH 529
BEAVERBROOK NEWSPAPERS LTD., SILKIN v. 743
BERNARD v. BERNARD (SUTTON CITED) 1275
BIRCH v. COUNTY MOTOR AND ENGINEERING CO. LTD. 980
BLAKELEY v. C. & H. CLOTHING CO. (A FIRM) 378
BOSLEY v. BOSLEY 645
BOWEN v. BOWEN 508
BOYCE (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), WRIGHT v. 593, 832
BRAITHWAITE v. SOUTH DURHAM STEEL CO. LTD. 986
BRITISH BOXING BOARD OF CONTROL (1929), WILLIAMSON v. 539
BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION, HAZELL v. 169
BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION, HICKS v. 493
BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION, KEMSHEAD v. .. .. 173n.
BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION, O'CONNOR v. 346
BUCKINGHAM COUNTY COUNCIL, FAWCETT PROPERTIES LTD. v. 1161
BUCKINGHAMSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL, FYSON v. 634
BUCKINGHAMSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL, METAL RECOVERY AND STORAGE CO. LTD. v. .. 634
BUNTING, COSTAGLIOLA v. 580
BURCH v. BURCH 480
BURGESS v. BURGESS 608
BYATT v. BYATT 1
BYRNE v. KINEMATOGRAPH RENTERS SOCIETY LTD. 762

C

C. & H. CLOTHING CO. (A FIRM), BLAKELEY v. 378
CAISTER-ON-SEA, PARISH OF, In re. NORFOLK COUNTY COUNCIL v. KNIGHTS AND CAISTER-ON-SEA JOINT BURIAL COMMITTEE 309
CARGO LATELY LADEN ON BOARD THE FEHMARN (OWNERS) v. FEHMARN (OWNERS). THE FEHMARN 159
CASTIGLIONE, ERSKINE & CO. LTD., In re 688
CATTAN (L. E.) LTD. v. MICHAELIDES (A.) & CO. 717
CENTRAL COMMERCIAL PROPERTIES LONDON LTD., LYONS v. 869
CENTRAL LAND BOARD, LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. 1296
CHEMISTS' FEDERATION AGREEMENT (NO. 2), In re 1192

PAGE

CHESTER RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL, NORTH OF ENGLAND ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY v. In re NORTH OF ENGLAND ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY 1258
CLARKE, LES FILS DREYFUS ET CIE SOCIÉTÉ ANONYME v. 300
CLAYCARRIER, THE, AMERICAN JURIST AND 792
CLEAR v. CLEAR 467
CLUEIT v. CLUEIT 463
COLLIER (W.) LTD. v. FIELDING (VALUATION OFFICER) 323
COLMAN, DECD., In the Estate of 457
COOK, RAYMOND v. 1098
COSTAGLIOLA v. BUNTING 580
COSTS: PRIVY COUNCIL (PRACTICE NOTE) 39
COUNTY MOTOR AND ENGINEERING CO. LTD., BIRCH v. 980
COURT FEES AND FIXED COSTS (PRACTICE DIRECTION) 308
COUTTS & CO. v. DUNTROON INVESTMENT CORPORATION LTD. 116
COX v. COX 340
CRADDOCK v. HAMPSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL 202
CURTIS v. NALDER. In re ALLAN, DECD. 220
CUSACK-SMITH v. GOLD 611

D

D., AN INFANT, In re 197
DAFNIS THOMAIDES & CO. (U.K.) LTD., MARGULIES BROTHERS LTD. v. 398
DAVIES v. PRICE 434
DEBTOR, In re (NO. 472 OF 1950). Ex parte SWIRSKY 283
DENNING, DECD., In the Estate of 462
DENTAL MANUFACTURING CO. LTD., NOLAN v. 936
DINIZULU v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL 1252
DISTRICT BANK LTD. v. WEBB 148
DISTRICT BANK LTD. v. WEBB (PRACTICE NOTE) 66
DONALDSON v. DONALDSON 827
DOWNEY v. MOXON. In re MOXON'S WILL TRUSTS 165
DUNLOP RUBBER CO. LTD. v. LONGLIFE BATTERY DEPOT (A FIRM) 1033
DUNN, ALDERMAN AND, ALDERMAN v. 177
DUNTROON INVESTMENT CORPORATION LTD., COUTTS & CO. v. 116

E

EDGE v. JARVIS. In re JARVIS, DECD. 815
EDWARDS (VALUATION OFFICER), WILSON BROTHERS LTD. v. 955
EKE OJA v. KANU UKPAI 151
ESPRESSO COFFEE MACHINE CO. LTD. v. GUARDIAN ASSURANCE CO. LTD. 900
EVANS MEDICAL SUPPLIES LTD., MORIARTY v. 66

F

FATSTOCK MARKETING CORPORATION LTD. v. MORGAN (VALUATION OFFICER) 357
FAWCETT PROPERTIES LTD. v. BUCKINGHAM COUNTY COUNCIL 1161
FEHMARN, THE 159
FICK & FICK LTD. v. ASSIMAKIS 1006
FIELD, REGINA v. 793
FIELDING (VALUATION OFFICER), W. COLLIER LTD. v. 323
FILBY BROS. (PROVENDER) LTD., In re 683
FITZPATRICK, REGINA v. 793
FOMENTO (STERLING AREA) LTD. v. SELSDON FOUNTAIN PEN CO. LTD. 45
FOREIGN MARRIAGES (PRACTICE DIRECTION) 177
FRASER, In re. LEACH v. PUBLIC TRUSTEE 6
FREDIANI, HARDIE v. 318
FREEHOLD INVESTMENTS (LEYTONSTONE) LTD., GRANADA THEATRES LTD. v. .. 845
FYNN v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS 585
FYSON v. BUCKINGHAMSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL 634

G

GALE, SIMONS v. 678
GALLEY, NATIONAL COAL BOARD v. 16
GIBBARD, SAMROSE PROPERTIES LTD. v. 235
GLANVILLE (R. E.) & SONS (BOVEY TRACEY) LTD., RUTHERFORD v. 415
GODDARD v. MINISTER OF HOUSING AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT 1151
GOLD, CUSACK-SMITH v. 611

PAGE
GOLD v. PATMAN & FOTHERINGHAM LTD. 697
GOODYEAR TYRE & RUBBER CO. (GREAT BRITAIN) LTD. v. LANCASHIRE BATTERIES LTD. 655, 857
GORFIN v. ODHAMS PRESS LTD. 314
GRANADA THEATRES LTD. v. FREEHOLD INVESTMENTS (LEYTONSTONE) LTD. 845
GREEN (A BANKRUPT), In re. Ex parte THE TRUSTEE 405
GREEN v. GREEN AND PARTRIDGE 1104
GREEN, WERNICK v. 92
GRIFFIN v. SQUIRES 1106
GRIFFITH v. PELTON 65
GRIFFITHS, Ex parte. REGINA v. MEDICAL APPEAL TRIBUNAL FOR SOUTH WALES DISTRICT 517
GRIMTHORPE, DECD., In re 381
GUARDIAN ASSURANCE CO. LTD., ESPRESSO COFFEE MACHINE CO. LTD. v. 900
GUINNESS TRUST (LONDON FUND) FOUNDED 1890 REGISTERED 1902 v. WEST HAM BOROUGH COUNCIL 541

H

HAMPSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL, CRADDOCK v. 202
HARDIE v. FREDIANI 318
HAREWOOD HOTELS LTD. v. HARRIS 108
HARLOW URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, SAYERS v. 623
HARRIS, HAREWOOD HOTELS LTD. v. 108
HARRODS LTD., Ex parte THE DEBTOR v. In re MANN, A DEBTOR 1272
HARROWER, LEACH AND, LEACH v. (PRACTICE NOTE) 146
HASHAM v. ZENAB 1214
HASLIP, DECD., In the Estate of 583
HASTINGS, In re 372
HAVANT AND WATERLOO URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. NORUM 721
HAYNES v. QUALCAST (WOLVERHAMPTON) LTD. 225, 491
HAZELL v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION 169
HEAVEN & KESTERTON LTD. v. SVEN WIDAEUS A/B 248
HICKS v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION 493
HOLST & CO. LTD., WALSH v. 800
HOLYOAK (VALUATION OFFICER), SHELL-MEX AND B.P. LTD. v. 331
HOPKINS (T. E.) & SON LTD., BAKER v. 993
HORACE PLUNKETT FOUNDATION v. ST. PANCRAS BOROUGH COUNCIL 50
HUDSON'S BAY CO. v. THOMPSON (VALUATION OFFICER) 955
HYER, BARCLAYS BANK LTD. v. In re TARNPOLSK, DECD. 1157

I

IDDENDEN (ORSE. BRAINS) v. IDDENDEN 1041
INDEPENDENT ORDER OF ODDFELLOWS MANCHESTER UNITY FRIENDLY SOCIETY v. MANCHESTER CORPORATION 1171
INDEPENDENT TELEVISION AUTHORITY AND ASSOCIATED-REDIFFUSION LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS 943
INGRAM AND, WIGGINS v. WIGGINS (ORSE. BROOKS) 1013
INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, FYNN v. 585
INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, INDEPENDENT TELEVISION AUTHORITY AND ASSOCIATED-REDIFFUSION LTD. v. 943
INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, PYE-SMITH v. 905
INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. RACECOURSE BETTING CONTROL BOARD .. 122, 705
INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, WIGRAM FAMILY SETTLED ESTATES LTD. v. .. 213
INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. WOOD BROTHERS (BIRKENHEAD) LTD. 64
INSANITY: APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIAN (PRACTICE NOTE) 1015

J

JARVIS, DECD., In re. EDGE v. JARVIS 815
JEFFREY v. KENT COUNTY COUNCIL 927
JOHN SUMMERS & SONS LTD., TAYLOR v. 491
JOHNSTONE, MCNEILL v. 888
JOYCE, REGINA v. 140
JUBILEE COFFEE ROASTING CO. LTD., LONDON EXPORT CORPORATION LTD. v. 271, 661

K

KANU UKPAI, EKE OJA v. 151
KEMSHEAD v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION .. .. 173n.

PAGE
KENT COUNTY COUNCIL, JEFFREY v. 927
KINEMATOGRAPH RENTERS SOCIETY LTD., BYRNE v. 762
KITCHEN v. ROYAL AIR FORCE ASSOCIATION 563
KNIGHT, REGINA v. 793
KNIGHTS AND CAISTER-ON-SEA JOINT BURIAL COMMITTEE, NORFOLK COUNTY COUNCIL v. In re PARISH OF CAISTER-ON-SEA 309
KOESSLER, WOODWARD v. 1255
KRUHLAK v. KRUHLAK (NO. 2) 606

L

LANCASHIRE BATTERIES LTD., GOODYEAR TYRE AND RUBBER CO. (GREAT BRITAIN) LTD. v. 655, 857
LEACH v. LEACH AND HARROWER (PRACTICE NOTE) 146
LEACH v. PUBLIC TRUSTEE. In re FRASER 6
LES FILS DREYFUS ET CIE SOCIÉTÉ ANONYME v. CLARKE 300
LITHERLAND URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. LIVERPOOL CORPORATION 913
LIVERPOOL CORPORATION, LITHERLAND URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. 913
LLOYD-JONES, REGINA v. Ex parte THOMAS 1110
LOCK v. LOCK 1248
LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. CENTRAL LAND BOARD 1296
LONDON EXPORT CORPORATION LTD. v. JUBILEE COFFEE ROASTING CO. LTD. 271, 661
LONDON UNIVERSITY KING'S COLLEGE, WESTMINSTER CITY COUNCIL v. 920
LONG v. LLOYD 753
LONGLIFE BATTERY DEPOT (A FIRM), DUNLOP RUBBER CO. LTD. v. 1033
LYONS v. CENTRAL COMMERCIAL PROPERTIES LONDON LTD. 869

M

MCCARTAN, REGINA v. 933
MCDOUGALL v. AEROMARINE OF EMSWORTH LTD. 1126
MAINTENANCE AGREEMENTS (PRACTICE DIRECTION) 258
MCNEILL v. JOHNSTONE 888
MANCHESTER REGIONAL HOSPITAL BOARD, BARBER v. 181
MANCHESTER CORPORATION, INDEPENDENT ORDER OF ODDFELLOWS MANCHESTER UNITY FRIENDLY SOCIETY v. 1171
MANN, A DEBTOR, In re. Ex parte THE DEBTOR v. HARRODS LTD. 1272
MARGULIES BROTHERS LTD. v. DAFNIS THOMAIDES & CO. (U.K.) LTD. 398
MARLEY, REGINA v. 750
MARTINS BANK LTD., WOODS v. 1018
MATHESON, DECD., In re 246
MATHESON, REGINA v. 474
MEDCALF v. MEDCALF 338
MEDICAL APPEAL TRIBUNAL FOR SOUTH WALES DISTRICT, REGINA v. Ex parte GRIFFITHS 517
MEDWAY BUILDING AND SUPPLIES LTD., BAKER (G. L.) LTD. v. 1216
METAL RECOVERY AND STORAGE CO. LTD. v. BUCKINGHAMSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL .. 634
MICHAELIDES (A.) & CO., L. E. CATTAN LTD. v. 717
MINISTER OF HOUSING AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT, GODDARD v. 1151
MINISTER OF HOUSING AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT, REGINA v. Ex parte RANK ORGANIZATION LTD. 1093
MORGAN (VALUATION OFFICER), FATSTOCK MARKETING CORPORATION LTD. v. .. 357
MORIARTY v. EVANS MEDICAL SUPPLIES LTD. 66
MOXON'S WILL TRUSTS, In re. DOWNEY v. MOXON 165
MOYSE, THOMPSON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. 1063

N

NALDER, CURTIS v. In re ALLAN, DECD. 220
NATIONAL COAL BOARD, Ex parte 599
NATIONAL COAL BOARD v. GALLEY 16
NATIONAL INSURANCE (INDUSTRIAL INJURIES) COMMISSIONER, REGINA v. Ex parte RICHARDSON 851
NATTRASS, WHITTINGHAM v. 1016
NELSON v. NELSON 894
NELSON v. RIDER. In re RIDER'S WILL TRUSTS 974
NEWMAN v. NEWMAN 35
NOLAN v. DENTAL MANUFACTURING CO. LTD. 936
NORFOLK COUNTY COUNCIL v. KNIGHTS AND CAISTER-ON-SEA JOINT BURIAL COMMITTEE. In re PARISH OF CAISTER-ON-SEA 309
NORUM, HAVANT AND WATERLOO URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. 721

PAGE

NORTH OF ENGLAND ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY, In re. NORTH OF ENGLAND ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY v. CHESTER RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL 1258
NOSEDA, REGINA v. 793

O

ODHAMS PRESS LTD., GORFIN v. 314
O'CONNOR v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION 346

P

PAPADOPOULLOS, ROSS-CLUNIS v. 546
PAROJCIC (ORSE. IVETIC) v. PAROJCIC 1280
PATMAN & FOTHERINGHAM LTD., GOLD v. 697
PIOTROWSKA v. PIOTROWSKI 797
POTTER, REGINA v. 638
PRACTICE DIRECTION (APPEAL) 1258
PRACTICE DIRECTION (APPLICATIONS) 1299
PRACTICE DIRECTION (AUCTIONEERS' REMUNERATION) 1279
PRACTICE DIRECTION (COURT FEES AND FIXED COSTS) 308
PRACTICE DIRECTION (FOREIGN MARRIAGES) 177
PRACTICE DIRECTION (INSANITY: APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIAN) 1015
PRACTICE DIRECTION (MAINTENANCE AGREEMENTS) 258
PRACTICE DIRECTION (MATRIMONIAL CAUSES ON CIRCUIT) 1105
PRACTICE DIRECTION (ORIGINATING SUMMONS FOR FORECLOSURE) 655
PRACTICE DIRECTION (PAYMENT OUT) 856
PRACTICE DIRECTION (REPRESENTATION: MENTAL INCAPACITY) 791
PRACTICE DIRECTION (RESTRICTIVE PRACTICES) 1213
PRACTICE DIRECTION (SERVICE OF NOTICE OF APPEAL OUT OF TIME) 761
PRACTICE DIRECTION (TRIALS IN MIDDLESEX) 1291
PRACTICE NOTE. DISTRICT BANK v. WEBB 66
PRACTICE NOTE (FEES FOR INTERLOCUTORY WORK IN MATRIMONIAL CAUSES) 492
PRACTICE NOTE (PRIVY COUNCIL: COSTS) 39
PRACTICE NOTE. WING v. SPRING 926
PRITAM SINGH, REGINA v. 143
PRIVY COUNCIL: COSTS (PRACTICE NOTE) 39
PUBLIC TRUSTEE, LEACH v. In re FRASER 6
PYE-SMITH v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS 905

Q

QUALCAST (WOLVERHAMPTON) LTD., HAYNES v. 225
QUEEN, SURUJPAUL v. 1050

R

RACECOURSE BETTING CONTROL BOARD v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS .. 122, 705
RACECOURSE BETTING CONTROL BOARD v. YOUNG (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) .. 122, 705
RATCLIFFE, SCALA BALLROOM (WOLVERHAMPTON) LTD. v. 1057
RAYMOND v. COOK 1098
RAYNER, AUTEN v. 1300
REGINA v. ADAIR 786
REGINA v. AYU 1264
REGINA v. BASTIAN 413
REGINA v. FIELD 793
REGINA v. FITZPATRICK 793
REGINA v. HONE 522
REGINA v. JOYCE 140
REGINA v. KNIGHT 793
REGINA v. LLOYD-JONES. Ex parte THOMAS 1110
REGINA v. MCCARTAN 933
REGINA v. MARLEY 750
REGINA v. MATHESON 474
REGINA v. MEDICAL APPEAL TRIBUNAL FOR SOUTH WALES DISTRICT. Ex parte GRIFFITHS 517
REGINA v. MINISTER OF HOUSING AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT. Ex parte RANK ORGANIZATION LTD. 1093
REGINA v. NATIONAL INSURANCE (INDUSTRIAL INJURIES) COMMISSIONER. Ex parte RICHARDSON 851
REGINA v. NOSEDA 793

PAGE
REGINA v. OLIVER AUTOS LTD. 522
REGINA v. POTTER 638
REGINA v. PRITAM SINGH 143
REGINA v. RICHARD 522
REGINA v. ST. MARGARETS TRUST LTD. 522
REGINA v. SMITH 312
REGINA v. VACCARI 297
REID v. THOMAS BOLTON & SONS LTD. 266
RICHARDS v. RICHARDS 1116
RICHARDSON, Ex parte. REGINA v. NATIONAL INSURANCE (INDUSTRIAL INJURIES) COMMISSIONER 851
RIDER'S WILL TRUSTS, In re. NELSON v. RIDER 974
RIGBY, Ex parte 843
ROSS-CLUNIS v. PAPADOPOULLOS 546
ROYAL AIR FORCE ASSOCIATION, KITCHEN v. 563
ROYAL COLLEGE OF NURSING v. ST. MARYLEBONE BOROUGH COUNCIL 95
RUTHERFORD v. R. E. GLANVILLE & SONS (BOVEY TRACEY) LTD. 415, 491
RUTTER v. SHERIDAN-YOUNG 444

S

S. (AN INFANT), In re 391
SABATH, BAYLIS BAXTER LTD. v. 529
SAGE, In re 387
SAHAL'S WILL TRUSTS, In re. ALLIANCE ASSURANCE CO. LTD. v. H.M. ATTORNEY-GENERAL 1243
ST. MARGARETS TRUST LTD., REGINA v. 522
ST. MARYLEBONE BOROUGH COUNCIL, ROYAL COLLEGE OF NURSING v. 95
ST. MICHAEL AND ALL ANGELS, BISHOPWEARMOUTH, In re. RECTOR AND CHURCHWARDENS OF BISHOPWEARMOUTH v. ADEY 1183
ST. PANCRAS BOROUGH COUNCIL, HORACE PLUNKET FOUNDATION v. 30
SAMROSE PROPERTIES LTD. v. GIBBARD 235
SAYERS v. HARLOW URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL 623
SCALA BALLROOM (WOLVERHAMPTON) LTD. v. RATCLIFFE 1057
SCHLESINGER v. SCHLESINGER 882
SELSDON FOUNTAIN PEN CO. LTD., FOMENTO (STERLING AREA) LTD. v. 45
SERENE SHOES LTD., In re 1087
SHELL-MEX AND B.P. LTD. v. HOLYOAK (VALUATION OFFICER) 331
SHERIDAN-YOUNG, RUTTER v. 444
SILKIN v. BEAVERBROOK NEWSPAPERS LTD. 743
SILVER v. SILVER 259
SIMONS v. GALE 678
SKINNER, DECD., In the Estate of 1043
SMITH, REGINA v. 312
SOUTH DURHAM STEEL CO. LTD., BRAITHWAITE v. 986
SPRING, WING v. (PRACTICE NOTE) 926
SQUIRES, GRIFFIN v. 1106
STONE v. STONE 1287
SURUJPAUL v. THE QUEEN 1050
SUSSMAN (J. & P.) LTD., In re 519
SVEN WIDAEUS A/B, HEAVEN & KESTERTON LTD. v. 248
SWAN HUNTER & WIGHAM RICHARDSON LTD., TATE v. 39
SWANSEA CORPORATION, WORKING MEN'S CLUB AND INSTITUTE UNION LTD. v. .. 1135
SWIRSKY, Ex parte. In re A DEBTOR (NO. 472 OF 1950) 283

T

TARNPOLSK, DECD., In re. BARCLAYS BANK LTD. v. HYER 1157
TATE v. SWAN HUNTER & WIGHAM RICHARDSON LTD. 39
TAYLOR v. JOHN SUMMERS & SONS LTD. 491
TEASDALE v. WALKER 1076
TERSONS LTD., WOODLEY v. 1011
THOMAS, WILSON v. 422
THOMAS BOLTON & SONS LTD., REID v. 266
THOMSON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. MOYSE 1063
THOMPSON (VALUATION OFFICER), HUDSON'S BAY CO. LTD. v. 955
TOBACCO TRADE BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION CHARITABLE TRUSTS, In re 1118
TRANSPLANTERS (HOLDING COMPANY) LTD., In re 822
TROTT, DECD., In re 604
TRUSTEE, Ex parte. In re GREEN (A BANKRUPT) 405

V

PAGE
VACCARI, REGINA v. 297
VIENIT LTD. v. W. WILLIAMS & SON (BREAD STREET) LTD. 1267

W

W. WILLIAMS & SON (BREAD STREET) LTD., VIENIT LTD. v. 1267
WALKER, TEASDALE v. 1076
WALSH v. HOLST & CO. LTD. 800
WARD v. WARD 693
WEBB, DISTRICT BANK LTD. v. 148
WEBB (PRACTICE NOTE), DISTRICT BANK LTD. v. 66
WERNICK v. GREEN 92
WEST HAM BOROUGH COUNCIL, GUINNESS TRUST (LONDON FUND) FOUNDED 1890 REGISTERED 1902 v. 541
WESTMINSTER BANK LTD. v. BARFORD (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) 406
WESTMINSTER CITY COUNCIL v. LONDON UNIVERSITY KING'S COLLEGE 920
WHITTINGHAM v. NATTRASS 1016
WIGGINS v. WIGGINS (ORSE. BROOKS) AND INGRAM 1013
WIGRAM FAMILY SETTLED ESTATES LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS .. 213
WILLIAMSON v. BRITISH BOXING BOARD OF CONTROL (1929) (PRACTICE NOTE) .. 539
WILSON v. THOMAS 422
WILSON v. WILSON 1090
WILSON BROTHERS LTD. v. EDWARDS (VALUATION OFFICER) 955
WING v. SPRING (PRACTICE NOTE) 926
WOOD BROTHERS (BIRKENHEAD) LTD., INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. 64
WOODLEY v. TERSONS LTD. 1011
WOODS v. MARTINS BANK LTD. 1018
WOODWARD v. KOESSLER 1255
WORKING MEN'S CLUB AND INSTITUTE UNION LTD. v. SWANSEA CORPORATION .. 1135
WRIGHT v. BOYCE (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) 593, 832

Y

YOUNG (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. RACECOURSE BETTING CONTROL BOARD .. 122, 705

Z

ZENAB, HASHAM v. 1214

ERRATA

Page 67, Headnote, last line: For "affirmed" read "affirmed "in part."

Page 140: Appearances: M. D. L. Worsley appeared with J. H. Buzzard for the Crown.

Page 445: Appearances: A. E. Holdsworth appeared for the defendant.

Page 664: H. A. P. Fisher appeared for the buyers.

Page 688: Solicitors in In re Filby Bros. (Provender) Ltd. should read: Cosmo Cran & Co.; Hatchett Jones & Co.

INDEX TO SUBJECT-MATTER

ACCOUNTANT—Duties. See PATENT.

ADMINISTRATION — Administration pendente lite — Possibility of minority or life interest arising—Power to appoint a sole administrator—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 49), s. 163 (1).
* IN THE ESTATE OF HASLIP, DECD.
Karminski J. 1 W.L.R. 583

ADMIRALTY — Practice — Appeal — Time for appealing—Period calculated from date when decree is perfected — Decree perfected when settled in Admiralty Registry—R.S.C., Ord. 58, r. 4 (1).
THE AMERICAN JURIST AND THE CLAYCARRIER - - Willmer J. 1 W.L.R 792

ADOPTION — Consent of person liable to maintain — "Unreasonably withheld" — Test in case of putative father—Welfare of infant —"Parent"—Adoption Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 26), ss. 2 (4) (a), 3.
* In re D., AN INFANT - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 197

ADVANCEMENT — Presumption. See HUSBAND AND WIFE—Property.

AGENCY — Auctioneer — Remuneration — Sales of freehold and leasehold properties—Variation of basic scale.
* PRACTICE DIRECTION (AUCTIONEERS' REMUNERATION) - - Ch.D. 1 W.L.R. 1279

2. —— Company auditor. See LIMITATION OF ACTION.

AGRICULTURE — Agricultural holding—Notice to quit—Death of tenant—Administratrix of tenant—Whether "tenant with whom "the contract of tenancy was made"—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 63), s. 24 (2) (g).
* COSTAGLIOLA v. BUNTING
Norwich Assizes 1 W.L.R. 580

2. —— Agricultural holding — Notice to quit—Interests of efficient farming—Duty of tribunal to compare existing régime with that proposed by landlord—Jurisdiction of tribunal —Appeal — Certiorari or case stated — Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 63), s. 25 (1) (a), (5)—Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1954 (2 & 3 Eliz. 2, c. 39), s. 6 (1).
Crown Practice — Certiorari — Error of law on face of record—Agricultural land tribunal —Whether statement of case part of record—Wrong exercise of jurisdiction—Whether case stated or certiorari appropriate remedy.
* DAVIES v. PRICE - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 434

3. —— Agricultural holding. See LANDLORD AND TENANT—Business premises.

ANIMAL—Poultry—Disease—Poultry bought and resold day later for slaughter—Poultry fed—Whether poultry "fed" for slaughter—Live Poultry (Movement Records) Order, 1954 (S.I. 1954, No. 122), art. 2 (1).
* WERNICK v. GREEN Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 92

APPEAL — Admiralty — Time for. See ADMIRALTY.

2. —— Costs—Jurisdiction. See COSTS.

3. —— Criminal. See CRIMINAL LAW—Summing up.

4. —— To Divisional Court. See HUSBAND AND WIFE—Justices.

5. —— To House of Lords. See HOUSE OF LORDS.

6. —— Service of notice out of time. See COURT OF APPEAL.

7. ——. See HUSBAND AND WIFE—Practice.

ARBITRATION — Arbitrator — Misconduct —Trade custom — Agreement to arbitrate according to rules of trade association—Trade custom that umpire should remain with appeal board in the absence of parties—Communication by umpire to board—Provision in rules that umpire not to be member of board or to elect members of board—Whether adoption of custom contrary to natural justice—Whether custom excluded by implication from terms of arbitration agreement.
Contract — Custom or usage. Natural justice—Arbitration.
* LONDON EXPORT CORPORATION LTD. v. JUBILEE COFFEE ROASTING CO. LTD.
Diplock J. 1 W.L.R. 271
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 661

2. —— Award—Form—Implied term that award capable of enforcement as judgment—Jurisdiction to remit—Uncertainty—Arbitration Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 27), s. 26.
Contract—Implied term.
* MARGULIES BROTHERS LTD. v. DAFNIS THOMAIDES & CO. (U.K.) LTD.
Diplock J. 1 W.L.R. 398

3. —— Costs — Discretion of arbitrator — Successful party normally entitled—Claimants awarded one-tenth of their claim—Ordered to pay whole costs of arbitration — Whether judicial exercise of discretion — Based on mistake of law—Whether judge may consider mistake of law.
* HEAVEN & KESTERTON LTD. v. SVEN WIDAEUS A/B - Diplock J. 1 W.L.R. 248

4. —— Costs. See COSTS.

5. —— Stay of judicial proceedings—Submission to foreign court—Assignment of contract—Both parties strangers to foreign court

ARBITRATION—continued.

—Refusal to stay—Arbitration Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 27), s. 4.

* Cargo Lately Laden on Board the Fehmarn (Owners) v. Fehmarn (Owners). The Fehmarn
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 159

BANKING — Duty to customer — Advice on investment—Liability to customer.

Practice and Procedure — Discovery — Affidavit of documents—Duty of solicitor.

Solicitor — Officer of court — Duty as — Discovery.

* Woods v. Martins Bank Ltd.
Salmon J. 1 W.L.R. 1018

BANKRUPTCY — Gambling — Bankruptcy offence. See Criminal Law—Gambling.

2. —— Hearing in camera. See Court of Appeal.

3. —— Inquiry as to debtor's dealings—Summons against solicitor—Proceedings under R.S.C., Ord. 52, r. 25 for an account against bankrupt's former solicitor and attorney—Failure by solicitor to furnish information concerning certain property transactions—No order made in the proceedings — Subsequent issue of summons by trustee under Bankruptcy Act, 1914 — Whether matter res judicata — Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), s. 25.

Estoppel—Per rem judicatam.

* In re A Debtor (No. 472 of 1950). Ex parte Swirsky. - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 283

4. —— Receiving order—Payment of debt relied on — Application for withdrawal of original petition on debt being paid — Proceedings adjourned to ascertain position of other creditors—Receiving order made without substitution of another petitioner—Validity—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), s. 111.

* In re Mann, A Debtor. Ex parte The Debtor v. Harrods Ltd.
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1272

BARRISTER — Fees — Adjourned hearings. See Costs—Trustee.

2. —— Fees — Leading counsel — Issue of quantum of damages only — Disallowance of costs of leading counsel—Objection to taxation —Taxing master's discretion — R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 27 (41).

* Gorfin v. Odhams Press Ltd.
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 314

3. —— Fees for interlocutory work in matrimonial causes. See Husband and Wife —Practice.

BUILDING — Contract — R.I.B.A. form—Insurance — Subsidence of adjoining properties — No negligence by contractor—Damage covered by insurance by contractor in respect of own liability — Whether contractor bound under contract also to cover building owner, by insurance, against claim by adjoining owners.

Insurance — Provision for, in contract — Whether interests of both parties to be covered—Building contract—R.I.B.A. form—Injury to adjoining properties—Whether contractor liable to cover by insurance liability of building owner as well as his own liability.

Contract—Uncertainty.

* Gold v. Patman & Fotheringham Ltd.
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 697

CHARITY—Children—Deprived of parents—Gift of dwelling-house for use as children's home—Gift of fund for benefit of children in home — Whether valid charitable gifts — Charitable Uses Act, 1601 (43 Eliz. 1, c. 4), preamble.

* In re Sahal's Will Trusts. Alliance Assurance Co. Ltd. v. H.M. Attorney-General
Danckwerts J. 1 W.L.R. 1243

2. —— Education — Zoological Society — Objects — Advancement of education — Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955 (4 & 5 Eliz. 2, c. 9), s. 8 (1) (a).

Rates and Rating—Social welfare, etc.—"Main objects" — Meaning — Distinction between objects and powers — Education — Zoological Society — Memorandum — Main objects to encourage study of zoology and kindred sciences — Whether main objects "charitable or . . . otherwise concerned with "the advancement of . . . education"— Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955 (4 & 5 Eliz. 2, c. 9), s. 8 (1) (a).

* In re North of England Zoological Society. North of England Zoological Society v. Chester Rural District Council - - Vaisey J. 1 W.L.R. 1258

3. —— Profession — Nursing — Rates and rating—"Social welfare"—Royal College of Nursing—Claim for rating relief—Two main objects—Whether both charitable—"Advance "of nursing as a profession" — Meaning — Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955 (4 Eliz. 2, c. 9), s. 8.

* Royal College of Nursing v. St. Marylebone Borough Council
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 95

4. —— Rules — Alteration — Unincorporated association — No power in original rules to alter rules — Subsequent purported alterations to rules—Whether effective.

Charity — Investments — Rules — Scope of power to invest outside trustee securities.

* In re Tobacco Trade Benevolent Association Charitable Trusts
Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 1113

CHILD—Fall from railway carriage. See Railway.

COMPANY — Amalgamation — Scheme — Transfer of rights and duties—Continuation by transferor company of duties as executors. See Executor and Administrator.

2. —— Auditor—Agency. See Limitation of Action.

3. —— Capital — Reduction — Conditional resolution — Resolutions that upon "reduc-"tions of capital taking effect" operations

COMPANY—continued.

to take place not requiring sanction of court preceding operation requiring sanction of the court—All operations requiring sanction of the court to be treated as preceding conditional resolution—Not correct procedure when operations not requiring sanction of court part of scheme of reduction of capital—Companies Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 38), ss. 61, 66, 67, 69.
* In re CASTIGLIONE, ERSKINE & CO. LTD.
Roxburgh J. 1 W.L.R. 688

4. —— Shares—Issue—Passing of property to shareholder. See REVENUE—Estate duty.

5. —— Winding up — Petition — Incorrect spelling of company's name in petition, advertisement and winding-up order—Application for leave to amend—Jurisdiction.
* In re J. & P. SUSSMAN LTD.
Vaisey J. 1 W.L.R. 519

6. —— Winding up — Petition — Petition presented in county court—Subsequent petition presented in High Court—Concurrent jurisdiction — Transfer of proceedings to High Court—Companies Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 38), s. 219.
* In re FILBY BROS. (PROVENDER) LTD.
Roxburgh J. 1 W.L.R. 683

7. —— Winding up — Voluntary liquidation — Report by official receiver — Whether appropriate — Meaning of "the official "receiver"—Companies Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 38), ss. 256 (1) (2), 307 (1) (2).
* In re SERENE SHOES LTD.
Vaisey J. 1 W.L.R. 1087

COMPULSORY PURCHASE—Declaration of clearance area—Validity—Condition precedent —Whether council can be "satisfied" acting through their committees — "Resources" — Housing Act, 1957 (5 & 6 Eliz. 2, c. 56), ss. 42 (1), 43 (1) (2).
* GODDARD v. MINISTER OF HOUSING AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT
Lord Parker C.J. 1 W.L.R. 1151

CONDONATION. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

CONFLICT OF LAWS—Domicile—Change—Soldier—Acquisition of domicile of choice by soldier.
* STONE v. STONE
Collingwood J. 1 W.L.R. 1287

CONSPIRACY—Lawful protection of interest — Colour bar — Exclusion of coloured people from dance hall—Musicians' Union retaliate by banning members from performing in orchestra — Predominate reason for ban — Interest of members.
* SCALA BALLROOM (WOLVERHAMPTON) LTD. v. RATCLIFFE - - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1057

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW. See DELEGATED LEGISLATION.

CONTRACT—Implied term. See ARBITRATION.

2. —— Innocent misrepresentation. See SALE OF GOODS.

CONTRACT—continued.

3. —— Notice of conditions. See RESTRICTIVE PRACTICES.

4. —— R.I.B.A. See BUILDING.

5. —— transfer of hospital consultant. See NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE.

COSTS — Appeal — Jurisdiction — Judgment for plaintiffs at trial—Plaintiffs refused costs because of unsatisfactory witness—Appeal as to costs without leave of judge—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 49), ss. 31 (1), 50 (1)—R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 1.
Costs — Set-off — Counterclaim or set-off—Counterclaim amounting to equitable set-off.
* BAYLIS BAXTER LTD. v. SABATH
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 529

2. —— of application to settle terms of new tenancy. See LANDLORD AND TENANT—Business premises.

3. —— Counsel's fees for interlocutory work—Matrimonial causes. See HUSBAND AND WIFE—Practice.

4. —— County court action — Action for "payment of money"—Claim for unliquidated damages—Costs incurred by plaintiff before issue of summons — Fixed costs marked on summons by court officers — Payment into court within eight days—Whether plaintiff can recover taxed costs—Whether claim for damages an action for "the payment of "money"—County Court Rules, 1936 (S.R. & O., 1936, No. 626/*L.*17), Appendix D—County Court (Amendment) Rules, 1957 (S.I. 1957, No. 174 (*L.*1)), Ord. 11, r. 1 (1) (b).
* REID v. THOMAS BOLTON & SONS LTD.
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 266

5. —— Court fees and fixed costs—Alteration—Supreme Court Fees (Amendment) Order, 1958 (S.I. 1958, No. 160 (*L.*3)).
PRACTICE DIRECTION (COURT FEES AND FIXED COSTS) - Sup.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 308

6. —— Disallowance of leading counsel's fees. See BARRISTER.

7. —— Discretion of arbitrator. See ARBITRATION.

8. —— judicial separation—Woman named. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

9. —— Lump sum—Non-contentious business — Client's right to itemised bill. See SOLICITOR.

10. —— Taxation — Objection — Taxing master's certificate irregular — Summons to review incompetent—"Donaldson" practice —R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 27 (39) (40) (41).
* In re FRASER. LEACH v. PUBLIC TRUSTEE
Roxburgh J. 1 W.L.R. 6

11. —— Third party proceedings—Sale of goods—String contract—Claim for price of goods sold and delivered — Counterclaim by buyers that goods not of contract quality—Sellers joined suppliers as third party—Third party joined by fourth party — Failure of counterclaim—Sellers ordered to pay costs of third and fourth parties—Buyers ordered to pay sellers' own costs but not costs payable to third and fourth parties — Injudicial exercise of discretion.

COSTS—continued.

Arbitration—Costs—Discretion of arbitrator.

* L. E. Cattan Ltd. v. A. Michaelides & Co. (Turkie, Third Party, George (Trading as Yarns & Fibres Co.) Fourth Party)

Diplock J. 1 W.L.R. 717

12. —— Trustee—Indemnity as to costs—Counsel's fees — Hearings adjourned and curtailed—Payment of full fees demanded—Whether trustees entitled to indemnity.

Barrister—Fees—Brief fee—Hearings frequently adjourned — Trustee's right to indemnity.

* In re Grimthorpe, decd.

Danckwerts J. 1 W.L.R. 381

13. ——. See Legal Aid.

COUNTERCLAIM—Set-off. See Costs.

COUNTY COURT—Costs. See Costs.

2. —— Transfer of proceedings to other county court—Proceedings "more conveniently "or fairly tried in another court"—Second action arising out of same facts as first action —Application to transfer—Discretion of judge —Judge's duty on trying second action — County Court Rules, 1936, Ord. 16, r. 1 (1).

* Birch v. County Motor and Engineering Co. Ltd. - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 980

COURT OF APPEAL—Hearing in camera — Bankruptcy — Application for private examination of witness — Interests of justice—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), s. 25.

Bankruptcy—Hearing in camera—Court of Appeal.

* In re Green (A Bankrupt), ex parte The Trustee - - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 405

2. —— Notice of appeal — Service out of time — Dispensation with application for extension of time—R.S.C., Ord. 64, r. 7.

* Practice Direction (Service of Notice of Appeal out of Time)

C.A. 1 W.L.R. 761

CRIMINAL LAW—Accessory before the fact — Counselling or procuring felony — Alleged principals acquitted but another found guilty as accessory—Whether verdicts inconsistent—Murder—Criminal Law (Offences) Ordinance (Laws of British Guiana, 1930, c. 18), ss. 24, 25—Accessories and Abettors Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 94), ss. 1, 2.

Criminal Law — Evidence — Confession — Hearsay—Whether confession based on hearsay evidence against confessor.

British Guiana.

Surujpaul v. The Queen

J.C. 1 W.L.R. 1050

2. —— Carrying offensive weapon—"Offen-"sive weapon"—Boys breaking into cinema —Sheath knife used to frighten caretaker—

CRIMINAL LAW—continued.

Whether knife an offensive weapon—Prevention of Crime Act, 1953 (1 & 2 Eliz. 2, c. 14), s. 1 (4).

* Woodward v. Koessler

Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1255

3. —— Evidence — Confession — Inducement—Must relate to charge or accusation to render admission inadmissible.

* Regina v. Joyce - C.C.C. 1 W.L.R. 140

4. —— Evidence — Statutory declaration — Goods stolen from railway station—Proof of dispatch — Statutory declaration made by packers—Form—Exact terms of statute to be complied with—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 58), s. 41 (3).

* Regina v. Marley - C.C.A. 1 W.L.R. 750

5. —— False pretences—Procuring delivery of chattel with intent to defraud—Impersonation at driving test in order to obtain certificate of competence to drive to enable another person to obtain driving licence—Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 32 (1).

Criminal Law—Forgery—False document —Signature on certificate of competence to drive — Signature in driving examiner's journal — Impersonation at driving test to enable another person to obtain driving licence—Forgery Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27), s. 1—Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 86), s. 35 (1).

* Regina v. Potter

Leicester Assize 1 W.L.R. 638

6. —— Gambling — Contribution to insolvency by gambling—Liability for income tax at date of receiving order—Large sums lost by gambling within two previous years—Whether offence committed—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), s. 157 (1) (a) (b).

* Regina v. Vaccari - C.C.A. 1 W.L.R. 287

7. —— Indictable offence triable summarily —See Justices.

8. —— Indictment—Separate indictments—One charging manslaughter, the other stealing or receiving — Common evidence — Joinder of charges in one indictment—Purpose of joinder —Voluntary bill.

Criminal Law — Evidence — Depositions — Reading at trial—Substituted voluntary bill of indictment—Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 86), s. 13 (3).

* Regina v. Smith - C.C.C. 1 W.L.R. 312

9. —— Mens rea — Statutory prohibition — Hire-purchase — Finance company unaware that requirements not complied with—Whether guilty of an offence—Hire-Purchase and Credit Sale Agreements (Control) Order, 1956 (S.I. 1956, No. 180), art. 1.

Hire-Purchase—Credit control.

* Regina v. St. Margarets Trust Ltd. Regina v. Oliver Autos Ltd. Regina v. Richard. Regina v. Hone

C.C.A. 1 W.L.R. 522

10. —— Murder—Diminished responsibility —Right of prosecution to prove insanity—Onus of proof—Homicide Act, 1957 (5 & 6 Eliz. 2, c. 11), s. 2.

Criminal Law — Insanity — Diminished

CRIMINAL LAW—continued.
responsibility—right of prosecution to prove insanity on plea of diminished responsibility.
* REGINA v. BASTIAN - C.C.C. 1 W.L.R. 413

11. —— Murder—Diminished responsibility—Standard of proof—Medical evidence as to state of mind—Unchallenged medical evidence that abnormality such as substantially to impair mental responsibility—No evidence to contrary—Verdict of murder—Whether in accordance with evidence—Homicide Act, 1957 (5 & 6 Eliz. 2, c. 11), s. 2.
Criminal Law — Murder — Diminished responsibility — Practice — Plea of guilty to manslaughter not to be accepted—Practice to be followed when defence ask for verdict of manslaughter on ground of diminished responsibility and some other ground.
* REGINA v. MATHESON
C.C.A. 1 W.L.R. 474

12. —— Perjury — Oath — Sikh — Oath impracticable — Affirmation — Whether lawfully sworn—Oaths Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 46), s. 1—Perjury Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 6), ss. 1 (1), 15.
Evidence—Oath.
* REGINA v. PRITAM SINGH
Leeds Assizes 1 W.L.R. 143

13. —— Sentence — Borstal training — Further offence—Appropriate sentence.
* REGINA v. NOSEDA. REGINA v. FIELD. REGINA v. KNIGHT. REGINA v. FITZPATRICK - - C.C.A. 1 W.L.R. 793

14. —— Sentence — Concurrent sentences — Form — Indictment containing several counts—Sentence of "four years' corrective "training" — conviction on first count quashed — Whether concurrent sentences—Whether particular form of words necessary—Clear intention to pass concurrent sentences—Whether sentence on other counts in existence.
* In re HASTINGS - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 372

15. —— Sentence — Irish, dealing with — Probation order — Recognizance — Citizen of Ireland—Power to make term of order that he should return to Ireland—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 58), s. 3.
* REGINA v. MCCARTAN
C.C.A. 1 W.L.R. 933

16. —— Sentence — Overseas, sending offender back—Binding over—Recognizance—Power to make term of order that Nigerian offender should return to Nigeria.
* REGINA v. AYU - C.C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1264

17. —— Summing up — Direction to jury after retirement — Question from jury—Whether relevant evidence should be reviewed.
Criminal Law—Court of Criminal Appeal—Substitution of verdict—Alternative counts—Conviction on larceny count—No verdict on receiving count—Court's power to substitute verdict of receiving — Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 23), s. 5 (2).
Criminal Law—Larceny—Alternative counts for larceny or receiving—Conviction on one and no verdict on other—Appeal—Substitution of verdict—Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, s. 5 (2).
* REGINA v. ADAIR - C.C.A. 1 W.L.R. 786

CRIMINAL LAW—continued.

18. ——. See MENTAL DEFICIENCY.

CROWN — Privilege — Evidence — Police reports and other documents falling within privileged class—Public interest—Minister's certificate — Whether conclusive — Nature of Minister's function.
* AUTEN v. RAYNER - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1300

CROWN PRACTICE—Mandamus—Marriage Register. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

2. ——. See AGRICULTURE.

DAMAGES — Acceptance by widow of lump sum for herself and infants. See FATAL ACCIDENTS ACTS.

2. —— Continuing breach. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

3. —— Fatal Accidents Acts — Insurance. See NEGLIGENCE.

4. —— Personal injuries — Husband and wife — Wife in hospital at distance from home—Unpaid leave taken by husband to be near wife — Consortium — Whether husband entitled to recover loss of earnings during unpaid leave.
* MCNEILL v. JOHNSTONE
Devlin J. 1 W.L.R. 888

DEFAMATION—Fair comment. See LIBEL AND SLANDER.

DELEGATED LEGISLATION — Public safety or order—Relation to purpose—Cyprus—Collective punishment regulations—Validity — Collective fine order — Prior inquiry — Whether statutory requirements complied with—Emergency Powers Order in Council, 1939, s. 6 (1)—Emergency Powers (Collective Punishment) Regulations, 1955 to (No. 1), 1955, regs. 3, 5 (1) (2). Cyprus.
Minister—Determination by—Whether subject to review by courts — Required to be "satisfied"—Whether any grounds on which he could be satisfied—"As he thinks fit"—Cyprus commissioner—Collective fine order.
* ROSS-CLUNIS v. PAPADOPOULLOS
J.C. 1 W.L.R. 546

DESERTION. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

DOMICILE. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW—Faculty—Burial ground—Disinterment—Jurisdiction to grant faculty for disinterment of body from consecrated ground for cremation and subsequent re-interment of ashes.
* In re MATHESON, DECD.
Liverpool Consistory Court
1 W.L.R. 246

2. —— Faculty — Burial ground — Disinterment followed by reinterment in communal grave—Road widening scheme.
Cemetery.
In re* PARISH OF CAISTER-ON-SEA. NORFOLK COUNTY COUNCIL v. KNIGHTS AND CAISTER-ON-SEA JOINT BURIAL COMMITTEE - - Norwich Consistory Ct.
1 W.L.R. 309

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW—continued.

3. —— Faculty — Aumbry — Reservation —Whether reservation of the Blessed Sacrament theologically permissible and whether reservation an illegal ceremony — Whether aumbry an illegal ornament.
In re* St. Michael and All Angels, Bishopwearmouth. Rector and Churchwardens of Bishopwearmouth v. Adey.
Garth Moore Ch. 1 W.L.R. 1183

ESTOPPEL—By conduct—Mortgage—Recital in conveyance that vendors "seised in un-"encumbered fee simple in possession"—Conveyance subject to lease — Vendors in possession as lessees — Legal charge — Claim for possession by mortgagee—Whether vendors estopped from setting up existence of lease.
* District Bank Ltd. v. Webb
Danckwerts J. 1 W.L.R. 148

2. —— Per rem judicatam — Husband and wife—Divorce—Petition for divorce on the ground of adultery and desertion dismissed in exercise of court's discretion—Contents of the petition "sufficiently proved" — Whether parties estopped in subsequent suit for divorce from repeating and denying same charges.
* Bernard v. Bernard (Sutton cited)
Barnard J. 1 W.L.R. 1275

3. —— Res judicata. See Bankruptcy.

EVIDENCE—Admission by infant. See Husband and Wife—Divorce.

2. —— Confession. See Criminal Law.

3. —— Oath—Perjury. See Criminal Law.

4. —— Privilege — Police reports. See Crown.

5. —— Statutory declaration. See Criminal Law.

6. —— To explain latent ambiguity in will —Admissibility in specific performance action. See Vendor and Purchaser.

7. ——. See Criminal Law—Indictment; Husband and Wife.

EXECUTOR AND ADMINISTRATOR — Trust corporation—Pending dissolution—Bank named as executor in will—Probate action commenced by bank—Subsequent amalgamation with another bank—Whether first bank entitled to continue action or act as executor after transfer date.
Company — Amalgamation — Scheme — Transfer of rights and duties—Continuation by transferor company of duties as executors —Companies Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 38), ss. 206 and 208—Public Trustee Rules, 1912, as amended (S.R. & O. 1912, No. 348 (*L.*9) r. 30).
In the Estate of* Skinner, decd.
Sachs J. 1 W.L.R. 1043

FACTORY — Dangerous machinery (fencing) —Injury from fence—Carborundum wheel—Disintegration — Fence shifted — Injury — Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), ss. 14, 16.
* Rutherford v. R. E. Glanville & Sons (Bovey Tracey) Ltd.
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 415

FACTORY—continued.

2. —— Definition. See Rates and Rating.

3. —— Eyes — Protection — Dry-grinding —Failure to provide goggles—Breach of duty not shown to be cause of accident—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 49 —Protection of Eyes Regulations, 1938 (S.R. & O., 1938, No. 654), reg. 1, Sch.
Negligence—Safe system of work—Goggles —Dry-grinding—Employers' statutory duty to provide goggles—Goggles not provided—Probability that goggles would not have been used except under compulsion—Common law duty to provide goggles and ensure their use.
* Nolan v. Dental Manufacturing Co. Ltd. - - - Paull J. 1 W.L.R. 936

4. —— Floor — Opening — Plankway — Whether plankway used by workmen for access to different parts of shipyard gantries a "floor" — Workman falling through unfenced aperture in plankway—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 25 (3).
* Tate v. Swan Hunter & Wigham Richardson Ltd. - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 39

5. —— Lift—Gates—Duty to prevent person coming into contact with moving part —Person inserting hand through gates—Injury to hand by movement of lift—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 22 (3).
* Blakeley v. C. & H. Clothing Co. (a Firm) - Manchester Assizes 1 W.L.R. 378

FAMILY PROVISION — Limitation — Extension of time — Person having "an "interest in the estate" — Circumstance affecting the administration or distribution of the estate—Posthumous child of deceased —Summons issued after expiration of six-month period — Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938 (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 45), as amended, s. 2 (1a) (b) and (c).
In re* Trott, decd. Trott v. Miles
Upjohn J. 1 W.L.R. 604

FATAL ACCIDENTS ACTS — Damages — Administration — Administration by trustees instead of court—R.S.C., Ord. 22, r. 14 (1) (9).
* Woodley v. Tersons Ltd.
Devlin J. 1 W.L.R. 1011

2. —— Damages — Voluntary payment — Acceptance by widow of lump sum on behalf of herself and infants — Whether binding — Jurisdiction of court—R.S.C., Ord. 22, r. 14 (1), (9).
* Jeffrey v. Kent County Council
Paull J. 1 W.L.R. 927

FRAUD—On court. See Husband and Wife —Practice.

GAMING—Bankruptcy offence. See Criminal Law—Gambling.

HIRE PURCHASE — Credit control. See Criminal Law—Mens rea.

HOSPITAL—Dismissal of consultant. See National Health Service.

HOUSE OF LORDS—Leave to appeal—Terms—Money in dispute deposited at low rate of interest.
* INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. WOOD BROTHERS (BIRKENHEAD) LTD.
H.L.(E.) 1 W.L.R. 64

HOUSING—Rent—Scheme by local authority — Differential rent scheme — Rebates lost if tenant's income increased — Duty to inform council of increase — Failure of tenant to inform council — Under-payments of tenant added to next year's rent — Tenancy determined—Whether tenant liable for rebates not refunded.
* HAVANT AND WATERLOO URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. NORUM - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 721

HUSBAND AND WIFE—Alimony pendente lite—Judicial separation—Appeal pending—Appeal by wife against her own decree—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 25), s. 20 (1).
* SCHLESINGER v. SCHLESINGER
Sachs J. 1 W.L.R. 882

2. —— Condonation — "Knowledge" of adultery — Ingrained suspicion — Wrong man suspected of adultery—Continuance of conjugal cohabitation — Whether with requisite knowledge of all material facts.
* BURCH v. BURCH - Sachs J. 1 W.L.R. 480

3. —— Cruelty — Intention to injure — Frigidity — Wife's deliberate refusal to have children ripening into complete refusal of sexual intercourse — Knowledge of injurious effect of refusal on husband.
* WARD v. WARD - Scarborough District Registry (Mr. Commissioner McKee)
1 W.L.R. 693

4. —— Desertion — Just cause — Adultery, reasonable belief in—Evidence—Whether evidence of opportunity necessary.
* COX v. COX - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 340

5. —— Desertion—Separation agreement—Consensual oral separation — Written agreement for maintenance—No term in agreement defining period of separation — Subsequent offer by wife to return rejected by husband—Whether husband in desertion — Copies of agreement dated and exchanged after rejection of wife's offer — Whether consensual separation revived.
* BOSLEY v. BOSLEY - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 645

6. —— Divorce — Evidence — Admissions by infants—Admissibility.
Evidence — Admission — Infant, by — Admissions by infants before proceedings—Admissibility.
* ALDERMAN v. ALDERMAN AND DUNN
Sachs J. 1 W.L.R. 177

7. —— Divorce—Insanity—Care and treatment — Incurable unsoundness of mind — Divorce (Insanity and Desertion) Act, 1958 (6 & 7 Eliz. 2, c. 54), s. 1.
* LOCK v. LOCK
Mr. Commr. Latey Q.C. 1 W.L.R. 1248

8. —— Divorce — Insanity — Incurable unsoundness of mind—Appointment of guardian

HUSBAND AND WIFE—continued.
—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957 (S.I. 1957, No. 619), r. 66 (9).
* PRACTICE DIRECTION (INSANITY: APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIAN)
Probate 1 W.L.R. 1015

9. —— Judicial separation—Costs—Power of court to order woman named to pay wife's costs—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 25), ss. 3 (2), 14 (1).
* LEACH v. LEACH AND HARROWER (PRACTICE NOTE) - Mr. Commissioner Latey Q.C.
1 W.L.R. 146

10. —— Justices — Appeal to Divisional Court—Fraud alleged—Procedure—Appeal by notice of motion — Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39), s. 11—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957 (S.I. 1957, No. 619 (*L.*4)), rr. 36 (1), 73 (2).
* BYATT v. BYATT
Probate Div. 1 W.L.R. 1

11. —— Justices — Appeal to Divisional Court—Certificate of other pending matrimonial proceedings.
* PRACTICE DIRECTION (APPEAL)
Probate 1 W.L.R. 1258

12. —— Maintenance — Agreement — Death of party—Alteration of agreement after death of one party—Permission of court to apply—Application to be included in summons for directions—Maintenance Agreements Act, 1957 (5 & 6 Eliz. 2, c. 35), s. 2 (1).
* PRACTICE DIRECTION (MAINTENANCE AGREEMENTS) - - - Probate 1 W.L.R. 258

13. —— Maintenance—High Court—Quantum—Husband's capital made over to mistress to invest in business—Business run by both—Husband ordered to pay whole of private income to wife and children — Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 25), s. 23.
* DONALDSON v. DONALDSON
Karminski J. 1 W.L.R. 827

14. —— Maintenance — Justices — Adultery by wife—Fresh evidence—Application to discharge order—Practice—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39), s. 7.
* NEWMAN v. NEWMAN
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 35

15. —— Maintenance — Justices — Jurisdiction — Application to vary order — Order revoked without complaint to revoke being made—No jurisdiction to revoke.
Husband and Wife—Maintenance—Justices —Revocation of order—Possibility of reviver.
* BOWEN v. BOWEN - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 508

16. —— Marriage — Foreign marriages — Proof—Proof of foreign marriage in Divorce Division.
* PRACTICE DIRECTION (FOREIGN MARRIAGES)
Probate Div. 1 W.L.R. 177

17. —— Marriage — Register — Amendment —Court's jurisdiction — Whether mandamus lies to correct or erase entry—Authority to register marriage—Void marriage—Meaning of "marriage"—Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7

HUSBAND AND WIFE—continued.

Will. 4, c. 85), s. 23—Marriage Act, 1949 (12, 13 & 14 Geo. 6, c. 76), s. 61.

Crown Practice — Mandamus — Marriage register—Whether mandamus lies to correct entry.

* DINIZULU v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL
Paull J. 1 W.L.R. 1252

18. —— Nullity — Duress — Petitioner forced to go through marriage ceremony by her father's threats.

* PAROJCIC (ORSE. IVETIC) v. PAROJCIC
Davies J. 1 W.L.R. 1280

19. —— Nullity — Incapacity — Proof of — Parties only together for short period — Husband's impotence established.

* B. (ORSE. S.) v. B.
Barnard J. 1 W.L.R. 619

20. —— Nullity—Remarriage—Remarriage before decree made absolute—Whether second marriage bigamous.

* WIGGINS v. WIGGINS (ORSE. BROOKS) AND INGRAM
Mr. Commissioner Carr 1 W.L.R. 1013

21. —— Nullity—Epilepsy—Finding of recurrent fits of epilepsy at time of ceremony—Whether competent to investigate question of wilful refusal to consummate — Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 25), s. 8 (1) (b).

* IDDENDEN (ORSE. BRAINS) v. IDDENDEN
Collingwood J. 1 W.L.R. 1041

22. —— Practice—Submission of no case—Divorce—Submission of no case by husband——Election.

* WILSON v. WILSON
Karminski J. 1 W.L.R. 1090

23. —— Personal injuries—Loss of consortium. See DAMAGES.

24. —— Practice — Amendment to allege adultery—Discretion statement—Amendment of petition at trial to add charge of adultery based on facts disclosed in discretion statement.

* CLUEIT v. CLUEIT
Birmingham Assizes 1 W.L.R. 463

25. —— Practice—Appeal—Time bar—Refusal of decree—Notice of appeal served within six weeks of order—Appeal not set down within six weeks of order — Appeal against refusal of decree not governed by rule applicable to appeals against a decree nisi—Proper practice—R.S.C., Ord. 58, rr. 4, 5, 15.

* MEDCALF v. MEDCALF - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 338

26. —— Practice—Fresh evidence—Application to call fresh evidence after judgment reserved—Evidence not immediately relating to issues pleaded — Irrelevance — Application refused.

* BURGESS v. BURGESS
Collingwood J. 1 W.L.R. 608

27. —— Practice—Costs—Counsel's fee for interlocutory work.

Barrister — Fees — Matrimonial causes — Interlocutory work.

* PRACTICE NOTE. (FEES FOR INTERLOCUTORY WORK IN MATRIMONIAL CAUSES)
1 W.L.R. 492

HUSBAND AND WIFE—continued.

28. —— Practice — New trial — Divorce—Adultery—Denial of adultery—Dismissal of wife's petition—Later confession to perjured evidence on behalf of husband—Application for new trial—R.S.C., Ord. 58, r. 10.

Fraud—Fraud to court.

* PIOTROWSKA v. PIOTROWSKI
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 797

29. —— Practice — Pleading — Amendment to allege adultery—Discretion statement —Petition by wife for decree on ground of cruelty—Answer by husband denying cruelty and alleging cruelty by wife — Discretion statement by wife admitting adultery—Application by husband during trial of petition to amend answer by alleging adultery by wife and to serve notice on alleged co-respondent.

Husband and Wife—Maintenance—Divorce —Relevance of who obtained decree—Whole conduct of parties.

* CLEAR v. CLEAR - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 467

30. —— Practice — Pleading — Petition —Amendment—Application for leave to add allegations of cruelty in petition founded on desertion—Applicability of ordinary rules as to amendment—R.S.C., Ord. 28, r. 1—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957 (S.I. 1957, No. 619 (L. 4)), r. 82.

* NELSON v. NELSON - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 894

31. —— Property — Proceedings under Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 17—House purchased for home—Purchase in name of wife—Mortgage instalments paid by husband — Presumption of advancement — Husband's claim to share in house — Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 17.

Advancement—Presumption—Husband and wife—Purchase of matrimonial home in name of wife.

* SILVER v. SILVER - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 259

32. —— Practice—Cause list—Matrimonial causes on circuit—Remission between assizes —Order of entry in list.

* PRACTICE DIRECTION (MATRIMONIAL CAUSES ON CIRCUIT) - Probate 1 W.L.R. 1105

33. —— Practice — Service of charges on woman named—Allegations by wife of associations by husband with married women—Associations not adulterous but discreditable.

* GREEN v. GREEN AND PARTRIDGE
Birmingham Assizes 1 W.L.R. 1104

34. —— Property—Proceedings under Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 17—House purchased for home of two families—Purchase in name of wife and her father without husband's knowledge—Husband serving abroad at date of purchase—Purchase-money and subsequent mortgage instalments partly provided out of voluntary naval allotments made by husband to wife—Presumption of advancement in respect of allotments—Husband's claim to share in house and certain chattels not sustainable — Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 17.

* RICHARDS v. RICHARDS
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1116

INDUSTRIAL INJURY — Proof. See NATIONAL INSURANCE.

INFANT — Custody — Appeal from justices —Order directing change of custody — Stay pending appeal often necessary—Guardianship of Infants Acts, 1886–1951.

Infant — Custody — Chancery Division — Hearing in open court—Question raised of great public importance.

* In re S. (AN INFANT)
Roxburgh J. 1 W.L.R. 391

INSANITY—Diminished responsibility. See CRIMINAL LAW—Murder.

2. ——. See HUSBAND AND WIFE—Divorce.

INSURANCE — Marine — Warranty — Construction — Carriage of cattle — All arrangements for conversion of vessel made "at inception of this insurance"—Meaning — When insurance cover was obtained — "All arrangements"—Construction.

SIMONS v. GALE - J.C. 1 W.L.R. 678

JUDICIAL PRECEDENT—Fact. See RAILWAY.

2. —— Statute—Construction. See RATES AND RATING.

3. ——. See LANDLORD AND TENANT—Business premises.

JUSTICES—Appeal to Divisional Court. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

2. —— Case stated — Limitation — Extending time for stating or lodging case — No power to extend time by consent—Application to court — Magistrates' Courts Rules, 1952 (S.I. 1952, No. 2190), r. 63 — R.S.C., Ord. 59, r. 33.

* WHITTINGHAM v. NATTRASS (PRACTICE NOTE) - - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1016

3. —— Indictable offence also triable summarily — Application by prosecutor for summary trial—No formal application—Plea taken by justices' court—Facts stated by prosecution —Whether implied application by prosecutor for summary trial — Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 55), s. 18 (1) (2).

* Ex parte RIGBY - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 843

4. —— Maintenance—Revocation of order—Review. See HUSBAND AND WIFE—Maintenance.

5. —— Warrant — Bench warrant — Jurisdiction to issue—Prisoner committed on bail to quarter sessions for sentence—Failure to appear — Jurisdiction of recorder to issue warrant—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 58), s. 29 (3).

* REGINA v. LLOYD-JONES. Ex parte THOMAS - - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1110

LANDLORD AND TENANT — Assignment of lease or underletting — Covenant not to assign or underlet without consent—Not to be unreasonably withheld—Refusal on grounds of superior landlords' refusal—Whether reasonable—Superior landlords not before the court

LANDLORD AND TENANT—continued.

—Relief—Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 20), s. 56 (1).

* VIENIT LTD. v. W. WILLIAMS & SON (BREAD STREET) LTD.
Wynn-Parry J. 1 W.L.R. 1267

2. —— Business premises (security of tenure) — Application for a new tenancy — Landlord's intention to demolish—Whether intention merely ancillary to intention to relet — Right of landlord to possession — Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 (2 & 3 Eliz. 2, c. 56), s. 30 (1) (f).

Agriculture — Agricultural holding — Smallholding — County council as smallholdings authority—Delegation of powers to "Small-"holdings committee" — Committee's intention to demolish buildings on demised premises—Premises not a "smallholding"— Whether intention of local authority established—Agriculture Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 48), ss. 47, 66—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, s. 30 (1) (f).

Judicial Precedent—Court of Appeal decision —Decision on effect of Court of Appeal decision—Ratio decidendi—Whether early or later decision binding on Court of Appeal— Two members of court parties to both decisions.

* CRADDOCK v. HAMPSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 202

3. —— Business premises (security of tenure) — Discretion to grant new tenancy — Application for new tenancy — Landlord's notice of opposition, alleging breaches of covenant to repair — Contract for sale of tenant's interest, including any granted under Act, to third party — Breaches of covenant proved—Nature of judge's discretion to grant new tenancy — Irrelevance of contractual arrangement—Whether re-hearing appropriate —Misdirection not vitiating conclusion—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 (2 & 3 Eliz. 2, c. 56), s. 30 (1) (a).

* LYONS v. CENTRAL COMMERCIAL PROPERTIES LONDON LTD.
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 869

4. —— Business premises (security of tenure)—Landlords' intention to occupy for own purposes — Intention — How shown — Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 (2 & 3 Eliz. 2, c. 56), s. 30 (1) (g).

* ESPRESSO COFFEE MACHINE CO. LTD. v. GUARDIAN ASSURANCE CO. LTD.
Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 900

5. —— Business premises (security of tenure)—Occupation for purposes of tenant's business—"Mock auction" room used only in summer season—Business carried on by third party as tenant's "manager" under fictitious agreement—Premises vacated by "manager" at close of season—Application for new tenancy — Whether premises within Act of 1954 — Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 (2 & 3 Eliz. 2, c. 56), ss. 23 (1), 24 (1).

* TEASDALE v. WALKER
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1076

6. —— Business premises (security of tenure)—Terms of new tenancy—Rent—Hotel

LANDLORD AND TENANT—continued.

—Rent at which holding might "reasonably "be expected to be let in open market by will-"ing lessor"—Evidence as to hotel's profits in previous years—Admissible as indication of earning capacity to potential lessee—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 (2 & 3 Eliz. 2, c. 56), s. 34.

Landlord and Tenant—Business premises (security of tenure)—Costs—Application to county court to settle terms of new tenancy—Discretion.

* Harewood Hotels Ltd. v. Harris
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 108

7. —— Rent restriction—Possession application—Greater hardship—Dwelling-house reasonably required for occupation by landlord's daughter—Whether reasonable to make order — Movability of other tenants of landlord — Whether relevant consideration — Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 32), s. 3 (1), Sch. I, para. (h).

* Hardie v. Frediani - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 318

8. —— Rent restriction—Premium—Commuted rent—Rent reduced below two-thirds of rateable value — Lump sum payment — Whether premium or rent in advance—Whether tenant protected — Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 12 (7).

* Samrose Properties Ltd. v. Gibbard
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 235

9. —— Rent restrictions. See Mortgage.

10. —— Repairs—Act of 1938—Proceedings for damages for breach of covenants to repair—Whether "lessee" no longer in possession entitled to benefit of the Act of 1938—Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 20), s. 146—Leasehold Property (Repairs) Act, 1938 (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 34), s. 1.

* Cusack-Smith v. Gold
Pilcher J. 1 W.L.R. 611

11. —— Repairs — Covenant — "Struc-"tural repairs of a substantial nature"—Meaning of "structural repairs"—Meaning of "substantial."

* Granada Theatres Ltd. v. Freehold Investments (Leytonstone) Ltd.
Vaisey J. 1 W.L.R. 845

LEGAL AID—Costs—Order for costs against aided person — Variation — Procedure in Chancery Division — Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950 (S.I. 1950, No. 1359) (as substituted by the Legal Aid (General) (Amendment No. 1) Regulations, 1954 (S.I. 1954, No. 166), reg. 26), reg. 17 (4).

*Wing v. Spring (Practice Note)
Upjohn J. 1 W.L.R. 926

LEGITIMACY—Subsequent marriage—Time at which earlier marriage dissolved—Decree absolute and birth of child on same day—Decree subsequent in time to birth—Whether mother married when illegitimate child born—Legitimacy Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 60), s. 1 (1), (2).

Practice—Order—Time of effect—Whether relating back to earliest moment of day on which made.

* Kruhlak v. Kruhlak (No. 2)
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 606

LIBEL AND SLANDER—Fair comment—Test of fairness—Question of honesty.

* Silkin v. Beaverbrook Newspapers Ltd.
Diplock J. 1 W.L.R. 743

LICENSOR AND LICENSEE — Licensee or trespasser—Railway—Licensee involuntarily a few inches outside area of licence—Licensor's duty of care — Whether licensee constituted a trespasser.

Trespass — Involuntary — Licensee — Foot over railway sleeper.

* Braithwaite v. South Durham Steel Co. Ltd.
Edmund Davies J. 1 W.L.R. 986

LIFT. See Factory.

LIMITATION OF ACTION—Acknowledgment — Debt — Documents signed by party interested in debt — Company balance-sheets—Auditors' certificate — Whether agents of company—Limitation Act, 1939 (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 21), ss. 23, 24.

Company—Auditor—Whether agent of company—Statute-barred debt—Reference to debt in balance-sheet—Whether acknowledgment—Auditors' certificate of balance-sheets—Limitation Act, 1939 (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 21), ss. 23, 24—Companies Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 38), s. 162 (1).

* In re Transplanters (Holding Company) Ltd. - Wynn-Parry J. 1 W.L.R. 822

2. —— Case stated. See Justices.

3. —— Concealment by fraud—Solicitor—Negligence—Failure to issue writ in due time—Plaintiff's claim under Fatal Accidents Acts lost—Claim against solicitor after 13 years—Whether "right of action . . . concealed by ". . . fraud"—Limitation Act, 1939 (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 21), s. 26 (b).

Solicitor—Negligence.

Damages—Negligence—Solicitor.

* Kitchen v. Royal Air Force Association
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 563

4. —— Death of tortfeasor — Limitation applicable — Lapse of six years — Letters of administration taken out — Action brought within six months thereafter—Whether action statute-barred — Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 41), s. 1 (1) (3)—Limitation Act, 1939 (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 21), ss. 2, 32.

* Airey v. Airey
Diplock J. and C.A. 1 W.L.R. 729

5. ——. See Family Provision.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT — Powers — Transport—Free travel concessions for qualified persons—Contribution of one local authority to costs of another—How assessed—Public Service Vehicles (Travel Concessions) Act, 1955 (3 & 4 Eliz. 2, c. 26), s. 1 (4).

*Litherland Urban District Council v. Liverpool Corporation
Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 913

MAINTENANCE — Justices. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

MARRIAGE—Foreign—Proof of. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

MASTER AND SERVANT — Contract of service — Enforceability — Provision that servant to work for such periods weekly as might be "reasonably required."

Damages—Continuing breach—"Continuing "cause of action" — Repeated breaches of contract of service—R.S.C., Ord. 36, r. 58.

Damages—Concerted action—Single defendant — Breach of contract by servant — Servant's knowledge of similar breaches by fellow-servants—Coal-mine—Servant employed as deputy — Breach of servant's contract resulting in loss of day's output of coal—Loss attributable to individual servant.

* NATIONAL COAL BOARD v. GALLEY
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 16

2. —— Safe system of work. See NEGLIGENCE.

3. ——. See FACTORY.

MENTAL DEFICIENCY — Detention order —Validity—Order on conviction—Conviction of larceny—Order under section 8 (1) (b) of the Mental Deficiency Act, 1913 — Medical evidence that defendant "a feeble-minded "person within the meaning of the Mental "Deficiency Acts"—Whether evidence sufficient—Whether consent of parent or guardian required—Mental Deficiency Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 28), ss. 1 (1), (2), 6 (3), 8 (1) (as amended by Mental Deficiency Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 33)).

Criminal Law—Mental deficiency—Detention order.

* In re SAGE - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 387

MINES AND MINERALS—Coal—Working —Application by National Coal Board for leave to work — Delay of months through extension of time to objectors to file evidence —Application for interim order to expedite working — Expense caused by delay — "National interest" — Jurisdiction to make interim order — Form of Order — Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Act, 1923 (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 20), s. 1—Railway and Canal Commission (Abolition) Act, 1949 (12, 13 & 14 Geo. 6, c. 11), s. 1 (1) (a)—R.S.C., Ord. 54o.

* Ex parte NATIONAL COAL BOARD
Roxburgh J. 1 W.L.R. 599

MISREPRESENTATION — Rescission. See SALE OF GOODS.

MORTGAGE — Effect of recital. See ESTOPPEL.

2. —— Foreclosure—Default of appearance —Service of notices—R.S.C., Ord. 55, r. 5A.

* PRACTICE DIRECTION (ORIGINATING SUMMONS FOR FORECLOSURE)
Ch.D. 1 W.L.R. 655

3. —— Interest restriction — Interest in arrear for more than 21 days—Arrears subsequently paid—Whether statutory protection revived—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest

MORTGAGE—continued.

(Restrictions) Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 7 (a).

Mortgage—Interest restriction—Apportionment of principal money—Division of dwelling-house into six flats — Meaning of "other "lands" in Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 12 (5).

Landlord and Tenant — Rent restriction — Premises within the Acts — Dwelling-house subsequently divided into six flats—Date for assessing rateable value—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 71), s. 7.

* COUTTS & CO. v. DUNTROON INVESTMENT CORPORATION LTD. AND ANOTHER
Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 116

4. —— Practice — Summons for possession—Claim by third party to be entitled to possession — Hearing in open court — R.S.C., Ord. 55, r. 5A.

* DISTRICT BANK LTD. v. WEBB (PRACTICE NOTE) - Danckwerts J. 1 W.L.R. 66

NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE—Hospital —Transferred officer—Transfer to service of regional hospital board on setting up of national health service — Terms and conditions of service — Consultant's refusal to accept permanent contract owing to dissatisfaction with terms offered—Termination of services by board — Validity — Duty of Minister to hear appeal — National Health Service Act, 1946 (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 81), ss. 6 (2), 14 (1), 68 (1)—National Health Service (Transfer of Officers and Compensation) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1475), reg. 4.

Tribunal — Statutory — Control by courts— Declaration—Hospital board—Wrongful dismissal — Consultant on staff of hospital— Transfer to regional hospital board on appointed day — New contract incorporating terms and conditions of service issued by Minister — Termination by board — Whether board acted mala fide—Remedy for breach.

* BARBER v. MANCHESTER REGIONAL HOSPITAL BOARD - Barry J. 1 W.L.R. 181

NATIONAL INSURANCE — Industrial injuries benefit—Injury arising in the course of employment — Whether arising out of employment—Burden of proof—National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) Act, 1946 (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 62), s. 7 (4).

Burden of Proof — Industrial injuries — Whether injury arising out of employment.

* REGINA v. NATIONAL INSURANCE (INDUSTRIAL INJURIES) COMMISSIONER. Ex parte RICHARDSON
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 851

2. —— Industrial injuries benefit—"Paired "organs" principle — Whether legs "paired "organs"—National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) (Benefit) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1372), reg. 2 (5).

* REGINA v. MEDICAL APPEAL TRIBUNAL FOR SOUTH WALES DISTRICT. Ex parte GRIFFITHS - - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 517

NATURAL JUSTICE — Tribunal — Trade association — Disqualification recommended

NATURAL JUSTICE—continued.

—Remedy of injunction and damages—Contractual relationship—Necessity.

Trade Dispute—Act in furtherance of—Conspiracy—Predominant object—Use of unlawful means.

Restraint of Trade — Trade association—Tribunal — Quasi-judicial proceedings—Natural justice.

Trespass—Privacy, invasion of—Access to premises—False reasons given.

* Byrne v. Kinematograph Renters Society Ltd. - Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 762

NEGLIGENCE — Damages — Remoteness of damage—Novus actus interveniens—Woman locked in public lavatory — Injured while endeavouring to escape—Whether attempt to escape reasonable consequence of fault in lock.

* Sayers v. Harlow Urban District Council - - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 623

2. —— Duty of care — Extent — Rescuer — Employees overcome by fumes in well — Dangerous system of work — Employees ordered not to go down well—Whether orders sufficiently precise and urgent to absolve employers from blame—Attempt by doctor to rescue employees—Death of doctor—Whether right of action in injured rescuer when peril caused by negligent act arising out of relationship of master and servant.

Fatal Accidents Acts—Damages—Insurance —Estate duty—Half of estate left by deceased made up of payments under insurance policies —Whether estate duty on whole of estate to be deducted from benefit accruing to widow from the death—Fatal Accidents (Damages) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 7), s. 1.

* Baker v. T. E. Hopkins & Son Ltd. Barry J. 1 W.L.R. 993

3. —— Onus of proof—Res ipsa loquitur—Brick falling from occupier's building onto user of highway — Contractors and subcontractors engaged on work involving dislodgment of bricks—Whether brick speaks against more than one defendant—No explanation as to why brick fell—Evidence of safe system—Whether onus discharged.

* Walsh v. Holst & Co. Ltd. C.A. 1 W.L.R. 800

4. —— Safe system of work—General precautions—Metal moulding—Protective clothing available for workman—No orders or advice to wear it — Workman injured — Employers' liability.

Causation — Negligence — Contributory negligence.

* Haynes v. Qualcast (Wolverhampton) Ltd. - - - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 225

5. —— Solicitor—Concealment. See Limitation of Action.

6. —— Standard of care. See Railway.

7. —— System of work—Dry-grinding. See Factory—Eyes.

8. —— System of work—"Floor." See Factory.

9. ——. See Railway.

NUISANCE—Noise—Byelaw—Using noisy instrument in street "so as to cause annoy-"ance" to inhabitants—Whether musical instrument capable of being "noisy"—Proof of annoyance.

* Raymond v. Cook Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1098

NURSING—Rating relief. See Charity.

PATENT — Infringement — Licence — Limited licence to sell at list price — Sale below list price—Notice—Patents Act, 1949 (12, 13 & 14 Geo. 6, c. 87), s. 59 (1).

Restrictive Trade Practices—Conditions as to resale prices — Whether Act retrospective —Patent—Licence to sell at list price—Sale below—No proof of acquisition by defendant after Act in force—Whether Act retrospective in operation—Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956 (4 & 5 Eliz. 2, c. 68), s. 25 (1).

Statute — Retroactive effect — Restrictive practices — Conditions as to resale prices — Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956, s. 25 (1).

* Dunlop Rubber Co. Ltd v. Longlife Battery Depot (A Firm) Lloyd-Jacob J. 1 W.L.R. 1033

2. —— Licence to manufacture under — Assessment of royalties — Manufacture of patented articles — Terms as to royalties — Auditors' duties—Scope of inquiry—Sale of articles claimed to be outside patent field—Provision as to granting of licence to another trader at lower royalty—Construction of licence.

Accountant or Auditor—Auditor—Duties—Right to obtain professional advice.

* Fomento (Sterling Area) Ltd. v. Selsdon Fountain Pen Co. Ltd. H.L.(E.) 1 W.L.R. 45

PERJURY. See Criminal Law.

PERPETUITY RULE—Dependent or independent trust — Void gift of income — Discretionary trust during widowhood—Gift of capital "on the determination of" that trust —Whether gift of capital valid.

Trust and Trustee—Uncertainty, trust void for — Discretionary trust — Unascertainable class.

* In re Allan, decd. Curtis v. Nalder Danckwerts J. 1 W.L.R. 220

POULTRY. See Animal.

PRACTICE—Admiralty — Time for appeal. See Admiralty.

2. —— Allegations of discreditable though not adulterous association. See Husband and Wife.

3. —— Amendment of pleadings. See Trust and Trustee.

4. —— Chancery Division—Payment out of court—Application—Widow or married woman —Affidavit of no settlement—R.S.C., Ord. 55, r. 2 (1).

* Practice Direction (Payment Out) Ch.D. 1 W.L.R. 856

PRACTICE—continued.

5. —— Discovery — Duty of solciitor. See BANKING.

6. —— Matrimonial causes on circuit. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

7. —— Notice of appeal — Service out of time. See COURT OF APPEAL.

8. —— Settlement of action—Duty to inform Crown Office — Duty on all parties — R.S.C, Ord. 36, r. 29 (6).
* WILLIAMSON v. BRITISH BOXING BOARD OF CONTROL (1929) (PRACTICE NOTE)
Devlin J. 1 W.L.R. 539

9. —— Summary procedure under Ord. 14 —Affidavit in support of application—Application to sign judgment under Ord. 14, r. 1 (a) —Plaintiff assignee of debt — Sufficiency of supporting affidavit—Whether defects curable by supplementary affidavits—Failure to verify assignment in affidavit — Whether cured by production of assignment—R.S.C., Ord. 14, rr. 1, 2.
* LES FILS DREYFUS ET CIE SOCIÉTÉ ANONYME v. CLARKE - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 300

10. —— Trial — Appropriate list — Fixed dates.
* PRACTICE DIRECTION (TRIALS IN MIDDLESEX) - - - Q.B.D. 1 W.L.R. 1291

11. —— Writ — Specially endorsed writ — Statement of claim—No signature shown on copy writ served on defendant — Appearance entered — Whether writ duly served — R.S.C., Ord. 3, r. 6; Ord. 14, r. 1; Ord. 19, r. 4.
* FICK & FICK LTD. v. ASSIMAKIS
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1006

PRIVY COUNCIL—Appeal—Withdrawal of appearance—Judicial Committee Rules, 1925 and 1957.
* KHATIJABAI JIWA HASHAM v. ZENAB, EXECUTRIX OF HAJI G. HARJI
J.C. 1 W.L.R. 1214

2. —— Costs — Unnecessary expense — Inclusion of irrelevant matter in record—Cost of printing deducted from costs.
* PRACTICE NOTE (PRIVY COUNCIL: COSTS)
J.C. 1 W.L.R. 39

PROBATE — Practice — Representation—Mental or physical incapacity—Evidence of—Non-Contentious Probate Rules, 1954 (S.I. 1954, No. 796), r. 33.
* PRACTICE DIRECTION (REPRESENTATION: MENTAL INCAPACITY)
Probate 1 W.L.R. 791

RAILWAY—Level crossing—Accommodation road—Collision between motor-vehicle and train on foggy day—Whether special precautions to be taken by railway authorities and employees.
Negligence—Standard of care—Question of fact—Relevance of judicial precedent.
Judicial Precedent — Question of fact—Special class of situation—Application of legal principle.
Fact or Law—Negligence—Standard of care —special class of situation.
* HAZELL v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION
Pearson J. 1 W.L.R. 177

RAILWAY—continued.

2. —— Level crossing — Accommodation road — Collision between motor-vehicle and train on foggy day — Whether special precautions to be taken by railway authorities and employees.
* KEMSHEAD v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION - - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 173n.

3. —— Negligence — Child — Killed by falling from corridor guard's van in express train—Internal handle to door—Duty of care to three-year-old child — Whether danger reasonably foreseeable — Whether commission entitled to assume supervision of young child by responsible person—Whether insurers of safety.
Negligence — Child — Injury to — Railway —Child killed by fall from corridor guard's van — Internal handle to door — Whether danger reasonably foreseeable.
* O'CONNOR v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION - - - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 346

4. —— Negligence — Shunter injured by points lever—Practice tolerated by employers of riding on locomotive steps—Siting of lever —Foreseeability of risk—Failure to consider safety precautions.
Railway — Statutory duty—Points—Lever—Lever "parallel to the adjacent lines"—Meaning of "parallel"—Meaning of "adjacent"—Prevention of Accidents Rules, 1902 (S.R. & O., 1902, No. 616), para. 5.
Negligence — Contributory negligence — Inadvertence of workman — Shunter riding on locomotive steps — Duty of care enhanced—Knowledge of special risks—Failure to see lever — Inexcusable inadvertence amounting to negligence.
* HICKS v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 493

RATES AND RATING — Charity — "New list" — Notices terminating allowances — Sent before expiration of first year of new list—Whether premature—Meaning of "has effect"—When rate "made"—Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 90), s. 9 (2) (d), (e)—Local Government Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 26), ss. 54, 120—Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955 (4 & 5 Eliz. 2, c. 9), s. 8 (2), (3), (4), (5).
* WESTMINSTER CITY COUNCIL v. LONDON UNIVERSITY KING'S COLLEGE
Roxburgh J. 1 W.L.R. 920

2. —— Industrial hereditament — Adaptation for sale — Greetings cards distributors' premises—Cards received in bulk lots of identical cards—Sorted into saleable mixed parcels —Whether "adapted for sale"—Fur sorting and auction premises—Mixed parcels of skins received from individual sellers—sorted into auction lots of identical grade and species irrespective of ownership—Sold on commission on behalf of sellers—Whether "adapted for "sale" — Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 44), s. 3 (1)—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22), s. 149.
* WILSON BROTHERS LTD. v. EDWARDS (VALUATION OFFICER). HUDSON'S BAY CO. v. THOMPSON (VALUATION OFFICER)
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 955

RATES AND RATING—continued.

3. —— Industrial hereditament—Slaughterhouse—"Adapting for sale of any article"—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22), s. 149—Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 44), s. 3.

Factory—Definition.

* FATSTOCK MARKETING CORPORATION LTD. v. MORGAN (VALUATION OFFICER)
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 357

4. —— Plant and machinery — Baker's oven — Provers movable parts — Whether rateable—"To such extent as any such part "is, or is in the nature of, a building or "structure"—Meaning—Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 90), s. 24—Plant and Machinery (Valuation for Rating) Order, 1927 (S.R. & O., 1927, No. 480), Sch., Class 4.

* W. COLLIER LTD. v. FIELDING (VALUATION OFFICER) - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 323

5. —— Plant and machinery — Petrol station — Underground petrol storage tank—Whether "a building or structure"—Whether a "tank"—Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 90), s. 24—Plant and Machinery (Valuation for Rating) Order, 1927 (S.R. & O., 1927, No. 480), Sch., Class 4.

* SHELL-MEX AND B.P. LTD. v. HOLYOAK (VALUATION OFFICER) - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 331

6. —— Profit—Housing trust—Trust to provide decent housing for poorer classes — Trustees required to obtain return on capital of trust fund and increase fund — Whether trust established or conducted for profit—Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955 (4 & 5 Eliz. 2, c. 9), s. 8 (1) (a).

* GUINNESS TRUST (LONDON FUND) FOUNDED 1890 REGISTERED 1902 v. WEST HAM BOROUGH COUNCIL. SAME v. SAME
Divl. Ct. 1 W.L.R. 541

7. —— Royal College of Nursing. See CHARITY.

8. —— Social welfare — Assessment — Organization whose main objects concerned with advancement of education and social welfare—Previously exempt from rates as a scientific society — Exemption no longer claimed — Rate chargeable for first year of new valuation list where no rates previously charged—Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955 (4 Eliz. 2, c. 9), s. 8 (2).

Statute—Construction—Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955.

* HORACE PLUNKETT FOUNDATION v. ST. PANCRAS BOROUGH COUNCIL
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 30

9. —— "Social welfare"—Working men's clubs union—Convalescent home—Union formed to encourage working men to form clubs —Rating relief claimed for Union's convalescent home—Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955 (4 & 5 Eliz. 2, c. 9), s. 8 (1) (a).

* WORKING MEN'S CLUB AND INSTITUTE UNION LTD. v. SWANSEA CORPORATION
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1135

RATES AND RATING—continued.

10. —— "Social welfare" — Friendly society — Oddfellows — Society providing benefits and assurance — Claim by society for rating relief—Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955 (4 & 5 Eliz. 2, c. 9), s. 8.

Judicial Precedent—Statute—Construction—Whether doctrine of precedent to public benefit.

* INDEPENDENT ORDER OF ODDFELLOWS MANCHESTER UNITY FRIENDLY SOCIETY v. MANCHESTER CORPORATION
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1171

RES IPSA LOQUITUR. See NEGLIGENCE.

RES JUDICATA. See BANKRUPTCY.

RESCUE. See NEGLIGENCE—Duty of care.

RESTRAINT OF TRADE—Trade association tribunal. See NATURAL JUSTICE.

RESTRICTIVE PRACTICES—Conditions as to resale prices — Individual enforcement—Notice of restriction—Whether express notice of actual conditions essential — Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956 (4 & 5 Eliz. 2, c. 68), s. 25.

* GOODYEAR TYRE AND RUBBER CO. (GREAT BRITAIN) LTD. v. LANCASHIRE BATTERIES LTD.
Upjohn J. 1 W.L.R. 655
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 857

2. —— Practice — Interlocutory applications — To be dealt with by clerk of court —Restrictive Practices Court Rules, 1957 (S.I. 1957, No. 603), r. 49.

* PRACTICE DIRECTION (APPLICATIONS)
R.P.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1299

3. ——. See PATENT.

4. —— Practice—Statement of case—Identification of admitted restrictions—Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956 (4 & 5 Eliz. 2, c. 68), s. 20 (1).

* PRACTICE DIRECTION
Restrictive Practices Court 1 W.L.R. 1213

5. —— Restriction — Whether contrary to public interest—General principles applicable —Task of court — Injury to public — "Reasonably necessary" to protect public—Restriction on sale to public of proprietary medicines otherwise than by qualified retail chemists—Qualified chemists competent to advise customers in relation to proprietary medicines — Advice alleged to protect public against injury from misuse of medicines—Risk of injury negligible — Whether restriction "reasonably necessary" for the protection of public — "Reasonably necessary" — Whether reasonable and prudent man would seek to enforce restriction—Whether removal of restriction would deny to public substantial benefits or advantages — Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956 (4 & 5 Eliz. 2, c. 68), ss. 20 (1), 21 (1) (a) (b).

Injunction — Restrictive practice — Restriction contrary to public interest—Whether injunction should be granted—Whether ordinary rule applies—Form of order—Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956 (4 & 5 Eliz. 2, c. 68), s. 20 (3).

RESTRICTIVE PRACTICES—continued.

Evidence—Restrictive practice—Trade witness — Evidence of conditions of particular trade — Whether trade witnesses experts in relation to their trade — Whether trade witnesses may be asked what is injurious or beneficial to public.

* In re CHEMISTS' FEDERATION AGREEMENT (No. 2)
Restrictive Practices Court 1 W.L.R. 1192

REVENUE—Estate duty—Surrender of life interest — Settlement — Release of equitable interest by life tenant — Bonus shares — Renunciation—Failure of trustees to renounce before release of equitable interest—Finance Act, 1940 (3 & 4 Geo. 6, c. 29), s. 43 (1) (as amended).

Company — Shares — Bonus shares — When property passes to shareholder — Right to renounce.

* PYE-SMITH v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS - Danckwerts J. 1 W.L.R. 905

2. —— Income tax — Capital or income receipt — Sale of "know-how" by manufacturing chemists to Burmese Government—To aid establishment of pharmaceutical industry in Burma—Whether receipt of company's trade or proceeds of sale of capital asset—Depreciation of capital asset—Meaning of "know-how"—Income Tax Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 10), s. 123 (Sch. D, Case I).

* MORIARTY v. EVANS MEDICAL SUPPLIES LTD. - - H.L.(E.) 1 W.L.R. 66

3. —— Income tax — Discontinuance of trade or profession — Company — Director — Periodical payments under agreement for special services—Payable to director or "his "executors administrators or assigns"—Liability to tax after his death — Schedule D, Case III — Income Tax Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 10), s. 123.

* WESTMINSTER BANK LTD. v. BARFORD (INSPECTOR OF TAXES)
Vaisey J. 1 W.L.R. 406

4. —— Income tax — Employment — Perquisites or profits—Professional huntsman —Whether gifts received from hunt followers and others at Christmas time part of remuneration—Whether such gifts taxable—Income Tax Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 10), s. 156, Sch. E, paras. 1 and 2; Sch. 9, Rules applicable to Sch. E, r. 1.

* WRIGHT v. BOYCE (INSPECTOR OF TAXES)
Vaisey J. 1 W.L.R. 593
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 832

5. —— Income tax — Expenses — Racecourse Betting Control Board — Operation of totalisator on racecourses—Totalisator fund—Expenditure prescribed by statute for benefit of owners of racecourses and racehorses—Board carrying on trade — Whether deductible expenses—Whether improvements to racecourses capital expenditure—Racecourse Betting Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 41), s. 3—Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 58),

REVENUE—continued.

s. 18 (5)—Income Tax Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 10), s. 137 (a) (f) (g).

* RACECOURSE BETTING CONTROL BOARD v. YOUNG (INSPECTOR OF TAXES)
SAME v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS
YOUNG (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. RACECOURSE BETTING CONTROL BOARD
INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. SAME
Upjohn J. 1 W.L.R. 122
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 705

6. —— Income tax — Foreign income — Remittance to United Kingdom — Cheques drawn in dollars on foreign bank—Purchase by English bankers — Sterling equivalent credited in England—Foreign currency transferred by purchasers to Bank of England—Whether income from foreign securities or possessions—Income Tax Act, 1918 (8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 40), Sch. D, 1 (a) (i), Cases IV, r. 2, and V, r. 2.

* THOMSON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. MOYSE
Wynn-Parry J. 1 W.L.R. 1063

7. —— Income tax — Transfer of assets to company incorporated abroad — Charge by company of transferred assets to bank—Subsequent payment by taxpayer into company's account at same bank of moneys on unsecured loan to company—Whether company's income deemed to be taxpayer's income—"Associated operation"—Income Tax Act, 1918 (8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 40), Sch. 1, Sch. D, Case VI—Income Tax Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 10), ss. 412 (2) (4) (5), 413 (1).

* FYNN v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS
Upjohn J. 1 W.L.R. 585

8. —— Stamp duty — Security — Agreement to provide broadcasting programmes—Fluctuating payments—Specified sums payable, variable on a contingency — Whether liable to ad valorem duty—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), First Schedule.

* INDEPENDENT TELEVISION AUTHORITY AND ASSOCIATED-REDIFFUSION LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS
Wynn-Parry J. 1 W.L.R. 943

9. —— Surtax — Company — Apportionment of undistributed income pursuant to surtax direction—"In accordance with . . . "interests of members"—Meaning—Part of income to be carried to fund for redemption of preference shares — Whether preference shareholders' "interests" included such sums —Investment company—Finance Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 21, Sch. I, paras. 8, 10.

* WIGRAM FAMILY SETTLED ESTATES LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS
H.L.(E.) 1 W.L.R. 213

ROAD TRAFFIC—"Road"—Meaning—Car park—Driving in car park without licence—Whether car park "to which the public has "access" road—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), ss. 4 (1), 121.

* GRIFFIN v. SQUIRES
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1106

SALE OF GOODS—Innocent misrepresentation — Right of rescission — Sale of lorry—

SALE OF GOODS—continued.

Delivery and acceptance — Claim to rescind —Whether claim maintainable.

Contract—Innocent misrepresentation.

* Long v. Lloyd - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 753

2. —— Property, when passing — Shipbuilding contract — Yacht to be constructed —Property to pass on payment of first instalment of price — Yacht found to be unseaworthy—Whether property passed before completion—Whether right to reject precluded by passing of property.

Sale of Goods—Time of delivery—Whether warranty or condition—Shipbuilding contract —Pleasure yacht.

* McDougall v. Aeromarine of Emsworth Ltd. - - Diplock J. 1 W.L.R. 1126

SET-OFF—Equitable. See Practice.

SHIPPING — Charterparty — Demurrage — Exceptions clause—Charterparty providing for shipment of wide variety of cargo in Coos Bay/British Columbia range — Exceptions clause excusing charterers from "any delay "if cargo intended for shipment . . . cannot "be . . . loaded . . . by reason of . . . "strikes . . ."—Strike preventing loading of intended cargo of lumber—Extent of delay covered by clause—Charterers' duty to provide alternative cargo within reasonable time.

Ships' Names—Niki.

South African Dispatch Line v. Owners of the Panamanian Steamship Niki Diplock J. 3 W.L.R. 718

SOLICITOR — Costs — Lump or gross sum charge — Non-contentious business — Agreement for lump sum payment for costs—Whether client entitled to itemized bill—Solicitors Act, 1957 (5 & 6 Eliz. 2, c. 27), s. 57 (1).

* Rutter v. Sheridan-Young C.A. 1 W.L.R. 444

2. —— Duty—Discovery. See Banking.

3. —— Negligence — Concealment. See Limitation of Action.

4. —— Remuneration—Trustee. See Will.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE. See Vendor and Purchaser.

STATUTE — Construction. See Rates and Rating.

STATUTORY DUTY —Breach. See Railway.

TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING—Development — Assessment of development value—Land intended to be developed to be viewed as a whole—Land acquired for building purposes—High cost of making part of land suitable for building exceeding value of the whole—Whether development charge payable—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 51), ss. 69, 70—Town and Country Planning (Development Charge) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1189), Sch.

Practice and Procedure — Arguments of counsel—Construction of a statute—Practice notes on working the statute issued by Government Department—Not to be quoted in argument.

* London County Council v. Central Land Board - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1296

2. —— Development — Discontinuance — Resumption of former user of land after non-user—Justices finding that resumption not a material change of user—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 51), ss. 12, 23.

Town and Country Planning — Enforcement notice—Justices' jurisdiction—Question whether user changed.

* Fyson v. Buckinghamshire County Council. Metal Recovery & Storage Co. Ltd. v. Same - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 634

3. —— Development — Planning permission —Condition—Relation of conditions to local planning considerations—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 51), ss. 14 (1), 36.

* Fawcett Properties Ltd. v. Buckingham County Council Roxburgh J. 1 W.L.R. 1161

4. —— Purchase notice by owner — Minister's permission for other development—Limitation on Minister's power to direct development other than that for which permission refused — Undeveloped site — Permission to develop as shops with residential accommodation over refused — Permission granted for development as residential accommodation—Whether Minister's order valid—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 51), s. 19 (2), proviso (b), (2A); Sch. III —Town and Country Planning Act, 1954 (2 & 3 Eliz. 2, c. 72), s. 70.

* Regina v. Minister of Housing and Local Government. Ex parte Rank Organization Ltd. Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1093

TRADE DISPUTE. See Natural Justice.

TRADE MARK — Infringement. See Passing Off.

TRESPASS—False reason given for access to premises. See Natural Justice.

TRIBUNAL — Statutory. See National Health Service.

2. —— Trade association. See Natural Justice.

TRUST AND TRUSTEE—Breach of trust—Fraudulent conversion by trustee—Transfer of part of proceeds to innocent third party—

TRUST AND TRUSTEE—continued.

Claim by beneficiary to follow the assets—Appropriate defence to such claim.

Limitation of Action—Fraudulent breach of trust—Transfer of part of proceeds to innocent third party—Claim by beneficiary to recover from third party—Whether limitation applicable to such claim—Limitation Act, 1939 (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 21), ss. 19, 26.

Practice and Procedure—Pleadings—Amendment—"Such amendments . . . as may be "necessary for the purposes of determining "the real question in controversy"—Fraudulent conversion of trust fund—Claim by beneficiary to follow assets in hands of innocent third party—Application at trial to amend defence by pleading giving of value—R.S.C., Ord. 28, r. 1.

* G. L. Baker Ltd. v. Medway Buildings and Supplies Ltd.
Danckwerts J. & C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1216

2. —— Costs—Indemnity. See Costs.

3. —— Power of advancement—Exercise of power—Statutory power—Application of capital—Payment to beneficiary direct—No particular purpose expressed — "Benefit" — Trustee Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 32.

* In re Moxon's Will Trusts. Downey v. Moxon - Danckwerts J. 1 W.L.R. 165

4. ——. See Perpetuity Rule.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER — Specific performance — Proof of title — Action for — Plaintiff's title derived from will containing latent ambiguity—Whether extrinsic evidence admissible in specific performance action.

* Wilson and Another v. Thomas
Roxburgh J. 1 W.L.R. 422

WAR DAMAGE. See Revenue.

WEST AFRICA (NIGERIA) — Jurisdiction —Claim to ownership of land—Not a claim to fix boundaries—Jurisdiction of Supreme Court —Not ousted by Inter-Tribal Boundaries Settlement Ordinance (No. 49 of 1933) (Laws of Nigeria, 1948, c. 95), ss. 3, 4 and 5.

* Eke Oja v. Kanu Ukpai
J.C. 1 W.L.R. 151

WILL — Attestation — Proof — Signatures on back of will—Omnia praesumuntur rite esse acta.

Omnia praesumuntur rite esse acta.

* In the Estate of Denning, decd.
Sachs J. 1 W.L.R. 462

2. —— Construction — Investment clause —Power to invest in stock of "any British "colony or dependency . . . but not otherwise"—Meaning of "but not otherwise"—Whether investments authorized by law excluded—Trustee Act, 1925 (15 Geo. 5, c. 19), ss. 1 (1), 68 (2).

* In re Rider's Will Trusts. Nelson v. Rider - - Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 974

3. —— Construction — Uncertainty — Condition precedent—Bequests on marriage with "a person of the Jewish race" — Whether void for uncertainty.

* In re Tarnpolsk, decd. Barclays Bank Ltd. v. Hyer
Danckwerts J. 1 W.L.R. 1157

4. —— Soldier's will—"In actual military "service"—Occupation force—Infant—Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 11 —Wills (Soldiers and Sailors) Act, 1918 (7 & 8 Geo. 5, c. 58), ss. 1 and 3.

Military Law—"Active service."

* In the Estate of Colman, decd.
Karminski J. 1 W.L.R. 457

TABLE OF CASES CITED

PAGE

Abbott, In re [1893] 1 Ch. 54; 62 L.J.Ch. 46; 67 L.T. 794; 41 W.R. 154; 3 R. 72 222
Abbott v. Sullivan [1952] 1 K.B. 189; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 133; 96 S.J. 119; [1952] 1 All E.R. 226 . . . . . 778, 779, 780, 782
Abitibi Power and Paper Co. v. Montreal Trust Co. [1943] A.C. 536; 112 L.J.P.C. 49; 59 T.L.R. 348; 87 S.J. 353; [1943] 2 All E.R. 311, P.C. 556
Abrahams v. MacFisheries [1925] 2 K.B. 18; 94 L.J.K.B. 562; 133 L.T. 89 . 1079
Adam v. Newbigging (1888) 13 App.Cas. 308, H.L. 755
Addie (R.) & Sons (Collieries) v. Dumbreck [1929] A.C. 358; 98 L.J.P.C. 119; 140 L.T. 650; 45 T.L.R. 267; 34 Com.Cas. 214, H.L. 349, 990
Agricultural Industries, In re [1952] W.N. 209; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1188, C.A. . 406
Alderwood v. Bank of Liverpool [1924] 1 K.B. 775 233
Alexander v. Mills (1870) L.R. 6 Ch. 124; 40 L.J.Ch. 73; 24 L.T. 206; 19 W.R. 310, L.JJ. 430, 431, 432
Alexander v. Rayson [1936] 1 K.B. 169; 105 L.J.K.B. 148; 154 L.T. 205; 52 T.L.R. 131; 80 S.J. 15, C.A. 1091
Allen, In re [1953] Ch. 810; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 637; 97 S.J. 606; [1953] 2 All E.R. 898, C.A. 1159
Allen v. Allen [1951] W.N. 322; 115 J.P. 229; [1951] 1 All E.R. 724, C.A. 343, 487
Allen v. Hayward (1845) 7 Q.B. 960; 4 Ry. & Can.Cas. 104; 15 L.J.Q.B. 99; 5 L.T.O.S. 409; 10 Jur. 92; 115 E.R. 749 803
Allen v. Trehearne [1938] 2 K.B. 464; 107 L.J.K.B. 597; 159 L.T. 270; 54 T.L.R. 826; 82 S.J. 413; [1938] 2 All E.R. 698; 22 T.C. 15, C.A. 412
Allen (H.M. Inspector of Taxes) v. Farquharson Bros. & Co. (1932) 17 T.C. 59 298
Amata v. Modekwe (1954) 14 W.A.C.A. 580 154
Angel v. Jay [1911] 1 K.B. 666; 80 L.J.K.B. 458; 103 L.T. 809; 55 S.J. 140, D.C. 757, 758
Anglo-Cyprian Trade Agencies v. Paphos Wine Industries [1951] W.N. 205; 95 S.J. 336; [1951] 1 All E.R. 873 252
Anglo-Persian Oil Co. v. Dale [1932] 1 K.B. 124; 100 L.J.K.B. 504; 145 L.T. 529; 47 T.L.R. 487; 75 S.J. 408; 16 T.C. 253, C.A. 138
Anglo-Saxon Petroleum Co. v. Adamastos Shipping Co. [1957] 2 Q.B. 233; [1957] 2 W.L.R. 968; 101 S.J. 405; [1957] 2 All E.R. 311; [1957] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 271, C.A. 699
Anlaby v. Praetorius (1888) 20 Q.B.D. 764 1007
Appleby v. Myers (1867) L.R. 2 C.P. 651; 36 L.J.C.P. 331; 16 L.T. 669, Exch. 704
Apt (orse. Magnus) v. Apt [1948] P. 83; [1948] L.J.R. 539; 177 L.T. 620; 63 T.L.R. 618; [1947] 2 All E.R. 677; affirming [1947] P. 127 1282
Armstrong v. Jackson [1917] 2 K.B. 822; 86 L.J.K.B. 1375; 117 L.T. 479; 33 T.L.R. 444; 61 S.J. 631 755
Art Union of London Ltd. v. Overseers of the Savoy [1894] 2 Q.B. 609; 10 T.L.R. 576 101
Assaf v. Fuwa [1955] A.C. 215; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 552; 98 S.J. 733, P.C. . . . 154
Aster, In re [1955] 1 W.L.R. 465; 99 S.J. 276; sub nom. A., Re, (An Infant) [1955] 2 All E.R. 202, C.A. 198
Athenee, The (1922) 11 Ll.L.Rep. 6 . . . . . 160, 163
Atkinson v. Bettison [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1127; 99 S.J. 761; [1955] 3 All E.R. 340, C.A. 206, 207, 208, 209, 210
Attorney-General v. Great Eastern Railway Co. (1880) 5 App.Cas. 473; 49 L.J.Ch. 545; 42 L.T. 810; 44 J.P. 648; 28 W.R. 769, H.L. 712
Attorney-General v. Oldham [1940] 1 K.B. 599 911
Attorney-General v. Parsons [1956] A.C. 421; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 153; 100 S.J. 51; [1956] 1 All E.R. 65, H.L. 734
Attorney-General v. Racecourse Betting Control Board [1935] Ch. 34; 104 L.J.Ch. 13; 152 L.T. 146; 51 T.L.R. 36; 78 S.J. 783, C.A. 710, 712
Attorney-General v. Wilts United Dairies (1922) 91 L.J.K.B. 897; 127 L.T. 822; 38 T.L.R. 781; 66 S.J. 630, H.L. 556
Attorney-General for Canada v. Hallet & Carey [1952] A.C. 427; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1408; 96 S.J. 395, P.C. 558
Attorney-General to Prince of Wales v. St. Aubyn (1811) Wight. 167; 145 E.R. 1215 155
Austin v. Austin (1871) 41 L.J.P. & M. 8; 25 L.T. 856; 20 W.R. 128 . 865, 897, 898, 899
Avery v. London & North Eastern Railway Co. [1938] A.C. 606; 107 L.J.K.B. 546; 159 L.T. 241; 54 T.L.R. 794; 82 S.J. 582; [1938] 2 All E.R. 592; 31 B.W.C.C. 133, H.L. 930, 931

PAGE

B v. B. and G. [1937] P. 1; 105 L.J.P. 90; 155 L.T. 322; 52 T.L.R. 719; 80 S.J. 637; [1936] 2 All E.R. 1254 471
Badger, In re (1819) 2 B. & Ald. 691; 106 E.R. 517 274
Bagettes v. G. P. Estates Co. [1956] Ch. 290; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 773; 100 S.J. 226; [1956] 1 All E.R. 729, C.A.; affirming [1956] Ch. 75; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 602; 99 S.J. 780; [1955] 3 All E.R. 451 . . . . . 735, 1081
Baguley v. Baguley, The Times, Oct. 10, 1957, C.A. 483
Bailey v. Potteries Electrical Traction Co. [1931] 1 K.B. 385; 100 L.J.K.B. 1; 143 L.T. 650; 94 J.P. 177; 46 T.L.R. 601; 74 S.J. 504; 28 L.G.R. 550, C.A. 370, 963
Baker v. Baker (1945) App.D. 708 1290
Baker v. Barclays Bank [1955] 1 W.L.R. 822; 99 S.J. 491; [1955] 2 All E.R. 571 . 1221
Balgownie Trust Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 1929 S.C. 790; 14 T.C. 684 68
Ball, In re [1947] Ch. 228; [1947] L.J.R. 513; 176 L.T. 369; 63 T.L.R. 94; 91 S.J. 220; [1947] 1 All E.R. 458 1163
Banbury v. Bank of Montreal [1918] A.C. 626; 87 L.J.K.B. 1158; 119 L.T. 446; 34 T.L.R. 518; 62 S.J. 665, H.L. 1030
Banque Belge pour L'Etranger v. Hambrouck [1921] 1 K.B. 321; 90 L.J.K.B. 322; 37 T.L.R. 76; 65 S.J. 74; 26 Com.Cas. 72, C.A. 1225
Barkway v. South Wales Transport [1950] A.C. 185; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 597; 114 J.P. 172; 94 S.J. 128; [1950] 1 All E.R. 392, H.L. . . 350, 809, 811, 814
Barnado v. McHugh [1891] A.C. 388; 61 L.J.Q.B. 721; 65 L.T. 423; 55 J.P. 628; 7 T.L.R. 726; 40 W.R. 97, H.L. 198
Barry v. Cordy (1946) 62 T.L.R. 614; 90 S.J. 528; [1946] 2 All E.R. 396; 28 T.C. 250; sub. nom. Cordy v. Barry, 176 L.T. 111, C.A. 68
Bartholomay Brewing Co. v. Wyatt, Nobel Dynamite Trust Co. v. Wyatt [1893] 2 Q.B. 499; 62 L.J.Q.B. 525; 69 L.T. 561; 58 J.P. 133; 9 T.L.R. 658; 37 S.J. 717; 5 R. 564; 3 T.C. 213, D.C. 1070
Bates v. Donaldson [1896] 2 Q.B. 241; 65 L.J.Q.B. 578; 74 L.T. 751; 12 T.L.R. 485; 60 J.P. 596; 44 W.R. 659, C.A. 1269
Bath v. British Transport Commission [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1013; 98 S.J. 472; [1954] 2 All E.R. 542; [1954] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 463, C.A. 42, 44
Baxendale v. Great Eastern Railway Co. (1869) L.R. 4 Q.B. 244; 10 B. & S. 212; 38 L.J.Q.B. 137; 17 W.R. 412, Exch. 735
Baxters and Midland Railway Co. (1906) 95 L.T. 20; 70 J.P. 445; 22 T.L.R. 616, C.A. 401, 402
Baylis, In re [1896] 2 Ch. 107; 65 L.J.Ch. 612; 74 L.T. 506; 12 T.L.R. 339; 44 W.R. 533 445
Beaman v. A.R.T.S. [1949] 1 K.B. 550; 65 T.L.R. 389; 93 S.J. 236, C.A.; reversing [1948] W.N. 224; 64 T.L.R. 285; [1948] 2 All E.R. 89 . . 572, 573, 574, 1222, 1223
Bean v. Doncaster Amalgamated Collieries (1944) 27 T.C. 296, H.L. 708
Bebro, In re [1900] 2 Q.B. 316; 69 L.J.Q.B. 618; 82 L.T. 773; 48 W.R. 561; 7 Mans. 284; sub nom. Re M. B., Ex p. G., 44 S.J. 501, C.A. 1273
Beeby v. Beeby (1799) 1 Hag. & Ecc. 789; 1 Hag.Con. 142n; 162 E.R. 755 . . 483
Beer v. Beer (Neilson cited) [1948] P. 10; [1948] L.J.R. 743; 63 T.L.R. 606; 112 J.P. 50; 92 S.J. 12; [1947] 2 All E.R. 711; 46 L.G.R. 47 . . 342, 483
Begg v. Cooper (1878) 40 L.T. 29 . . . . . 305, 306
Behrens v. Bertram Mills Circus, Ltd. [1957] 2 Q.B. 1; [1957] 2 W.L.R. 404; 101 S.J. 208; [1957] 1 All E.R. 583 . . . . . 889, 892
Bell v. Kennedy (1868) L.R. 1 Sc. & Div. 307, H.L. 1290
Bell v. Lever Bros. [1932] A.C. 161; 101 L.J.K.B. 129; 146 L.T. 258; 48 T.L.R. 133; 76 S.J. 50; 37 Com.Cas. 98, H.L. 756
Bender v. Owners of S.S. Zent [1909] 2 K.B. 41; 78 L.J.K.B. 533; 100 L.T. 639; 2 B.W.C.C. 22, C.A. 854
Benmax v. Austin Motor Co. [1955] A.C. 370; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 418; 99 S.J. 129; [1955] 1 All E.R. 326; 72 R.P.C. 39, H.L. 497
Bennett v. Ogston (1930) 15 T.C. 374 412
Benninga (Mitcham), Ltd. v. Bijstra [1946] K.B. 58; 115 L.J.K.B. 28; 173 L.T. 298; 61 T.L.R. 519; 90 S.J. 19; [1945] 2 All E.R. 433, C.A. 118
Bentleys, Stokes & Lowless v. Beeson [1952] W.N. 280; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1529; 96 S.J. 345; [1952] 2 All E.R. 82; [1952] T.R. 239; 45 R. & I.T. 461; 33 T.C. 491 . . . . . 68, 131, 708
Bernstein v. Bernstein [1893] P. 292; 69 L.T. 513 485
Berry v. St. Marylebone Borough Council [1958] 1 Ch. 406; 56 L.G.R. 144; 2 R.R.C. 292; affirming [1957] 3 W.L.R. 1029; 112 J.P. 59; 101 S.J. 973; [1957] 3 All E.R. 677; 50 R. & I.T. 821, C.A. . . 99, 1139, 1150, 1175, 1261, 1264
Betty's Cafés v. Phillips Furnishing Stores [1957] 1 Ch. 67; [1956] 3 W.L.R. 1134; 100 S.J. 946; [1957] 1 All E.R. 1, C.A.; reversing [1956] 1 W.L.R. 678; 100 S.J. 435; [1956] 2 All E.R. 497 . . . . . 205, 880, 904
Bevan v. Webb [1901] 2 Ch. 59; 70 L.J.Ch. 536; 84 L.T. 609; 17 T.L.R. 436; 45 S.J. 465; 49 W.R. 548, C.A. 61

PAGE

Bevis v. Bevis [1935] P. 86; 104 L.J.P. 41; 152 L.T. 545; 51 T.L.R. 291; 79 S.J. 194, C.A. 471, 886
Bidie, In re [1949] Ch. 121; [1949] L.J.R. 386; 65 T.L.R. 25; 113 J.P. 22; 92 S.J. 705; [1948] 2 All E.R. 995; 47 L.G.R. 465, C.A. 735
Bilsbury v. Harrison, McGregory & Guest, Unreported, Manchester Assize, January 18, 1955 226
Birmingham Corporation v. I. R. C. (1929) 15 T.C. 172 708
Bishop & Baxter, Ltd. v. Anglo-Eastern Trading Co., Ltd. [1944] K.B. 12; 60 T.L.R. 37; [1943] 2 All E.R. 598 24
Blackett v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co. (1832) 2 C. & J. 244; 2 Tyr. 266; 1 L.J.Ex. 101; 149 E.R. 106 675
Blackwell v. Blackwell [1943] 2 All E.R. 579, C.A. 1120, 1122
Blaiberg, In re [1940] Ch. 385; 109 L.J.Ch. 166; 162 L.T. 418; 56 T.L.R. 487; 84 S.J. 287; [1940] 1 All E.R. 632 1158
Blakiston v. Cooper [1909] A.C. 104; 78 L.J.K.B. 135; 100 L.T. 51; 25 T.L.R. 164 . . . . . 837, 842
Blyth Shipbuilding and Dry Docks Co. [1926] Ch. 494; 95 L.J.Ch. 350; 134 L.T. 643, C.A. 1129
Board of Education v. Rice [1911] A.C. 179; 80 L.J.K.B. 796; 104 L.T. 689; 75 J.P. 393; 27 T.L.R. 378; 55 S.J. 440; 9 L.G.R. 652, H.L. 556, 783
Bobbio v. Watney, Combe, Reid & Co., Unreported, C.A., July 13, 1955. . . 1081
Boks & Co. and Peters, Rushton & Co. [1919] 1 K.B. 491 399
Bolam v. Regent Oil Co. (1956) T.R. 403; 50 R. & I.T. 79; 37 T.C. 56; 35 A.T.C. 499 . . . . . 139, 708
Bolton v. Stone [1951] A.C. 850; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 977; [1951] 1 All E.R. 1078; 50 L.G.R. 32; sub nom. Stone v. Bolton, 95 S.J. 333, H.L.; reversing sub nom. Stone v. Bolton [1950] 1 K.B. 201; 65 T.L.R. 683; 93 S.J. 710; [1949] 2 All E.R. 851; 48 L.G.R. 107, C.A. 803, 1206
Bonnington Castings v. Wardlaw [1956] A.C. 613; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 707; 100 S.J. 207; [1956] 1 All E.R. 615; 54 L.G.R. 153; sub nom. Wardlaw v. Bonnington Castings, 1956 S.C.(H.L.) 26; 1956 S.L.T. 135, H.L. 231, 233, 939
Booth v. Howell (1899) 53 J.P. 678; 5 T.L.R. 449, D.C. 1103
Bower v. Peate (1876) 1 Q.B.D. 321 701
Bowman, In re [1932] 2 K.B. 621; 101 L.J.K.B. 798; 147 L.T. 150; 96 J.P. 207; 48 T.L.R. 351; 76 S.J. 273; 30 L.G.R. 245 . . . . . 1153, 1156
Bowman v. Secular Society, Ltd. [1917] A.C. 406, 443; 86 L.J.Ch. 568; 117 L.T. 161; 33 T.L.R. 376; 61 S.J. 478, H.L. 100
Bowring-Hanbury's Trustee v. Bowring-Hanbury [1943] Ch. 104; 112 L.J.Ch. 37; 168 L.T. 72; 59 T.L.R. 121; 87 S.J. 39; [1943] 1 All E.R. 48, C.A. . . 735
Bowskill v. Dawson (No. 2) [1955] 1 Q.B. 13; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 275; 98 S.J. 523; [1954] 2 All E.R. 649, C.A. 999
Bradshaw v. Air Council [1926] Ch. 329 252
Bragg v. Bragg [1925] P. 20; 94 L.J.P. 11; 132 L.T. 346; 41 T.L.R. 8; 69 S.J. 73; 27 Cox C.C. 729, D.C. 512, 515
Brassey's Settlement, In re [1955], W.L.R. 192; 99 S.J. 149; [1955] 1 All E.R. 577 978
Brend v. Wood (1946) 175 L.T. 306; 110 J.P. 317; 62 T.L.R. 462; 90 S.J. 381; 44 L.G.R. 254, D.C. 527
Briddon v. George [1946] 1 All E.R. 609; 174 L.T. 380, C.A. 873
Bright v. Bright [1954] P. 270; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 659; 117 J.P. 529; 97 S.J. 729; [1953] 2 All E.R. 939 1276
Brighton College v. Marriott [1926] A.C. 192; 134 L.T. 417; 42 T.L.R. 228; 70 S.J. 245, H.L. 543, 708, 1139, 1263
British Dyestuffs Corporation (Blackley), Ltd. v. I. R. C. (1924) 12 T.C. 586 77, 83
British Electric Railway Co. v. Gentile [1914] A.C. 1034 735
British Foreign and Colonial Automatic Light Controlling Co., Ltd. v. Metropolitan Gas Meters, Ltd. [1912] 2 Ch. 82; 29 R.P.C. 571, C.A. 15
British Industrial Plastics, Ltd. v. Ferguson [1940] 1 All E.R. 479; 162 L.T. 313; 58 R.P.C. 1, H.L. 47
British Insulated and Helsby Cables v. Atherton [1926] A.C. 205; 95 L.J.K.B. 336; 134 L.T. 289; 42 T.L.R. 187, H.L. 138
British Mutoscope and Biograph Co. v. Homer [1901] 1 Ch. 671; 70 L.J.Ch. 279; 84 L.T. 26; 17 T.L.R. 213; 49 W.R. 277; 18 R.P.C. 177 1036
British-Italian Corporation v. I. R. C. [1921] W.N. 220, C.A. 947
Brittain v. Brittain & Camp (1859) Sea. & Sm. 83; 23 J.P. 455 895
Brooker v. Jenkins Bros., Proprietors Ocean Steamships Co., Unreported, Liverpool Winter Assize, February 20, 1956 227
Brooks v. Mason [1902] 2 K.B. 743; 72 L.J.K.B. 19; 88 L.T. 24; 67 J.P. 47; 51 W.R. 224; 19 T.L.R. 4; 47 S.J. 13, 20 Cox C.C. 464, D.C. 527
Brownlie v. Campbell (1880) 5 App.Cas. 925, H.L. 756
Bryant v. Marx (1883) 48 T.L.R. 624 1107 Buccleuch (Duke of) v. Metropolitan Board of Works (1872) L.R. 5 H.L. 418, H.L. 274, 665

PAGE

Buchanan v. Motor Insurers' Bureau [1955] 1 W.L.R. 486; 119 J.P. 227; 99 S.J. 319; [1955] 1 All E.R. 607; [1954] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 519 1107
Buck, In re [1896] 2 Ch. 727; 65 L.J.Ch. 881; 75 L.T. 312; 60 J.P. 775; 40 S.J. 729; 45 W.R. 106 1177
Bugge v. Taylor [1941] 1 K.B. 198; 110 L.J.K.B. 710; 164 L.T. 312; 104 J.P. 467; 85 S.J. 82; 39 L.G.R. 100, D.C. 1107
Bulli Coal Mining Co. v. Osborne [1899] A.C. 351; 68 L.J.P.C. 49; 80 L.T. 430; 15 T.L.R. 257; 47 W.R. 545, P.C. 569
Bulmer v. Bulmer (1884) 25 Ch.D. 409; 53 L.J.Ch. 402; 32 W.R. 380 930
Burford v. Burford [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1242; 99 S.J. 834; [1955] 3 All E.R. 664, C.A. 465, 896
Burgess v. Florence Nightingale Hospital for Gentlewomen [1955] 1 Q.B. 349; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 533; 99 S.J. 170; [1955] 1 All E.R. 511 999
Burke, In re [1908] 2 Ch. 248; 77 L.J.Ch. 597; 99 L.T. 86 976
Burrows v. Southern Railway Co., 1933, November 8, Unreported 174
Burton v. Ogdens (Brighton) (1952) 23 D.R.A. 246 324
Butler v. Butler (1890) 15 P.D. 126, C.A. 147
Butterworth v. Page (1933) 150 L.T. 262 (C.A.); (1935) 153 L.T. 34 (H.L.) . . 77, 85, 86, 90
Byrne v. Beadle (1863) 2 H. & C. 722; 3 New Rep. 162; 33 L.J.Ex. 13; 9 L.T. 450; 10 Jur.N.S. 1107; 12 W.R. 279; 159 E.R. 299 . . . . 803, 805, 809

C. v. C. (orse. H.) (1911) 27 T.L.R. 421 621
Californian Copper Syndicate, Ltd. v. Harris (1904) 6 F. 894; 5 T.C. 159 . . . 83
Calvert v. Wainwright [1947] K.B. 526; [1947] L.J.R. 1335; 177 L.T. 159; 63 T.L.R. 199; [1947] 1 All E.R. 282; 27 T.C. 475 833
Campbell v. Spottiswoode (1863) 3 B. & S. 769; 3 F. & F. 421; 2 New Rep. 20; 32 L.J.Q.B. 185; 8 L.T. 201; 27 J.P. 501; 9 Jur.N.S. 1069; 11 W.R. 569; 122 E.R. 288 745
Campbell Coverings, In re [1953] Ch. 488; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 1135; 97 S.J. 372; [1953] 2 All E.R. 74, C.A. 1089
Campbell (Donald) & Co. v. Pollak [1927] A.C. 732; 96 L.J.K.B. 1093; 137 L.T. 656; 43 T.L.R. 495; 71 S.J. 450, H.L. 252, 535, 536, 537, 538
Canada Sugar Refining Co. v. The Queen [1898] A.C. 735 735
Canadian Pacific Railway Co. v. Lockhart [1942] A.C. 591; 111 L.J.P.C. 113; 167 L.T. 231; [1942] 2 All E.R. 464, P.C. 999
Canning's Will Trusts, In re [1936] Ch. 309; 105 L.J.Ch. 241; 154 L.T. 693 . . 224
Cap Blanco, The [1913] P. 130; 83 L.J.P. 23; 109 L.T. 672; 29 T.L.R. 557; 12 Asp.M.L.C. 399, C.A. 160
Cardiff Rating Authority v. Guest Keen Baldwin's Iron and Steel Co. [1949] 1 K.B. 385; [1949] L.J.R. 713; 65 T.L.R. 159; 113 J.P. 78; 93 S.J. 117; [1949] 1 All E.R. 27; 47 L.G.R. 159; 42 R. & I.T. 2, C.A. . . 327, 335, 336
Carlgarth, The [1927] P. 93 774
Carroll v. Andrew Barclay & Sons [1948] A.C. 477; [1948] L.J.R. 1490; 64 T.L.R. 384; 92 S.J. 555; [1948] 2 All E.R. 386; 1948 S.C. 100; 1948 S.L.T. 464, H.L. 416
Carson v. Cheyney's Executor [1957] 3 W.L.R. 768; 101 S.J. 868; [1957] 3 All E.R. 391; [1957] T.R. 261; 50 R. & I.T. 727; 36 A.T.C. 226; T.C. Leaflet No. 1846, C.A. 412
Carter v. Sharon, 80 S.J. 511; [1936] 1 All E.R. 720; 20 T.C. 230 1074
Cassidy v. Ministry of Health [1951] 2 K.B. 343; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 539; 95 S.J. 253; [1951] 1 All E.R. 574, C.A. 803, 806
Cassidy & Co. v. M'Aloon (1893) L.R.Ir. 32 Q.B. & Ex. 368 1009
Caswell v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries [1940] A.C. 152; 108 L.J.K.B. 779; 161 L.T. 374; 55 T.L.R. 1004; 83 S.J. 976; [1939] 3 All E.R. 722, H.L. 507
"Catalina" (Owners) v. "Norma" (Owners) (1938) 61 Ll.L.Rep. 360 . . . 278
Cavendish-Bentinck v. Cavendish-Bentinck [1949] P. 203; [1949] L.J.R. 272; 65 T.L.R. 37; 92 S.J. 441; [1948] 2 All E.R. 285, C.A. 886
Century Insurance Co. v. Northern Ireland Road Transport Board [1942] A.C. 509; 111 L.J.P.C. 138; 167 L.T. 404; [1942] 1 All E.R. 491, C.A. . . . 999
Challis v. London and South Western Railway Co. [1905] 2 K.B. 154; 74 L.J.K.B. 569; 93 L.T. 330; 21 T.L.R. 486; 49 S.J. 480; 53 W.R. 613; 7 W.C.C. 23, C.A. 853
Charles Rickards v. Oppenhaim [1950] 1 K.B. 616; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 435; 94 S.J. 161; [1950] 1 All E.R. 420, C.A. 1129
Chemists' Federation Agreement, In re, (1958) L.R. 1 R.P. 43 1201
Chester v. Bateson [1920] 1 K.B. 829 . . . . . 154, 556
Chilton v. Chilton (1952) P. 196; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1316; 116 J.P. 313; 96 S.J. 378; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1322; 116 J.P.J. 516, D.C. 343
Chloride Electrical Storage Co. Ltd. v. Silvia Wireless Stores (1931) 48 R.P.C. 468 860
Christie v. Griggs (1809) 2 Camp. 79, N.P. 349

PAGE
Church Commissioners for England v. Ve-Ri-Best Manufacturing Co. [1957] 1 Q.B. 238; [1956] 3 W.L.R. 990; 100 S.J. 875; [1956] 3 All E.R. 777 . . 614
Clarapede & Co. v. Commercial Union Association (1884) 32 W.Rep. 262 . . 896, 1235
Clare v. Joseph [1907] 2 K.B. 369; 76 L.J.K.B. 724; 96 L.T. 770; 23 T.L.R. 498; 51 S.J. 467, C.A. 445
Clare Rural District Council v. Collen (1907) 72 J.P. 115, D.C. 982
Clayards v. Dethwick and Davis (1848) 12 Q.B. 439; 116 E.R. 932 624
Clayton v. Kearsey (1935) 79 S.J. 180 567
Clayton v. Ramsden [1943] A.C. 320; 112 L.J.Ch. 22; 168 L.T. 113; 59 T.L.R. 75; 86 S.J. 384, H.L. 1159, 1160
Clear v. Clear [1958] 1 W.L.R. 467; 102 S.J. 306; [1958] 2 All E.R. 353, C.A. 896
Clegg v. Edmondson (1857) 8 De G.M. & G. 787 821
Cluert v. Cluert [1958] 1 W.L.R. 463; 102 S.J. 307; [1958] 1 All E.R. 417 . 470, 472
Coalville Urban District Council v. Boyce (1934) 18 T.C. 655 . . . . 130, 139, 708
Cockram v. Tropical Preservation Co. [1951] 2 K.B. 827; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 814; 115 J.P. 459; 95 S.J. 530; [1951] 2 All E.R. 520; 44 R. & I.T. 486, C.A. . 963
Cohen (Davis) & Sons v. Hall [1952] 1 All E.R. 157 . . . . . 967, 971
Cole, In re, Westminster Bank v. Morse [1958] 3 W.L.R. 447; 122 J.P. 433; 102 S.J. 618; [1958] 3 All E.R. 102, C.A. 1245, 1246
Cole (E. K.) Ltd., In re [1945] 1 All E.R. 521n. 1262
Coleman, In re [1936] Ch. 528; 105 L.J.Ch. 244; 155 L.T. 402; [1936] 2 All E.R. 225 223
Coliseum (Barrow), In re [1930] 2 Ch. 44; 99 L.J.Ch. 423; 143 L.T. 423; [1929–30] B. & C.R. 218 823
Collier (W.) v. Fielding [1958] 1 W.L.R. 323; 122 J.P. 222; 102 S.J. 215; [1958] 1 All E.R. 694; 56 L.G.R. 192; 51 R. & I.T. 202; 2 R.R.C. 378, C.A. . 334, 335
Collins v. Collins (1884) 9 App.Cas. 205; 32 W.R. 501, H.L. 483
Collins v. Firth-Brearley Stainless Steel Syndicate (1925) 133 L.T. 616; 69 S.J. 695; 9 T.C. 520, C.A. 708
Colonial Insurance Co. of New Zealand v. Adelaide Marine Insurance Co. (1886) 12 App.Cas. 128; 56 L.J.P.C. 19; 56 L.T. 173; 3 T.L.R. 252; 6 Asp.M.L.C. 94, P.C. 1130
Columbia Gramophone Co. Ltd. v. Murray (1922) 39 R.P.C. 239; (1924) 41 R.P.C. 295 . . . . . 660, 860–862, 1036
Commissioner of Valuation v. McAllister (1954) 47 R. & I.T. 635; [1954] N.I. 54, C.A. (N.I.) 967
Condliff v. Condliff (1874) 29 L.T. 831; 38 J.P. 151; 22 W.R. 325 932
Conway v. George Wimpey & Co. (No. 2) [1951] 2 K.B. 266; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 587; 95 S.J. 156; [1951] 1 All E.R. 363, C.A. 999
Cook v. Cook [1949] W.N. 61; [1949] L.J.R. 581; [1949] 65 T.L.R. 175; 113 J.P. 164; 93 S.J. 200; [1949] 1 All E.R. 384; 47 L.G.R. 450, D.C. 483
Cooper v. Cooper (No. 2) [1955] P. 168; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 923; 98 S.J. 854; [1954] 3 All E.R. 358, D.C. 1276
Cooper v. Crane [1891] P. 369; 61 L.J.P. 35; sub nom. Crane (orse. Cooper) v. Crane, 40 W.R. 127 1283
Cooper v. Joel (1859) 1 De G.F. & J. 240, C.A. 755
Cooper v. K. and L. Steel Founders and Engineers, unreported, April 12, 1951 . 226
Cooper v. Phibbs (1867) L.R. 2 H.L. 149; 16 L.T. 678; 15 W.R. 1049, H.L. . 757
Cooper v. Whittingham (1880) 15 Ch.D. 501 252
Cooper v. Wilson [1937] 2 K.B. 309; 106 L.J.K.B. 728; 157 L.T. 290; 101 J.P. 349; 53 T.L.R. 623; 81 S.J. 357; 35 L.G.R. 436; [1937] 2 All E.R. 726, C.A. 785
Corrick v. Wortham [1956] 1 W.L.R. 488; 100 S.J. 322; [1956] 2 All E.R. 174n. 927
Cotman v. Brougham [1918] A.C. 514; 87 L.J.Ch. 379; 119 L.T. 162; 62 S.J. 534; sub nom. Re Anglo-Cuban Oil, Bitumen and Asphalt Co. Ltd., Cotman v. Brougham, 34 T.L.R. 410, H.L. 1262
Cottle v. Cottle [1939] W.N. 205; 83 S.J. 501; [1939] 2 All E.R. 535 . . . 1306
Couchman v. Greener (1884) 1 R.P.C. 197, C.A. 47
County Laboratories Ltd. v. J. Mindel Ltd. [1957] Ch. 295; [1957] 2 W.L.R. 541, 746; 101 S.J. 286, 320; [1957] 1 All E.R. 806, 861 659, 660, 864, 865, 1026
County of Durham Electrical Power Distribution Co. v. I. R. C. [1909] 1 K.B. 737 946–948
Cowan v. Seymour [1920] 1 K.B. 500; 89 L.J.K.B. 459; 122 L.T. 465; 36 T.L.R. 155; 64 S.J. 259, C.A. 412
Cramp v. Cramp and Freeman [1920] P. 158; 89 L.J.P. 119; 123 L.T. 141; 36 T.L.R. 333 . . . . . 485, 486, 490
Crewe v. Crewe (1800) 3 Hag. & Ecc. 123; 162 E.R. 1102 483
Crisp from the Fens v. Rutland County Council [1950] W.N. 72; 114 J.P. 105; 94 S.J. 177; 1 P. & C.R. 48; 48 L.G.R. 210, C.A. 1163
Crofter Hand Woven Harris Tweed Co v. Veitch [1942] A.C. 435; 111 L.J.P.C. 17; 166 L.T. 172; 58 T.L.R. 165; [1942] 1 All E.R. 142, H.L. 776, 1059, 1062
Crookall v. Vickers-Armstrong [1955] 1 W.L.R. 659; 99 S.J. 401; [1955] 2 All E.R. 12; 53 L.G.R. 407 226
Cuff v. London and County Land and Building Co. [1912] 1 Ch. 440 . . 826

PAGE

Cumming v. Danson (1942) 112 L.J.K.B. 145; 59 T.L.R. 70; 87 S.J. 21; [1942] 2 All E.R. 653; sub nom. Cumming v. Dawson, 168 L.T. 35, C.A. . . 320
Cummings v. Richard Thomas & Baldwins [1953] 2 Q.B. 95; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 1104; 97 S.J. 370; [1953] 2 All E.R. 43; 51 L.G.R. 385, C.A. . . 507
Cundy v. Le Cocq (1884) 13 Q.B.D. 207; 53 L.J.M.C. 125; 51 L.T. 265; 48 J.P. 599; 32 W.R. 769, D.C. 526
Czarnikow v. Rath, Schmidt & Co. [1922] 2 K.B. 478; 92 L.J.K.B. 81; 127 L.T. 824; 38 T.L.R. 797; 28 Com.Cas. 29, C.A. 252, 274, 278

D'Aguilar v. D'Aguilar (1794) 1 Hag.Ecc. 773; 1 Hag.Con. 134n.; 162 E.R. 748 . 487
De Reneville v. De Reneville [1948] P. 100; [1948] L.J.R. 1761; 64 T.L.R. 82; [1948] 1 All E.R. 56, C.A.; affirming [1947] P. 186; 177 L.T. 408; 63 T.L.R. 490; 92 S.J. 83; [1947] 2 All E.R. 112. 1283
Dalton v. Angus (1881) 6 App.Cas. 740, H.L. 699
Dankbars (An Infant), In re [1954] Ch. 98; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 957; 97 S.J. 811; 51 L.G.R. 666; sub nom. D. (an infant), Re, 118 J.P. 25; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1318, C.A. 514
Darnell v. Millward [1950] W.N. 567; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 1100; 94 S.J. 822; sub nom. Darnell v. Millwood [1951] 1 All E.R. 88, C.A. 320
Davies v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries [1942] A.C. 601; 111 L.J.K.B. 418; 167 L.T. 74; 58 T.L.R. 240; 86 S.J. 294; [1942] 1 All E.R. 657, H.L. . 999
Davis v. Carew-Pole [1956] 1 W.L.R. 833; 100 S.J. 510; [1956] 2 All E.R. 524 778, 783
Dearden v. Townsend (1865) L.R. 1 Q.B. 10; 6 B. & S. 861; 35 L.J.M.C. 50; 13 L.T. 323; 29 J.P. 821; 12 Jur.N.S. 120; 14 W.R. 53; 122 E.R. 1411 . 1163
Debtor, In re A [1936] Ch. 237 1036
Debtor (No. 3 of 1909), In re A, ex parte Goldstein [1917] 1 K.B. 558 . . 293
De Reneville v. De Reneville [1948] P. 100; [1948] L.J.R. 1761; 64 T.L.R. 82; [1948] 1 All E.R. 56, C.A.; affirming [1947] P. 186; 177 L.T. 408; 63 T.L.R. 490; 92 S.J. 83; [1947] 2 All E.R. 112 . . . 1014, 1015, 1283
Derbyshire Miners Welfare Committee v. Skegness U. D. C. (No. 2) [1958] 1 Q.B. 298; [1957] 3 W.L.R. 1048; 122 J.P. 74; 101 S.J. 973; [1957] 3 All E.R. 692; 50 R. & I.T. 803; 56 L.G.R. 37, C.A.; affirming [1957] 1 W.L.R. 764; 121 J.P. 385; 101 S.J. 465; [1957] 2 All E.R. 405; 50 R. & I.T. 329; 1 R.R.C. 374, D.C.; reversing (1956) 49 R. & I.T. 778; [1956] C.L.Y. 7294 . . . . . 1139, 1177
Derrick v. Williams (1939) 55 T.L.R. 676; 160 L.T. 589; 83 S.J. 397; [1939] 2 All E.R. 559, C.A. 1236, 1237
Desoutter Brothers Ltd. v. J. E. Hangar & Co. Ltd. (1936) 80 S.J. 386; [1936] 1 All E.R. 535 68
Dickinson v. St. Aubyn [1944] K.B. 454; 113 L.J.K.B. 225; 170 L.T. 287; 60 T.L.R. 269, C.A. 851
Dickson v. Flack [1953] 2 Q.B. 464; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 571; 97 S.J. 586; [1953] 2 All E.R. 840; 51 L.G.R. 515; reversing [1953] 1 W.L.R. 196; 97 S.J. 66; [1953] 1 All E.R. 236, C.A. 416
Diplock, In re [1948] Ch. 465; [1948] L.J.R. 1670; 92 S.J. 484; [1948] 2 All E.R. 318, C.A. 1220, 1227
Dixon, In re [1892] P. 386; 56 J.P. 841; 8 T.L.R. 744 . . . . . 247, 248
Dixon v. Dixon [1953] P. 103; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 748; 97 S.J. 249; [1953] 1 All E.R. 910 1276
Dobson and Sutton v. Groves (1844) 6 Q.B. 637; 1 New Pract.Cas. 101; 14 L.J. Q.B. 17; 4 L.T.O.S. 155; 9 Jur. 86; 115 E.R. 239. 274
Dodd v. Dodd [1906] P. 189; 75 L.J.P. 49; 94 L.T. 709; 70 J.P. 163; 22 T.L.R. 484; 50 S.J. 528; 54 W.R. 541 510
Donaldson, In re (1884) 27 Ch.D. 544; 54 L.J.Ch. 151; 51 L.T. 622 . . . 13, 14
Donaldson (orse. Nichols) v. Donaldson [1949] P. 363; [1949] L.J.R. 762; 65 T.L.R. 233; 93 S.J. 220 1289
Donnithorne v. Donnithorne (1930) S.A.S.R. 182 488
Donoghue v. Stevenson [1932] A.C. 562; 101 L.J.P.C. 119; 147 L.T. 281; 48 T.L.R. 494; 76 S.J. 396; 37 Com.Cas. 350, H.L. 999
Douglas v. Forrest (1828) 4 Bing. 686; 1 Moo. & P. 663; 6 L.J.O.S.C.P. 157; 130 E.R. 933 . . . . . 731, 735
Dow Hager Lawrence v. Norreys (Lord) (1890) 15 App.Cas. 210 567
Dracup v. Radcliffe (1946) 27 T.C. 188 411
Drummond v. British Building Cleaners [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1434; 98 S.J. 819; [1954] 3 All E.R. 507; 53 L.G.R. 29, C.A. 231
Duchesne v. Duchesne [1951] P. 101; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 639; 94 S.J. 612; [1950] 2 All E.R. 784 898
Ducker v. Rees Roturbo Development Syndicate Ltd. [1928] A.C. 132; 97 L.J.K.B. 317; 138 L.T. 598; 44 T.L.R. 307; 72 S.J. 171 83
Duffett v. McEvoy (1885) 10 App.Cas. 300, P.C. 445
Dunbar v. Dunbar [1909] 2 Ch. 639; 79 L.J.Ch. 70; 101 L.T. 553; 26 T.L.R. 21 . 260

PAGE

Duncan v. Cammell, Laird & Co. [1942] A.C. 624; 111 L.J.K.B. 406; 166 L.T. 366; 58 T.L.R. 242; 86 S.J. 287; [1942] 1 All E.R. 587 . 1307, 1308, 1309
Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co. v. Selfridge & Co. [1915] A.C. 847; 84 L.J.K.B. 1680; 47 W.R. 632; 16 R.P.C. 247 1036
Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co. v. Selfridge & Co. [1915] A.C. 847; 84 L.J.K.B. 1680; 113 L.T. 386; 31 T.L.R. 399; 59 S.J. 439, H.L. 860
Dunn v. Dunn (1888) 13 P.D. 91; 57 L.J.P. 58; 59 L.T. 385; 4 T.L.R. 399; 36 W.R. 539, C.A. 885, 886
Dupuis v. New Regina Trading Co. [1943] 4 Dom.L.R. 275 . . . . 999, 1004
Duranty's Case (1858) 26 Beav. 268; 28 L.J.Ch. 37; 32 L.T.O.S. 114; 4 Jur.N.S. 1068; 7 W.R. 70; 53 E.R. 901 755

E. E. & Brian Smith (1928) v. Wheatsheaf Mills [1939] 2 K.B. 302 274
Easson v. London and North Eastern Railway Co. [1944] 1 K.B. 421; 113 L.J.K.B. 449; 170 L.T. 234; 60 T.L.R. 280; 88 S.J. 143; [1944] 2 All E.R. 425, C.A. . 349
East Kent Packers v. Buncombe (1951) 45 R. & I.T. 151 967
Eastbourne Corpn. v. Fortes Ice Cream Parlour (1955) Ltd. [1958] 2 W.L.R. 886; 122 J.P. 324; 102 S.J. 365; [1958] 2 All E.R. 276; 56 L.G.R. 243; 9 P. & C.R. 313, D.C. 636
Eaves v. Eaves & Powell [1956] P. 154; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 984; 99 S.J. 891; [1955] 3 All E.R. 849 315
Ebbw Vale Steel, Iron and Coal Co v. Tew (1935) 79 S.J. 593, C.A. 28
Eckert v. Long Island Railroad Co. (1871) 43 N.Y. 502 999
Edevain v. Cohen (1889) 41 Ch.D. 563 1233
Edler v. Auerbach [1950] 1 K.B. 359; 65 T.L.R. 645; 93 S.J. 727; [1949] 2 All E.R. 692; 1 P. & C.R. 10 756
Edwards v. Summerton [1899] W.N. 120 23
Edwards (Inspector of Taxes) v. Bairstow [1956] A.C. 14; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 410; 99 S.J. 558; [1955] 3 All E.R. 48; [1955] T.R. 209; 48 R. & I.T. 534; 36 T.C. 207; 34 A.T.C. 198; T.C. Leaflet No. 1742, H.L. . 77, 83, 131, 324, 338, 708, 1071
Ellesmere v. I. R. C. [1918] 2 K.B. 735; 88 L.J.K.B. 337; 119 L.T. 568; 34 T.L.R. 560 252
Elliott v. Elliott [1956] P. 160; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 219; 100 S.J. 52; [1956] 1 All E.R. 122, C.A. 483
Ellis v. Home Office [1953] 2 Q.B. 135; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 105; 97 S.J. 436; [1953] 2 All E.R. 149, C.A. 1308, 1309
Ellis v. Manchester Carriage Co. (1876) 2 C.P.D. 13; 35 L.T. 476; 25 W.R. 229 . 1234
Elwes v. Elwes (1794) 1 Hag.Con. 269; 161 E.R. 549 483
Emanuel v. Emanuel [1946] P. 115; 114 L.J.P. 60; 173 L.T. 118; 61 T.L.R. 538; [1945] 2 All E.R. 494 896
Errington v. Minister of Health [1935] 1 K.B. 249; 104 L.J.K.B. 49; 152 L.T. 154; 99 J.P. 15; 51 T.L.R. 44; 78 S.J. 754 . . . . . 664, 677
Eshelby v. Federated European Bank Ltd. [1932] 1 K.B. 423; affirming [1932] 1 K.B. 254 22
Esso Petroleum Co. v. Southport Corporation [1956] A.C. 218; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 81; 120 J.P. 54; 100 S.J. 32; [1955] 3 All E.R. 864; 54 L.G.R. 91; [1955] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 655, H.L. 1236
Evans v. Bartlam [1937] A.C. 473; 106 L.J.K.B. 568; 53 T.L.R. 689; 81 S.J. 549 160, 532
Evans v. Horner [1925] Ch. 177; 94 L.J.Ch. 220; 132 L.T. 730; 69 S.J. 161 . . 119
Everett v. Griffiths [1921] 1 A.C. 631; 90 L.J.K.B. 737; 125 L.T. 230; 85 J.P. 149; 37 T.L.R. 481; 65 S.J. 395; 19 L.G.R. 283, H.L. 556
Everitt v. Everitt [1948] W.N. 237; 65 T.L.R. 121; 92 S.J. 586; [1948] 2 All E.R. 545, C.A. 1049
Everitt v. Everitt [1949] P. 374; 113 J.P. 279; 93 S.J. 286; [1949] 1 All E.R. 908; 47 L.G.R. 377, C.A. 483
Exchange Telegraph Co. Ltd. v. Gregory & Co. [1896] 1 Q.B. 147; 65 L.J.Q.B. 262; 74 L.T. 83; 60 J.P. 52; 12 T.L.R. 18, C.A. 68

F. v. P. (orse. F.) (1911) 27 T.L.R. 429 621
F. P. H. Finance Trust v. I. R. C. [1946] A.C. 38; 114 L.J.K.B. 203; 172 L.T. 278; 61 T.L.R. 320; 89 S.J. 175; [1945] 1 All E.R. 492; 28 T.C. 209, H.L. 214, 218
Faithfull v. Kesteven (1910) 103 L.T. 56, C.A. 567
Fane v. Fane (1879) 13 Ch.D. 228; 49 L.J.Ch. 200; 41 L.T. 551; 28 W.R. 348 . 532
Fearn v. Fearn [1948] P. 241; [1948] L.J.R. 1043; 64 T.L.R. 218; 92 S.J. 140; [1948] 1 All E.R. 459, C.A. 483
Fearon & Flinn, In re (1869) L.R. 5 C.P. 34 253

PAGE

Federal Commissioner of Taxation v. United Aircraft Corporation (1943) 68 C.L.R. 525 68
Ferrier v. Scottish Milk Marketing Board [1937] A.C. 126; 105 L.J.P.C. 135; 155 L.T. 425; 80 S.J. 718; [1936] 2 All E.R. 1131, H.L. 918
Finch v. Telegraph Construction and Maintenance Co. [1949] W.N. 57; 65 T.L.R. 153; 93 S.J. 219; [1949] 1 All E.R. 452; 47 L.G.R. 710 226
Finlayson v. M'Leod (1818) 1 B. & Ald. 663; 106 E.R. 243 252
Finney v. Finney (1868) L.R. 1 P.D. 483; 37 L.J.P. & M. 43; 18 L.T. 489 . . 1276
Fisher v. Taylors Furnishing Stores [1956] 2 Q.B. 78; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 985; 100 S.J. 316; [1956] 2 All E.R. 78, C.A. 207, 208, 209, 902
Fisk v. Fisk (1920) 122 L.T. 803; 36 T.L.R. 248 342
Fitton v. Wood (1875) 32 L.T. 554; 39 J.P. 646 1079
Fleet Electrics Ltd. v. Jacey Investments Ltd. [1956] 1 W.L.R. 1027; 100 S.J. 586; [1956] 3 All E.R. 99, C.A. 902
Florence Land and Public Works Co., In re (1883) 29 Ch.D. 421 911
Flower v. Ebbw Vale Steel, Iron and Coal Co. [1936] A.C. 206, H.L. . . . 502
Flower v. Lloyd (1879) 10 Ch.D. 327, C.A. 3
Foley v. Classique Coaches Ltd. [1934] 2 K.B. 1; 103 L.J.K.B. 550; 151 L.T. 242, C.A. 24
Forbes v. Forbes [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1526; 119 J.P. 30; 98 S.J. 887; [1954] 3 All E.R. 461 483
Forbes v. Forbes (No. 2) [1956] P. 16; [1955] 1 W.L.R. 531; 119 J.P. 403; 99 S.J. 321; [1955] 2 All E.R. 311 . . . . . 695, 697
Forbes v. Scottish Widows Fund and Life Assurance (1895) 3 T.C. 443 . . 1070
Ford v. Langford [1949] W.N. 87; [1949] L.J.R. 586; 65 T.L.R. 138; 93 S.J. 102; [1949] 1 All E.R. 483, C.A. 238
Ford v. London and South Western Railway Co. (1862) 2 F. & F. 730, N.P. 350, 356
Ford v. Stier [1896] P. 1; sub nom. Clarke v. Clarke, 65 L.J.P. 13; sub nom. Clarke (falsely called Stier) v. Stier, 73 L.T. 632; sub nom. Stier (orse. Clarke) v. Stier, 11 R. 668 1282
Foster v. Great Western Railway Co. (1882) 8 Q.B.D. 515; 51 L.J.Q.B. 233; 46 L.T. 74; 30 W.R. 398; 4 Ry. & Can.Tr.Cas. 58, C.A. 253
Foster v. Robinson [1951] 1 K.B. 149; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 120; 94 S.J. 474; [1950] 2 All E.R. 342, C.A. 244, 583
Foulsham v. Pickles [1925] A.C. 458; 94 L.J.K.B. 418; 133 L.T. 5; 41 T.L.R. 323; 69 S.J. 411 1074
Fowler v. Fowler [1952] 2 T.L.R. 143, C.A. 694, 695
Francis v. Francis and Dickerson [1956] P. 87; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 973; 99 S.J. 891; [1955] 3 All E.R. 836 315
Frape, In re, ex parte Perrett [1893] 2 Ch. 284; 62 L.J.Ch. 473; 68 L.T. 558; 37 S.J. 373; 41 W.R. 417; 2 R. 411, C.A. 451, 452
French Government v. Owners of S.S. Tsurushima Maru (1921) 37 T.L.R. 961 . 252
Fribance v. Fribance (No. 2) [1957] 1 W.L.R. 384; 101 S.J. 188; [1957] 1 All E.R. 357, C.A. 264, 1120
Friend v. Solley (1847) 10 B. 329 315
Fritz v. Hobson (1880) 14 Ch.D. 542; 49 L.J.Ch. 321; 42 L.T. 225; 24 S.J. 366; 28 W.R. 459 22
Frost v. London, Brighton & South Coast Railway Co. (1870) 39 L.J.N.S.Ex. 54 . 315
Fuerst Bros. & Co. and R. S. Stephenson, In re [1951] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 429 . 252, 274, 279
Fullers v. Squire [1901] 2 K.B. 209; 70 L.J.K.B. 689; 85 L.T. 249; 65 J.P. 660; 45 S.J. 539; 49 W.R. 683, D.C. 965, 971
Fulwood's Case (1638) Cro.Car. 482 1284

G. v. G. (1871) L.R. 2 P. & D. 287; 40 L.J.P. & M. 83; 25 L.T. 510; 20 W.R. 103 622
Gape, In re [1952] Ch. 743; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 477; 96 S.J. 595; sub nom. Re Gape's Will Trusts, Verey v. Gape [1952] 2 All E.R. 579, C.A. . . 1163
Gascoigne v. Gascoigne [1918] 1 K.B. 223; 87 L.J.K.B. 333; 118 L.T. 347; 34 T.L.R. 168, D.C. 260
Gavazzi v. Mace (1926) 135 L.T. 634 68
Gee v. Metropolitan Railway Co. (1873) L.R. 8 Q.B. 161; 42 L.J.Q.B. 105; 28 L.T. 282; 21 W.R. 584, Ex.Ch. 624
General Medical Council v. Spackman [1943] A.C. 627; 112 L.J.K.B. 529; 169 L.T. 226; 59 T.L.R. 412; 87 S.J. 298; [1943] 2 All E.R. 337, H.L. . . 775
General Nursing Council for England and Wales v. St. Marylebone Borough Council [1958] Ch. 421; [1957] 3 W.L.R. 1039; 122 J.P. 67; 101 S.J. 973; [1957] 3 All E.R. 685; 50 R. & I.T. 818; 56 L.G.R. 43, C.A. . 100, 107, 179, 1139, 1178
Geologists' Association v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue (1928) 14 T.C. 271 . 105
Gibbs & Houlder Bros. & Co. Ltd.'s Lease, In re [1925] Ch. 575; 94 L.J.Ch. 312; 133 L.T. 322; 41 T.L.R. 487; 69 S.J. 541, C.A. 1269

PAGE
Giblin v. McMullen (1868) L.R. 2 C.P. 317; 5 Moo.P.C.C.N.S. 434; 38 L.J.P.C. 25; 21 L.T. 214; 17 W.R. 445; 16 E.R. 578, P.C. 1032
Gibson v. South American Stores (Gath & Chaves) [1950] Ch. 177; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 83; 93 S.J. 822; [1949] 2 All E.R. 985, C.A. 1175
Gilbert v. Gilbert (Adams intervening) [1958] 2 W.L.R. 8; 102 S.J. 15; [1957] 3 All E.R 604 1092
Gillet v. Gillet [1952] W.N. 266; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1399, C.A. 895
Ginn v. Robey [1911] W.N. 28 316
Glasgow Corporation v. Central Land Board [1956] J.P.L. 442; 1956 S.C.(H.L.) 1; S.L.T. 41, H.L.; affirming 1955 S.C. 64; 1955 S.L.T. 155 1303
Glasgow Corporation v. Muir [1943] A.C. 448; 112 L.J.P.C. 1; 169 L.T 53; 107 J.P. 140; 59 T.L.R. 266; 87 S.J. 182; 41 L.G.R. 173, H.L. 1206
Glasgow Corporation v. Taylor [1922] 1 A.C. 44; 91 L.J.P.C. 49; 126 L.T. 262; 86 J.P. 89; 38 T.L.R. 102; 20 L.G.R. 205, H.L. 354
Glasgow Iron and Steel Co. v. Dickson [1925] A.C. 790; 95 L.J.P.C. 1; 133 L.T. 771; 41 T.L.R. 644; 69 S.J. 743, 794; 18 B.W.C.C. 411, H.L. . . 118
Gleahill v. Liverpool Abattoir Utility Co. [1957] 1 W.L.R. 1028; 101 S.J. 797; [1957] 3 All E.R. 117; 55 L.G.R. 311, C.A. 367, 370
Glenister v. Glenister [1945] P. 30; 114 L.J.P. 69; 172 L.T. 250; 109 J.P. 194; 43 L.G.R. 250; [1945] 1 All E.R. 513 . . . . 343, 345, 346, 484, 486
Glynn v. Margetson & Co. [1893] A.C. 351; 62 L.J.Q.B. 466; 69 L.T. 1; 9 T.L.R. 437; 1 Asp.M.L.C. 366; 1 R. 193, H.L. 699
Goodyear Tyre and Rubber Co. (Great Britain) v. Lancashire Batteries [1958] 1 W.L.R. 857; 102 S.J. 581; [1958] 3 All E.R. 7; L.R. 1 R.P. 22; reversing [1958] 1 W.L.R. 655 1036
Gray v. Ashburton [1917] A.C. 26; 86 L.J.K.B. 224; 115 L.T. 729; 81 J.P. 17; 61 S.J. 129, H.L. 254
Great Kruger Gold Mining Co., In re [1892] 3 Ch. 307 293
Great Western Railway Co. v. Bater [1922] 2 A.C. 1; 91 L.J.K.B. 472; 127 L.T. 170; 38 T.L.R. 448; 66 S.J. 365; 8 T.C. 231, H.L. 68
Green v. Weatherill [1929] 2 Ch. 213; 98 L.J.Ch. 369; 142 L.T. 216; 45 T.L.R. 494 289
Greene v. Greene [1916] P. 188; 85 L.J.P. 224; 115 L.T. 127; 32 T.L.R. 520; 60 S.J. 620 343
Greenhalgh v. Mallard [1947] 2 All E.R. 255, C.A. . . . 288, 291, 295, 296
Greer v. Downs Supply Co. [1927] 2 K.B. 28; 96 L.J.K.B. 534; 137 L.T. 174, C.A. 865
Gresham Life Assurance Society v. Bishop [1901] 1 K.B. 153, C.A. . . . 1070
Gresham's Settlement, In re [1956] 1 W.L.R. 573; 100 S.J. 380; [1956] 2 All E.R. 193 222
Grey, In the estate of [1922] P. 140; 91 L.J.P. 111; 126 L.T. 799; 38 T.L.R. 401 460
Griffith v. Pelton [1958] Ch. 205; [1957] 3 W.L.R. 522; 101 S.J. 663; [1957] 3 All E.R. 75, C.A. 65
Grote v. Chester and Holyhead Railway Co. (1848) 2 Ex. 251; 5 Ry. & Can.Cas. 649; 154 E.R. 485 351
Grove v. Lloyds British Testing Co. [1931] A.C. 450; 100 L.J.K.B. 271; 145 L.T. 73; 95 J.P. 115; 47 T.L.R. 308; 29 L.G.R. 279, H.L. 962
Guinness Trust (London Fund) v. Green [1955] 1 W.L.R. 872; 99 S.J. 509; [1955] 2 All E.R. 871, C.A. 643

H. v. H. [1954] P. 258; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 849; 97 S.J. 782; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1229 1282
Hadley v. Baxendale (1854) 9 Exch.Rep. 341; 23 L.J.Ex. 179; 23 L.T.O.S. 69; 18 Jur. 358; 2 W.R. 302; 2 C.L.R. 517; 156 E.R. 145 625
Haigh's Trustees v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 1939 S.C. 676; 22 T.C. 725 78, 85
Halifax Sugar Refining Co., In re (1891) 7 T.L.R. 293 567
Hall v. Hall (1908) 24 T.L.R. 736 1282
Hall v. Hall & Richardson (1879) 48 L.J.P. 57; 40 L.T. 525; 27 W.R. 664 . 1277
Hall v. Marians (No. 2) (1935) 18 T.C. 148 1070
Harding v. Price [1948] 1 K.B. 695; [1948] L.J.R. 1624; 64 T.L.R. 111; 112 J.P. 189; 92 S.J. 112; [1948] 1 All E.R. 283; 46 L.G.R. 142, D.C. . . . 527
Harewood Hotels v. Harris [1958] 1 W.L.R. 108; 102 S.J. 67; [1958] 1 All E.R. 104, C.A. 1079
Harris v. Corporation of Irvine [1900] 2 F. 1080; 4 T.C. 221 134
Harrison v. Hill, 1932 S.C.(J.) 13 1108
Harrison v. Metropolitan-Vickers Electrical Company Ltd. [1954] 1 W.L.R. 324; 98 S.J. 108; [1954] 1 All E.R. 404; 52 L.G.R. 174, C.A. 42
Harrison (T. & J.) v. Knowles & Foster [1918] 1 K.B. 608; 87 L.J.K.B. 680; 118 L.T. 566; 23 Com.Cas. 282; 14 Asp.M.L.C. 249, C.A. 756
Hartley v. Hartley [1955] 1 W.L.R. 384; 119 J.P. 248; 99 S.J. 239; [1955] 1 All E.R. 625, D.C. 483
Haseldine v. C. A. Daw & Son [1941] 2 K.B. 343; 111 L.J.K.B. 45; 165 L.T. 185; 58 T.L.R. 1; [1941] 3 All E.R. 156, C.A. 349

PAGE

Haswell v. Haswell and Sanderson (1859) 1 Sw. & Tr. 502; Sea. & Sm. 32; 29 L.J.P. & M. 21; 1 L.T. 69; 23 J.P. 825; 8 W.R. 76; 164 E.R. 832 . 345
Haynes v. Harwood [1935] 1 K.B. 146; 104 L.J.K.B. 63; 152 L.T. 121; 51 T.L.R. 100; 78 S.J. 801, C.A. 999, 1000, 1003
Haynes v. Qualcast (Wolverhampton) Ltd. [1958] 1 W.L.R. 225; 102 S.J. 138; [1958] 1 All E.R. 441, C.A. 491, 940
Healey v. Minister of Health [1955] 1 Q.B. 221; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 815; 119 J.P. 242; 98 S.J. 819; [1954] 3 All E.R. 449, C.A.; affirming [1954] 2 Q.B. 221; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 222; 118 J.P. 400; 98 S.J. 473; [1954] 2 All E.R. 580 . 154
Heasman v. Jordan [1954] Ch. 744; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 432; 98 S.J. 575; [1954] 3 All E.R. 101; [1954] T.R. 313; 47 R. & I.T. 558; 35 T.C. 518; 33 A.T.C. 324 412
Heath v. Pearson [1957] Crim.L.R. 195, D.C. 1107, 1108
Heatley v. Steel Co. of Wales [1953] 1 W.L.R. 405; 97 S.J. 149; [1953] 1 All E.R. 489, C.A. 999
Heaven & Kesterton v. Etablissements François Albiac et Cie [1956] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 316 252
Heaven & Kesterton v. Sven Widaeus A/B [1958] 1 W.L.R. 248; 102 S.J. 161; [1958] 1 All E.R. 420; [1958] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 101 719
Hedley v. Bates (1880) 13 Ch.D. 498; 49 L.J.Ch. 170; 42 L.T. 41; 28 W.R. 365 . 154
Henderson v. Henderson (1843) 3 Hare 100 . . . . . 289, 291
Henderson v. Henderson and Crellin [1944] A.C. 49; 113 L.J.P. 1; 170 L.T. 84; 60 T.L.R. 113; 88 S.J. 24; [1944] 1 All E.R. 44, H.L. 485, 486
Hennessy v. Wright (1888) 21 Q.B.D. 509; 57 L.J.Q.B. 530; 59 L.T. 323; 53 J.P. 52; 4 T.L.R. 597, D.C. 1307
Henshall v. Porter [1923] 2 K.B. 193; 92 L.J.K.B. 866; 129 L.T. 443; 39 T.L.R. 409; 67 S.J. 537 1036
Herbert v. McQuade [1902] 2 K.B. 631; 71 L.J.K.B. 884; 87 L.T. 349; 66 J.P. 692; 18 T.L.R. 728; 4 T.C. 489, C.A. 836, 837
Herbert Morris Ltd. v. Saxelby [1916] 1 A.C. 688; 85 L.J.Ch. 210; 114 L.T. 618; 32 T.L.R. 297; 60 S.J. 305, H.L. 89
Heydon's Case (1584) 3 Co.Rep. 7a; Moore K.B. 128; 76 E.R. 637 735
Heyman v. Darwins [1942] A.C. 356; 111 L.J.K.B. 241; 166 L.T. 306; 58 T.L.R. 169, H.L. 160
Heyworth's Contingent Reversionary Interest, In re [1956] Ch. 364; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 1044; 100 S.J. 342 167
Hichens v. Hichens [1945] P. 23; 114 L.J.P. 65; 172 L.T. 331; 61 T.L.R. 302; [1945] 1 All E.R. 451, C.A. 1120
Hickman v. Kent or Romney Marsh Sheep-Breeders' Association [1915] 1 Ch. 881; 84 L.J.Ch. 688; 113 L.T. 159; 59 S.J. 478 214
Hickman v. Maisey [1900] 1 Q.B. 752; 69 L.J.Q.B. 511; 82 L.T. 321; 44 S.J. 326; 48 W.R. 385 774
Higgins v. Willis (1828) 3 M. & R.K.B. 382 401
Highett and Bird's Contract, In re [1903] 1 Ch. 287; 72 L.J.Ch. 220; 87 L.T. 697; 47 S.J. 204; 51 W.R. 227, C.A. 854
Hill, In re [1914] W.N. 132 977
Hill v. Booth [1930] 1 K.B. 381; 99 L.J.K.B. 49; 142 L.T. 80; 46 T.L.R. 50; 73 S.J. 782, C.A. 238
Hillas & Co. Ltd. v. Arcos Ltd. (1932) 147 L.T. 503 . . . . . 24, 699
Hills (Patents) v. University College Hospital Board of Governors [1956] 1 Q.B. 90; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 523; 99 S.J. 760; [1955] 3 All E.R. 365, C.A. . . 1079
Hines v. Eastern Counties Farmers Co-operative Association [1931] A.C. 456; 100 L.J.K.B. 271; 145 L.T. 73; 95 J.P. 115; 47 T.L.R. 308; 29 L.G.R. 279 962, 964, 967, 969
Hip Foong Hong v. H. Neatia & Co. [1918] A.C. 888 4
Hitchcock v. W. B. & F. E. B. [1952] 2 Q.B. 561; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1550; 116 J.P. 401; 96 S.J. 448; [1952] 2 All E.R. 119; 50 L.G.R. 606 . . 199, 200, 201, 202
Hoare v. Robert Green [1907] 2 K.B. 315; 76 L.J.K.B. 730; 96 L.T. 724; 71 J.P. 341; 23 T.L.R. 483, D.C. 370, 961
Hobbs v. Winchester Corporation [1910] 2 K.B. 471; 79 L.J.K.B. 1123; 102 L.T. 841; 74 J.P. 413; 26 T.L.R. 557; 8 L.G.R. 1072, C.A. 526
Hoenig v. Isaacs [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1360; [1952] 2 All E.R. 176, C.A. . . . 1129
Holden v. Premier Waterproof and Rubber Co. (1931) 47 T.L.R. 169 . . . 854
Hole v. Chard Union [1894] 1 Ch. 293; 63 L.J.Ch. 469; 70 L.T. 52; 38 S.J. 113; 7 R. 84, C.A. 25, 26
Hong v. Brown (A. & R.) [1948] 1 K.B. 515; [1948] L.J.R. 1816; 92 S.J. 124; [1948] 1 All E.R. 185; sub nom. Hong v. Brown and Runcimans, 64 T.L.R. 132, C.A. 534, 535, 536, 538
Hood v. Anchor Line (Henderson) Bros. [1918] A.C. 837; 87 L.J.P.C. 156; 119 L.T. 684; 34 T.L.R. 550; 62 S.J. 680, H.L. 860, 1036

PAGE
Hookway (F. E.) & Co. v. Alfred Isaacs & Sons [1954] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 491 . . 664
Hopper, In re (1867) L.R. 2 Q.B.D. 367; 8 B. & S. 100; 36 L.J.Q.B. 97; 15 W.R. 443 274
Hosking v. De Havilland Aircraft Co. Ltd. [1949] 1 All E.R. 540; 83 Ll.L.Rep. 11 42
Ho Tung v. Man On Insurance Co. [1902] A.C. 232; 71 L.J.P.C. 46; 85 L.T. 617; 18 T.L.R. 118; 9 Mans. 171, P.C. 1114
Howard de Walden v. I. R. C. [1942] 1 K.B. 389; 111 L.J.K.B. 273; 25 T.C. 121; [1942] 1 All E.R. 287, C.A. 591
Howson v. Monsell [1950] W.N. 544; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 916; 94 S.J. 742; [1950] 2 All E.R. 1239n.; [1950] T.R. 333; 31 T.C. 529 68
Hoystead v. Commissioner of Taxation [1926] A.C. 155; 94 L.J.P.C. 79; 134 L.T. 354; 42 T.L.R. 207, P.C. 1276
Hudson v. Hudson [1948] P. 292; [1948] L.J.R. 907; 64 T.L.R. 258; [1948] 1 All E.R. 773 . . . . . 515, 1276
Hudsons v. De Halpert (1913) 108 L.T. 416 . . . . . 533, 534, 538
Hughes v. Waite [1957] 1 W.L.R. 713; 101 S.J. 405; [1957] 1 All E.R. 603 . 238
Humfrey v. Dale (1857) 7 E. & B. 266 . . . . . 675, 677
Humphries v. Connor (1864) 17 Ir.C.L.R. 1 1185
Hunt v. Star Newspaper [1908] 2 K.B. 309; 77 L.J.K.B. 732; 98 L.T. 629; 24 T.L.R. 452; 52 S.J. 376, C.A. 745
Huntley v. Thornton [1957] 1 W.L.R. 321; 101 S.J. 171; [1957] 1 All E.R. 234 . 774
Hussein (orse. Blitz) v. Hussein [1938] P. 159; 107 L.J.P. 105; 54 T.L.R. 632; 82 S.J. 336; [1938] 2 All E.R. 344 1282
Hutchinson v. London and North Eastern Railway Co. [1942] 1 K.B. 481; 111 L.J.K.B. 369; 166 L.T. 228; 58 T.L.R. 174; [1942] 1 All E.R. 330, C.A. . 507
Hutton v. Warren (1836) 1 M. & W. 466; 2 Gale 71; Tyr. & G. 646; 5 L.J.Ex. 231; 150 E.R. 517 . . . . . 274, 282, 671, 672, 674
Huxley v. West London Extension Railway Co. (1889) 14 App.Cas. 26 . . . 532
Hyett v. Great Western Railway Co. [1948] 1 K.B. 345; [1947] L.J.R. 1243; 177 L.T. 178; 63 T.L.R. 411; 91 S.J. 434; [1947] 2 All E.R. 264, C.A. . 999

Ibrahim v. The King [1914] A.C. 599; 83 L.J.P.C. 185; 111 L.T. 20; 30 T.L.R. 383; 24 Cox.C.C. 174, P.C. 1053
Incandescent Gas Light Co. v. Brogden (1899) 16 R.P.C. 179 1037
Income Tax Commissioners v. Pemsel [1891] A.C. 531; 61 L.J.Q.B. 265; 65 L.T. 621; 55 J.P. 805; 7 T.L.R. 657; 3 T.C. 53, H.L. 1175
Inderwick, In re (1883) 25 Ch.D. 279; 54 L.J.Ch. 72; 50 L.T. 221; 32 W.R. 541, C.A. 445
Ingram v. Ingram [1956] P. 390; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 782; 100 S.J. 227; [1956] 1 All E.R. 785 694
Inland Revenue v. Maclachlans, 1930 S.C. 449 963
Inland Revenue v. Strang (1878) 15 Sc.L.R. 704 836
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Alexander von Glehn & Co. [1920] 2 K.B. 553 298
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Assessor for Edinburgh, 1930 S.C. 429 . . 363
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Bew Estates [1956] Ch. 407; [1956] 3 W.L.R. 139; 100 S.J. 419; [1956] 2 All E.R. 210; [1956] T.R. 97; 49 R. & I.T. 353; 36 T.C. 476; 35 A.T.C. 104 412
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. British Salmson Aero Engines Ltd. [1938] 2 K.B. 482; 107 L.J.K.B. 648; 159 L.T. 147; 54 T.L.R. 904; 82 S.J. 433; 22 T.C. 29; [1938] 3 All E.R. 283, C.A. 68
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Clay, Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Buchanan [1914] 3 K.B. 466; 83 L.J.K.B. 1425; 111 L.T. 484; 30 T.L.R. 573; 58 S.J. 610, C.A. 1297
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Dalgety & Co. [1930] A.C. 527; 99 L.J.K.B. 342; 143 L.T. 191; 46 T.L.R. 349; 15 T.C. 216, H.L. 590
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Forrest (1890) 15 App.Cas. 334; 60 L.J.Q.B. 281; 63 L.T. 36; 54 J.P. 772; 6 T.L.R. 456; 3 T.C. 117; 39 W.R. 33, H.L. 103
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Fred's Securities Co. [1939] 2 K.B. 734; [1939] 3 All E.R. 241 214
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Gordon [1952] A.C. 552; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 913; 96 S.J. 280; [1952] 1 All E.R. 866; [1952] T.R. 149; 45 R. & I.T. 285; 33 T.C. 226; 31 A.T.C. 165; 1952 S.C.(H.L.) 64, H.L. . . . 1070, 1074
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. John Donaldson & Co. 1930 S.C. 348 . . 961
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Patrick Thomson [1956] T.R. 471; 50 R. & I.T. 95; (1956) 37 T.C. 145; 35 A.T.C. 487; 1957 S.L.T. 235 . . . 708
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Reinhold [1953] T.R. 11; 46 R. & I.T. 108; 34 T.C. 389; 32 A.T.C. 10; 153 S.C. 49; 1953 S.L.T. 94 68
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Stonehaven Recreation Ground Trustees (1929) 15 T.C. 419 . . . . . 134, 708
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Wood Brothers (Birkenhead) Ltd. [1957] 3 W.L.R. 713; 101 S.J. 849; [1957] 3 All E.R. 314; [1957] T.R. 253; 50 R. & I.T. 743; 36 A.T.C. 259; T.C. Leaflet No. 1845, C.A. 65

PAGE

Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Yorkshire Agricultural Society [1928] 1 K.B. 611; 97 L.J.K.B. 100; 138 L.T. 192; 44 T.L.R. 59; 72 S.J. 68; 13 T.C. 58, C.A. 104, 105
Innes v. Newman [1894] 2 Q.B. 292; 63 L.J.M.C. 198; 70 L.T. 689; 58 J.P. 543; 10 T.L.R. 479; 38 S.J. 492; 10 R. 348; 42 W.R. 573, D.C. . . . 1103
Institute of Civil Engineers v. I. R. C. [1932] 1 K.B. 149; 47 T.L.R. 466; 16 T.C. 158 . . . . . 103, 104
Inverclyde (orse. Tripp) v. Inverclyde [1931] P. 29; 100 L.J.P. 16; 144 L.T. 212; 95 J.P. 73; 47 T.L.R. 140; 74 S.J. 863; 29 L.G.R. 353 1014

J.—P.C. v. J.—A.F. [1955] P. 215; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 72; 90 S.J. 399; [1955] 2 All E.R. 617; [1955] T.R. 193; 48 R. & I.T. 644 . . . . . 830, 831
Jacobs v. Booth's Distillery Co. (1901) 85 L.T. 262 307
Jacobs v. London, Brighton & South Coast Railway Co. (1870) 22 L.T. 651 . . 315
Jagger v. Jagger [1926] P. 93; 95 L.J.P. 83; 135 L.T. 1; 42 T.L.R. 413; 70 S.J. 503, C.A. 928
James v. Bowkett [1952] W.N. 341; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 100; 116 J.P. 445; 96 S.J. 448; [1952] 2 All E.R. 320, D.C. 844, 845
James A. Jobling & Co. v. Sunderland County Borough Assessment Committee [1944] W.N. 126; 60 T.L.R. 330; [1944] 1 All E.R. 500, C.A. . . . 967
Jameson v. Jameson [1952] A.C. 525; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 833; 116 J.P. 226; [1952] 1 All E.R. 875; 1952 S.C.(H.L.) 44; 1952 S.L.T. 257, H.L. 694
Jay v. Jay [1924] 1 K.B. 826; 93 L.J.K.B. 280; 130 L.T. 667, D.C. 735
Jayne v. Jayne & Prothero (1869) 21 L.T. 401; 18 W.R. 53 . . . 865, 897, 898
Jervis v. Tomkinson (1856) 1 H. & N. 195; 26 L.J.Ex. 41; 27 L.T.O.S. 205; 156 E.R. 1174 32
John v. Heath, The Times, April 24, 1958 1103
Johnson v. Clarke [1928] Ch. 847; 97 L.J.Ch. 337; 139 L.T. 552; 72 S.J. 556 . 432
Johnson v. Johnson [1900] P. 19; 69 L.J.P. 13; 81 L.T. 791; 64 J.P. 72; 16 T.L.R. 26, D.C. 37
Jones v. Bellgrove Properties [1949] 2 K.B. 700; 65 T.L.R. 451; sub nom. Jones v. Bellegrove Properties, 93 S.J. 512; [1949] 2 All E.R. 198, C.A. . . 825
Jones v. Boyce (1816) 1 Stark. 493, N.P. 626, 630
Jones v. I. R. C. [1895] 1 Q.B. 484; 64 L.J.Q.B. 84; 71 L.T. 763; 11 T.L.R. 78; 39 S.J. 97; 43 W.R. 318; 15 R. 136, D.C. 946, 947
Jones v. Jones (1872) L.R. 2 P. & D. 333; 41 L.J.P. & M. 53; 26 L.T. 106; 20 W.R. 449 886
Jones v. Jones [1953] 1 W.L.R. 867; 117 J.P. 348; 97 S.J. 456; [1953] 2 All E.R. 345, D.C. 342, 484
Jones v. Jones [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1474; 118 J.P. 563; 98 S.J. 853; [1954] 3 All E.R. 476n., D.C. 343
Jones v. Leeming [1930] A.C. 415; 99 L.J.K.B. 318; 143 L.T. 50; 46 T.L.R. 296; 74 S.J. 247; sub nom. Leeming v. Jones 15 T.C. 333, H.L. . . . 88
Jones (R. E.) v. Waring & Gillow [1926] A.C. 670 1221
Jonesco v. Beard [1930] A.C. 298 4

K., In re [1953] 1 Q.B. 117, sub nom. Kuzmicz (An Infant), Re [1952] 2 T.L.R. 745; 96 S.J. 764; sub nom. K. (An Infant), Re, Rogers v. Kuzmicz, 117 J.P. 9; [1952] 2 All E.R. 877; 51 L.G.R. 1, C.A. 198
Kaslefsky v. Kaslefsky [1951] P. 38; 66 T.L.R.(Pt. 2) 616; 114 J.P. 404; 94 S.J. 519; [1950] 2 All E.R. 398; 48 L.G.R. 520, C.A. 694
Kates v. Jeffery [1914] 3 K.B. 160; 83 L.J.K.B. 1760; 111 L.T. 459; 78 J.P. 310; 12 L.G.R. 974; 24 Cox.C.C. 324, D.C. 88
Kay (John) v. Kay [1952] 2 Q.B. 258; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 766; 96 S.J. 212; [1952] 1 All E.R. 813, C.A. 109
Kaye v. Burrows [1931] A.C. 454; 100 L.J.K.B. 271; 145 L.T. 73; 95 J.P. 115; 47 T.L.R. 308; 29 L.G.R. 279; (1926–31) 2 B.R.A. 886, H.L. . . 962, 964
Keats v. Keats and Montezuma (1859) 1 Sw. & Tr. 334; 28 L.J.P. & M. 57; 32 L.T.O.S. 321; 5 Jur.N.S. 176; 7 W.R. 377; 164 E.R. 754 485
Keech v. Sandford (1726) Sel.Cas. 61 818
Keith v. Twentieth Century Club (1904) 73 L.J.Ch. 545; 90 L.T. 775; 20 T.L.R. 462; 48 S.J. 458; 52 W.R. 554 614
Kelly v. Batchelar (1893) 10 R.P.C. 289 1036
Kelly (orse. Hyams) v. Kelly (1932) 148 L.T. 143; 49 T.L.R. 99; 76 S.J. 832 . . 1282
Kemshead v. British Transport Commission [1958] 1 W.L.R. 173n; 102 S.J. 122; [1958] 1 All E.R. 119n., C.A. 172
Kemsley v. Foot [1952] A.C. 345; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 532; 96 S.J. 165; [1952] 1 All E.R. 501, H.L. 745
Kenward v. Kenward [1951] P. 124; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 157; 94 S.J. 383; [1950] 2 All E.R. 297, C.A.; reversing sub nom. Way v. Way, Rowley v. Rowley, Kenward v. Kenward, Whitehead v. Whitehead [1950] P. 71; 65 T.L.R. 707; 94 S.J. 50; [1949] 2 All E.R. 959 1282

PAGE

Keren Kayemeth Le Jisroel Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1932] A.C. 650, H.L.; affirming [1932] 2 K.B. 465; 100 L.J.K.B. 596; 145 L.T. 320; 47 T.L.R. 461, C.A. 1261
Kidston v. Deutsche Luft Hansa Akt. (1930) 38 Ll.L.Rep. 1 160
Kilgollan v. William Cooke & Co. [1956] 1 W.L.R. 527; 100 S.J. 359; [1956] 2 All E.R. 294, C.A. 416
King v. King [1953] A.C. 124; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 429; [1952] 2 All E.R. 584, H.L. 695
King-Emperor v. Sibrath Banerji (1945) L.R. 72 I.A. 241 556
Kingston Cotton Mill (No. 2), In re [1896] 1 Ch. 331; 65 L.J.Ch. 290; 73 L.T. 745; 40 S.J. 144; 12 T.L.R. 123; Affd. [1896] 2 Ch. 279, 288, C.A. . 51, 61
Kinneil Cannel & Coking Coal Co. v. Waddell [1931] A.C. 575; 100 L.J.P.C. 113; 145 L.T. 289; 47 T.L.R. 386; 75 S.J. 295; 24 B.W.C.C. 181, H.L. 931
Kiril Mischeff v. Constant Smith & Co. [1950] 2 K.B. 616; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 742; [1950] 1 All E.R. 890; 83 Ll.L.Rep. 496 399
Kirkham v. Boughey [1957] 3 W.L.R. 626; 101 S.J. 780; [1957] 3 All E.R. 153 889, 892
Kirkwood v. Lord Advocate 1939 S.C.(J.) 36 479
Kite, The [1933] P. 154; 102 L.J.P. 101; 149 L.T. 498; 49 T.L.R. 525; 18 Asp. M.L.C. 43 803
Knight v. Great Western Railway Co. [1943] 1 K.B. 105; 112 L.J.K.B. 321; 167 L.T. 71; 58 T.L.R. 352; 86 S.J. 331; [1942] 2 All E.R. 286 . . . 174
Knatt v. Knatt [1955] P. 249; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 162; 99 S.J. 453; [1955] 2 All E.R. 305 694
Korner v. H. Korner & Co. Ltd. [1951] Ch. 10; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 469; [1950] 2 All E.R. 451, C.A. 15
Kreen v. Martin [1935] 1 K.B. 499 1070
Kruse v. Johnson [1898] 2 Q.B. 91; 67 L.J.Q.B. 782; 78 L.T. 647; 62 J.P. 469; 14 T.L.R. 416; 42 S.J. 509; 19 Cox.C.C. 103, D.C. 1163
Kwame Asante (Chief) v. Kwame Tawia (Chief) [1949] W.N. 40; 65 T.L.R. 105; 93 S.J. 180, P.C. 154

"L" Hotel Co. and Langham Hotel Co., In re 115 L.J.Ch. 129; 174 L.T. 302; 62 T.L.R. 128; 90 S.J. 68; [1946] 1 All E.R. 319 1047
Lagos v. Grunwaldt [1910] 1 K.B. 41 306
Laing (John) & Son v. Kingswood Assessment Committee [1949] 1 K.B. 344; 65 T.L.R. 80; 113 J.P. 111; 93 S.J. 26; [1949] 1 All E.R. 224; 47 L.G.R. 64; 42 R. & I. T. 15, C.A. 543
Lake v. Lake [1955] P. 336; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 145; 99 S.J. 432; [1955] 2 All E.R. 538, C.A. 1276
Lance v. Lance & Gardiner [1958] P. 134n.; [1958] 2 W.L.R. 316n.; 102 S.J. 126; [1958] 1 All E.R. 388n. 1092
Lang v. Lang [1955] A.C. 402; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 762; 98 S.J. 803; [1954] 3 All E.R. 571, P.C. 694
Lapford (Devon) Parish Church, In re [1955] P. 205; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 748; 98 S.J. 806; sub nom. Re Lapford [1954] 3 All E.R. 484, C.A. . 1185, 1188, 1189, 1191
Last v. London Assurance Corporation, 10 App.Cas. 438; 55 L.J.Q.B. 92; 53 L.T. 634; 50 J.P. 116; 1 T.L.R. 617; 34 W.R. 233; 2 T.C. 100, H.L. . . . 708
Latimer v. A. E. C. [1953] A.C. 643; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 259; 117 J.P. 387; 97 S.J. 486; [1953] 2 All E.R. 449; 51 L.G.R. 457, H.L. 497
Law v. Graham [1901] 2 K.B. 327; 70 L.J.K.B. 608; 84 L.T. 599; 65 J.P. 501; 17 T.L.R. 474; 45 S.J. 485; 49 W.R. 622; 3 W.C.C. 131; 19 Cox C.C. 709, D.C. 370, 962
Lax v. Darlington Corpn. (1879) L.R. 5 Ex.D. 28; 49 L.J.Q.B. 105; 41 L.T. 489; 44 J.P. 312; 28 W.R. 221, C.A. 624
Leaf v. International Galleries [1950] 2 K.B. 86; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 1031; [1950] 1 All E.R. 693, C.A. 756, 757, 758, 760
Leckhampton Quarries Co. v. Ballinger and Cheltenham Rural District Council (1905) 93 L.T. 93, C.A. 252
Ledingham v. Bermejo Estancia Co. [1947] 1 All E.R. 749 824
Le Lievre v. Gould [1893] 1 Q.B. 491; 62 L.J.Q.B. 353; 68 L.T. 626; 57 J.P. 484; 37 S.J. 267; 41 W.R. 468; 4 R. 274 1030
Le Witt v. Brookes [1956] 1 W.L.R. 1438; 100 S.J. 836; [1956] 3 All E.R. 676. C.A. 114
Lee v. Nursery Furnishings Ltd. [1945] 1 All E.R. 387; 172 L.T. 285; 61 T.L.R 263, C.A. 937
Lennox v. Bell, 1957, Unreported 904
L'Estrange v. F. Grancob [1934] 2 K.B. 394; 103 L.J.K.B. 730; 152 L.T. 164 . 757
Lever Bros. v. Bell [1931] 1 K.B. 557, C.A. 757
Lewis v. Haverfordwest Rural District Council [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1486; 97 S.J. 877; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1599; 52 L.G.R. 44 . . . . . 254, 256, 718
Lewis v. Lewis [1956] P. 205n.; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 862n.; 120 J.P. 21; 99 S.J. 873; [1955] 3 All E.R. 598, D.C. 343

PAGE

Leyton U. D. C. v. Chew [1907] 2 K.B. 283; 76 L.J.K.B. 781; 96 L.T. 727; 71 J.P. 355; 5 L.G.R. 837, D.C. 1163
Lindley, In the estate of, decd. [1953] P. 203; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 168; 97 S.J. 439; [1953] 2 All E.R. 319 . . . . . 584, 585
L'Industrie Verrière, In re [1914] W.N. 222 . . . . . 521, 522
Lipman v. Pulman (George) & Sons (1904) 91 L.T. 132 252
Lipton v. Burton [1932] 1 K.B. 204; 100 L.J.K.B. 529; 145 L.T. 476; 95 J.P. 211; 47 T.L.R. 565; 29 L.G.R. 642, C.A. 961
Lissenden v. Bosch Ltd. [1940] A.C. 412; 109 L.J.K.B. 350; 162 L.T. 195; 56 T.L.R. 347; 84 S.J. 357; [1940] 1 All E.R. 425, H.L. 887
Liversidge v. Anderson [1942] A.C. 206; 110 L.J.K.B. 724; 116 L.T. 1; 58 T.L.R. 35; 85 S.J. 439; [1941] 3 All E.R. 338, H.L. 556
Llanover v. Homfray [1884] W.N. 134 315
Lloyd v. Grace, Smith & Co. [1912] A.C. 716; 81 L.J.K.B. 1140; 107 L.T. 531; 28 T.L.R. 547; 56 S.J. 723, H.L. 999
Lloyd del Pacifico v. Board of Trade (1930) 46 T.L.R. 476 252
Lloyd's Bank v. Railway Executive [1952] W.N. 215; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1207; 96 S.J. 313; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1248, C.A. 172, 176
Local Government Board v. Arlidge [1915] A.C. 120; 84 L.J.K.B. 72; 111 L.T. 905; 79 J.P. 97; 30 T.L.R. 672; 12 L.G.R. 1109, H.L. 556
Lockhart v. Moldacot Pocket Sewing Machine Co. (1889) 5 T.L.R. 307 . . . 412
Lomax v. Peter Dixon & Son [1943] 1 K.B. 671; 112 L.J.K.B. 593; 169 L.T. 145; 59 T.L.R. 376; 67 S.J. 354; 25 T.C. 353, C.A. 68
London and General Bank (No. 2), In re [1895] 2 Ch. 673; 64 L.J.Ch. 866; 73 L.T. 304; 11 T.L.R. 573; 39 S.J. 706; 2 Mans. 555; 12 R. 520, C.A. . 47
London and Globe Finance Corpn., In re [1903] 1 Ch. 728; 92 L.J.Ch. 368; 88 L.T. 194; 19 T.L.R. 314; 10 Mans. 198; 51 W.R. 651 642
London County Council v. Bermondsey Bioscope Co. [1911] 1 K.B. 445; 80 L.J.K.B. 141; 103 L.T. 760; 75 J.P. 53; 27 T.L.R. 141; 9 L.G.R. 79, D.C. 1163
London County Council v. Cattermoles (Garages) [1953] 1 W.L.R. 997; 97 S.J. 505; [1953] 2 All E.R. 582, C.A. 999
London County Council v. Farren [1956] 1 W.L.R. 1297; 120 J.P. 542; 100 S.J. 748; [1956] 3 All E.R. 401; 54 L.G.R. 579, C.A. 88
Lopes, In re [1931] 2 Ch. 130; 100 L.J.Ch. 295; 146 L.T. 8; 46 T.L.R. 577; 74 S.J. 581 1263
Lord Sanchar's Case (1612) 9 Coke 117a 1052
Lord Strathcona Steamship Co. Ltd. v. Dominion Coal Co. Ltd. [1926] A.C. 8, 108; 42 T.L.R. 86, P.C. 860
Loveden v. Loveden (1810) 1 Phill. 208 885
Low v. Bouverie [1891] 3 Ch. 82; 60 L.J.Ch. 594; 65 L.T. 533; 7 T.L.R. 582; 40 W.R. 50, C.A. 1030
Lowther v. Bentinck (1874) L.R. 19 Eq. 166; 44 L.J.Ch. 197; 31 L.T. 719; 23 W.R. 156 167
Lowther v. Heaver (1889) 41 Ch.D. 248; 58 L.J.Ch. 482; 60 L.T. 310; 37 W.R. 465, C.A. 1232
Lowther v. Lowther, Feb. 5, 1945, Unreported 485

M., In re [1955] 2 Q.B. 479; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 320; 119 J.P. 535; 99 S.J. 539; [1955] 2 All E.R. 911; 53 L.G.R. 497, C.A. 200
M. v. M. [1928] P. 123; 97 L.J.P. 101; 138 L.T. 648; 44 T.L.R. 299; 72 S.J. 155 884, 885, 886
Macaura v. Northern Assurance Co. Ltd. [1925] A.C. 619; 94 L.J.P.C. 154; 133 L.T. 152; 41 T.L.R. 447; 69 S.J. 777, H.L. 681
McCallum, In re [1901] 1 Ch. 143; 70 L.J.Ch. 206; 83 L.T. 717; 17 T.L.R. 112; 45 S.J. 98; 49 W.R. 129, C.A. 567
MacDonald v. MacDonald [1957] 2 All E.R. 690 1120
McKean v. Raynor Brothers [1942] 2 All E.R. 650; 167 L.T. 369; 86 S.J. 376 . 999
M'Kie v. Western Scottish Motor Traction Co., 1952 S.C. 206 1302
Mackenzie v. Royal Bank of Canada [1934] A.C. 468; 103 L.J.P.C. 81; 151 L.T. 486; 78 S.J. 471, P.C. 757
Mackrell v. Mackrell [1948] 2 All E.R. 858; 47 L.G.R. 347, C.A. 489
Maclay v. Dixon (1944) 170 L.T. 49; [1944] 1 All E.R. 22, C.A. 244
Maclean v. The Workers' Union [1929] 1 Ch. 603 774
McNaught v. McNaught (1909) 54 S.J. 135 260
McQuire v. Western Morning News [1903] 2 K.B. 100; 72 L.J.K.B. 612; 88 L.T. 757; 19 T.L.R. 471; 51 W.R. 689, C.A. 745
Magrath v. Hardy (1838) 4 Bing N.C. 782; 6 Scott 627; 1 Ain. 352; 7 L.J.P.C. 299; 2 Jur. 594; 132 E.R. 990 154
Manchester Trust v. Furness [1895] 2 Q.B. 539; 73 L.T. 110; 44 W.R. 178; 8 Asp.M.L.C. 57; 1 Com.Cas. 39; 14 R. 739 . . . . . 660, 865

PAGE
Marczuk v. Marczuk [1956] P. 217; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 849; 120 J.P. 75; 100 S.J. 263; [1956] 1 All E.R. 657, C.A. 483
Margerison v. Tyresoles Ltd. (1942) 25 T.C. 59 68
Marjoram v. Marjoram [1955] 1 W.L.R. 520; 119 J.P. 291; 99 S.J. 320; [1955] 2 All E.R. 1, D.C. 342
Markham v. Markham [1947] W.N. 27; 176 L.T. 19; 63 T.L.R. 91; 111 J.P. 29; 90 S.J. 645; [1946] 2 All E.R. 737, D.C. 514
Marks v. Beyfus (1890) 25 Q.B.D. 494; 59 L.J.Q.B. 479; 63 L.T. 733; 6 T.L.R. 406; 55 J.P. 182; 17 Cox C.C. 196; 38 W.R. 705, C.A. 1302
Marshal v. Crutwell (1875) L.R. 20 Eq. 328; 44 L.J.Ch. 504; 39 J.P. 775. . . 260
Marshall Richards Machine Co. v. Jewitt [1956] T.R. 135; 49 R. & I.T. 414; 36 T.C. 511; 35 A.T.C. 186 131
Martin v. Watson and Egan [1919] 2 I.R. 534 118
Martin-Smith v. Smale [1954] 1 W.L.R. 247; 98 S.J. 92; [1954] 1 All E.R. 237; 52 L.G.R. 136, C.A. 437
Mason v. Mason (orse. Pennington) [1944] N.I. 134 1014
Matalon v. Matalon [1952] P. 233; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1467; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1025, C.A. 178
Maugham, In re (1888) 21 Q.B.D. 21; 57 L.J.Q.B. 487, D.C. 1273
Maund, In re, ex parte [1895] 1 Q.B. 194; 64 L.J.Q.B. 183; 72 L.T. 58; 11 T.L.R. 126; 39 S.J. 136; 1 Mans. 514; 15 R. 159; 43 W.R. 207, D.C. . . 1273
Maundy Gregory, In re [1935] Ch. 65; 78 S.J. 550 293
Maxwell v. British Thomson-Houston Co. (1902) 18 T.L.R. 278, C.A. . . 803, 805
May v. Chidley [1894] 1 Q.B. 451; 63 L.J.Q.B. 355; 38 S.J. 82; 10 R. 423, D.C. 302
May and Butcher v. The King [1934] 2 K.B. 17n.; 103 L.J.K.B. 556n.; 151 L.T. 246n. 24, 699
Mediana, The [1900] A.C. 113, H.L. 1133, 1135
Mediterranean and Eastern Export Co. v. Fortress Fabrics (Manchester) [1948] W.N. 244; [1948] L.J.R. 1536; 64 T.L.R. 337; 92 S.J. 362; [1948] 2 All E.R. 186 . . . . . 274, 280
Mehta (orse. Kohn) v. Mehta [1945] 2 All E.R. 690 1282
Mellody, In re, Brandwood v. Haden [1918] 1 Ch. 228; 87 L.J.Ch. 185; 118 L.T. 155; 82 J.P. 128; 62 S.J. 121; sub nom. Re Melody, Brandwood v. Haden, 34 T.L.R. 122 1261
Merchant Prince, The [1892] P. 179; 67 L.T. 251; 8 T.L.R. 430; 7 Asp.M.L.C. 208, C.A. 803
Mersey Docks v. Lucas (1883) 8 App.Cas. 891; 53 L.J.Q.B. 4; 49 L.T. 781; 48 J.P. 212; 32 W.R. 34; 2 T.C. 25, H.L. 134, 135, 708
Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Procter [1923] A.C. 253; 92 L.J.K.B. 479; 129 L.T. 34; 39 T.L.R. 275; 67 S.J. 400; 16 Asp.M.L.C. 123, H.L. . . 990
Metropolitan Asylum District v. Hill (1880) 5 App.Cas. 582 532
Metropolitan Bank, In re (1880) 15 Ch.D. 139; 49 L.J.Ch. 651; 43 L.T. 299, C.A. 293
Metzner v. Bolton (1854) 9 Ex. 518, 521; 23 L.J.Ex. 130; 2 W.R. 302; 2 C.L.R. 685; 156 E.R. 221 673
Middlesex County Valuation Committee v. West Middlesex Assessment Area Committee [1937] Ch. 361; 106 L.J.Ch. 215; 156 L.T. 252; 101 J.P. 203; 53 T.L.R. 365; 81 S.J. 157; [1937] 1 All E.R. 403; 35 L.G.R. 211, C.A. . . 274
Mill's Declaration of Trust, In re [1950] W.N. 331; [1950] 2 All E.R. 292, C.A. . 222
Mills v. Cannon Brewery Co. Ltd. [1920] 2 Ch. 38; 89 L.J.Ch. 354; 123 L.T. 324; 36 T.L.R. 513; 84 J.P. 148; 64 S.J. 447 1269
Mills v. Duckworth [1938] 1 All E.R. 321 887
Mint v. Good [1951] 1 K.B. 517; 94 S.J. 822; [1950] 2 All E.R. 1159; 49 L.G.R. 495, C.A. 806
Moate v. Moate (1948) 92 S.J. 484; [1948] 2 All E.R. 486 265
Monarch S.S. Co. v. A/B Karlshamns Oljefabriker [1949] A.C. 196; [1949] L.J.R. 772; 65 T.L.R. 217; 93 S.J. 117; [1949] 1 All E.R. 1 624
Montgomery Jones & Co. v. Liebenthal & Co. (1898) 78 L.T. 406, C.A. . 401, 402
Moore v. R. Fox & Sons [1956] 1 Q.B. 596; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 342; [1956] 1 All E.R. 182; [1956] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 129, C.A. 803, 805, 811, 813
Moore v. Hewitt [1947] K.B. 831; [1947] L.J.R. 1276; 177 L.T. 576; 63 T.L.R. 476; 111 J.P 483; [1947] 2 All E.R. 270, D.C. 1017
Moorhouse v. Dooland [1956] Ch. 284; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 96; 99 S.J. 60; [1955] 1 All E.R. 93; [1954] T.R. 393; 48 R. & I.T. 29; 36 T.C. 1; 33 A.T.C. 410, C.A. 597, 838
Morelle Ltd. v. Wakeling [1955] 2 Q.B. 379; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 672; 99 S.J. 218; [1955] 1 All E.R. 708, C.A. 122, 735
Morgan v. Tate & Lyle [1955] A.C. 21; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 85; 98 S.J. 422; [1954] 2 All E.R. 413, H.L. 131, 708
Morris v. Tolman [1923] 1 K.B. 166; 92 L.J.K.B. 215; 128 L.T. 118; 86 J.P. 221; 39 T.L.R. 39; 67 S.J. 169; 20 L.G.R. 803; 27 Cox C.C. 345, D.C. . 1052
Mosalewa Thomas v. Preston Holder (1946) 12 W.A.C.A. 78 155
Moule v. Garrett (1872) L.R. 7 Exch. 101; 41 L.J.Ex. 62; 26 L.T. 367; 20 W.R. 416, Ex.Ch. 613

PAGE

Mousell Bros. v. London and North Western Railway [1917] 2 K.B. 836; 87 L.J.K.B. 82; 118 L.T. 25; 81 J.P. 305; 15 L.G.R. 706, D.C. . . . 527
Mudd v. Collins (1925) 133 L.T. 186; 41 T.L.R. 358; 69 S.J. 490; 9 T.C. 297 . . 412
Murray v. East India Co. (1821) 5 B. & Ad. 204; 106 E.R. 1167 735
Murugiah v. Jainudeen [1955] A.C. 145; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 682; 98 S.J. 784, P.C. . 734
Myers v. Sarl (1860) 3 E. & E. 306; 30 L.J.Q.B. 9; 7 Jur.N.S. 97; 9 W.R. 96; 121 E.R. 457 673

N. v. N. (1928) 44 T.L.R. 324 830
Nash v. Hollinshead [1901] 1 K.B. 700; 70 L.J.K.B. 571; 84 L.T. 483; 65 J.P. 357; 17 T.L.R. 352; 49 W.R. 424; 3 W.C.C. 125, C.A. . . . 366, 369
National Deposit Friendly Society Trustees v. Skegness U. D. C. [1958] 3 W.L.R. 172; 122 J.P. 399; 102 S.J. 526; [1958] 2 All E.R. 601; 56 L.G.R. 313; 51 R. & I.T. 474, H.L.; affirming [1957] 2 Q.B. 573; [1957] 3 W.L.R. 550; 121 J.P. 567; 101 S.J. 664; [1957] 3 All E.R. 199; 55 L.G.R. 477; 50 R. & I.T. 574; 2 R.P.C. 107, C.A. . 544, 545, 1139, 1143, 1144, 1148, 1149, 1175–1178, 1180, 1182, 1261, 1264
National Phonograph Co. of Australia v. Menck [1911] A.C. 336; 80 L.J.P.C. 105; 104 L.T. 5; 27 T.L.R. 239; 28 R.P.C. 229, P.C. . . . 861, 1037
National Telephone Co. v. I. R. C. [1899] 1 Q.B. 250 . . . 946, 947, 948
Naumann (W.) v. Edward Nathan & Co. (1930) 37 Ll.L.Rep. 249 . . 274, 281, 664
Naylor Benzon Mining Co., In re [1950] 1 Ch. 567; [1950] 1 All E.R. 518; 1 P. & C.R. 69 1201
Nelson v. Larholt [1948] 1 K.B. 339; [1948] L.J.R. 340; 64 T.L.R. 1; [1947] 2 All E.R. 751 . . . . . 1220, 1227, 1229, 1237, 1241
Nelson v. William Chalmers & Co., 1913 S.C. 441 . . . . . 1129, 1130
Newgrosh v. Newgrosh, June 28, 1950, Unreported 265
Newsom v. Robertson [1953] Ch. 7; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 636; 96 S.J. 696; [1952] 2 All E.R. 728; [1952] T.R. 401; 45 R. & I.T. 679; 33 T.C. 452; 31 A.T.C. 429, C.A. 131
Nicholls v. F. Austin (Leyton) [1946] A.C. 493; 115 L.J.K.B. 329; 175 L.T. 5; 62 T.L.R. 320; 90 S.J. 628; [1946] 2 All E.R. 92; 44 L.G.R. 287, H.L. 419, 420, 422
Nichols v. Hall (1873) L.R. 8 C.P. 322; 42 L.J.M.C. 105; 28 L.T. 473; 37 J.P. 424; 21 W.R. 579 527
Nichols v. Walters [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1; 98 S.J. 10; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1516, C.A. . 120
Nichols' and Von Joel's Contract, In re [1910] 1 Ch. 43; 79 L.J.Ch. 32; 101 L.T. 839, C.A. 428, 429, 431, 432, 433
Nnamene Anjohn v. Ivube Nwa Namani (1953) 14 W.A.C.A. 357 158
Nocton v. Ld. Ashburton [1914] A.C. 932; 83 L.J.Ch. 784; 111 L.T. 641; 30 T.L.R. 602, H.L. 567
Nokes v. Doncaster Amalgamated Collieries [1940] A.C. 1014; 109 L.J.K.B. 865; 163 L.T. 343; 56 T.L.R. 988; 85 S.J. 45; [1940] 3 All E.R. 549, H.L. . 1047
North Australian Territory Co., In re (1890) 45 Ch.D. 87; 59 L.J.Ch. 654; 63 L.T. 77; 6 T.L.R. 348; 38 W.R. 561; 2 Meg. 239, C.A. 292
North Eastern Railway Co. v. York Union [1900] 1 Q.B. 733; 69 L.J.Q.B. 376; 82 L.T. 201; 64 J.P. 437; Ryde & K.Rat.App. 230 449
Norwich Union Fire Insurance Co. v. Magee (1896) 73 L.T. 733; 12 T.L.R. 137; 40 S.J. 227; 3 T.C. 457; 44 W.R. 384, D.C. 1070

O'Connell v. Reg. (1844) 11 Cl. & F. 155; 3 L.T.O.S. 429; 9 Jur. 25; 1 Cox C.C. 413; 8 E.R. 1061 . . . . . 373, 375, 377, 1053
O'Connor v. Hume [1954] 1 W.L.R. 824; 98 S.J. 370; [1954] 2 All E.R. 301, C.A. 244
Odhams Press v. Cook (1940) 56 T.L.R. 704; 84 S.J. 595; [1940] 3 All E.R. 15; 23 T.C. 233, H.L. 131
Okon Owon v. Eto Ndon (1946) 12 W.A.C.A. 71 155
Omanhene Kobina Foli v. Chief Oberg Akesse [1934] A.C. 340 154
O'Neil v. S. J. Smith & Co. [1912] A.C. 716 999
Oppenheim v. Tobacco Securities Trust Co. [1951] A.C. 297; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 118; [1951] 1 All E.R. 31, H.L. 1181
Orient, The (1869) 3 Mar.L.C. 321 792
O'Rourke v. Darbishire [1920] A.C. 581; 89 L.J.Ch. 162; 123 L.T. 68; 36 T.L.R. 350; 64 S.J. 322, H.L.; affirming S.C. sub nom. Re Whitworth, O'Rourke v. Darbishire [1919] 1 Ch. 320, C.A. 1308
Osenton (Charles) & Co. v. Johnston [1942] A.C. 130; 110 L.J.K.B. 420; 165 L.T. 235; 57 T.L.R. 515; [1941] 2 All E.R. 245, H.L. 160
Osnaburgh Street (Nos. 52/56), In re; In re 23/43 Longford Street, N.W.1, 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 414; [1950] 1 All E.R. 353 109
O'Sullivan v. Thurmer [1955] S.A.S.R. 76 1053
Ottway v. Jones [1955] 1 W.L.R. 706; 99 S.J. 432; [1955] 2 All E.R. 585, C.A. . 532

PAGE

Ounsworth v. Vickers [1915] 3 K.B. 267; 84 L.J.K.B. 2036; 113 L.T. 865; 31 T.L.R. 530; 6 T.C. 671 708
Ousey v. Ousey and Atkinson (1874) L.R. 3 P. & D. 223; 43 L.J.P. & M. 35; 30 L.T. 911; 22 W.R. 556 343
Ovat Ebenyam v. Ayigo (1941) 16 Nig.L.R. 30 155
Oxford Group v. I. R. C. [1949] W.N. 343; 93 S.J. 525; [1949] 2 All E.R. 537; [1949] T.R. 281; 42 R. & I.T. 438; 31 T.C. 221, C.A.; affirming [1949] T.R. 1 1261

Padbury v. Holliday & Greenwood (1912) 28 T.L.R. 494, C.A. 803
Paget v. I. R. C. [1938] 2 K.B. 25; 107 L.J.K.B. 657; 158 L.T. 187; 54 T.L.R. 404; 82 S.J. 172; [1938] 1 All E.R. 392; 21 T.C. 677, C.A. . . . 1072, 1073
Palgrave, Brown & Son Ltd. v. Owners of S.S. Turid [1922] 1 A.C. 397; 91 L.J.P. 81; 127 L.T. 42; 38 T.L.R. 423; 66 S.J. 349; 15 Asp.M.L.C. 538; 27 Com. Cas. 216, H.L. 674
Palmer, In re (1890) 45 Ch.D. 291 . . . . . 450, 451, 452
Palser v. Grinling [1948] A.C. 291; [1948] L.J.R. 600; 64 T.L.R. 2; [1948] 1 All E.R. 1 848
Paquin v. Beauclerk [1906] A.C. 148; 75 L.J.K.B. 395; 94 L.T. 350; 22 T.L.R. 395; 50 S.J. 358; 54 W.R. 521 1007
Pardy v. Pardy [1939] P. 288; 161 L.T. 210; 55 T.L.R. 1037; 83 S.J. 714; [1938] 3 All E.R. 770 . . . . . 648, 650
Paris v. Stepney Borough Council [1951] A.C. 367; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 25; 115 J.P. 22; 94 S.J. 837; [1951] 1 All E.R. 42; 49 L.G.R. 293; 84 Ll.L.Rep. 525, H.L. 230, 349, 500
Parkins v. Warwick (1943) 25 T.C. 419 412
Partington v. Attorney-General [1956] 1 W.L.R. 784; [1956] 2 All E.R. 706 . 91
Pasmore v. Oswaldtwistle Urban District Council [1898] A.C. 387; 67 L.J.Q.B. 635; 78 L.T. 569; 62 J.P. 628; 14 T.L.R. 368, H.L. 154
Paterson v. Hunt (1909) 101 L.T. 571; 73 J.P. 496, D.C. 961
Pathé Frères Cinema v. United Electric Theatres [1914] 3 K.B. 1253 . . . 302
Payne v. Schmidt [1949] 2 All E.R. 741, C.A. 315, 317
Peacock v. Peacock (1858) 1 Sw. & Tr. 183; 27 L.J.P. & M. 71; 31 L.T.O.S. 302; 6 W.R. 866; 164 E.R. 684 483
Pearson v. Coleman Bros. [1948] 2 K.B. 359; [1948] L.J.R. 1781; 92 S.J. 392; [1948] 2 All E.R. 274, C.A. 991
Peebles v. Crosthwaite (1897) 13 T.L.R. 198, C.A. 1079
Peel v. London & North Western Railway Co. (No. 2) [1907] 1 Ch. 611 . . . 315
Pegler v. Craven [1952] 2 Q.B. 69; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 618; 96 S.J. 196; [1952] 1 All E.R. 685, C.A. 1083
Penny v. Wimbledon U. D. C. [1899] 2 Q.B. 72; 68 L.J.Q.B. 704; 80 L.T. 615; 63 J.P. 406; 15 T.L.R. 348; 43 S.J. 476; 47 W.R. 565, C.A. . 803, 804, 805, 809
Peter Walker & Son v. Hodgson [1909] 1 K.B. 239; 78 L.J.K.B. 193; 99 L.T. 902; 53 S.J. 81, C.A. 745
Peters v. Batchelor (1950) Blundell's Rent Restrictions Cases, No. 793 . . . 756
Pettey v. Parsons [1914] 2 Ch. 653; 84 L.J.Ch. 81; 111 L.T. 1011; 58 S.J. 721; 30 T.L.R. 655, C.A. 252
Peverett, In the Goods of [1902] P. 205; 71 L.J.P. 114; 87 L.T. 143 . . . 463
Phipps v. Rochester Corporation [1955] 1 Q.B. 450; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 23; 119 J.P. 92; 99 S.J. 45; [1955] 1 All E.R. 129; 53 L.G.R. 80 . . . . 353, 354
Pickard v. Smith (1861) 10 C.B.N.S. 470; 4 L.T. 470; 142 E.R. 535 . . . 803, 809
Pickin v. Langborough Assessment Committee and Robert Cheyne & Co. [1931] 1 K.B. 386, 505; 100 L.J.K.B. 1; 143 L.T. 650; 46 T.L.R. 601; 74 S.J. 629; (1926–31) 2 B.R.A. 742, C.A. 966
Pitkin v. Sanders and Forster (1923) 128 L.T. 789; 16 B.W.C.C. 5, C.A. . . . 252
Pool Shipping Co. Ltd., In re [1920] 1 Ch. 251; 89 L.J.Ch. 111; 122 L.T. 338; 36 T.L.R. 53; 64 S.J. 115 911
Port Line Ltd. v. Ben Line Steamers Ltd. [1958] 2 Q.B. 146; [1958] 2 W.L.R. 551; 102 S.J. 232; [1958] 1 All E.R. 787; [1958] 1 Ll.L.Rep. 290 . . . 860
Postill v. East Riding County Council [1956] 2 Q.B. 386; [1956] 3 W.L.R. 334; 120 J.P. 376; 100 S.J. 490; [1956] 2 All E.R. 685; 54 L.G.R. 415; 6 P. & C.R. 400, D.C. 637
Potter v. Great Western Colliery Co. (1894) 10 T.L.R. 380, C.A. 981
Potts (W. T.), In re [1935] Ch. 334; 104 L.J.Ch. 49; 152 L.T. 456; [1934] B. & C.R. 142 316
Powell v. Great Western Railway Co. (1940) 162 L.T. 35; 56 T.L.R. 264; 84 S.J. 78; [1940] 1 All E.R. 87; 32 B.W.C.C. 293, C.A. 853, 854
Powles, In re [1954] 1 W.L.R. 336; 98 S.J. 111; [1954] 1 All E.R. 516 . . . 167
Powszechny Bank Zwiazkowy W Polsce v. Paros [1932] 2 K.B. 353; 101 L.J.K.B. 671; 147 L.T. 377, C.A. 302
Practice Direction [1957] 1 W.L.R. 183; 101 S.J. 111; [1957] 1 All E.R. 219 . 1295
Practice Direction [1957] 1 W.L.R. 558; 101 S.J. 339; [1957] 2 All E.R. 97 . . 1295

PAGE

Pratt v. British Medical Association [1919] 1 K.B. 244; 88 L.J.K.B. 628; 120 L.T. 41; 35 T.L.R. 14; 63 S.J. 84 774
Pratt v. Pratt (1927) 96 L.J.P. 123; 137 L.T. 491; 43 T.L.R. 523; 71 S.J. 433; 28 Cox C.C. 413 . . . . . 514, 515, 516
Prescott v. Birmingham Corporation [1955] Ch. 210; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 990; 119 J.P. 48; 98 S.J. 886; [1954] 3 All E.R. 698; 53 L.G.R. 68, C.A. . 915, 916, 918
Preston-Jones v. Preston-Jones [1951] A.C. 391; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 8; 95 S.J. 13; [1951] 1 All E.R. 124; 49 L.G.R. 417, H.L. 483
Price v. Price [1951] P. 413; 115 J.P. 468n.; 95 S.J. 560; [1951] 2 All E.R. 580n., C.A. 343
Price v. Price, The Times, February 12, 1954, C.A. 981
Price v. Rhondda U. D. C. [1923] 2 Ch. 372; 93 L.J.Ch. 1; 88 J.P. 69; 155 L.T.J. 387; 67 S.J. 536; 21 L.G.R. 753 193
Proctor v. Bayley (1889) 42 Ch.D. 390; 59 L.J.Ch. 12; 61 L.T. 752; 38 W.R. 100; 6 R.P.C. 538, C.A. 1036
Produce Brokers Co. v. Olympia Oil and Cake Co. [1916] 1 A.C. 314; 85 L.J.K.B. 160; 114 L.T. 94; 32 T.L.R. 115; 60 S.J. 74; 21 Com.Cas. 320, H.L. . 274, 282, 671, 673, 674
Property Holding Co. v. Clark [1948] 1 K.B. 630; [1948] L.J.R. 1066; 64 T.L.R. 76; [1948] 1 All E.R. 165, C.A. 238
Pyx Granite Co. v. Ministry of Housing and Local Government [1958] 1 Q.B. 554; [1958] 2 W.L.R. 371; 122 J.P. 182; 102 S.J. 175; [1958] 1 All E.R. 625; 56 L.G.R. 171; 9 P. & C.R. 204, C.A. 1166, 1167

Quality Dairies (York) v. Pedley [1952] 1 K.B. 275; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 376; 116 J.P. 123; 96 S.J. 151; [1952] 1 All E.R. 380; 50 L.G.R. 244, D.C. . 527
Quilter v. Mapleson (1882) 9 Q.B.D. 672; 52 L.J.Q.B. 44; 47 L.T. 561; 47 J.P. 342; 31 W.R. 75, C.A. 1036
Quinn v. Leathem [1901] A.C. 495; 70 L.J.P.C. 76; 85 L.T. 289; 65 J.P. 708; 17 T.L.R. 749; 50 W.R. 139, H.L. 774

R. v. Agricultural Land Tribunal for Eastern Province of England, Ex parte Grant [1956] 1 W.L.R. 1240; 100 S.J. 650; [1956] 3 All E.R. 321; 54 L.G.R. 567, C.A. 439, 443
R. v. Ashmal (1840) 9 C. & P. 236. 1052
R. v. Barry (Glamorgan) JJ., Ex parte Kashim [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1320; 97 S.J. 742; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1005 . . . . . 274, 664
R. v. Bassey (1931) 22 Cr.App.R. 160 642
R. v. Bishop (1880) 5 Q.B.D. 259; 49 L.J.M.C. 45; 42 L.T. 240; 44 J.P. 330; 28 W.R. 475; 14 Cox C.C. 404, C.C.R. 527
R. v. Browes [1949] W.N. 343; 113 J.P. 454; 93 S.J. 617; [1949] 2 All E.R. 449; 33 Cr.App.R. 164; 47 L.G.R. 614, C.C.A. 1112
R. v. Bullock [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1; 119 J.P. 65; 99 S.J. 29; [1955] 1 All E.R. 15; 38 Cr.App.R. 151, C.C.A. 787
R. v. Chapman (1910) 74 J.P. 360; 4 Cr.App.R. 276, C.C.A. 641
R. v. Comptroller-General of Patents, Ex parte Bayer Products [1941] 2 K.B. 306; 111 L.J.K.B. 117; 165 L.T. 278; 58 R.P.C. 251; [1941] 2 All E.R. 677, C.A. 556
R. v. Cooke (1826) 5 B. & C. 538; 7 Dow. & Ry.K.B. 673; 3 Dow. & Ry.M.C. 510; 108 E.R. 201, C.C.R. 1053
R. v. Doherty (1874) 13 Cox C.C. 23, 24 141
R. v. Flaherty, The Times, June 24, 1958 . . . . . 935, 1266
R. v. Gee (1860) 1 E. & E. 1068; 28 L.J.Q.B. 298; 33 L.T.O.S. 183; 23 J.P. 374; 5 Jur. 1348; 7 W.R. 528; 120 E.R. 1211 32
R. v. Grant [1951] 1 K.B. 500; 94 S.J. 840; [1951] 1 All E.R. 28; 34 Cr.App.R. 230; 49 L.G.R. 146, C.C.A. 1112
R. v. Grubb (1945) 30 Cr.App.R. 148 . . . . . 373, 376
R. v. Halliday, Ex parte Zadig [1917] A.C. 260; 86 L.J.K.B. 1119; 116 L.T. 417; 81 J.P. 237; 33 T.L.R. 336; 61 S.J. 443; 25 Cox C.C. 650, H.L. . 556
R. v. Hodgson [1954] Crim.L.R. 379 1256
R. v. Hughes (1860) Bell C.C. 242; 29 L.J.M.C. 71; 1 L.T. 450; 24 J.P. 101; 6 Jur.N.S. 177; 8 W.R. 195; 8 Cox C.C. 278, C.C.R. . . . 1054, 1055
R. v. Hutchings (1881) 6 Q.B.D. 300; 50 L.J.M.C. 35; 44 L.T. 364; 45 J.P. 504; 29 W.R. 724, C.A. 154
R. v. Income Tax Special Purposes Commissioners (1888) 21 Q.B.D. 313; 53 J.P. 84; 36 W.R. 776 437
R. v. James (1909) 2 Cr.App.R. 319, C.C.A. 141
R. v. Jura [1954] 1 Q.B. 503; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 516; 118 J.P. 260; 98 S.J. 198; [1954] 1 All E.R. 696; 38 Cr.App.R. 53, C.C.A. 1256
R. v. Kilham (1870) L.R. 1 C.C.R. 261; 39 L.J.M.C. 109; 22 L.T. 625; 34 J.P. 533; 18 W.R. 957; 11 Cox C.C. 561, C.C.R. 641
R. v. McCartan [1958] 1 W.L.R. 933; 102 S.J. 621; 122 J.P. 465; [1958] 3 All E.R. 140; 42 Cr.App.R. 262, C.C.A. 1265

PAGE
R. v. M'Cue (1831) Jebb's Criminal and Presentment Cases, 120 1053
R. v. Manning (1883) 12 Q.B.D. 241; 53 L.J.M.C. 85; 51 L.T. 121; 48 J.P. 536; 32 W.R. 720, D.C. 1052
R. v. Medical Appeal Tribunal, Ex parte Gilmore [1957] 1 Q.B. 574; [1957] 2 W.L.R. 498; 101 S.J. 248; sub nom. Re Gilmore's Application [1957] 1 All E.R. 796, C.A. 437, 519
R. v. Melvin [1953] 1 Q.B. 481; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 274; 117 J.P. 95; 97 S.J. 99; [1953] 1 All E.R. 294; 37 Cr.App.R. 1, C.C.A. 787, 790
R. v. Moore (1892) 61 L.J.M.C. 80; 66 L.T. 125; 56 J.P. 345; 8 T.L.R. 287; 36 S.J. 233; 17 Cox C.C. 458; 40 W.R. 304, C.C.R. 144
R. v. Nat Bell Liquors [1922] 2 A.C. 128; 91 L.J.P.C. 146; 127 L.T. 437; 38 T.L.R. 541, P.C. 441
R. v. Northumberland Compensation Appeal Tribunal, Ex parte Shaw [1952] 1 K.B. 338; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 161; 116 J.P. 54; 96 S.J. 29; [1952] 1 All E.R. 122; 2 P. & C.R. 361; 50 L.G.R. 193, C.A. 440, 443
R. v. Plummer [1902] 2 K.B. 339; 71 L.J.K.B. 805; 86 L.T. 836; 66 J.P. 647; 18 T.L.R. 659; 46 S.J. 587; 20 Cox C.C. 269; 51 W.R. 137, C.C.R. . . 1052
R. v. Prince (1875) L.R. 2 C.C.R. 154; 44 L.J.M.C. 122; 32 L.T. 700; 39 J.P. 676; 24 W.R. 76; 13 Cox C.C. 138, C.C.R. 527
R. v. Reason (1872) 12 Cox C.C. 228 141
R. v. Rivett (1950) 34 Cr.App.R. 87, C.C.A. 476
R. v. Rowley (1948) 32 Cr.App.R. 147 . . . . . 1054, 1055
R. v. Rue (1876) 34 L.T. 400; 13 Cox C.C. 209 141
R. v. Russell, Unreported, December 2, 1905 747
R. v. Saddlers' Co. (1863) 10 H.L.Cas. 404; 32 L.J.Q.B. 337; 9 L.T. 60; 28 J.P. 36; 9 Jur.N.S. 1081; 11 W.R. 1004; 11 E.R. 1083, H.L. 1163
R. v. St. George's Union (1871) L.R. 7 Q.B. 90; 41 L.J.M.C. 30; 36 J.P. 550; 20 W.R. 179 449
R. v. Salisbury and Amesbury Justices, Ex parte Greatbatch [1954] 2 Q.B. 142; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 29; 118 J.P. 392; 98 S.J. 392; [1954] 2 All E.R. 326, D.C. 845
R. v. Seymour [1954] 1 W.L.R. 678; 118 J.P. 311; 98 S.J. 288; [1954] 1 All E.R. 1006; 38 Cr.App.R. 68, C.C.A. 787
R. v. Smith (1923) 17 Cr.App.R. 133 790
R. v. Spriggs [1958] 1 Q.B. 270; [1958] 2 W.L.R. 162; 102 S.J. 89; [1958] 1 All E.R. 300; 42 Cr.App.R. 69, C.C.A. 476
R. v. Sussex JJ., Ex parte McCarthy [1924] 1 K.B. 256; 93 L.J.K.B. 129; 88 J.P. 3; 68 S.J. 253; 22 L.G.R. 46 274
R. v. Thomas (1834) 6 C. & P. 353 141
R. v. The Steward, etc., of Havering Atte Bower (1822) 5 B. & Ald. 691 . . 154
R. v. Thompson (1851) 16 Q.B. 832; 20 L.J.M.C. 183; 17 L.T.O.S. 72; 15 J.P. 484; 15 Jur. 654; 5 Cox C.C. 166; 117 E.R. 1100, C.C.R. 1053
R. v. Thompson [1893] 2 Q.B. 12; 62 L.J.M.C. 93; 69 L.T. 22; 57 J.P. 312; 9 T.L.R. 435; 37 S.J. 457; 17 Cox C.C. 641; 41 W.R. 525; 5 R. 392, C.C.R. 141
R. v. Tolson (1889) 23 Q.B.D. 168; 58 L.J.M.C. 97; 60 L.T. 899; 54 J.P. 4, 20; 5 T.L.R. 465; 37 W.R. 716; 16 Cox C.C. 629, C.C.R. 527
R. v. Whitmarsh (1850) 15 Q.B. 600 543
R. v. Williams (1932) 32 N.S.W.S.R. 504 1052
R. B. Policies at Lloyd's v. Butler [1950] K.B. 76; 65 T.L.R. 436; 93 S.J. 553; [1949] 2 All E.R. 226; 82 Ll.L.Rep. 841 567
Racecourse Betting Control Board v. Secretary for Air [1944] Ch. 114; 113 L.J.Ch. 129; 170 L.T. 29; 60 T.L.R. 147; 88 S.J. 58; [1944] 1 All E.R. 60, C.A. 160, 163, 164
Rahimtoola v. Nizam of Hyderabad [1958] A.C. 379; [1957] 3 W.L.R. 884; 101 S.J. 901; [1957] 3 All E.R. 441, H.L.; reversing sub nom. Nizam of Hyderabad and State of Hyderabad v. Jung [1957] 1 All E.R. 257; [1956] C.L.Y. 6980, C.A.; restoring [1956] 3 W.L.R. 667; 100 S.J. 651; [1956] 3 All E.R. 311 1225
Raja Uyricherla Narayana Gajapatiraju v. Revenue Divisional Officer Vizagapatam [1939] A.C. 302 1297
Ramsey-Fairfax (orse. Scott-Gibson) v. Ramsey-Fairfax [1956] P. 115; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 849; 99 S.J. 870; [1955] 3 All E.R. 695, C.A.; affirming [1955] 3 W.L.R. 188; 99 S.J. 474; [1955] 2 All E.R. 709 1282
Randall v. Randall [1939] P. 131; 108 L.J.P. 49; 160 L.T. 133; 55 T.L.R. 224; 82 S.J. 1052; [1938] 4 All E.R. 696 1251
Ray v. Newton [1913] 1 K.B. 249; 82 L.J.K.B. 125; 108 L.T. 313; 57 S.J. 130, C.A. 452
Read v. Wotton [1893] 2 Ch. 171; 62 L.J. 481; 68 L.T. 209; 37 S.J. 285; 41 W.R. 556; 3 R. 374 22
Redfern v. Redfern [1891] P. 139; 60 L.J.P. 9; 64 L.T. 68; 55 J.P. 37; 7 T.L.R. 157; 39 W.R. 212, C.A. 178
Redgrave v. Hurd (1881) 20 Ch.D. 1; 51 L.J.Ch. 113; 45 L.T. 485; 30 W.R. 251, C.A. 755
Reedie v. London and North Western Railway Co. (1849) 4 Ex. 244; 6 Ry. & Can. Cas. 184; 20 L.J.Ex. 65; 13 Jur. 659; 154 E.R. 1201 803
Rees, In re [1954] Ch. 202; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 59; 98 S.J. 28; [1954] 1 All E.R. 7 160

PAGE

Reference re Chemical Regulations [1943] S.C.R. 1 558
Regal (Hastings) v. Gulliver [1942] 1 All E.R. 378, H.L. 819, 820
Regor Estates v. Wright [1951] 1 K.B. 689; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 242; 115 J.P. 61; 95 S.J. 106; [1951] 1 All E.R. 219; 49 L.G.R. 241, C.A. 239
Reid v. Macbeth & Gray [1904] A.C. 223; 73 L.J.P.C. 57; 90 L.T. 422; 20 T.L.R. 316, H.L. 1129
Reynolds v. G. A. Austin & Sons [1951] 2 K.B. 135; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 614; 115 J.P. 192; 95 S.J. 173; [1951] 1 All E.R. 606; 49 L.G.R. 377, D.C. . . 527
Rhodes v. Smethurst (1840) 6 M. & W. 351; 9 L.J.Ex 330; 4 Jur. 702; 151 E.R. 447, Ex.Ch. 735
Richards v. Highway Iron Founders (West Bromwich) [1957] 1 W.L.R. 781; 101 S.J. 464; [1957] 2 All E.R. 162; [1957] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 289 . . 226
Richardson & Son v. Middlesbrough Borough Assessment Committee and Another [1947] K.B. 958; 177 L.T. 103; 63 T.L.R. 413; 111 J.P. 357; 91 S.J. 265; [1947] 1 All E.R. 884, D.C. 967
Ridsdel, In re [1947] Ch. 597; [1947] L.J.R. 1486; 91 S.J. 483; [1947] 2 All E.R. 312 61
Rimmer v Rimmer [1953] 1 Q.B. 63; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 767; 96 S.J. 801; [1952] 2 All E.R. 863, C.A. 261, 262, 264, 265, 1120, 1121
Rippington v. Hicks & Son (Oxford) (1949) 65 T.L.R. 243; 113 J.P. 121; [1949] 1 All E.R. 239; 47 L.G.R. 265, D.C. 1018
Ritter v. Godfrey [1920] 2 K.B. 47 535
Roberts v. Dorman Long & Co. [1953] 1 W.L.R. 942; 97 S.J. 487; [1953] 2 All E.R. 428; 51 L.G.R. 476, C.A. 231, 233, 937
Roberts v. Hopwood [1925] A.C. 578; 94 L.J.K.B. 542; 133 L.T. 289; 89 J.P. 105; 41 T.L.R. 436; 69 S.J. 475; 23 L.G.R. 337, H.L. 61, 556
Roberts v. Roberts and Temple (1917) 117 L.T. 157; 33 T.L.R. 333; 61 S.J. 492 . 483
Robinson v. Minister of Town and Country Planning [1947] K.B. 702; [1947] L.J.R. 1285; 177 L.T. 375; 63 T.L.R. 374; 111 J.P. 378; 91 S.J. 294; [1947] 1 All E.R. 851, C.A. 556
Robson v. North Eastern Railway Co. (1876) 2 Q.B.D. 85; 46 L.J.Q.B. 50; 35 L.T. 535; 41 J.P. 294; 25 W.R. 418, C.A. 630
Roe v. Minister of Health [1954] 2 Q.B. 66; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 915; 98 S.J. 319; [1954] 2 All E.R. 131, C.A. 803
Rogers' Question, In re [1948] 1 All E.R. 328, C.A. 1120
Ropner's Settlement Trusts, In re [1956] 1 W.L.R. 902; 100 S.J. 530; [1956] 3 All E.R. 332n. 167
Rose v. Ford [1937] A.C. 826; 106 L.J.K.B. 576; 157 L.T. 174; 53 T.L.R. 873; 81 S.J. 683; [1937] 3 All E.R. 359, H.L. 735
Rose (Frederick E.) (London) v. Pim (Wm. H.) Junr. & Co. [1953] 2 Q.B. 450; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 497; 97 S.J. 556; [1953] 2 All E.R. 739; 70 R.P.C. 238, C.A. 756
Roughead v. Railway Executive [1949] W.N. 280; 65 T.L.R. 435; 93 S.J. 514 . . 999
Royal College of Surgeons v. National Provincial Bank Ltd. [1952] A.C. 631; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 978; 96 S.J. 280; [1952] 1 All E.R. 984; 45 R. & I.T. 615, H.L. 104, 106
Royal Commission on Sugar Supply v. Trading Society Kwik-Hoo-Tong (1922) 38 T.L.R. 684 . . . . . 274, 280
Rush v. Matthews [1926] 1 K.B. 492; 95 L.J.K.B. 409; 134 L.T. 571; 42 T.L.R. 287; 70 S.J. 425; 24 L.G.R. 201, C.A. 238
Russell v. Norfolk (Duke of) (1948) 65 T.L.R. 225; 93 S.J. 132; [1949] 1 All E.R. 109, C.A. 781, 784
Russell v. Russell [1897] A.C. 395; 66 L.J.P. 122; 77 L.T. 249; 61 J.P. 771; 13 T.L.R. 516; 41 S.J. 660, H.L. 694
Russo-Asiatic Bank, In re [1934] Ch. 720; 103 L.J.Ch. 336; 152 L.T. 142; 78 S.J. 647; [1934] B. & C.R. 71 735
Rustproof Metal Window Co. Ltd. v. I. R. C. [1947] L.J.R. 1479; 177 L.T. 657; [1947] 2 All E.R. 454; 29 T.C. 243, C.A. 68
Rutherford v. R. E. Glanville & Sons (Bovey Tracy) [1958] 1 W.L.R. 415; 102 S.J. 269; [1958] 1 All E.R. 532; 56 L.G.R. 211, C.A. 491
Rutherford v. Richardson [1923] A.C. 1; 92 L.J.P. 1; 128 L.T. 399; 39 T.L.R. 42; 67 S.J. 78, H.L. 1052

S—— (falsely called E——) v. E—— (1863) 3 Sw. & Tr. 240 621
Sage v. Sage; Stockbridge v. Stockbridge [1947] P. 71; [1948] L.J.R. 124; 176 L.T. 420; 63 T.L.R. 252; [1947] 1 All E.R. 492 469
St. Luke Parish v. St. Leonard Parish (1779) 1 Bro.C.C. 40; 28 E.R. 972 . . 155
St. Mary Magdalene, Altofts, In re [1958] P. 172n. 1185, 1191
St. Mary, Tyne Dock, In re [1954] P. 369; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 1129; 98 S.J. 374; [1954] 2 All E.R. 339 . . . . . 1188, 1189
Salinas of Mexico, In re [1919] W.N. 311 691
Salisbury-Jones, In re, Hammond v. Salisbury-Jones, 159 L.T. 469; 82 S.J. 728; [1938] 3 All E.R. 459 260

PAGE
Salmon, In re (1889) 42 Ch.D. 351; 62 L.T. 270; 5 T.L.R. 583; 38 W.R. 150, C.A. 718
Salmon v. Salmon, Unreported, Barnard J., Birmingham Assizes, March 20, 21, 1958 1092
Saloon Packet Co., In re (1868) 37 L.J.Ch. 49; 17 L.T. 136; 16 W.R. 75 . . 911
Samuel, In re [1942] Ch. 1; [1941] 3 All E.R. 196 1158
Samuel v. Salmon & Gluckstein [1946] Ch. 8; 115 L.J.Ch. 103; 173 L.T. 358; 62 T.L.R. 28; 89 S.J. 508; [1945] 2 All E.R. 520 238
Sayer, In re [1957] Ch. 423; [1957] 2 W.L.R. 261; sub nom. Re, Sayer Trust, MacGregor v. Sayer, 101 S.J. 130; [1956] 3 All E.R. 600 1163
Scammell & Nephew v. Ouston [1941] A.C. 251; 110 L.J.K.B. 197; 164 L.T. 379; 57 T.L.R. 280; 85 S.J. 224; 46 Com.Cas. 190; [1941] 1 All E.R. 14, H.L. . 702
Schroeder v. Mendl (1877) 37 L.T. 452, C.A. 755
Scott v. London and St. Katherine Docks Co. (1863) 3 H. & C. 596 808
Scott v. Scott [1913] A.C. 417; 82 L.J.P. 74; 109 L.T. 1; 29 T.L.R. 520; 57 S.J. 498, H.L. 406
Scott v. Scott [1951] P. 245; [1951] 1 All E.R. 216 828
Scott v. Sebright (1886) 12 P.D. 21; 56 L.J.P. 11; 57 L.T. 421; 35 W.R. 258; sub nom. Sebright (orse. Scott) v. Sebright, 3 T.L.R. 79 1287
Scottish Mortgage Co. of New Mexico v. McKelvie (1886) 2 T.C. 165 . . . 1075
Scottish Widows' Fund Life Assurance Society v. Farmer (1909) 5 T.C. 502 . . 1070
Seddon v. North Eastern Salt Co. [1905] 1 Ch. 326; 74 L.J.Ch. 199; 91 L.T. 793; 21 T.L.R. 118; 49 S.J. 119; 53 W.R. 232 . . . . 756, 757. 758, 761
Sedgwick v. Watney Combe, Reid & Co. [1931] A.C. 447; 100 L.J.K.B. 271; 145 L.T. 73; 95 J.P. 115; 47 T.L.R. 308; 29 L.G.R. 279, H.L. . . . 961, 972
Sellars v. Best [1954] 1 W.L.R. 913; 118 J.P. 326; 98 S.J. 424; [1954] 2 All E.R. 389 567
Seymour v. Reed [1927] A.C. 554; 96 L.J.K.B. 839; 137 L.T. 312; 43 T.L.R. 584; 71 S.J. 488; 11 T.C. 625, H.L. 837, 838, 839–841
Shaw v. Shaw [1954] 2 Q.B. 429; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 265; 98 S.J. 509; [1954] 2 All E.R. 638, C.A. 567
Shephard v. Cartwright [1955] A.C. 431; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 967; 98 S.J. 868; [1954] 3 All E.R. 649, H.L. 567
Sherras v. De Rutzen [1895] 1 Q.B. 918; 64 L.J.M.C. 218; 72 L.T. 839; 59 J.P. 440; 11 T.L.R. 369; 39 S.J. 451; 18 Cox C.C. 157; 43 W.R. 526; 15 R. 388, D.C. 526
Shipway v. Skidmore (1932) 16 T.C. 748 412
Short v. Poole Corporation [1926] Ch. 66; 95 L.J.Ch. 110; 134 L.T. 110; 90 J.P. 25; 42 T.L.R. 107; 70 S.J. 245; 24 L.G.R. 14, C.A. 193
Sifton v. Sifton [1938] A.C. 656; 107 L.J.P.C. 97; 159 L.T. 289; 54 T.L.R. 969; 82 S.J. 680; [1938] 3 All E.R. 435, P.C. 1163
Silver (orse. Kraft) v. Silver [1955] 1 W.L.R. 728; 99 S.J. 438; [1955] 2 All E.R. 614 1282
Silver v. Silver [1958] 1 W.L.R. 259; 102 S.J. 174; [1958] 1 All E.R. 523, C.A. . 1120, 1121, 1124
Simmons & Politzer, In re [1954] 2 Q.B. 296; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 423; 98 S.J. 573; [1954] 2 All E.R. 811, C.A. 445
Simpson's Estate, In re [1936] P. 40 735
Sir James Laing & Sons v. Barclay, Curle & Co. [1908] A.C. 35; 77 L.J.P.C. 33; 97 L.T. 816; 10 Asp.M.L.C. 583, H.L. 1129
Six Carpenters Case (1610) 8 Co.Rep. 146a; 77 E.R. 695 774
Slim v. Croucher (1860) 1 De G.F. & J. 518; 29 L.J.Ch. 273; 2 L.T. 103; 6 Jur.N.S. 437; 8 W.R. 347; 45 E.R. 462, L.C. & C.JJ. 755
Smeaton Hanscomb & Co. v. Sassoon I. Setty, Son & Co. (No. 2) [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1481; 97 S.J. 876; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1588; [1953] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 580 . . . . . 253, 254, 718
Smith v. Baker & Sons [1891] A.C. 325; 60 L.J.Q.B. 683; 65 L.T. 467; 55 J.P. 660; 7 T.L.R. 679; 40 W.R. 392, H.L. 232, 505, 941
Smith v. Colbourne [1914] 2 Ch. 533; 84 L.J.Ch. 112; 111 L.T. 927; 58 S.J. 783, C.A. 429, 430, 431, 432
Smith v. Lion Brewery Co. (1909) 5 T.C. 568; [1911] A.C. 150; 80 L.J.K.B. 566; 104 L.T. 321; 27 T.L.R. 261; 55 S.J. 269; 5 T.C. 568; 75 J.P.J. 87, H.L. 708
Smith v. London, Midland & Scottish Railway Co., 1948 S.C. 125; 1948 S.L.T. 235 . . . . . 172, 176
Smith v. Morris Motors and Harris [1950] 1 K.B. 194; 65 T.L.R. 642; 113 J.P. 521; 93 S.J. 694; [1949] 2 All E.R. 715; 47 L.G.R. 722, D.C. . . . 416
Smith Hogg v. Black Sea & Baltic General Insurance [1940] A.C. 997; 109 L.J.K.B. 848; 163 L.T. 261; 56 T.L.R. 893; 84 S.J. 681; 46 Com.Cas. 44; 19 Asp. M.L.C. 382, H.L. 160
Smith's Potato Estates v. Bolland [1948] A.C. 508; [1948] L.J.R. 1557; 64 T.L.R. 430; 92 S.J. 527; [1948] 2 All E.R. 367, H.L. 135, 298
Sneddon v. Lord Advocate [1954] A.C. 257; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 211; 98 S.J. 105; [1954] 1 All E.R. 255; 47 R. & I.T. 109 911
Snell (E. S.) & Sons, The Times, Dec. 20, 1911 521

PAGE

Solle v. Butcher [1950] 1 K.B. 671; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 448; [1949] 2 All E.R. 1107, C.A. 756, 757
Somerset v. Wade [1894] 1 Q.B. 574; 63 L.J.M.C. 126; 70 L.T. 452; 58 J.P. 231; 10 T.L.R. 313; 42 W.R. 399; 10 R. 105, D.C. 524
Sonn, In re, Unreported, October 16, 1958 1160
Sorrell v. Smith [1925] A.C. 700; 94 L.J.Ch. 347; 133 L.T. 370; 41 T.L.R. 529 . 774, 1060
Sotheby v. Grundy [1947] 2 All E.R. 761 848
Spence v. Eastern Counties Railway Co. (1839) 7 Dowl. 697 274
Squire v. Squire [1949] P. 51; [1948] L.J.R. 1345; 64 T.L.R. 371; 112 J.P. 319; 92 S.J. 323; [1948] 2 All E.R. 51; 46 L.G.R. 289, C.A. 694, 695
Stainer's Executors v. Purchase [1952] A.C. 280; [1951] T.R. 353; 30 A.T.C. 291; sub nom. Gospel v. Purchase [1951] 2 T.L.R. 1112; 95 S.J. 801; [1951] 2 All E.R. 1071; 45 R. & I.T. 14, H.L. 410, 411, 412
Stanford v. Roberts [1901] 1 Ch. 440; 83 L.T. 756 . . . . . 1201, 1206
Stanga v. Stanga [1954] P. 10; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 609; 97 S.J. 607; [1954] 2 All E.R. 16, D.C. 178
Starkie v. Starkie (No. 2) [1954] 1 W.L.R. 98; 118 J.P. 59; 98 S.J. 46; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1519, D.C. 513
Staveley Iron & Chemical Co. v. Jones [1956] A.C. 627; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 479; 100 S.J. 130; [1956] 1 All E.R. 403; sub nom. Jones v. Staveley Iron and Chemical Co. [1956] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 65, H.L. 507, 999
Stening v. Abrahams [1931] 1 Ch. 470; 100 L.J.Ch. 278; 145 L.T. 18 . . . 1079
Stern v. Friedman [1953] 1 W.L.R. 969; 97 S.J. 507; [1953] 2 All E.R. 565 . . 3
Stevens v. Woodward (1881) 6 Q.B.D. 318; 50 L.J.Q.B. 231; 44 L.T. 153; 45 J.P. 603; 29 W.R. 506, D.C. 999
Stimpson v. Standard Telephones and Cables [1940] 1 K.B. 342; 109 L.J.K.B. 315; 56 T.L.R. 90; 83 S.J. 941; 32 B.W.C.C. 253 507
Stotesbury v. Turner [1943] K.B. 370; 112 L.J.K.B. 365; 168 L.T. 355 . . . 252
Street v. British Electricity Authority [1952] 2 Q.B. 399; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 799; 96 S.J. 260; [1952] 1 All E.R. 679; 51 L.G.R. 199, C.A. 42
Strong & Co. of Romsey v. Woodifield [1906] A.C. 448; 75 L.J.K.B. 864; 95 L.T. 241; 22 T.L.R. 754; 50 S.J. 666; 5 T.C. 215, H.L. 135, 298
Sullivan v. Sullivan [1956] 1 W.L.R. 277n.; 120 J.P. 161; 100 S.J. 210; [1956] 1 All E.R. 611n., D.C. 343
Summers v. Salford Corpn. [1943] A.C. 283; 112 L.J.K.B. 65; 168 L.T. 97; 107 J.P. 35; 59 T.L.R. 78; 86 S.J. 391; 41 L.G.R. 1; [1943] 1 All E.R. 68, H.L. 624
Surrey Revenue Officer v. Clarkson [1931] 2 English Derating Appeals 53 . . . 362
Sutherland v. Stopes [1925] A.C. 47; 94 L.J.K.B. 166; 132 L.T. 550; 41 T.L.R. 106; 69 S.J. 138, H.L. 745, 747
Sutro (L.) & Co. v. Heilbut Symons & Co. [1917] 2 K.B. 348; 86 L.J.K.B. 1226; 116 L.T. 545; 33 T.L.R. 359; 14 Asp.M.L.C. 34; 23 Com.Cas. 21, C.A. 274, 282, 671, 673
Sydenham v. Sydenham and Illingworth [1949] 2 All E.R. 196; sub nom. Practice Note [1949] W.N. 287, C.A. 472

Taddy v. Co. v. Sterious & Co. [1904] 1 Ch. 354; 93 L.J.Ch. 191; 89 L.T. 628; 20 T.L.R. 102; 48 S.J. 117; 52 W.R. 152 860
Tarry v. Ashton (1876) 1 Q.B.D. 314; 45 L.J.Q.B. 260; 34 L.T. 97; 40 J.P. 439 803, 806
Taylor v. John Summers & Sons [1957] 1 W.L.R. 1182; 101 S.J. 902; [1957] 3 All E.R. 541, C.A. 491
Taylor v. National Assistance Board [1957] P. 101; [1957] 2 W.L.R. 189; 101 S.J. 110; [1957] 1 All E.R. 183 188
Taylor v. St. Helen's Corporation (1877) L.R. 6 Ch.D. 264; 46 L.J.Ch. 857; 37 L.T. 253; 25 W.R. 885, C.A. 851
Taylor (David) & Son v. Barnett Trading Co. [1953] 1 W.L.R. 562; 97 S.J. 226; [1953] 1 All E.R. 843; [1953] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 181, C.A. 274, 278
Temple v. National Mutual Life Association of Australia [1955] 2 Q.B. 461; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 264; 99 S.J. 489; [1955] 2 All E.R. 758, C.A. . . 118, 449, 451
Terry's Motors v. Rinder [1948] S.A.S.R.(Aus.) 167 848
Thexton v. Edmonston (1868) L.R. 5 Eq. 373 610
Thomas v. British Thomson-Houston Co. [1953] 1 W.L.R. 67; 97 S.J. 11; [1953] 1 All E.R. 29; 51 L.G.R. 152 860
Thomas v. Dando [1951] 2 K.B. 620; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 1067; 115 J.P. 344; [1951] 1 All E.R. 1010; 49 L.G.R. 793, D.C. 1107
Thompson v. London, Midland and Scottish Railway Co. [1930] 1 K.B. 41; 98 L.J.K.B. 615; 141 L.T. 382, C.A. 862, 866
Thompson v. Thompson [1957] P. 19; [1957] 2 W.L.R. 138; 101 S.J. 87; [1957] 1 All E.R. 161, C.A. 515, 1276, 1277
Thomson (D. C.) & Co. v. Deakin [1952] Ch. 646; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 105; [1952] 2 All E.R. 361, C.A. 774

PAGE

Thorne v. Motor Trade Association [1937] A.C. 797; 106 L.J.K.B. 495; 157 L.T. 399; 53 T.L.R. 810; 81 S.J. 476; [1937] 3 All E.R. 157; 26 Cr.App.R. 51, H.L. 860
Thorneloe and Clarkson Ltd. v. Board of Trade (1950) 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 1117; [1950] 2 All E.R. 245; 1 P. & C.R. 139 848
Thornley v. Thornley [1893] 2 Ch. 229; 62 L.J.Ch. 370; 68 L.T. 199; 9 T.L.R. 254; 41 W.R. 541; 3 R. 311 260
Tildesley v. Harper (1876) 10 Ch.D. 393 . . . . . 896, 1234, 1239, 1240
Timpson's Executors v. Yerbury [1936] 1 K.B. 645; 105 L.J.K.B. 749; 154 L.T. 283; 80 S.J. 184; [1936] 1 All E.R. 186; 20 T.C. 155, C.A. 1070
Tool Metal Manufacturing Co. v. Tungsten Electric Co. [1955] 1 W.L.R. 761; 99 S.J. 470; [1955] 2 All E.R. 657; 72 R.P.C. 209, H.L. 1201
Townsend v. Haworth (1879) 12 Ch.D. 831n.; 48 L.J.Ch. 770n., C.A. . . . 1036
Trathan v. Trathan [1955] 1 W.L.R. 805; 99 S.J. 492; [1955] 2 All E.R. 701, D.C. 511, 513
Trego v. Hunt [1896] A.C. 7; 65 L.J.Ch. 1; 73 L.T. 514; 12 T.L.R. 80; 44 W.R. 225, H.L. 90
Trevivan v. Lawrance (1704) Holt K.B. 282; 2 Ld.Raym. 1036; 6 Mod.Rep. 256; 1 Salk. 276; 3 Salk. 151; 87 E.R. 1003 154
Trinidad Lake Asphalt Operating Co. v. Income Tax Commissioners for Trinidad and Tobago [1945] A.C. 1; 114 L.J.P.C. 10; 171 L.T. 328; 61 T.L.R. 30; 88 S.J. 415 1070
Trznadel v. British Transport Commission [1957] 1 W.L.R. 1002; 101 S.J. 779; [1957] 3 All E.R. 196n., C.A. 991
Tucker v. Linger (1883) 8 App.Cas. 508, 511, H.L. 673, 677
Twine v. Bean's Express (1946) 175 L.T. 131; 62 T.L.R. 458, C.A. . . . 999

Underground Electric Railways Co. of London and Glyn, Mills, Currie & Co. v. I. R. C. [1914] 3 K.B. 210 . . . . . 949, 952, 954
United Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of England v. Holborn Borough Council [1957] 1 W.L.R. 1080; 121 J.P. 595; 101 S.J. 851; [1957] 3 All E.R. 281; 50 R. & I.T. 709; 56 L.G.R. 68; 2 R.R.C. 190, C.A. . 1175
United Ports Co., In re (1872) L.R. 13 Eq. 474; 41 L.J.Ch. 270; 26 L.T. 124; 20 W.R. 356 911
Usher's Wiltshire Brewery v. Bruce [1915] A.C. 433; 84 L.J.K.B. 417; 112 L.T. 651; 31 T.L.R. 104; (1914) 6 T.C. 399, H.L. 708

V. G. M. Holdings Ltd., In re [1942] 1 Ch. 235; 111 L.J.Ch. 148; 58 T.L.R. 131; 86 S.J. 63; [1942] 1 All E.R. 224, C.A. 911
Vanderpuye v. Botchway [1956] A.C. 501; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 1080; 100 S.J. 358, P.C. 154
Venn v. Tedesco [1926] 2 K.B. 227; 95 L.J.K.B. 866; 135 L.T. 108; 90 J.P. 185; 42 T.L.R. 478; 70 S.J. 709; 24 L.G.R. 496 735
Vestey's Executors v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1949] W.N. 233; [1949] 1 All E.R. 1108; [1949] T.R. 149; 42 R. & I.T. 314; 31 T.C. 1, H.L. . 68
Vestey's Settlement, In re [1951] Ch. 209; [1950] 2 All E.R. 891, C.A. . . 167
Vexatious Actions Act, In re. In re Boaler [1915] 1 K.B. 21; 83 L.J.K.B. 1629; 111 L.T. 497; 30 T.L.R. 580; 58 S.J. 634; 24 Cox C.C. 335; 78 J.P. 280, C.A. 556
Vigers Brothers v. Sanderson Brothers [1901] 1 Q.B. 608; 70 L.J.K.B. 383; 84 L.T. 464; 17 T.L.R. 316; 45 S.J. 328; 49 W.R. 411; 6 Com.Cas. 99 . 1129
Vine v. National Dock Labour Board [1957] 2 W.L.R. 106; 101 S.J. 86; [1956] 3 All E.R. 939; [1956] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 567, H.L. 195, 196

Wagner v. International Railway Co. (1921) 232 N.Y. 176 999
Wake v. Conyers (1759) 1 Eden 331; 2 Cox Eq.Cas. 360; 28 E.R. 712 . . 155
Walker v. Frobisher (1801) 6 Ves. 70; 31 E.R. 943 . . . . . 274, 280
Walker v. Walker (1937) 57 C.L.R.(Aus.) 630 681
Walker and Beckenham, Kent, Local Board (1884) 50 L.T. 207; 48 J.P. 264, D.C. 399
Wallace v. Fogarty [1926] 1 I.R. 255 120
Ware and De Freville v. Motor Trade Association [1921] 3 K.B. 40; 90 L.J.K.B. 949; 125 L.T. 265; 37 T.L.R. 213 775
Warren, In re [1939] Ch. 684; 108 L.J.Ch. 311; 161 L.T. 32; 55 T.L.R. 796; 83 S.J. 455; [1939] 2 All E.R. 599 976
Warren, In re, ex parte Wheeler v. Trustee in Bankruptcy [1938] Ch. 725; 107 L.J.Ch. 409; 159 L.T. 17; 54 T.L.R. 680; 82 S.J. 394; [1938] 2 All E.R. 331; [1938–39] B. & C.R. 1, D.C. 607
Waters v. Waters [1956] P. 344; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 661; 120 J.P. 105; 100 S.J. 172; [1956] 1 All E.R. 432, D.C. 694
Way v. Way [1950]. See Kenward v. Kenward.
Weatherhead v. Bradford Assessment Committee and Laycock, Son & Co. [1931] 1 K.B. 386; 100 L.J.K.B. 1; 143 L.T. 650; 94 J.P. 177; 46 T.L.R. 601; 74 S.J. 628; 28 L.G.R. 550 966

PAGE

Webb v. Smith, Bingley & Evans, unreported, Birmingham Assizes, December 18, 1956 227
Weightman v. Weightman (1906) 94 L.T. 620; 70 J.P. 120; 22 T.L.R. 362, D.C. 37, 38
Weinbaum v. Klein [1950] W.N. 67; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 414; 94 S.J. 178; [1950] 1 All E.R. 353, C.A. 109
Weinberger v. Inglis [1919] A.C. 606, H.L. 774, 783
Weinbergs Weatherproofs Ltd. v. Radcliffe Paper Mill Co. Ltd. [1958] 1 Ch. 437; [1958] 2 W.L.R. 1; 102 S.J. 15 873
Wells v. Wells [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1390; 98 S.J. 804; [1954] 3 All E.R. 491, C.A. . 483
Wenlock (Baroness) v. River Dee Co. (1884) 10 App.Cas. 354, H.L. 712
West, In re, King v. Adams, Ex parte Clough [1892] 2 Q.B. 102 445
West v. West [1954] P. 444; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 163; 98 S.J. 454; [1954] 2 All E.R. 505, C.A. 343
Westby, In re [1932] Ir.R. 444 977
Wheeler v. Fradd (1898) 14 T.L.R. 440 315
Wheeler v. Keeble (1914) Ltd. [1920] 1 Ch. 57; 88 L.J.Ch. 554; 63 S.J. 724 . . 23
White, In re [1928] P. 75; 135 L.T. 381; 42 T.L.R. 545; 70 S.J. 671 584
Whitehead v. Greetham (1825) 2 Bing. 464; M'Cl. & Y. 205; 10 Moore C.P. 183; 130 E.R. 385, Ex.Ch. 1032
Whitehouse, In re [1951] 1 K.B. 673; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 405; 95 S.J. 138; [1951] 1 All E.R. 353; 49 L.G.R. 203 1111
Whurr v. Devenish (1904) 20 T.L.R. 385 756
Wild v. King Smith (1941) 24 T.C. 86 1070
Wilde v. Gibson (1848) 1 H.L.Cas. 605; 12 Jur. 527; 9 E.R. 897, H.L. . 756, 757, 758
Wilkinson v. Rea [1941] 1 K.B. 688; 110 L.J.K.B. 389; 165 L.T. 156; [1941] 2 All E.R. 50, C.A. 349
Williams v. Jones (Stanley) & Co. [1926] 2 K.B. 37; 95 L.J.K.B. 471; 134 L.T. 652; 70 S.J. 463, C.A. 252
Williams v. Quebrada Railway, Land and Copper Co. [1895] 2 Ch. 751; 65 L.J. Ch. 68; 73 L.T. 397; 44 W.R. 76 1302
Williams v. Williams (1943) 113 L.J.P. 18; 169 L.T. 375; 88 S.J. 25; [1943] 2 All E.R. 746, C.A. 343
Wilmot v. Wilmot and Martin [1948] W.N. 193; [1948] L.J.R. 1336; 64 T.L.R. 460; [1948] 2 All E.R. 123 483
Wilson v. Wilson, Bobbin & Co. (1911) 28 R.P.C. 741 315
Wingham, decd., In re [1949] P. 187; [1949] L.J.R. 695; 64 T.L.R. 594; 92 S.J. 660; [1948] 2 All E.R. 908, C.A. 459, 460, 461
Withers v. Nethersole [1948] W.N. 105; [1948] L.J.R. 805; 64 T.L.R. 157; 92 S.J. 193; [1948] 1 All E.R. 400; [1948] T.R. 31; 41 R. & I.T. 159 . . 84, 85
Wohlenberg v. Lageman (1815) 6 Taunt. 251; 128 E.R. 1031 . . . . . 401, 402
Wolffe, In re [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1211; 97 S.J. 539; sub nom. Re Wolfe's Will Trusts [1953] 2 All E.R. 697 1160
Wood v. Jones (1889) 61 L.J. 551 569
Wood v. L. C. C. [1941] 2 K.B. 232; 110 L.J.K.B. 641; 165 L.T. 131; 105 J.P. 299; 57 T.L.R. 499; 39 L.G.R. 289; [1941] 2 All E.R. 230, C.A. . . 366, 369
Wood v. Wood [1947] P. 103; [1948] L.J.R. 784; 63 T.L.R. 450; 111 J.P. 428; [1947] 2 All E.R. 95, D.C. 484
Wood v. Wood [1957] P. 254; [1957] 2 W.L.R. 826; 121 J.P. 302; 101 S.J. 356; [1957] 2 All E.R. 14, C.A. 512
Woods v. Duncan: The Thetis [1946] A.C. 401; [1947] L.J.R. 120; 174 L.T. 286; 62 T.L.R. 283; [1946] 1 All E.R. 420n., H.L. . . . 349, 803, 811, 813
Woods v. Wise [1955] 2 Q.B. 29; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 734; 119 J.P. 254; 99 S.J. 234; [1955] 1 All E.R. 767, C.A. 239, 243, 244
Woodward v. Dudley (Earl) [1954] Ch. 283; [1954] 1 W.L.R. 476; 98 S.J. 162; [1954] 1 All E.R. 559; 52 L.G.R. 269 582
Woolwich Revenue Officer v. Royal Arsenal Co-operative Society [1931] 2 English Derating Appeals 53 362
Woolworth (F. W.) & Co. Ltd. v. Lambert [1937] Ch. 37; [1936] 2 All E.R. 1523; 106 L.J.Ch. 15; 155 L.T. 236; 52 T.L.R. 732; 80 S.J. 703, C.A. . . . 1269
Wootton v. Central Land Board [1957] 1 W.L.R. 424; 121 J.P. 137; 101 S.J. 188; [1957] 1 All E.R. 441; 8 P. & C.R. 121; 55 L.G.R. 84, C.A. 252
Woozley v. Woodall Smith [1950] 1 K.B. 325; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 99; 94 S.J. 13; [1949] 2 All E.R. 1055, C.A. 118
Worsley v. Worsley & Worsley (1904) 20 T.L.R. 171 799

Yates v. Pym (1816) 6 Taunt. 446; 128 E.R. 1107 675
Yelland v. Taylor [1957] 1 W.L.R. 459; 101 S.J. 228; [1957] 1 All E.R. 627, C.A. . 532
Young v. Canadian Northern Railway Co. [1931] A.C. 83; 100 L.J.P.C. 51; 144 L.T. 255, P.C. 23
Young Sid, The [1929] P. 190; 98 L.J.P. 97; 141 L.T. 234; 45 T.L.R. 389; 18 Asp.M.L.C. 22, C.A. 536

Zinovieff v. British Transport Commission (1954), The Times, April 1, 1954 . . 999

STATUTES, ETC., JUDICIALLY CONSIDERED

Public General Statutes

Page

1361 Justices of the Peace Act (34 Edw. 3, c. 1) 1264
1601 Charitable Gifts Act (43 Eliz. 1, c. 4) 1243
1836 Marriage Act (6 & 7 Will 4, c. 85), s. 23 1252
1837 Wills Act (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 11 457
1861 Accessories and Abettors Act (24 & 25 Vict. c. 94), ss. 1, 2 1050
1882 Married Women's Property Act (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 17 259, 1116
1888 Oaths Act (51 & 52 Vict. c. 46), s. 1 143
1890 Lunacy Act (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 20 1248
1891 Stamp Act (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), Sch. 1 943
1895 Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39)—
s. 7 35
s. 11 1
1901 Factory and Workshop Act (1 Edw. 7, c. 22), s. 149 .. 357, 955
1907 Criminal Appeal Act (7 Edw. 7, c. 23), s. 5 (2) 786
1908 Fatal Accidents (Damages) Act (8 Edw. 7, c. 7), s. 1 993
1911 Perjury Act (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 6), ss. 1 (1), 15 143
1913 Forgery Act (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27), s. 1 638
Mental Deficiency Act (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 28), ss. 1 (1) (2), 8 (1) 387
1914 Bankruptcy Act (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59)—
s. 25 ..... 283, 405
s. 111 1272
s. 157 (1) (a) (b) 287
1916 Larceny Act (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 32 (1) 638
1918 Wills (Soldiers and Sailors) Act (7 & 8 Geo. 5, c. 58), ss. 1, 3 457
Income Tax Act (8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 40)—
Case I 842
Sch. 1, Sch. D, Case VI .. 585
Sch. D, 1 (a) (i), Cases IV and V 1063
1920 Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 17)—
ss. 7, 12 (5) 116
s. 12 (7) 235
1922 Finance Act (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 21, Sch. 1, paras. 8, 10 213
1923 Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Act (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 20), s. 1 599

Page

1925 Trustee Act (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 19)—
s. 1 (1) 974
s. 32 165
s. 69 (2) 974
Law of Property Act (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 20), s. 146 611
Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 49)—
ss. 31 (1), 50 (1) 529
s. 163 583
Criminal Justice Act (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 86)—
s. 13 (3) 312
s. 35 (1) 638
Rating and Valuation Act (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 90)—
s. 9 (2) (d) (e) 920
s. 24 ..... 323, 331
Law of Property Act (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 20), s. 56 (1) .. 1267
1926 Legitimacy Act (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 60), s. 1 (1) (2) 606
1928 Racecourse Betting Act (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 41), s. 3 .... 123, 705
Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 44)—
ss. 1, 3 357
s. 3 (1) 955
1930 Road Traffic Act (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), ss. 4 (1), 121 1106
1933 Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 32), s. 3 (1), Sch. 1, para. (h) 318
1934 Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 41), s. 1 (1) (3) 729
Betting and Lotteries Act (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 58), s. 18 (5) 123, 705
1936 Housing Act (26 Geo. 1 & Edw. 8, c. 51) 1296
1937 Factories Act (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67)—
ss. 14, 16 415
s. 22 (3) 378
s. 25 (3) 39
s. 49 936
1938 Leasehold Property (Repairs) Act (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 34), s. 1 611
Inheritance (Family Provision) Act (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 45) .. 604
1939 Limitation Act (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 21)—
s. 2 729
s. 19 1216
ss. 23, 24 822
s. 26 1216
(1) (b) 563
s. 32 729

PAGE

1939 Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 71), s. 7 116
1940 Finance Act (3 & 4 Geo. 6, c. 29), s. 43 (1) 905
1943 War Damage Act (6 & 7 Geo. 6, c. 21), ss. 36, 66, 79 .. 842
1946 National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) Act (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 62), s. 7 (4) 851
National Health Service Act (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 81), ss. 6 (2), 14 (1), 68 (1) 181
1947 Agriculture Act (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 48), ss. 47, 66 202
Town and Country Planning Act (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 51)—
s. 12 634
s. 14 (1) 1161
s. 19, proviso (b) (2) (2A) .. 1093
s. 23 634
s. 36 1161
ss. 69, 70 1296
1948 Local Government Act (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 26), ss. 54, 120 920
Companies Act (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 38)—
ss. 61, 66, 67, 69 688
s. 162 (1) 822
ss. 206, 208 1043
s. 219 683
ss. 256 (1) (2), 307 (1) (2) .. 1087
Criminal Justice Act (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 58)—
s. 3 933
s. 29 (3) 1110
s. 41 (3) 750
Agricultural Holdings Act (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 63)—
s. 24 (2) (g) 580
s. 25 (1) (a), (5) 434
1949 Railway and Canal Commission (Abolition) Act (12, 13 & 14 Geo. 6, c. 11), s. 1 (1) (a) 599
Marriage Act (12, 13 & 14 Geo. 6, c. 76), s. 61 1252
Patents Act (12, 13 & 14 Geo. 6, c. 87), s. 59 (1) 1033
1950 Matrimonial Causes Act (14 Geo. 6, c. 25)—
s. 1 (2) 1248
s. 3 (2) 146
s. 8 (1) (b) 1041
s. 14 (1) 146
s. 20 (1) 882
s. 23 827
Adoption Act (14 Geo. 6, c. 26), ss. 2 (4) (e), 3 197
Arbitration Act (14 Geo. 6, c. 27)—
s. 4 159
s. 26 398

PAGE

1952 Income Tax Act (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 10)—
s. 123 ..... 66, 406
s. 137 (a) (f) (g) 123
s. 139 (a) (f) (g) 705
s. 156 ..... 593, 832
ss. 412 (2) (4) (5), 413 (1) .. 585
Sch. D, Case I 66
Sch. E, paras. 1, 2, Sch. 9 .. 593, 832
Magistrates' Courts Act (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 55), s. 18 (1) (2) 843
Intestates' Estates Act (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 64), s. 2 (1A) (b) (e) .. 604
1953 Prevention of Crime Act (1 & 2 Eliz. 2, c. 14), s. 1 (4) .. 1255
Town and Country Planning Act (1 & 2 Eliz. 2, c. 16), s. 1 (1) 1296
1954 Landlord and Tenant Act (2 & 3 Eliz. 2, c. 56)—
ss. 23 (1), 24 (1) 1076
s. 30 (1) (a) 869
(f) 202
(g) 900
s. 34 108
Town and Country Planning Act (2 & 3 Eliz. 2, c. 72), s. 70 1093
1955 Public Service Vehicles (Travel Concessions) Act (3 & 4 Eliz. 2, c. 26), s. 1 (4) .. 913
Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act (4 & 5 Eliz. 2, c. 9)—
s. 8 ..... 95, 1171
(1) (a) 541, 1135, 1258
(2) 30, 920
(3) (4) (5) 920
1956 Administration of Justice Act (4 & 5 Eliz. 2, c. 46), s. 31 (4) 1033
Restrictive Trade Practices Act (4 & 5 Eliz. 2, c. 68)— ss. 20 (1) (3), 21 (1) (a) (b) . 1192
s. 25 ..... 655, 857
(1) 1033
1957 Homicide Act (5 & 6 Eliz. 2, c. 11), s. 2 ..... 413, 474
Solicitors Act (5 & 6 Eliz. 2, c. 27), s. 57 (1) 444
Maintenance Agreements Act (5 & 6 Eliz. 2, c. 35), s. 2 (1) 258
Housing Act (5 & 6 Eliz. 2, c. 56), ss. 42 (1), 43 (1) (2) 1151
1958 Divorce (Insanity and Desertion) Act (6 & 7 Eliz. 2, c. 54), s. 1 1248

OTHER STATUTES

British Guiana—1930 Laws of British Guiana, c. 18, ss. 24, 25 1050
Cyprus Emergency Powers (Collective Punishment) Regulations, 1955 to (No. 1), 1955, regs. 3, 5 (1) (2) 546
Cyprus Emergency Powers Order in Council, 1939, s. 6 (1) 546
Nigeria—Inter-Tribal Boundaries Ordinance (No. 49 of 1933) (Laws of Nigeria, 1948, c. 95), ss. 3, 4, 5 151

Rules and Orders

PAGE

County Court (Amendment) Rules, 1957 (S.I. 1957, No. 174 (L. 1)), Ord. 11, r. 1 (1) . . . 266
County Court Rules, 1936 (S.R. & O. 1936, No. 626)—
Ord. 16, r. 1 (1) . . . 980
Appendix D . . . 266
Hire-Purchase and Credit Sale Agreements (Control) Order, 1956 (S.I. 1956, No. 180), art. 1 . . . 522
Judicial Committee Rules, 1925 . . . 1214
1957 . . . 1214
Live Poultry (Movement Records) Order, 1954 (S.I. 1954, No. 122), art. 2 (1) . 92
Magistrates' Courts Rules, 1952 (S.I. 1952, No. 290), r. 63 . . . 1016 Matrimonial Causes Rules (S.I. 1957, No. 619 (L. 4))—
r. 36 (1) . . . 1
r. 66 (9) . . . 1015
r. 73 (2) . . . 1
r. 82 . . . 894
National Health Service (Transfer of Officers and Compensation) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1475), reg. 4 . . . 181
National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) (Benefit) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1372), reg. 2 (5) . . . 517
Non-Contentious Probate Rules, 1954 (S.I. 1954, No. 796), r. 33 . . . 791
Plant and Machinery (Valuation for Rating) Order, 1927 (S.R. & O. 1927, No. 480), Sch., Class 4 . . . 323, 331
Prevention of Accidents Rules, 1902 (S.R. & O. 1902, No. 616), para. 5 . . 493
Protection of Eyes Regulations (S.R. & O. 1938, No. 654), reg. 1, Sch. . . . 936
Public Trustee Rules, 1912 (S.R. & O. 1912, No. 348 (L. 9)), r. 30 . . . 1043
Restrictive Practices Court Rules, 1957 (S.I. 1957, No. 603), r. 49 . . . 1299
Town and Country Planning (Development Charge) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1189), Sch. . . . 1296
R.S.C., Ord. 3, r. 6 . . . 1006
Ord. 14, r. 1 . . . 300, 1006
r. 2 . . . 300
Ord. 19, r. 4 . . . 1006
Ord. 22, r. 14 (1) (9) . . . 927, 1011
Ord. 28, r. 1 . . . 894, 1216
Ord. 36, r. 29 (6) . . . 539
r. 58 . . . 16
Ord. 54 . . . 599
Ord. 55, r. 2 (1) . . . 856
Ord. 58, r. 3 (2) . . . 1216
r. 4 . . . 338
r. 4 (1) . . . 792
r. 5 . . . 338
r. 10 . . . 797
r. 14 . . . 761
r. 15 . . . 338
Ord. 59, r. 33 . . . 1016
Ord. 64, r. 7 . . . 761
Ord. 65, r. 1 . . . 529
r. 27 (39) (40) . . . 6
r. 27 (41) . . . 6, 314

THE WEEKLY LAW REPORTS
Volume I

Containing those cases of value to practitioners which are not intended to be included in The Law Reports and also practice notes and directions.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

* BYATT v. BYATT.

1957
Oct. 31;
Nov. 1.

Lord Merriman P., and Stevenson J.

Husband and Wife — Justices — Appeal to Divisional Court — Fraud alleged—Procedure—Appeal by notice of motion—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39), s. 11 —Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957 (S.I. 1957, No. 619 (*L.*4)), rr. 36 (1), 73 (2).

In September, 1956, certain justices made a separation order on the ground that the wife had committed adultery. The wife did not attend the hearing, at which two letters in which she admitted adultery, one to the court and one to the husband, had been produced. She was given leave to appeal out of time, and alleged in an affidavit in support of her appeal, which was by notice of motion, that she had been forced by her husband to write the letters and that he had, in effect, put them forward in circumstances in which he knew them to contain false statements.

The preliminary point was taken at the hearing of the appeal that as the appellant was seeking to impeach the decision of the justices on the ground of fraud the correct procedure was by action, and not by notice of motion: —

Held, that the procedure adopted by the appellant, which was consistent with that laid down in rule 73 (2) of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957, and which was analogous to that in applications for a rehearing under rule 36 (1), was a proper procedure, and that the preliminary point must accordingly fail.

Hip Foong Hong v. H. Neotia & Co. [1918] A.C. 888 and Jonesco v. Beard [1930] A.C. 298 considered.

APPEAL by wife to the Divisional Court from an order of the justices of the petty sessional division of Edmonton sitting at Tottenham.

The parties were married in 1947 and separated in June, 1956, when the wife was pregnant of her fourth child, the husband being the one to leave the home. A summons was issued upon the complaint of the husband whereby it was alleged that the wife had committed adultery with a person unknown at a place unknown, and on September 6, 1956, the justices found the

1957

BYATT
v.
BYATT.

adultery proved and made an order that the husband be no longer bound to cohabit with the wife.

The wife did not attend the hearing, and reliance was placed by the husband upon two letters which the wife had written. In one, written to the husband, she said that she had wanted him to get out before the end of June because she was expecting a baby by another man, and that as she could not tell him then, she thought that she would write and let him know. "I expect "this will mean court, but do as you want, I will not stop you." In the other letter the wife wrote to the court to say that she would not be attending the hearing, and that she did not wish to contest the case as what she had written to her husband was the truth.

The wife on her appeal applied for leave to appeal out of time (which was granted) and alleged grounds for her appeal:

"(1) That two letters produced before the justices by the "contents whereof the justices adjudged the charge of adultery "to have been proved and service of the summons to have been "acknowledged by the appellant, were written by the appellant "under fear and duress and at the dictation of you, the respon-"dent, in or about the month of June, 1956.

"(2) That the contents of the said letters, at least in so far "as they constitute an admission of adultery, were as you, the "respondent, well knew untrue.

"(3) That the appellant has never committed adultery.

"(4) That you, the respondent, are the father of a child, Peter "Alexander, who was born on February 22, 1957, and with which "the appellant was pregnant in or about the month of June, "1956, aforesaid.

"(5) That the said order was induced by the fraud of you, the "respondent.

"(6) That the failure of the appellant to attend before the said "justices on the aforesaid date was due to her acute fear of you, "the respondent, her poor condition of health engendered there-"by and by her pregnancy, and of her great fear of telling the "truth concerning the said letters.

"(7) That the evidence of the appellant concerning, inter alia, "the said letters would have materially and conclusively affected "the aforesaid finding of the said justices as to the appellant's "alleged adultery."

The wife filed an affidavit in support of her contentions in which she alleged a course of ill-treatment, and said that she had lived throughout the marriage " in awe and acute physical fear " of her husband, and that she had been afraid to go to the court or reveal his fraud. The husband denied her allegations.

The appeal was by notice of motion, and the preliminary point was taken on behalf of the husband that since the wife appellant was alleging fraud the correct procedure was by action and not by notice of motion.

The case is reported only upon the preliminary point.

J. N. Dunlop for the appellant wife.
Paul Curtis-Bennett for the respondent husband.

Flower v. Lloyd [1] and Stern v. Friedman [2] were cited in argument in addition to the cases cited in the judgment.

Counsel for the wife was not called on upon the preliminary point.

LORD MERRIMAN P. A preliminary point has been taken, which is based upon rule 73, sub-rule 2, of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957, whereby an appeal from justices under section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, "shall be by "notice of motion stating the grounds of appeal and whether the "whole or a part only of the order is complained of."

This is an attempt by a wife to appeal out of time (and we have extended the time) against a finding of adultery on which, on the complaint of the husband, the justices have made a separation order. The wife has filed an affidavit the substance of which, without going into detail, is that, at the demand of her husband, she wrote a letter, some time before there were any proceedings in the magistrates' court, admitting adultery, and when the proceedings were started by the husband's complaint she wrote a further letter to the court in which she confirmed her admission of adultery.

The wife did not attend the court—that is the point—and the case proceeded in her absence. The husband gave evidence which was, in effect, limited to producing these letters.

The wife has filed an affidavit in which she says, rightly or wrongly, that the whole thing is false, that she was afraid of her husband, and that, in effect, she was forced to write these letters. The word "duress" has been used. It may or may not be the proper term in the circumstances.

In my opinion, the substance of the matter is this: that it is alleged that the husband put forward these letters in circumstances in which he knew them to contain false statements. That is ultimately the sum and substance of the matter—in a word, that this separation order was obtained contrary to the justice of the case.

Like other orders of justices it has, of course, not merely the immediate effect of condemning the wife as an adulteress in any proceedings in a magistrates' court (for it plainly would, I think, prevent her from bringing any claim in a magistrates' court for maintenance, since she would be confronted, as long as this order stands, with an order of a court of competent jurisdiction which would be conclusive against her). But it has, of course, wider implications than that, because under section 7 (2) of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, this separation order

[1] (1879) 10 Ch.D. 327.

[2] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 969; [1953] 2 All E.R. 565.

1957

BYATT
v.
BYATT.

Lord
Merriman P.

could be produced, with the following effect: "On any such "petition for divorce, the court may treat the decree of judicial "separation or the said order"—(that is, an order which has the effect of a decree of judicial separation, which is what a separation order by justices is, by Act of Parliament)—"as "sufficient proof of the adultery," and then, leaving out immaterial words, "but the court shall not pronounce a decree of "divorce without receiving evidence from the petitioner." It has, therefore, a potential bearing of very great importance on the status of the parties.

I mentioned that appeals, the right to bring which is derived from section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, are to be by motion to this court. We have been confronted with the preliminary point that this is wholly improper. It is not put as high as to say that there is no right to bring the motion, but there has been cited the judgment of Lord Buckmaster in Jonesco v. Beard[1]: "Viewed simply as a "matter of procedure the course taken was irregular. It has "long been the settled practice of the court that the proper "method of impeaching a completed judgment on the ground of "fraud is by action in which, as in every other action based on "fraud, the particulars of the fraud must be exactly given and "the allegation established by the strict proof such a charge "requires." I need not continue the citation beyond saying that Lord Buckmaster later states[2]: "That, however, there is "jurisdiction in special cases to set aside a judgment for fraud on "a motion for a new trial may be accepted," and he then cites the case of Hip Foong Hong v. H. Neotia & Co. in the Privy Council,[3] in which, after saying that the trial had been held below and dealt with on the merits, Lord Buckmaster had added[4]: "They [their Lordships] have only to add that, where a "new trial is sought upon the ground of fraud, procedure by "motion and affidavit is not the most satisfactory and con-"venient method of determining the dispute. The fraud must be "both alleged and proved; and the better course in such a case is "to take independent proceedings to set aside the judgment upon "the ground of fraud, when the whole issue can be properly "defined, fought out, and determined, though a motion for a new "trial is also an available weapon and in some cases may be "more convenient."

It will be observed that in both those cases, the appeal in the House of Lords and the appeal in the Privy Council, the whole merits were gone into in spite of the cautionary note that it was better not to proceed by notice of motion, but to proceed by action. Both cases recognized that there may be occasions on which it is convenient to proceed in the way now before the court, and, in my opinion, the class of civil action of which Lord Buckmaster was speaking is very far removed from the sort of thing

[1] [1930] A.C. 298, 300.
[2] Ibid. 298, 301.
[3] [1918] A.C. 888.
[4] Ibid. 888, 894.

that we are dealing with here. Indeed, I go further. It seems to me that a very close analogy is provided by another aspect of our jurisdiction. I refer to the cases under rule 36 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957, under which this court can entertain applications for the rehearing of cases in which a decree nisi has been pronounced where no error of the judge at the trial is alleged. So far, let me say, the case is strictly analogous to this, for it is conceded, and it could not be otherwise than conceded, that the evidence placed before the justices, these two separate written confessions, one addressed to the husband and the other addressed to the clerk of the court, could properly be accepted by the justices, with the husband's own evidence, as proving the charge which he brought. I do not go into the question whether it would have been better to secure the attendance of the wife before acting solely on her written confession; I content myself with saying that they were entitled to act on it. So that no error at the trial can be alleged.

It is true that in cases under rule 36 it is not necessary by any means that there should be fraud as the ground of the application. Speaking generally, the ground is usually that for some reason or another, and it may even be deliberate abstention by the party bringing the application, a party who really wishes to defend has not had an opportunity of defending. As I say, fraud is not necessarily involved, but it sometimes is, and I can recall many cases where there has been some deliberate trick to avoid the respondent having, for example, notice of the date of the trial, or where there has been an affidavit of service imposed upon the court which was in fact false, and so forth; but it has never been suggested, in my experience, that, merely because it is necessary to move this court to set aside the decree nisi and order a rehearing before another judge, the fact that fraud is alleged is a bar to proceedings by motion.

I think, myself, that merely as a matter of convenience, though it is not a complete analogy, the procedure under rule 36, which is, in effect, the procedure adopted in this case of supporting the motion with an affidavit of the circumstances upon which the application is based, is a very close analogy. In my opinion this preliminary point is quite hopeless and ought to be disallowed, as we have disallowed it.

There remains, then, the question, how to deal with this matter? As the matter stands at present the wife alone has filed an affidavit; the husband so far has not, possibly because of the supposed validity of this preliminary point or for some other reason, chosen to answer it, although when it came to the point we were told that there is actually in court a completed draft of the affidavit which it is now desired to file. However, we are not shutting the husband out because of his delay. After all, the wife is out of time, and we have extended the time for her, and we are prepared to deal with the husband by the same measure. We have given leave to the husband to file an affidavit. If it is felt to be right, as it may very well be, that this matter should not stand simply on cross-affidavits, we have given leave for either side to give notice to cross-examine the other. That, as far as one can see, looking ahead, should enable us on oral evidence to decide the essential question whether the husband has put forward these letters knowing them to be false. If so there would, of course, be the question whether there is any other evidence of adultery, and it would be possible to suggest this to the wife in cross-examination on her affidavit, in which she says that she never has committed adultery.

1957

BYATT v. BYATT.

Lord Merriman P.

However that may be, we think that all that aspect of the matter should be left until it arises in practice, but we do think that it is desirable that the question—Aye or No, has this husband put forward evidence which he knew to be false?—should be dealt with by oral evidence rather than be dependent on conflicting affidavits. So, having given leave to either party to give notice to cross-examine the other, we simply give leave to apply to fix a suitable day, when we are prepared to hear the evidence.

STEVENSON J. I agree.

[NOTE. November 12, 13, 14, 1957: After judgment had been given on the preliminary point oral evidence was given by the wife and the husband, and by witnesses on their behalf. After hearing such evidence the court allowed the appeal and discharged the order of the justices. The court found that, although some pressure had been put upon the wife by the husband to write the letters, such pressure did not amount to duress. The letters had, however, been written with the knowledge of, and dictation by, the husband, who did not believe that his wife had committed adultery or was pregnant by anyone but himself. The court also found that both parties were determined to end the marriage and that the wife had had great difficulty in obtaining money from the husband who had ill-treated her.]

Preliminary point rejected; leave to appeal refused.

Solicitors: S. Beach & Co.; J. C. Martin.

J. B. G.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1957
Dec. 4.

Roxburgh J.

* In re FRASER. LEACH v. PUBLIC TRUSTEE.

[1955 F. 1329.]

Costs — Taxation — Objection — Taxing master's certificate irregular— Summons to review incompetent—"Donaldson" practice—R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 27 (39) (40) (41).

By an order dated May 18, 1956, made in chambers (in an action in which there were two plaintiffs and six defendants) to which everyone except the Attorney-General consented it was ordered that the action be referred to the taxing master to tax the costs and expenses of the defendant, the Public Trustee, and to tax the costs of the other parties to the action. As a result of that order the Public Trustee carried in a bill of costs. The parties came before the taxing master on a preliminary appointment and he directed that the bill should be amended or objections lodged within 10 days. No amended bill was lodged, but an objection was lodged in this form: "Objection taken by the first defendant to the preliminary taxation by" the taxing master.

On July 30, 1957, the taxing master made the following certificate: "In pursuance of the order herein bearing date the 18th "day of May, 1956 . . . whereas I should have proceeded to tax "the bills of costs as by the said order directed, but the solicitors "for the defendant, the Public Trustee, having carried in objections "to my direction dated the 20th day of June, 1957, whereby I "directed the said defendant to bring in details in lieu of a lump "sum charge in his bill of costs, I have considered such objections "and disallowed the same, and at the request of the said defendant "I make this my separate certificate so that the said defendant "may take the opinion of the court on the principle on which the "said bill should be taxed in relation to the said lump sum charge."

The first defendant, the Public Trustee, took out a summons for a direction by the court that his objections dated July 1, 1957, "to "the preliminary taxation of costs in this matter made under the "order dated May 18, 1956, may be allowed." None of the defendants appeared at the hearing:—

Held, that the summons must be dismissed as the certificate challenged was not in form and substance such as was required by the rules to enable the court to confirm or reject it, in that there had been no taxation, or allowance or disallowance of any item, and the taxing master had failed to state his conclusions and to give his reasons.

Observations on the practice said to be based on In re Donaldson (1884) 27 Ch.D. 544.

SUMMONS TO REVIEW TAXATION.

By an order of May 18, 1956, it was directed: "It is ordered "that it be referred to the taxing master (1) to tax the costs and "expenses of the defendant, the Public Trustee, of and incident "to this action, and (2) to tax as between solicitor and client the "costs of the plaintiffs and of the other defendants in this action ". . . including therein the costs and expenses of and incident "to the preparation and negotiation of the said terms both as "between the plaintiffs, or either of them, and the defendants, "or any of them, as well as between the plaintiffs themselves . . . "and including also the costs incurred in attempting to negotiate "a compromise in the years 1939 and 1940 of the matters" dealt with in the schedule.

As a result of that order the Public Trustee carried in a bill of costs, particulars of which are sufficiently set out in the judgment.

The parties having come before the taxing master on a preliminary appointment, he directed that the bill should be amended or objections lodged within 10 days. No amended bill was lodged, but an objection was lodged in this form: "Objection taken by

1957

FRASER, In re. LEACH v. PUBLIC TRUSTEE.

"the first defendant to the preliminary taxation by" the taxing master.

On July 30, 1957, the taxing master made a certificate, which is fully set out in the headnote.

The first defendant, the Public Trustee, took out a summons for a direction by the court that an "application on the part of "the first defendant that the objections of the first defendant "dated July 1, 1957, to the preliminary taxation of costs in this "matter under the order dated May 18, 1956, may be allowed."

The relevant rule relating to this procedure is R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 27, and the material sub-rules are sub-rules (39), (40) and (41).[1]

P. C. Curtis-Bennett for the applicant.

The respondents did not appear.

The cases cited in argument are referred to in the judgment.

ROXBURGH J. This case is said to raise a question of principle —at least that is the view of the taxing master—and it has a very large number of most unusual features. The first one is the form of the order. The order was made in chambers by a master under circumstances that everybody consented, except the Attorney-General, and he did not object.

[1] R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 27: "(39) Any party who may be dissatisfied with the allowance or disallowance by the taxing officer, in any bill of costs taxed by him, of the whole or any part of any items, may, at any time before the certificate or allocatur is signed, or such earlier time as may in any case be fixed by the taxing master, deliver to the other party interested therein, and carry in before the taxing officer, an objection in writing to such allowance or disallowance, specifying therein by a list, in a short and concise form, the items or parts thereof objected to, and the grounds and reasons for such objections, and may thereupon apply to the taxing officer to review the taxation in respect of the same. The taxing master may, if he shall think fit, issue, pending the consideration of such objections, a certificate of taxation or allocatur for or on account of the remainder of the bill of costs, and such further certificate or allocatur as may be necessary shall be issued by the taxing master after his decision upon such objections.

"(40) Upon such application the taxing officer shall reconsider and review his taxation upon such objections, and he may, if he shall think fit, receive further evidence in respect thereof, and, if so required by either party, he shall state either in his certificate of taxation or allocatur, or by reference to such objection, the grounds and reasons of his decision thereon, and any special facts or circumstances relating thereto. The taxing master may tax the costs of such objections and add them to or deduct them from any sum payable by or to any party to the taxation.

"(41) Any party who may be dissatisfied with the certificate or allocatur of the taxing officer, as to any item or part of an item which may have been objected to as aforesaid, may within fourteen days from the date of the certificate or allocatur, or such other time as the court or a judge, or taxing officer, at the time he signs his certificate or allocatur, may allow, apply to a judge at chambers for an order to review the taxation as to the same item or part of an item, and the judge may thereupon make such order as the judge may think just; but the certificate or allocatur of the taxing officer shall be final and conclusive as to all matters which shall not have been objected to in manner aforesaid."

There were two plaintiffs and six defendants. The first defendant was the Public Trustee. The reason why the order is one that I would not have made myself (though, of course, there is no question of going behind the order) is that counsel and solicitors persuaded the court to put in extremely wide words with a view to seeing that they received all their costs out of a certain fund. There is always a danger in doing that, because the wider they are the vaguer the language becomes, and I am inclined to think that perhaps the main difficulty in this case, if it ever comes to a proper hearing, will revolve round the concluding words of the order as to costs. The order reads as follows: "It is ordered that "it be referred to the taxing master (1) to tax the costs and "expenses of the defendant, the Public Trustee, of and incident "to this action, and (2) to tax as between solicitor and client the "costs of the plaintiffs and of the other defendants in this action ". . . including therein the costs and expenses of and incident "to the preparation and negotiation of the said terms both as "between the plaintiffs, or either of them, and the defendants, or "any of them, as well as between the plaintiffs themselves . . ." Pausing there, that is a very full form of order, fuller than any order I think I have ever made. But it is not so much in those words as in the next that it seems to me the unusual feature occurs: "and including also the costs incurred in attempting "to negotiate a compromise in the years 1939 and 1940 of the "matters dealt with in the said Schedule." This order was made on May 18, 1956.

It may well be that those last costs might seem to be non-contentious costs. But I think it possible that they would be on a different footing from the other costs which were ordered to be taxed by this order; but I am expressing no opinion. I suppose it may be argued—again I express no opinion—that regarding the costs and expenses of and incidental to the preparation and negotiation of the terms both as between the plaintiffs, or either of them, and the defendants, or any of them, as well as between the plaintiffs themselves, some, or perhaps all, of those costs were non-contentious costs. I express no opinion, except that the order is so wide that it may raise questions which are not of common occurrence.

That being the order, the defendant, the Public Trustee, carried in a bill of costs which is divided into three parts. Part 1 is an itemized bill amounting in all to £2 0s. 4d. Part 2 is a lump sum bill, except that it does contain certain disbursements. That lump sum bill occupies somewhere about 18 pages, and I may say that, with the exception of the disbursements, no separate charge is assigned to any item in those pages. The total sum of disbursements which appear in Part 2 amount to £9 19s. 0d., but the unitemized charge is £94 10s. 0d. Then comes Part 3, which is an itemized bill amounting in all to about £14. So that the major part of the bill is the lump sum bill, that is to say, the major part of the bill as a whole.

1957

FRASER, In re. LEACH v. PUBLIC TRUSTEE.

Roxburgh J.

That being so—though whether I ought to know this, I am not sure, but at least I propose to state it, because I think it indicates one very good reason why the practice which I am proposing to deprecate should be deprecated—in fact, when the parties came before the taxing master on a preliminary appointment, he stated that the prior negotiations set out in Part 2 of that bill were contentious, and he said that the bill should be amended or objections lodged within 10 days. That is what in fact he said, because that is his record. An objection was lodged, and it is in this form: "Objection taken by the first defendant "to the preliminary taxation by" the taxing master. But there is no such thing as a preliminary taxation. That is a misnomer which runs through the whole of this case. There may be such a thing as a preliminary certificate, perhaps more appropriately it should be called a separate certificate—I am coming to that later on. But it is quite clear that there is no such thing under the rules as a "preliminary" taxation. It is very difficult to follow the description of the items in Part 2 of the bill. As it is the first defendant, who has lodged the bill (which is objected to) by the master's direction, appears from this document to be objecting to his own bill. That merely shows what a complete state of confusion this case is in. Of course, that is not what he is objecting to at all, but that is what this document would appear to show. An amended bill was certainly not lodged, and on July 30, 1957, the taxing master made the following certificate: "In pursuance of the order herein bearing date the 18th "day of May, 1956 . . . whereas I should have proceeded to tax "the bills of costs as by the said order directed"—and, therefore, it is plain on the face of it that he has not proceeded to tax them—"but the solicitors for the defendant, the Public Trustee, "having carried in objections to my direction dated the 20th day "of June, 1957, whereby I directed the said defendant to bring "in details in lieu of a lump sum charge in his bill of costs, I "have considered such objections and disallowed the same, and "at the request of the said defendant I make this my separate "certificate so that the said defendant may take the opinion of "the court on the principle on which the said bill should be taxed "in relation to the said lump sum charge."

I may say at once that I object to that form of order for many reasons. First of all, it is not, I understand, the practice for a direction of this sort to be put in writing, and I understand that in this case it was not put in writing, but the recital of the direction in the master's certificate seems to leave out something which may or may not be important, but which certainly occurs in his own record of the occasion. It cannot be a convenient practice that somebody should be entitled to challenge a direction and then that the judge should have to send for the taxing master and find out what the direction was which is being challenged. It is to be noted that he has not set out the whole of his direction in the certificate, and I do not suggest that he purported to do so. Therefore, I am left in this position, that this would be an appeal concerning a direction about which I have no certain knowledge as to what it was. That is my first objection to this procedure.

The second is this. I do not know why the taxing master should be allowed to form an opinion on the point as to whether, if he does tax the bill, the questions which will arise on that taxation will be questions of principle. That is why I referred to the question of how far these matters are contentious. It may well be that no question of principle arises at all. It depends entirely on what these various items relate to, and on that it is essentially his business to make up his own mind. Then, if he likes to say what his mind is, this court, under the rules to which I will refer in a moment, can investigate the question whether he has rightly appreciated the principles involved. I am reasonably certain in point of fact that he would have disallowed on taxation the whole of Part 2 of this bill, though it may well be that, if he has an opportunity of reading this judgment, he may not do that but may differentiate between one part and the other. But that is nothing to do with me, except for this, that I think it is his duty to give his decision on the point in the certificate, and that it is his decision stated in the certificate which would be the proper matter to come before the court.

Thirdly, I think that the whole of this particular process is at variance with the relevant rule. The relevant rule is Ord. 65, r. 27, which occupies a large part of the Annual Practice. This is sub-rule (39): [His Lordship read the sub-rule and continued:] That presupposes that the taxing officer shall have gone through the bill and indicated, before drawing up any certificate at all, that he is going to allow or disallow particular items, it may be, in whole or in part, but it must be an allowance or disallowance "in any bill of costs" "of the whole or any part of any items." If he does that, then, as I understand, it is his duty to listen to the objections. The next thing is that the parties may apply to the taxing officer "to review the taxation in respect of the "same." Then there is a provision that he can issue a certificate on other items, but that does not affect the present case.

The next matter is sub-rule (40). It says: "Upon such "application the taxing officer shall reconsider and review his "taxation"—let it be noted it is his taxation, and the taxing officer agrees that he has not proceeded to taxation in this case—"upon such objections, and he may, if he shall think fit, receive "further evidence in respect thereof, and, if so required by "either party, he shall state either in his certificate of taxation "or allocatur, or by reference to such objection, the grounds and "reasons of his decision thereon, and any special facts or circum-"stances relating thereto." That makes it quite plain that he has to reach a decision—not the judge—and then sub-rule (41) says: "Any party who may be dissatisfied with the certificate "or allocatur of the taxing officer, as to any item or part of an

1957

FRASER, In re. LEACH v. PUBLIC TRUSTEE.

Roxburgh J.

"item which may have been objected to as aforesaid may . . . "apply to a judge at chambers for an order to review the taxation "as to the same item or part of an item." Again, that seems to me to make it quite plain that the duty of the taxing master is to make up his mind, stating his conclusions in the certificate and giving his reasons as provided for in sub-rule (40), and then the judge has a limited jurisdiction to upset his decision. I would point out that it is a limited jurisdiction, not a complete jurisdiction, such as exists, for instance, as between a Chancery judge and a Chancery master. It is by no means a complete jurisdiction.

It seems to me that this certificate is in fact not such a certificate as is contemplated by the rules, and it is not one on which any party can apply to the court for the reasons which I have endeavoured to give.

I might not have been taking the line I am taking in my judgment if this case had not had what seems to me a most curious history. Apparently, all the parties appeared before the master, but nobody except the first defendant has appeared before me. In that they have done nothing wrong. Nobody is bound to appear before the judge if he does not want to do so. In this particular case it is going probably to involve them in some costs, but that is their affair. I would, however, point out that it is not very satisfactory for any judge if he is told by the taxing master that he is asked to decide a question of principle—that is, the taxing master's own description of the case, whether right or wrong—and he finds that this principle is going to be argued on one side only, though there are six parties interested in arguing against the Public Trustee on this matter. For my own part I refuse to be influenced in the slightest degree by the recollection that other judges have made concessions about this kind of matter, when they have been promised and provided with argument on both sides. That entirely differentiates this case from any others in the books. I quite recognize that a party is entitled to proceed as against other parties as on a default, which is this case; but, after all, if he does so, then the sins of the pleader, and so on, may find him out, because, naturally, if I had the benefit of a proper argument on both sides—I have had a very proper argument on one side—I should have tried to avoid taking the technical points which I am now only too anxious to take for the reasons I have indicated. Therefore, as I say, I think I am entitled to construe these rules strictly, and I propose to do so.

There has been a good deal said about what is called the Donaldson practice, and I propose to explore the Donaldson practice rather fully. I will, first of all, read a passage from Butterworths Costs, p. 158, which I do not think uses the phrase "Donaldson practice," but does introduce the subject. It is a note to rule 41, which I have just read, and it says: "A "preliminary certificate may be issued by the master to enable

"a general objection to be taken before taxation of the bill." That is where I differ. Then in a note there is a reference to the so-called Donaldson practice. In my view, to start with, that is a complete misunderstanding of In re Donaldson.[1] That case was in the days when many of the things which are done by summons today were done by petition. It was not a taxation in an action, but a taxation which was procured under the relevant provisions of the Solicitors' Act, 1843. It was a dispute between a mortgagor and a mortgagee. In that particular case a peculiar question of principle (which really had very little to do with the duties of a taxing master) did arise. I will read from what the taxing master did. He made a separate certificate in which he said: "I was of "opinion that the rule that a trustee may not make a profit of "his trust, and therefore that a solicitor-trustee may not charge "any but costs out of pocket does not apply to the case of a "mortgagor taxing the costs of his mortgagee, where there is no "relation between them but that of mortgagor and mortgagee. "If the beneficiaries of the money lent to the mortgagor were "taxing the bill, the rule would no doubt apply, and I must "have allowed the objection; but in this case the trust fund will "not in any way be diminished, and the persons interested in "that fund will not suffer by my allowing to the solicitor profit "costs. It was suggested on behalf of the applicant that the "security may not be sufficient to pay the principal and interest "and profit costs; but if so, my decision in this case will not "prevent the beneficiaries taxing the bill of costs on the principle "contended for." The report proceeds: "Accordingly, the "master disallowed the objections. Miss Walter then took out "the present summons to have the objections allowed, and to "vary the certificate accordingly." I do not know what he did in that certificate, but it may well be that he did in fact disallow the items in question, in which case I have no objection whatever to a separate certificate provided that it either disallows or allows items as required by the rules. It may be said that that certificate did, but I also think that it may be that it did not. It is very difficult to say. It is all a matter of inference from the language of the report. If and so far as it differs, all I can say is that it was a very special case because it is to be remembered that that case was really a case raising the application to particular facts of certain general principles of equity. In other words, it was essentially a matter for a Chancery judge. On the other hand, the question whether one ought or ought not in a particular case to deliver a lump sum bill is not primarily a question for a Chancery judge. It is primarily a question for the taxing master himself, who is really the expert on such a matter, and the judge is entitled to have the benefit of the taxing master's expert opinion, and then, having got it and his decision, to consider whether in his limited jurisdiction he may proceed to [1] (1884) 27 Ch.D. 544.

1957

FRASER, In re. LEACH v. PUBLIC TRUSTEE.

Roxburgh J.

reverse or to vary the certificate. I would say that In re Donaldson [2] is not intended to lay down any rule of general application. I have not paused to consider whether the rules of court were precisely the same in 1884. I assume they probably were, but perhaps they were not.

The next point about that case is this. At any rate, something in the judgment in In re Donaldson [2] is quite irrelevant and inappropriate to the present case, because what the Vice-Chancellor said was that if the lady, Miss Walter, wanted to raise this sort of point she should have raised it in her petition for taxation (which I suppose is what one would now call on the summons for taxation under the Solicitors' Act), and not have accepted the common form order. That is quite incapable of application to the present case.

The next case is—and this only shows how things of this sort find their way into text books without apparently anybody taking the trouble to study the cases referred to—British Foreign and Colonial Automatic Light Controlling Co. Ltd. v. Metropolitan Gas Meters Ltd.[3] Let us see what happened there. "By "arrangement between the parties, instead of waiting for the "completion of the taxation, and the dissatisfied party then "taking out a summons to review the taxation, the matter was "now mentioned to the court." I do not know how that could support the statement in the text book. Of course, a judge with the consent of the parties, or the parties with the consent of the judge, are often entitled to waive procedural rules, and very often it is convenient so to do. For my part, I would certainly have done so, if I had been provided with the luxury of argument on each side in this case. But if anybody is going to suggest that I am bound to allow the irregular proceedings which were allowed by Warrington J. in the British Foreign and Colonial Automatic case,[4] which were entirely reasonable in the particular circumstances of that case, but were none the less plainly irregular, all I can say is that is a complete misreading of the authorities.

The next case, Korner v. H. Korner & Co. Ltd.,[5] which is a rather more remarkable case to be cited in support of the proposition, makes it quite plain that the procedure was never investigated by the judge at all. It is not uninteresting to read what the taxing master himself said in this connexion: "I have "been requested by the defendants in this action to construe the "order herein as to costs and thereby enable the parties, if so "advised, to lay preliminary objections before me in accordance "with the practice outlined in In re Donaldson.[6]" I must confess that I cannot find any practice outlined in In re Donaldson.[6] When I asked counsel to formulate what he calls "the Donaldson form of order," what he formulated was not a

[2] 27 Ch.D. 544.
[3] [1912] 2 Ch. 82, 83.
[4] Ibid.
[5] [1951] Ch. 10, 12; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 469; [1950] 2 All E.R. 451.
[6] 27 Ch.D. 544.

form of order at all, but a sort of réchauffé of this sort of proposition. I do not blame him; he had nothing else to work on. One cannot make bricks without straw. But I do not think that any of those cases support the proposition which is laid down in Butterworths Costs. But I want to make plain that I am not suggesting that there is any objection to a separate certificate, and that if the passage in Butterworths Costs is carefully studied it does not go far enough to tell us what is put in the certificate, and, therefore, the proposition may be perfectly sound though the cases do not seem to me to support it. I am going to add this. Any separate certificate must be either an allowance or a disallowance within the meaning of Order 65, r. 27 (41). It has to be a certificate or allocatur "as to any item or part of "an item which may have been objected to as aforesaid." Then one can apply to the judge to review the taxation as to some item, or part of an item. In my view no certificate, whether one calls it "separate" or "preliminary" or anything else, complies with the rules, which does not comply with sub-rule (41), and indeed the court has no jurisdiction, apart from consent, to deal with any question which does not arise in accordance with sub-rule (41). That is the substance of the matter.

I will just turn to the summons, which reads as follows. It is an "application on the part of the first defendant that the "objections of the first defendant dated July 1, 1957, to the "preliminary taxation of costs in this matter under the order "dated May 18, 1956, may be allowed." But their objection is not to the preliminary taxation. There is no such thing in the world. Their objection is to the taxing master's direction that they should file what he calls a proper bill of costs but which they argued was not the requisite bill of costs. But that is not a "preliminary" taxation. By no manner of means can one get that into the words "preliminary taxation." Then the summons asks that it may be referred back to the taxing master to vary the certificate accordingly. I really do not know what that was intended to mean because, as I see it, if I had to deal with this question—which I probably should have done, if everybody, or a sufficient number of people, had appeared before me to argue it —I should have made some sort of declaration of principle, but I should not have needed to vary the certificate for the simple reason that the taxing master has not certified anything which is material, except that he says there is a question of principle. But that is not a decision on a question of principle. It is quite true he does say somewhere that he disallowed the objection, but, after all, he has to go further than disallow the objection, and he has to make a certificate which gives effect to the disallowance, and that he has never done. I would, of course, have given leave to amend the summons if I had had the opportunity of hearing both parties concerned, but, in my view, this summons in its present form is impossible for the reasons which I have endeavoured to state, and I propose to dismiss it with no order as to costs.

1957

FRASER, In re. LEACH v. PUBLIC TRUSTEE.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Theodore Goddard & Co.

J. L. D.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1957 Oct. 29, 30, 31; Nov. 1, 4, 5, 27.

Jenkins, Parker and Pearce L.JJ.

* NATIONAL COAL BOARD v. GALLEY.

[1956 N. 38.]

Master and Servant—Contract of service—Enforceability—Provision that servant to work for such periods weekly as might be "reasonably required."

Damages — Continuing breach — "Continuing cause of action" — Repeated breaches of contract of service—R.S.C., Ord. 36, r. 58.

Damages—Concerted action—Single defendant—Breach of contract by servant — Servant's knowledge of similar breaches by fellow-servants — Coal-mine — Servant employed as deputy — Breach of servant's contract resulting in loss of day's output of coal — Loss attributable to individual servant.

In October, 1947, a shortage of coal produced a serious crisis, and the miners, who had a five-day week agreement, agreed to work a Saturday voluntary shift, provision being made for overtime pay, and Saturday working took place at the defendant's colliery at all material times. The Saturday shift necessitated the presence of deputies on that day.

In March, 1949, the defendant entered into a written contract of service with the National Coal Board as a deputy; the contract provided, inter alia, that his wages should be "regulated by such "national agreement and the county wages agreement for the time "being in force and that this contract of service shall be subject "to those agreements and to any other agreements relating to or "in connexion with or subsidiary to the wages agreement and to "statutory provisions for the time being in force affecting the "same." The defendant was a member of a local trade union which was itself a member of the National Association of Colliery Overmen and Deputies and Shotfirers ("Nacods"), an unregistered trade union that was composed of area associations and had no individual members, and which discussed and arranged with the board any alterations of the terms of the deputies' employment.

Sometime before April, 1952, Nacods had put in a wage claim in respect of deputies, and subsequently, on July 29, 1952, an agreement "on revised terms and conditions of employment of deputies" was reached between the board and Nacods. This agreement contained a provision "that . . . deputies shall work such days or "part days in each week as may reasonably be required . . ."

On June 14, 1956, the deputies at the defendant's colliery gave notice to the management that they would not be turning coal on Saturdays in future and therefore no productive work was possible on Saturday, June 16, 1956. That position continued up to and including August 18, 1956. On August 25, 1956, the board arranged for substitute deputies at a cost of £3 16s. 10d. for each substitute for the Saturday shift, and the Saturday voluntary shift was resumed. The loss of profit due to the impossibility of working the Saturday voluntary shifts on June 16, 1956, was £535, and between June 16, 1956, and August 18, 1956, it was £3,395.

On June 21, 1956, the board issued a writ against the defendant claiming damages, limited to £100, for breach of contract:—

Held, (1) that the defendant's personal contract of service was regulated by the Nacods agreement and the defendant, by working on the terms of that agreement, had entered into an agreement which included the term in dispute.

(2) That the Nacods agreement was intended to have binding effect and that the provision that a deputy was to work for such periods in each week as might "reasonably be required" did not, ipso facto, make the defendant's contract of service unenforceable.

Foley v. Classique Coaches Ltd. [1934] 2 K.B. 1 applied.

(3) That, in the circumstances, the hours of work required by the plaintiffs of the defendant were not unreasonable, and that, accordingly, the defendant was in breach of his contract by failing to report for duty on June 16, 1956.

(4) That a continuing cause of action within the meaning of R.S.C., Ord. 36, r. 58,[1] was not constituted by repeated breaches of recurring obligations nor by intermittent breaches of a continuing obligation, since there must be a quality of continuance both in the breach and in the obligation and, accordingly, the court in assessing damages was only entitled to take into consideration matters occurring before the issue of the writ.

Hole v. Chard Union [1894] 1 Ch. 293 distinguished.

(5) That the damages sustained by the plaintiffs and attributable to the defendant was the cost of a substitute on June 16, 1956, and no more, since although the defendant was undoubtedly acting in concert with others in failing to report for duty on the day in question, it was not shown that his breach of contract contributed to the loss of output of coal sustained on that day.

Ebbw Vale Steel, Iron and Coal Co. v. Tew (1935) 1 L.J. N.C.C.A. 284 considered.

Decision of Finnemore J. reversed in part.

APPEAL from Finnemore J., sitting at Nottingham Assizes.

The facts are taken from the judgment of the court.

The defendant, Stanley Galley, appealed from a judgment of Finnemore J., at Nottingham Assizes, awarding to the plaintiffs, the National Coal Board, £100 damages for breach of contract and costs on the High Court scale. The defendant contended that he was not liable in damages and that, even if he were liable, the damages should be only nominal. Although not strictly a test case, this was the first of 85 actions brought by the plaintiffs against other defendants raising similar issues. Probably the fate of those actions would be decided by this.

The defendant was employed by the plaintiffs as a deputy in their colliery at Oxcroft in Derbyshire. The case arose out of the defendant's deliberate refusal to attend for work at the plaintiffs' mine on Saturday voluntary shifts, in breach, it was alleged, of his terms of employment. All the other deputies at the mine refused similarly and simultaneously. Deputies, like

[1] R.S.C., Ord. 36, r. 58: "Where "damages are to be assessed in respect "of any continuing cause of action "they shall be assessed down to the "time of the assessment."

C. A.
1957
NATIONAL COAL BOARD v. GALLEY.

overmen (who were immediately above them in status) and shotfirers (who were immediately below them), had been described as the non-commissioned officers of the industry. The deputy was in charge of the miners and had to see that various safety precautions were observed. He was first in and last out in a shift. As a result, his shift was longer than the ordinary miner's, and even when the miners were only working a five-day week the deputy had certain safety duties at the week-end.

The defendant's trade union was the National Association of Colliery Overmen, Deputies and Shotfirers (Midlands Area). This body was in turn a member of the National Association of Colliery Overmen and Deputies and Shotfirers, an unregistered trade union that was composed of area associations and had no individual members; it was known popularly and referred to in this case as "Nacods." It was Nacods who discussed and arranged with the plaintiffs any alteration of the terms of the deputies' employment.

In April, 1947, following nationalization, a five-day week was introduced for miners by agreement between the plaintiffs and the National Union of Mineworkers. In May, 1947, a similar agreement in respect of deputies was made between the plaintiffs and Nacods. This agreement provided that local arrangements should be made to provide the working of additional shifts where it was necessary under statutory provisions and to ensure the safety and efficient working of the pit, and that the deputies should work reasonable overtime if required.

In October, 1947, shortage of coal produced a very serious crisis. In that month the National Union of Mineworkers made an agreement with the plaintiffs that the five-day week agreement should remain in force but that a proportion of miners would voluntarily do as many Saturday shifts as possible for the next six months. Provisions were made for overtime pay. Thereafter voluntary Saturday shifts were worked at most other mines, and at this mine in particular.

In April, 1948, the agreement for voluntary shifts on Saturdays was extended for a further year. Thereafter it was extended year by year up to April, 1952. The Saturday working was a serious attempt by miners and management to increase the output of coal. It necessitated each year an Order in Council under section 4 of the Coal Mines Regulations Act, 1908, based on the existence of a great emergency or a grave economic disturbance due to the demand for coal exceeding the supply.

On March 1, 1949, the defendant entered into a written contract of service with the plaintiffs. That contract was not a felicitous document and its terms were far from clear. The plaintiffs thereby agreed to engage the defendant and the defendant agreed to serve the plaintiffs on terms and conditions set forth in the contract rules for the time being in force at the board's collieries. No one appeared to know what these rules were.

By clause 4 the defendant declared that he "will serve the "board as regularly as the state of trade and interruptions from "accident or repairs to its mines and works or the non-arrival of "wagons or general holidays will from time to time permit and "that my wages shall be regulated by such national agreement "and the county wages agreement for the time being in force "and that this contract of service shall be subject to those "agreements and to any other agreements relating to or in "connexion with or subsidiary to the wages agreement and to "statutory provisions for the time being in force affecting the "same."

It was contended by the plaintiffs that this contract incorporated any alteration in deputies' terms of employment that might be agreed between the plaintiffs and Nacods. From that time onward the defendant as a deputy was working at week-ends, doing on an average approximately six shifts a week. But the shifts which he did on Saturday were voluntary and he received overtime pay in respect of them.

In April, 1952, when the national yearly agreement for the Saturday voluntary shift ran out, it was not renewed until August 22, 1952. From that date up to the present it had continued in force with yearly renewals not merely in respect of winter months but in respect of summer months (May to August inclusive) as well. Although many collieries had worked Saturday voluntary shifts in the summer, the Oxcroft Colliery had never done so before August, 1952.

Some time prior to April, 1952, Nacods had put in a wage claim in respect of deputies. During the summer of 1952, while the Saturday voluntary shift was in abeyance, there were various discussions between the plaintiffs and Nacods about deputies' pay and duties. The plaintiffs held the view that deputies (and overmen and shotfirers) were men of responsibility in the working of the mine who should hold a position more analogous to the management than to the miners. They suggested to Nacods that deputies should receive an upstanding weekly wage to include overtime. Minutes and transcripts of these negotiations were produced and put to the witnesses in evidence. It was clear that Nacods were afraid that the fixing of an upstanding weekly wage inclusive of overtime might result in men being put upon and being asked to work in excess of six shifts a week. (By "six "shifts a week" the court was referring to the average produced by an alternation of five shifts in one week and seven in another.) They were trying to ensure that this would not occur. The plaintiffs were, in effect, saying that the average working week was now about six shifts a week but that deputies could not have a maximum of six shifts a week since emergencies in the pits might on occasion demand more, but that it was not the intention that the men would work more than six shifts. No one was saying that six shifts a week was unreasonable or excessive.

In order to avoid the abuse of excessive unpaid overtime the plaintiffs offered to keep records showing the overtime worked, and it was agreed that if the new agreement resulted in unreasonable impositions on the men, the matter should be discussed. No doubt both sides were then thinking that Saturday voluntary shifts would probably become unnecessary in a year or two, and it was said that no one at Oxcroft was anticipating summer Saturday voluntary shifts. Certainly no one was anticipating that Saturday voluntary shifts would still be worked by 1957.

C. A.
1957
NATIONAL COAL BOARD v. GALLEY.

As a result of these discussions, an agreement "on revised "terms and conditions of employment of deputies" between Nacods and the plaintiffs was reached on July 29, 1952. This agreement was interspersed with notes to explain what the various clauses meant. It was clear that the defendant was at all material times aware of it, though he personally was not in favour of the change to an upstanding wage and had voted against it.

The clauses relevant to this dispute were as follows: "Clause 5. Deputies grade I and II shall be paid an upstanding "weekly wage for each week worked without any additional pay- "ments in respect of overtime or week-end work. Clause 6. The "amount of such weekly wage in respect of deputies grade I "shall not be less than £14 per week, nor more than £16 10s. "per week. . . . Clause 12. Except where prevented by sickness, "accident or industrial disease to which the provisions of part E "of this schedule apply, deputies shall work such days or part "days in each week as may reasonably be required by the "management in order to promote the safety and efficient "working of the pit and to comply with statutory requirements. "Clause 13. The management at each pit shall cause to be kept "a record showing in respect of each week and each deputy "grade I or grade II the number of days and part days worked "by him in that week, and will so organise the work during the "week as to ensure that, as far as is practicable, time worked "is fairly distributed between deputies in the same grade in each "pit. . . . Clause 15. If, in any case, it is alleged that the "amount of time worked by any deputy or deputies is unreason- "able or is not reasonably distributed between deputies in the "same grade in the pit, such matter shall be settled by discus- "sion in such manner as the board and the association in the "division shall agree.

"Note (i). The objects of the revised arrangements are to "improve the status and quality of deputies grade I and II. The "institution of an upstanding weekly wage carries with it the "responsibility, on the part of the deputies, to work all such "time as may be reasonably required of them by the manage- "ment. It imposes upon management the responsibility of "ensuring that, so far as possible, work is organised so that "time to be worked is distributed fairly between deputies of the "same grade in each pit. Note (ii). Both the board and the "association have given assurances that these responsibilities will "be accepted and implemented in the spirit in which they are "intended. Note (iii). Except when prevented from working "due to sickness, accident, or industrial disease, deputies will "be required to work all reasonable time required of them and "will be expected not to absent themselves without the prior "approval of the manager. Note (iv). The agreement does not "make any provision, and no such provision is intended, in "relation to financial penalties or deductions from the weekly "wage in cases where a deputy is voluntarily absent from work. "No deductions are to be made from the weekly wage in such "circumstances otherwise than as provided in the arrangements "for sickness, accident, and industrial disease provisions of the "agreement. It will be the responsibility of management to "deal with such circumstances by disciplinary measures, "including, where appropriate, downgrading or dismissal."

A more formal agreement in similar terms (omitting the notes) was signed by the plaintiffs and Nacods on August 25, 1952, by which date Saturday voluntary shifts had once more come into force. This agreement expressly rescinded the five-day week agreement of May 20, 1947. Wages were then fixed at divisional level, as envisaged by the agreement, at an upstanding weekly wage of £16 10s.; and thereafter the defendant worked for the plaintiffs on the basis of the Nacods agreement. He continued to work about six shifts. Between 1952 and 1956 the miners received substantial increases of pay, whereas the defendant and other deputies received only two small increases. As the differential between themselves and the miners decreased they became more conscious of the hardship of the long hours that they worked without any overtime pay. Finally, as a result of dissatisfaction with the treatment of a wage claim, all the deputies at the Oxcroft Colliery refused to work the Saturday voluntary shift. The plaintiffs did not accept this refusal as a repudiation of the contract of service, but continued to employ him.

On April 23 the manager of the Oxcroft mine received a letter saying that at a branch meeting of the deputies they had decided to take no further part in coal turning on Saturdays. At the same time they informed him that they were very upset at the smallness of the increase in wages that they had just received. As a result the plaintiffs were unable to do any coal turning on Saturday, April 28, and a notice had to be posted cancelling the ordinary work for that day. The same thing happened on the next three Saturdays. But on May 26 the deputies returned to normal Saturday work, and it was possible to work a Saturday voluntary shift on that day and on the next two Saturdays.

On June 14 the deputies gave notice that they would not be turning coal on Saturdays in future and therefore no productive work was possible on Saturday, June 16. That position continued up to and including August 18. On August 25 the plaintiffs arranged for substitute deputies at a cost of £3 18s. 10d. for each substitute for the Saturday shift, and the Saturday voluntary shift was resumed. From that date the deputies refused to do work of any kind on Saturdays. In February, 1957, the deputies returned to their normal Saturday work. The loss of production on June 16, 1956, was £535, and between June 16 and August 18 it was £3,395.

C. A.
1957
NATIONAL COAL BOARD v. GALLEY.

On June 21, 1956, the plaintiffs issued a writ against the defendant (and others) claiming damages for breach of contract. They alleged that the defendant was directly bound by agreement between the plaintiffs and Nacods of August 25, 1952 ("the "Nacods agreement"), since he impliedly authorized them to conclude it on his behalf. Alternatively, by the defendant's individual contract of employment of March 1, 1949, his terms of service were expressed to be subject to any national agreements that might be entered into, and, since the Nacods agreement was a national agreement, it became incorporated in the defendant's contract of employment. Further, the defendant, by working on Saturday voluntary shifts from and after August 25, 1952, recognized that that was one of the duties of his employment. Such duty was a reasonable requirement of the plaintiffs, and by refusing to do it he was in breach of his contract.

The defendant, by his defence, denied that Nacods had any right to bind him by the Nacods agreement of August 25, 1952, but he admitted and asserted that from the beginning of August, 1952, he was employed on the basis of the earlier, less formal, agreement between Nacods and the plaintiffs of July 29, 1952. The term in that document as to doing such work as might be required by the management was too vague and uncertain to have any contractual effect. Alternatively, by reason of a number of circumstances, the requirement for Saturday working was not a reasonable requirement. He counterclaimed for a declaration that the plaintiffs were not entitled to require him to work at week-ends in excess of about 8½ hours on one Saturday (or Sunday) once in every four weeks, or to work for more than 42½ hours in each week save in an emergency.

Finnemore J. gave judgment for the plaintiffs.

The defendant appealed.

Gerald Gardiner Q.C. and J. R. Bickford Smith for the defendant.

Sir David Cairns Q.C. and Michael Harrison-Hall for the plaintiffs.

The following cases, in addition to those referred to in the judgment, were cited in argument: Eshelby v. Federated European Bank Ltd.[2]; Fritz v. Hobson[3]; Read v. Wotton[4]; [2] [1932] 1 K.B. 254; 423 (C.A.).

[3] (1880) 14 Ch.D. 542.
[4] [1893] 2 Ch. 171.

Wheeler v. Keeble (1914) Ltd.[5]; Edwards v. Summerton[6]; Young v. Canadian Northern Railway Co.[7]

Cur. adv. vult.

November 27, 1957. JENKINS L.J. The judgment about to be read by Pearce L.J. is the judgment of the court.

PEARCE L.J. stated the facts and continued: The judge heard a considerable volume of evidence and was referred to a number of documents. It was made clear at the hearing that there is no personal feeling in this action that they have brought against the defendant. They regard him as a faithful servant and a good worker, but as a matter of principle they wish to establish that men in responsible positions must honour their contracts. The case has been fought throughout on that note.

The judge thought that, since one of the objects of Nacods was to negotiate the wages and conditions of all members and the defendant was a member of the local trade union which was itself a member of Nacods, the defendant was individually bound by the Nacods agreement. But in any event, by the defendant's personal contract his wages were to be regulated by national agreements for the time being in force and the contract was to be subject to those agreements; and therefore, since the Nacods agreement was a national agreement, the defendant was bound by it. "He has," continued the judge, "in fact accepted it and "worked under it. He has taken the advantages of it and "accepted the responsibilities of it for a period of some four "years before this particular trouble arose. On the point that "the agreement itself was not properly made, I think the "complete answer would be that it is expressly admitted in the "defence that the Coal Board, the plaintiffs, and the union did "enter into an agreement which in fact contains the vital matters "which are in dispute here."

Mr. Gardiner contends that the judge was wrong in holding that the defendant was personally bound by the Nacods agreement. If that point fell to be decided it might well be a matter of some difficulty. But, as the judge said, it is clear that the defendant's personal contract of service is regulated by the Nacods agreement, and the defendant by working on the terms of the Nacods agreement has entered into an agreement which contains the term now in dispute.

The defendant next contends that, even though the Nacods agreement was applicable to the defendant's employment, yet it had no contractual force, because it was too vague. It is an industrial agreement, he argues, covering a wide area, with no intention that it shall have a specific or enforceable effect.

[5] [1920] 1 Ch. 57.
[6] [1899] W.N. 120; 34 L.J.N.C. 418.
[7] [1931] A.C. 83.

C. A.
1957
NATIONAL COAL BOARD v. GALLEY.

Collieries differ, and what is reasonable in one will be unreasonable in another. The court has no yardstick to measure what are reasonable requirements. For instance, the stringency of those requirements depends on the number of deputies employed. It is a case within the principle of May and Butcher v. The King [1] rather than Foley v. Classique Coaches Ltd.[2]

But it seems to us, on a consideration of the Nacods agreement, that it was meant to have a binding effect. Realising the difficulties inherent in the situation, it provided for discussions, if it appeared to be working out unfairly for the deputies. To define with exactitude what are the duties of a servant is no easy task. The court will supply an implied condition as to reasonableness in many contracts where duties are not fully defined, as in Hillas & Co. Ltd. v. Arcos Ltd.[3] and Foley v. Classique Coaches Ltd.[4]

Mr. Gardiner also relies on the provision in clause 15 for discussion in the event of complaints. He contends that this is typical of an industrial agreement not intended to be enforceable in the courts. We do not, however, see how in principle such a provision differs from that in Foley v. Classique Coaches Ltd.,[5] which provided for the price to be agreed between the parties. It may be that discussion is a condition precedent to action, but once discussion is repudiated or fails the matter falls to be determined by the courts. Moreover, the defendant is in this further difficulty. He is asserting that the agreement as a whole exists, while seeking to deny the enforceability of clause 12. If clause 12 is too vague to be enforceable the whole agreement is not legally binding on either side: see Bishop & Baxter Ltd. v. Anglo-Eastern Trading Co. Ltd.[6]

In this contract the parties have expressly provided that reasonableness shall be the test. The fact that it is difficult to decide in a given case, should not deter the court from deciding what is a reasonable requirement by a master in the light of the surrounding circumstances. In our view, therefore, the judge was right in deciding that the term as to working was legally binding.

We come now to the central point in this appeal, namely, whether the defendant became in breach of his contract of employment when he refused to obey his employer's request to work the Saturday voluntary shift on June 16, 1956. He had already worked 11 shifts on the preceding 11 days. Could he reasonably be required to work a twelfth day before having two days off? In other words, was it reasonable to require him to work 12 days in the fortnight? It is, of course, clear that the court is in no way concerned with what are reasonable hours in the abstract. Its task is to consider the agreement made in 1952

[1] [1934] 2 K.B. 17n.
[2] [1934] 2 K.B. 1.
[3] (1932) 147 L.T. 503.
[4] [1934] 2 K.B. 1.
[5] Ibid.
[6] [1944] K.B. 12; 60 T.L.R. 37; [1943] 2 All E.R. 598.

and to determine on the evidence whether or not the defendant was being required to work in breach of that agreement. The only yardstick stated in the agreement is what is reasonably required by the management in order to promote the safety and efficient work of the pit and to comply with statutory requirements. But this clearly is not the only yardstick, since the hours of work a deputy could reasonably be required to work for these purposes would depend on the number of deputies employed. Ultimately the question must be whether the defendant himself was being required to work reasonable hours. If, of course, he was being required to work longer hours than other deputies, that, in the absence of some exceptional circumstances, would be evidence that the requirement made on him was unreasonable. There is, however, no suggestion of that in this case.

[His Lordship reviewed the evidence and said that the court had come to the conclusion that there was no evidence to justify the contentions that the defendant was being required to work in breach of the 1952 agreement. He continued:] Two points arise on damages.

The first is the question of whether in assessing damage the court can take into account matters that occurred after the issue of the writ. The judge held himself entitled to do so under R.S.C., Ord. 36, r. 58, and therefore he took into consideration the continued abstention of the defendant from the Saturday shifts from June 16, 1956, until February, 1957.

If he was not entitled to do so, the only Saturday that falls to be considered on the case as pleaded is Saturday, June 16, since there is no reference to earlier Saturdays in the statement of claim, and the writ was issued on June 21. It is not contended that apart from the provisions of R.S.C., Ord. 36, r. 58, there would be power to take account of the breaches of contract on Saturdays subsequent to the writ.

The terms of the rule are: "Where damages are to be assessed "in respect of any continuing cause of action they shall be "assessed down to the time of the assessment." The judge relied on Hole v. Chard Union,[7] where damages for nuisance by pollution of a stream were assessed subsequent to the writ by virtue of R.S.C., Ord. 36, r. 58. Lindley L.J. said[8]: "What is "a continuing cause of action? Speaking accurately, there is no "such thing; but what is called a continuing cause of action is "a cause of action which arises from the repetition of acts or "omissions of the same kind as that for which the action was "brought. In my opinion, that is a continuing cause of action "within the meaning of the rule. The cause of action complained "of and existing in the present case appears to me precisely the "kind of mischief at which rule 58 was aimed, its object being "to prevent the necessity of bringing repeated actions in respect "of repeated nuisances of the same kind. To adopt the argument

[7] [1894] 1 Ch. 293.

[8] Ibid. 295.

C. A.
1957
NATIONAL COAL BOARD v. GALLEY.

"of the Defendants would be to render the rule altogether a "nullity. I feel no doubt that the present case is a continuing "cause of action within the rule. It is a repetition of acts of "the same kind as those which had been investigated at the trial, "and had been decided to constitute a nuisance."

A. L. Smith L.J. said [9]: "The principal question in this "appeal turns upon the construction of R.S.C., Ord. 36, r. 58. "It is contended by the appellants, that when the act on which "an action is brought is established the cause of action can have "reference to that one act and to no other. In my opinion, that "is not necessarily so. If once a cause of action arises, and the "acts complained of are continuously repeated, the cause of "action continues and goes on de die in diem. It seems to me "that there was a connexion in the present case between the "series of acts before and after the action was brought; they "were repeated in succession, and became a continuing cause "of action. They were an assertion of the same claim—namely, "a claim to continue to pour sewage into the stream—and a "continuance of the same alleged right. In my opinion, there "was here a continuing cause of action within the meaning of "the rule."

Other cases were cited to us, but none was on all fours with this case or threw any real light on it. It must, we think, be a question of degree as to whether separate acts are so knit up together, so close in time and quality, as to be properly described in the words "a continuing cause of action."

The general proposition that persistence in tortious conduct of particular kinds such as trespass or nuisance constitutes a continuing cause of action must be regarded as established. It also must be accepted that in contract also, breaches of obligation of various kinds may amount to continuing breaches. But that must depend on the nature of the particular obligation broken. For example, a contract of service for a specified term might contain a stipulation that the employee should not during the period of his service carry on or be concerned in any other business of the same kind as the employer's business. If the employee, in breach of such a stipulation, did proceed to carry out some other business of the kind in question, the breach would, we think, clearly be a continuing one, in that the employee would de die in diem be continuously in breach of the stipulation so long as the prohibitive business was carried on. But where a contract requires payments to be made on stated dates (for example, a contract to pay an annuity of £1,000 per annum in equal monthly instalments on the first day of each calendar month) failure to pay the instalment due on February 1 is not, we should have thought, a continuance of the cause of action constituted by failure to pay the instalment due on January 1, but a distinct cause of action arising for the first time on February 1 and at no earlier date.

[9] [1894] 1 Ch. 293, 296.

Here the obligation broken by the defendant was the obligation to work the Saturday voluntary shift every other Saturday. The defendant having failed to perform this obligation on Saturday, June 16, 1956, the writ in the action was issued on June 21. Can it be said that the defendant's failure thereafter to work the Saturday voluntary shift on each of the alternate Saturdays on which it was his turn to do so was a continuation of the cause of action constituted by his failure to work the Saturday voluntary shift on June 16? We cannot see that it was. It cannot to our minds rightly be said that during the period between June 16, 1956, and the next Saturday on which it was his turn to work the Saturday voluntary shift the defendant was in continuing breach of his obligation to work it on June 16. The breach constituted by that failure was complete, over and done with on June 16, and could not be continued thereafter. If and when the defendant failed to work the shift on any subsequent Saturday when it was his turn to do so, a distinct cause of action in respect of that failure would arise on that day and not before. The fact that the defendant prior to June 16 manifested an intention not to work the Saturday voluntary shift any more, coupled with his actual failure to do so on June 16, might have entitled the plaintiffs to treat the contract as repudiated and to claim damages on that footing, but they did not do so. They chose to allow the contract to remain in force, and while it stood their cause of action in respect of his failure to work the Saturday voluntary shift on any given Saturday when it was his turn to do so arose if and when he failed to work the shift on that day and not otherwise. A continuing cause of action is not in our view constituted by repeated breaches of recurring obligations nor by intermittent breaches of a continuing obligation. There must be a quality of continuance both in the breach and in the obligation. We sympathize with the judge's view that convenience and common sense are in favour of dealing with the damages under R.S.C., Ord. 36, r. 58. But the defendant is entitled to insist on this point if he properly can. We reluctantly come to the conclusion that these Saturday breaches of contract cannot be dealt with as a continuing cause of action and that if the plaintiffs wish to pursue their remedy in respect of them they must issue a fresh writ.

The last point which arises concerns the measure of damages. The judge found that the plaintiffs had proved a loss of profit of £535 due to the impossibility of working the Saturday voluntary shift on June 16, 1956. He then went on to hold that the defendant and others—namely, all the deputies and shotfirers concerned with the loss—should be treated as being responsible for that loss and that the defendant was liable to the plaintiffs for his share. Having regard to the view he took on the first point in connexion with damages, it became unnecessary for him to fix the number of those responsible.

For the defendant it is contended that the judge was wrong in assessing the damage in this way. In contract, as opposed to tort, it is argued, a defendant is only liable for the damage caused by his own breach, not that caused by others even if they have all acted in concert. The mere failure of the defendant to work on June 16 would not have prevented the working of the shift, and accordingly he is only liable for a proportion of his wages or for the cost of a substitute.

C. A.
1957
NATIONAL COAL BOARD v. GALLEY.

In our judgment, it is going too far to say that in no circumstances can A be liable for a share of the loss caused by A and B acting in concert. Indeed, were this not so it would in many cases be impossible to compensate a plaintiff for his real loss. This was recognized in Ebbw Vale Steel, Iron and Coal Co. v. Tew.[10] In that case the court was concerned with the measure of damages where a face-worker broke his contract. Having stated that the correct measure was the value of the output lost less the expenses which would have been incurred in obtaining it, Roche L.J. said[11]: "In the case of a hewer such as Tew, the "application of these principles is not difficult. It may be more "difficult with another class of workman not so directly concerned "in getting coal from the seam. But with another class of "workman, a tribunal must do its best either to assess the con-"tribution of the workman in question to output and arrive at "a figure representing his notional output during the period of "default, or if it cannot do that, it must decide upon the evidence "what would have been the value to the employer of the services "he did not give.

"It will be observed that in this judgment the output of or "referable to the particular workman or workmen who are defen-"dants in the proceedings has been throughout treated as the "output which is material to be considered and dealt with by "the trial judge. Apart from allegation and proof of a case of "conspiracy or some clear allegation and proof of other good "ground in fact and in law for connecting further and consequen-"tial loss of output, such as loss of output due to the cessation "of work by men other than the defendant, with the particular "workman's breach of contract, that further and consequential "loss of output does not constitute a head of damage recoverable "from a defendant." Where the breaches of contract by A and B acting in concert each contribute to the loss, then, we think, it would prima facie be right to value the loss of services of each as half the loss.

Here the defendant is charged with breach of his contract of service in that he failed to work the Saturday voluntary shift on June 16, 1956, when it was his turn to do so. It is said that he took this course in concert with his fellow deputies. But he is not charged with the tort of inducing his fellow deputies to break their contracts or of the tort of conspiracy which might be constituted by the defendant and his fellow deputies mutually inducing each other to break their contracts in this respect.

[10] [1935] 1 L.J.N.C.C.A. 284. [11] Ibid. 288.

Therefore the matter must be dealt with as being simply a matter of breach of contract, albeit the defendant knew when he committed the breach that his fellow deputies intended to do the same.

What, then, is the measure of damages in this particular case? If the defendant alone and on his own initiative had failed to work the Saturday voluntary shift on June 16, the measure of damages would, we apprehend, have been the net value to the plaintiffs of the work which he would have performed if he had worked that shift as he ought to have done. Prima facie, the measure of damages cannot be different because when he broke his contract in this respect he knew that his fellow deputies intended to commit similar breaches, except in so far as it would then be apparent that any damage likely to flow from the breach could not be avoided or lessened by their presence.

Suppose that no question of supervision entered into the matter and that five face-workers were obliged by the terms of their contracts of service to work a special shift. Suppose further that if they did work it they would produce between them coal of the net value to their employers of £500, each contributing equally to the total. Suppose further that one of these face-workers failed, in breach of his contract, to work the special shift. The damages resulting from the breach would, we should have thought, be £100, whether or not the other four face-workers intended, to his knowledge, to absent themselves as well. There would be no question of charging him with the whole loss of £500.

The present case only differs from that hypothetical one in that deputies exercise supervisory functions, so that the absence of any one of them may entail a far greater loss of output than the absence of one more face-worker. The question still is: what loss of output did the absence of the particular deputy charged with breach of his contract entail? The question in each case must be: what would his services have contributed to the net value of the output of the shift if the deputy concerned had duly worked it? That is in each case a question of fact.

In the present case, though the defendant was undoubtedly acting in concert with others, it is not shown that his breach contributed to the loss. He would not, as we understand it, have worked at a coal face, but would have been doing safety work. How, then, can it be said that loss of output is any measure of his liability? In these circumstances we do not think it can be said that any damage has been proved against him beyond the cost of a substitute, say £3 18s. 2d.

For these reasons we would allow the appeal to the extent of varying the amount of the judgment from £100 to £3 18s. 2d.

Appeal allowed in part.

Solicitors: Helder, Roberts & Co. for Fidler & Pepper, Sutton-in-Ashfield; Donald H. Haslam for Lawrence C. Jenkins, Arnold.

J. A. G.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1957
Dec. 4.

Lord Goddard C.J., Devlin and Pearson JJ.

* HORACE PLUNKETT FOUNDATION v. ST. PANCRAS BOROUGH COUNCIL.

Rates and Rating — Social welfare — Assessment — Organization whose main objects concerned with advancement of education and social welfare — Previously exempt from rates as a scientific society — Exemption no longer claimed — Rate chargeable for first year of new valuation list where no rates previously charged—Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955 (4 Eliz. 2, c. 9), s. 8 (2).

Statute — Construction — Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955.

Section 8 of the Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955, which gives temporary rating relief to hereditaments occupied for the purposes of certain organizations not conducted for profit, provides by subsection (2) that for the first year of the new valuation list and for any subsequent year "the "amount of rates chargeable in respect of a hereditament to which "the section applies shall . . . be limited . . . (a) for the first year "of the new list, the amount so chargeable shall not exceed the "total amount of rates . . . which were charged in respect of the "hereditament for the last year before the new list came into "force;".

Premises occupied by a research foundation hitherto exempted from rates under the Scientific Societies Act, 1843, but which no longer claimed to be so exempt, were assessed for rates for the year ending March 31, 1957. The foundation appealed against the rate imposed on the ground that it exceeded the amount chargeable under the Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955, section 8 (2), of which they claimed the benefit. The local authority admitted that the foundation was an organization not established or conducted for profit and whose main objects were concerned with the advancement of education and social welfare and was accordingly within section 8 (1) of the Act but contended that, as no rates at all had been charged in previous years in respect of the premises now rated, section 8 (2) did not apply in respect of them. Quarter sessions upheld that contention and dismissed the appeal. On appeal by the foundation:—

Held, that on the natural construction of the words used therein, section 8 (2) contemplated a situation in which some rates had previously been charged so that a comparison could be made between the old rate and the new; the subsection had no application to a case where no rate had previously been charged as in such circumstances there was no previous "total rate" with which to make the necessary comparison; accordingly, quarter sessions had come to a correct decision and the appeal failed.

CASE STATED by Appeals Committee of County of London Quarter Sessions.

On March 7, 1957, the Horace Plunkett Foundation appealed to the appeals committee against a rate made by the St. Pancras Borough Council on March 31, 1956, for the ensuing year on the ground that the rate was not made in conformity with law, namely, the Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955, s. 8.[1]

The committee heard the appeal on February 20, 1957, when the following facts were proved or admitted. The hereditament which was the subject-matter of the rate, namely, 10, Doughty Street, London, W.C.1, was occupied by the appellant foundation. The foundation was admitted to be an organization within the terms of section 8 (1) of the Act of 1955, namely, an organization not established or conducted for profit and whose main objects were charitable or concerned with the advancement of education and social welfare. In the council's rate book for the year ending March 31, 1956, the hereditament was entered as occupied by the foundation and "exempt, Scientific Societies "Act, 1843," the amount of rates recoverable was entered as "nil." For the year ending March 31, 1957, the hereditament was entered as the offices, library and caretaker's premises of the foundation, rateable value £259, rate at 14s. 6d. in the pound, £187 15s. 6d. No amount had ever been demanded as the annual general rate in respect of the premises prior to April 1, 1956. Although the council in July, 1956, had informed the foundation that in their opinion it was not an organization to which section 8 of the Act of 1955 applied they made no such contention before the appeals committee.

It was contended on behalf of the foundation that as they were entitled to the benefit of section 8 of the Act of 1955 the amount of rates charged exceeded that chargeable under subsection (2) of that section.

It was contended on behalf of the respondents that, as no rates had been charged in the preceding years, section 8 (2) did not apply and the rates were correctly charged.

The committee came to the conclusion, and so found, that the case did not come within section 8 (2) of the Act because the total amount of rates charged in respect of the hereditament for the preceding year was "nil"; "nil" was not an amount and it could not therefore be proportional or reduced; and therefore the amount charged for 1957 was not in excess. They accordingly dismissed the appeal but stated a case at the request of the foundation. The question of law for the court was whether, upon the facts stated, the committee were right in dismissing the appeal.

[1] Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955, s. 8: "(1) This section applies to . . . "(a) any hereditament occupied for "the purposes of an organisation "(whether corporate or unincorporate) "which is not established or con-"ducted for profit and whose main "objects are charitable or are other-"wise concerned with the advance-"ment of religion, education or social "welfare; . . . (2) For the purposes "of the making and levying of rates "in a rating area, for the year "beginning with the date of the "coming into force of the first new "valuation list for that area (in this "section referred to as 'the first year "'of the new list'), and for any sub-"sequent year, the amount of rates "chargeable in respect of a heredita-"ment to which this section applies "shall, subject to the following pro-"visions of this section, be limited as "follows, that is to say—(a) for the "first year of the new list, the "amount so chargeable shall not "exceed the total amount of rates "(including any special rates) which "were charged in respect of the "hereditament for the last year "before the new list came into "force;".

1957

HORACE PLUNKETT FOUNDATION v. ST. PANCRAS BOROUGH COUNCIL.

Harold Williams Q.C. and W. L. Roots for the appellant foundation submitted that under section 8 (2) the amount which was to be proportioned or reduced was the amount now chargeable, namely, £187 13s. 6d. If no rates had previously been paid the sum of £187 13s. 6d., or whatever amount was charged, must exceed the amount previously paid (which was nil) and therefore could not be in conformity with section 8 (2).

C. E. Scholefield for the respondent council contended that the language of section 8 (2) was not apt to cover a case such as the present where no rates had been charged for the previous year. It was clearly intended to limit the rates payable and not to excuse them altogether. If the exemption which the foundation had previously enjoyed had been wrongly withdrawn they had a right of appeal under the Scientific Societies Act, 1843, and the right thing for them to do was to obtain a decision under that Act and not to try to obtain relief under the Act of 1955.

The following cases were cited in argument: Jervis v. Tomkinson[2]; Regina v. Gee.[3]

LORD GODDARD C.J. This is a case stated by the County of London Quarter Sessions, to whom the appellants appealed against a rate made by the respondents on the ground that the rate was not in conformity with section 8 of the Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955.

The point is a very short one, and arises in this way: The appellant foundation, an unincorporated body, is admitted to be an organization covered by section 8 of the Act of 1955 as not established for profit and whose main objects are charitable or are otherwise concerned with the advancement of religion, education or social welfare. It had, in previous years, claimed to be within the exemption conferred by the Scientific Societies Act, 1843, which exempts from rates and from assessment to rates scientific societies. Some question seems to have arisen as to whether or not that exemption applies to this foundation—it may be they have altered their objects—and we are asked to assume that they would no longer be entitled to exemption under that Act for the purposes of deciding this point which arises under section 8 (2) (a) of the Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955.

[His Lordship read the subsection and continued:] The words which we have to construe—and I think this is a pure matter of construction—are "the total amount of rates . . . charged." No rates were charged, and therefore I do not think that this provision has any application to the present case. Under the subsection the amount chargeable is not to exceed the total amount of rates charged. If no rates were charged we cannot consider what the total amount of rates charged was. There was never a total with which to make a comparison. Under the Scientific Societies Act, 1843, it is provided that scientific societies shall not be assessed, so that they are, if I may so put it, outside rating altogether. It may be that a wrong view has been taken in the past and that this foundation is not entitled to exemption under the Scientific Societies Act, although if they are so entitled their exemption is preserved by section 8 (6) of the Act of 1955, which provides: "Nothing in this section shall affect any "exemption from, or privilege in respect of, rates under any "enactment other than this section." Speaking for myself, I think that where section 8 (2) (a) speaks about the total amount of rates charged it is contemplating that some rates were previously charged; one then has to find the total amount of the rates, and if that was "nil" there never was any rate charged. In such a case it does not seem to me that a subsection which deals with the "total amount" of rates charged can be applied.

[2] (1856) 1 H. & N. 195. [3] (1860) 1 E. & E. 1068.

For these reasons, I am of opinion that quarter sessions came to a correct decision, and the appeal must be dismissed.

DEVLIN J. I agree with the construction my Lord has put upon section 8 (2). I should not like to say that in every conceivable case where words of this sort are used the fact that no charge has been made or a nil amount has been charged would necessarily mean that wording of this sort was inapplicable. But one has to consider the phraseology in relation to the section as a whole and the object which it was intended to achieve, and it is for that reason I have not found the authorities cited by Mr. Williams on the construction of similar phraseology in other Acts to be of much assistance.

The object of this section, as Mr. Williams has put it before us, is clear enough. There were before 1955, and there are still, a number of premises occupied by bodies which have charitable or scientific objects and which accordingly have been wholly exempted from rates. The appellant foundation claims or claimed that it was one of them. When the Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955, was passed it was not intended to disturb the position in relation to those societies which were wholly exempt under the Scientific Societies Act, 1843, but it created three new classes of hereditaments of a semi-charitable character, if I may put it that way, and granted to them not total exemption but a certain measure of relief. The measure of relief was this, that the increase in rates that was otherwise contemplated by the Act was not to affect them—I am putting it broadly—but they were to remain as they were before, subject only to the old rating values. That was a temporary relief, as Mr. Williams has pointed out, merely to temper the wind to the shorn lamb, because under section 8 (3) the local authority may, in due course, bring their position into line with other premises, but that was the object of section 8. It seems to me, therefore, that it is plainly contemplated that section 8 is dealing with premises which were subject to the old rates. It is also expressly contemplated that it is not to have anything to do with premises which were exempt because subsection (6) specifically provides: "Nothing in this section shall "affect any exemption from, or privilege in respect of, rates "under any enactment other than this section."

1957

HORACE PLUNKETT FOUNDATION v. ST. PANCRAS BOROUGH COUNCIL.

Devlin J.

The difficulty has arisen in this case because the appellant foundation has mistakenly been supposed to be exempt from rates and has therefore been entered in the list as "exempt." I say "mistakenly supposed to be" because that is the assumption we have to make. The position is, therefore, that we are dealing with an odd case, a case of a mistake which was never contemplated by the Act. So now, if one turns back to subsection (2), one asks oneself whether it is possible that the draftsman or Parliament contemplated no charge at all and a nil assessment. If it seemed clear from the section as a whole that they did, I should have been disposed at any rate to do my best to give the words the meaning which could be applied to such a situation. One could, for example, say that a "nil" charge was a charge of nothing and that the reduction of 100 per cent. was a proportionate reduction; but I see no need to strain the meaning of the words to achieve that result because it is plain to me that that is not what was contemplated by subsection (2) at all. It contemplated a situation in which rates were to be limited and in which there was an old figure to compare with the new. Therefore, I agree with the meaning which my Lord puts upon it, which is the natural meaning and also the right one in the contemplation of the section, and I agree that this appeal should be dismissed.

PEARSON J. I agree. If one looked only at paragraphs (a) and (b) of section 8 (2) I, personally, would have felt no difficulty in treating "nil" as an amount, and one could say under paragraph (a) that the amount chargeable shall not exceed the total amount of rates, which is nil. Then it would be 100 per cent. reduction or 100 per cent. proportion under paragraph (b). But I agree that if one considers the matter in relation to section 8 as a whole, and in relation to the Scientific Societies Act, 1843, the more reasonable view is the one which has been already expressed, namely, that where the subsection uses the expression "the amount of rates chargeable in respect of a "hereditament . . . shall, subject to the following provisions "of this section, be limited as follows," that provision for limitation is applicable only to a case in which there have been some rates charged, and some figure, which is more than "nil," is to be in some way limited. The provision for total exemption is contained in the Scientific Societies Act, 1843, and where that Act applies the relevant provision is "No person "or persons shall be assessed or rated, or liable to be assessed "or rated, or liable to pay . . . any sum in respect of rates," and that provision does not reasonably fall within the wording used in subsection (2) of section 8 of the Act of 1955.

1957

HORACE PLUNKETT FOUNDATION v. ST. PANCRAS BOROUGH COUNCIL.

For those reasons I agree with the decision that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Barfield & Barfield; R. C. E. Austin, Town Clerk, St. Pancras Borough Council.

E. M. W.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

* NEWMAN v. NEWMAN.

1957 Nov. 7.

Lord Merriman P., and Stevenson J.

Husband and Wife—Maintenance—Justices—Adultery by wife—Fresh evidence — Application to discharge order — Practice — Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39), s. 7.

An order was made by justices in favour of a wife in 1952. In 1957 the husband learnt for the first time that the wife had committed adultery in 1942 and thereupon applied to the justices to discharge the order. On the justices' dismissal of his application he appealed to the Divisional Court:—

Held, that the discovery of the wife's adultery was fresh evidence under section 7 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895; although that section gave the justices a discretion to alter, vary or discharge, they had not exercised that discretion judicially and the appeal must be allowed.

Weightman v. Weightman (1906) 94 L.T. 620; 22 T.L.R. 362 followed.

Per curiam. In the circumstances of the case it would have been open to the husband to appeal out of time directly to the Divisional Court to have the original order, which had been wrongly obtained, set aside.

APPEAL from justices.

The parties were married in October, 1933, and two children were born, in 1934 and 1940 respectively. Some time between September and December, 1942, the wife committed adultery, but that fact was entirely unknown to the husband at the time. Both before the justices and in the Divisional Court there was the clearest and most frank and unequivocal admission by counsel on behalf of the wife that the husband neither knew of this adultery nor by reasonable diligence could have known of it until the fact was proved on February 22, 1957, through the discretion statement put in evidence by the wife at the hearing of her divorce suit.

On December 15, 1952, the wife complained to the Worthing justices of the husband's wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance; and they made a maintenance order of £2 for the wife and 10s. for one only of the two children of the marriage, £2 10s. in all, and the wife was given the custody of that particular child.

1957

NEWMAN v. NEWMAN.

On June 21, 1957, the husband, having become aware of the wife's adultery prior to the making of the order, applied to the justices for its discharge under section 7 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950.[1] The justices dismissed the application and from this dismissal the husband appealed to the Divisional Court. In the course of the hearing of the appeal counsel for the husband sought and obtained leave to add to his notice of motion an application to extend the time for appealing against the original order of December 15, 1952.

A. T. Hoolahan for the husband.
J. R. Macgregor for the wife.

The cases cited in argument are referred to in the judgment.

LORD MERRIMAN P. referred to the facts, gave leave to extend the time for filing the notice of appeal and continued: I now come to the merits of the case, which raise a very curious and interesting point.

On December 15, 1952, the wife obtained the order which the husband, by his present complaint, seeks to have set aside. He seeks to have it set aside under the first part of section 7, on the ground that he has shown cause upon fresh evidence to the satisfaction of the court, which entitled the court at any time to discharge such an order, namely, the order of December 15, 1952, and the first question is whether he was entitled to proceed under section 7 to that end.

At this point I ought to add that Mr. Hoolahan has applied for, and, there being no opposition, has been granted, leave to add to his notice of motion an application to extend the time for appealing against the original order, with the implication that this court, if that application was granted, would then of its own motion set the order aside as having been obtained wrongly. It was obtained wrongly, because by the terms of section 6 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, the original Act in the code which gives justices jurisdiction in matrimonial affairs, it is enacted that "No orders shall be made "under this Act on the application of a married woman if it "shall be proved that such married woman has committed an "act of adultery: provided that the husband has not condoned or "connived at, or by his wilful neglect or misconduct conduced

[1] Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, s. 7: "A court "of summary jurisdiction . . . may, "on the application of the married "woman or of her husband, and upon "cause being shown upon fresh "evidence to the satisfaction of the "court at any time, alter, vary, or "discharge any such order . . . If "any married woman upon whose "application an order shall have been "made under this Act . . . shall "voluntarily resume cohabitation "with her husband, or shall commit "an act of adultery, such order shall "upon proof thereof be discharged."

"to such act of adultery." It is now proved that the married woman has committed an act of adultery ten years before her complaint of wilful neglect to maintain which resulted in this order. It is expressly admitted that there was no question of condonation. Indeed, the husband knew nothing about it, as is admitted, and it was not suggested, in the very full trial that was held at Lewes before Mr. Commissioner Gallop in February, 1957, that there had been any question of connivance or conduct conducing to that act of adultery. In other words, as the facts now stand, it is quite plain that the justices, had they known of them, would have been bound to hold that they were without jurisdiction to make any order at all on the wife's complaint.

Then the question arises, how shall this be dealt with? Mr. Hoolahan has asked us to deal with it on the ground that this belated discovery of the adultery, albeit it is adultery which, unlike that under the second part of section 7, was committed before the wife's complaint came up for hearing, enables the court to regard it as fresh evidence, and for that proposition he relies on the decision in Weightman v. Weightman[1] in a Divisional Court, consisting of Sir Gorell Barnes P. and Bargrave Deane J. I do not think it is necessary to read the whole judgment, but only sufficient to show what the court was deciding. Sir Gorell Barnes P., in his judgment, begins by saying[2]: "In the present "case there was a summons taken out on the ground that fresh "evidence had been discovered." A little lower down, after reading the material words of section 7, to which I have already alluded, he said[3]: "But it is necessary that magistrates should "clearly understand what 'fresh evidence' means, though in "my view there is no real doubt about it." He had already referred to Johnson v. Johnson,[4] in which Sir Francis Jeune P. had defined the meaning of the words "upon fresh evidence," and that decision is summarised by Sir Gorell Barnes P. in these words[5]: "It was practically the same sort of evidence as "that upon which a new trial would, in the ordinary course, "be granted; it must relate to something which has happened "since the former hearing or trial"—now that, of course, does not arise—"or it must be evidence which has come to the know-"ledge of the party applying since that hearing or trial, and "which could not by reasonable means have come to his "knowledge before that time."

This case is precisely covered by those words, and it is admitted—it was admitted in the court below and has been admitted here—that this adultery in 1942 was, for the purposes of this application in 1957, "fresh evidence" upon which an order for discharge might have been made, and I am fully prepared to follow the decision in Weightman v. Weightman.[6] I see that it is cited in the up-to-date textbooks as a valid

[1] (1906) 94 L.T. 620; 22 T.L.R. 362.
[2] 94 L.T. 620, 621.
[3] Ibid.
[4] [1900] P. 19.
[5] (1906) 94 L.T. 620, 621.
[6] 94 L.T. 620.

1957

NEWMAN v. NEWMAN.

Lord Merriman P.

decision which has never been questioned, and I see no reason to question it now. On the contrary, I think it is plainly right, and it decides, incidentally (and this has been decided in other cases too), that because of the use of the words "fresh evidence ". . . at any time" the six months' bar imposed by section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, on the hearing of any complaint which is over six months old does not apply, so that it is irrelevant that it was not until 1957, the earliest time at which, in fact, it could have been used at all, that this attempt to raise the question of fresh evidence in relation to something which happened as long ago as 1942 first occurred.

The wording of section 7, as is, I think, rightly submitted, does raise a question of discretion. Unlike the case in respect of adultery after the making of the order, which is dealt with in the second part of the section, where the word "shall" is used, and has been held to be mandatory, the wording of the first part of the section uses the word "may"—"on the "application, on fresh evidence, may" (amongst other things) "discharge any such order," and it is said that we ought not to interfere with the discretion of the justices in a matter which is plainly discretionary after so long a lapse of time. His Lordship then referred to the fact that the justices, in their reasons, had stated wrongly, as was admitted, that they were not satisfied that the husband had established that he was unaware of his wife's adultery prior to December 15, 1952, and that no fresh evidence had been adduced to substantiate such a submission and continued:

The justices having given a reason which, if valid, cuts at the root of this jurisdiction to make the order which was sought by the husband—because, unless there was fresh evidence, they had no right to listen to the complaint at all—and having given a reason which is quite unsustainable, I do not think it is necessary to go any further in considering whether they exercised their discretion rightly or wrongly.

I would like to add this, if I have not made it clear already, that if I did not think that this appeal can be supported on the authority of Weightman v. Weightman,[7] I should have been prepared to give leave to appeal out of time against the original order, and, having done so, to set it aside on the merits, for precisely the same reasons as those I have already given, which are covered by Weightman v. Weightman.[8]

In my opinion this appeal should be allowed, and the original order set aside for the reasons stated.

STEVENSON J. I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Dale Parkinson & Co.; Vizard, Oldham, Crowder & Cash for Parker & Bangor-Jones, Worthing.

E. J.

[7] 94 L.T. 620. [8] Ibid.

[PRIVY COUNCIL.]

* PRACTICE NOTE (PRIVY COUNCIL: COSTS).

J. C.†

1957
Dec. 9.

Privy Council — Costs — Unnecessary expense — Inclusion of irrelevant matter in record—Cost of printing deducted from costs.

Their Lordships, at the conclusion of their judgment, delivered by LORD REID, dismissing an appeal from a decision of the Court of Appeal of Singapore dated July 1, 1955 (Lim Siew Neo v. Pang Keah Swee (No. 17 of 1956)), said: "Their Lordships regret "to note that considerable unnecessary expense has been incurred "by including in the printed record notes of counsel's arguments "and certain preliminary matter not relevant to the subject-"matter of this appeal. Their Lordships have been informed "by counsel that the appellant's advisers wished to omit these "parts of the record but that the respondent's advisers required "their inclusion. The usual order for costs must be modified "so that the cost of printing this part of the record does not fall "on the appellant. Their Lordships will humbly advise Her "Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed. The appellant "must pay the costs of the appeal subject to deduction of the "cost of printing those parts of the record which should not have "been included."

C. C.

† Present: LORD REID, LORD SOMERVELL OF HARROW and THE RT. HON. L. M. D. DE SILVA.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* TATE v. SWAN HUNTER & WIGHAM RICHARDSON LTD.

C. A.

1957
Dec. 12.

Lord Denning, Hodson and Morris L.JJ.

[1955 T. No. 4172.]

Factory — Floor — Opening — Plankway — Whether plankway used by workmen for access to different parts of shipyard gantries a "floor"—Workman falling through unfenced aperture in plankway—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 25 (3).

An electrician, employed in a shipyard on maintenance work on cantilever cranes, which were mounted on steel gantries some 100 feet above the ground, fell through an aperture while standing on a wooden plankway connecting up the gantries, and was killed. The plankway consisted of planks placed irregularly alongside each other and going round various parts of the steelwork to enable workmen to get from one part of the structure to another; they could be taken up if desired and were not fixed in any permanent way. Part of the aperture through which the man fell was normally occupied by a ladder which had on the day of the accident been removed to facilitate other maintenance work. In an action by his

C. A.

1957

TATE
v.
SWAN
HUNTER &
WIGHAM
RICHARDSON
LTD.

administratrix against the employers for breach of the duty to fence securely "all openings in floors" under section 25 (3) of the Factories Act, 1937:—

Held, that a plankway of this kind was not a "floor" within the ordinary and natural meaning of the word and, accordingly, no breach of statutory duty was established against the employers.

Decision of Donovan J. reversed.

APPEAL from Donovan J.

On August 4, 1953, Novello Malcolm Tate, an electrician, aged 23, was employed in the shipyard of Swan Hunter & Wigham Richardson Ltd., in connexion with maintenance work during the holiday period. He was engaged on a gantry, a huge steel structure, which carried cantilever cranes and overhead cranes. At a great height above the ground there were some longitudinal gantries and also transverse gantries, and along them were placed planks by means of which men got from one part of the structure to the other for their work. These planks were not continuous in straight lines, but went round various parts of the steelwork where there were ladders, stanchions, and so forth. The electrician, having attended to an electrical defect on one of the cantilever cranes mounted on a gantry about 100 feet high, descended to a cross-gantry beneath and, standing on the planks on the middle level, watched the passage of the crane to check that his work was all right. As the crane passed a little above him he signalled to the crane driver indicating that all was well. At that moment he was standing close to an aperture in the planking which formed the walkway of the cross-gantry, some three feet six inches square, which normally accommodated a wooden ladder which came right through it to give access to similar plankways above and below it. If the ladder was removed there was space for a man to fall through, and on this particular day the ladder had in fact been removed to facilitate certain maintenance work.

Seconds after he had given the sign to the crane driver the electrician must have stepped back and fallen through the aperture. In the ordinary way he would have landed on the lower gantry, some three or four feet below, where ordinarily there would be other planks; but on this particular day one of those planks had been taken away for certain painting work to be done, and he fell 80 or more feet to the ground below, and was killed.

He was unmarried and lived at home with his mother and invalid father and contributed to the household expenses. His mother, as his administratrix, brought an action against the employers claiming damages under the Fatal Accidents Acts and the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934. She alleged, inter alia, that the employers had been in breach of their statutory duty under section 25 of the Factories Act, 1937.[1] The defendants denied that they were in breach of their statutory duty.

Donovan J., in a reserved judgment on May 21, 1957, at Newcastle Assizes, found that the deceased man fell through the aperture. On the claim under section 25 (1),* he held that if the planking on the cross-gantry was treated as a floor or a passage or a gangway within the meaning of that subsection it was soundly constructed and properly maintained, and that no criticism could be levelled at its safety unless it was that an opening in it had been left unfenced. But that, he said, was a matter separately dealt with by subsection (3), and if the gap or aperture in the planking constituted an opening in a floor within the meaning and scope of that subsection, then a breach of statutory duty had occurred, for it was admitted that the nature of the work in hand did not render it impracticable to fence the opening securely except on the one side used to accommodate the ladder. His Lordship continued: "One still has to find . . . that the planks "in question were a 'floor' of such a factory, and a floor in the "ordinary sense of the meaning of that word. It would be more "natural to describe it as a 'gangway' rather than a 'floor,' "and it is noteworthy that in subsection (1) of section 25 both "words are used. From this it would no doubt be possible to "conclude that Parliament did not regard a gangway as a floor "for the purposes of the Factories Act; but instances of tautology "are frequent in this Act, and the planking (one might almost "say the 'flooring') now under consideration served at least "some of the ordinary purposes of a floor. Persons passed and "repassed over it and they used it to stand on; it was a recog-"nized passageway. Though, of course, it could easily be taken "up whenever desired, it was not temporary in the sense that "it was put there only while some specific job was being done; "it served the purpose of a recognized footway. While I am "conscious that the word 'floor' would not be one's first choice "of a word to describe this planking, I can find no satisfactory "ground on which to declare that it is not a floor; and if in an "Act of Parliament, designed to protect workmen from injury "and possible death, a word occurs which will further this "purpose if an ordinary and unstrained interpretation is put on "it, I do not feel that I should try to achieve a contrary result "by straining to find some different interpretation. If, therefore, "one reaches the conclusion, as I do, that this planking must "be regarded as a 'floor' within the meaning of section 25 (3), "there is an end of the case, for there was an opening in it "which could have been securely fenced on three sides and it "was fenced on none." His Lordship gave judgment for the plaintiff, awarding her £950 under the Fatal Accidents Acts and

* Factories Act, 1937, s. 25: "(1) All floors, steps, stairs, passages "and gangways shall be of sound "construction and properly main-"tained. . . . (3) All openings in "floors shall be securely fenced, "except in so far as the nature of "the work renders such fencing "impracticable."

C. A.
1957
TATE
v.
SWAN HUNTER & WIGHAM RICHARDSON LTD.

£300 under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, and £47 12s. 6d. funeral expenses, a total of £1,297 12s. 6d.

The employers appealed.

R. H. Forrest Q.C. and Norman Harper for the employers.
George Waller Q.C. and R. P. Smith for the plaintiff.

The following cases were referred to in the course of the argument: Bath v. British Transport Commission †; Hosking v. De Havilland Aircraft Co. Ltd.‡; Harrison v. Metropolitan Vickers Electrical Company Ltd.§; Street v. British Electricity Authority.¶

LORD DENNING stated the facts and continued: It is not suggested that the employers were guilty of any negligence at common law. They conducted this yard in the way that other shipyards are conducted, quite efficiently and carefully. The only ground of claim that is made against them is under the Factories Act, 1937. Originally the case was put on the footing that he had been knocked off by the movement of the crane, but that was no longer pursued. The only ground pursued was that this planking along the gantry was a floor and that the space through which he fell was an opening in the floor. It is said that it ought to have been fenced, because section 25 (3) of the Act provides: "All openings in floors shall be securely fenced, "except in so far as the nature of the work renders such fencing "impracticable." It would have been quite practicable to have put an iron rail up around this place, and therefore if it was an opening in a floor it ought to have been securely fenced. The judge held that it was a floor, and the employers appeal to this court, contending that this plank-run on the gantry was not a "floor" within the meaning of the Act.

Section 25 (1) provides: "All floors, steps, stairs, passages "and gangways shall be of sound construction and properly "maintained," and subsection (3) is concerned with openings in floors only.

There have been two cases in this court where this section has been considered: one is Harrison v. Metropolitan-Vickers Electrical Co. Ltd.[1] and the other is Bath v. British Transport Commission.[2] I do not think that either of those throw much light on our present problem. The question is: What is a floor? And there is no definition in the Act to help us. The ordinary and natural meaning of a floor is something within walls, indoors, on which people walk or stand. A plank-run such as this on a

† [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1013; [1954] 2 All E.R. 542.
‡ [1949] 1 All E.R. 540.
§ [1954] 1 W.L.R. 324; [1954] 1 All E.R. 404.
¶ [1952] 2 Q.B. 399; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 799; [1952] 1 All E.R. 679.
[1] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 324; [1954] 1 All E.R. 404.
[2] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1013; [1954] 2 All E.R. 542.

gantry—or on a staging or on a scaffolding—does not seem to me to be within the ordinary meaning of a "floor." There would be great difficulty in applying the word "floor" to this plank-run. If it is a floor, what is the edge of the floor as distinct from an opening in it? Does the floor go round the stanchions or is there a gap in it, and so forth? That all goes to show that this is not properly described as a floor at all. It can be described as a plank-run or a gangway or a platform, but it is not a floor.

The judge seems to have thought that it was not, in the ordinary sense, a floor, but that the Act ought to be extended to cover it. I am afraid we cannot go so far as this. As this is not a floor it means that the plaintiff cannot bring the case within the Act. It is one of those unfortunate accidents for which the remedy is in the system of national insurance, now in force, and not by claims against the employer in this manner. I would therefore allow the appeal and give judgment for the defendants.

HODSON L.J. I agree. There is no question but that the defendants' shipyard is a factory within the meaning of the Factories Act, 1937, and the only question before the court is whether there has been a breach of section 25 of that Act. [His Lordship read subsection (1) and continued:] There is no contention that there has been any breach of subsection (1) in respect of the runway or plankway on which the deceased man was standing when he unfortunately fell.

Subsection (3) reads: "All openings in floors shall be securely "fenced, except in so far as the nature of the work renders such "fencing impracticable." Fencing was practicable, and the only question is whether this place is a floor, and whether the agreed place through which the man fell was an opening in the floor.

It is very difficult, by words, to describe exactly what it is that this man was standing on. We have been shown photographs of the gantry which show us that along it were placed planks alongside one another, and, so far as one can see, not fixed. The judge found that they could easily be taken up when desired, and it also appears from photographs that this gantry, made of open steelwork, was not, on the bottom part of it, covered wholly by these planks. The planks do not go to the whole area of the bottom of the structure; they are irregular in the sense that they leave a space on the right which might be described as the edge of the planking or a hole between the edge of the planking and the ironwork of the girder.

I agree with the judge in the view which he took that the word "floor" is not one's first choice of a word to describe this planking, although he found a difficulty in putting forward any satisfactory ground for saying that it was not a floor. He referred, in his judgment, to some of the ordinary purposes of a floor for which these planks were used: such as that persons

C. A.
1957
TATE
v.
SWAN HUNTER & WIGHAM RICHARDSON LTD.
Hodson L.J.

passed and repassed over them, and they were used to stand on. But, of course, it is not every place on which workmen stand, on which they pass and repass, which could be called a "floor." For example, one would not, in the ordinary way, at any rate—although there might be an exception to this—regard the flat roof of a factory as a floor; and in reading subsection (3) one has to bear in mind that primarily what is in contemplation is no doubt floors in factories which are there for work to be done upon them, because "the nature of the work" is referred to in subsection (3).

This being a passageway or plankway of an irregular kind, where it is difficult to define the extent of the floor, I find it even more difficult to say that the word "floor" is appropriate. As the judge said in the course of the case, by way of an interlocutory observation, one can understand that an opening in a floor is one thing because that postulates a floor which is not continuous; on the other hand, one may have a floor which simply does not cover the whole of the place, and clearly a floor which does not cover the whole of the place is not aptly described as a floor with a hole in it. To my mind that description fairly fits the situation in this case; and with some diffidence—because I appreciate that the judge applied his mind with very great care to this problem, and I respect the conclusion to which he came—I am of the opinion that that conclusion is not right, and, therefore, that this appeal should be allowed.

MORRIS L.J. I am of the same opinion. The only question before us is whether the deceased man, at the moment before he fell to his death, was standing on what could properly be described as a "floor" within the meaning of subsection (3) of section 25.

There is no doubt that he was within a factory, and it is to be remembered that in the definition of "factory" in section 151 of the Act it is provided, by subsection (7), that "Premises shall "not be excluded from the definition of a factory by reason "only that they are open air premises."

I think that there must be a certain measure of overlap in the words used in subsection (1) of section 25—the words "All "floors, steps, stairs, passages and gangways." There may be some passages and some gangways which may be floors, or which at least may have floors on them.

I find myself, in approaching this case, feeling very much as Somervell L.J. did when he expressed himself in his judgment in Bath v. British Transport Commission.[3] In that case it was held that it was impossible to regard an excavation which constitutes a dry dock as an "opening" within the meaning of subsection (3) of section 25, and Somervell L.J., in this court, said[4]: "I do not think that I can add much on that point. One

[3] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1013. [4] Ibid. 1015.

"is sometimes tempted to construe perfectly familiar words, but "if they are, as these words are, perfectly familiar, all one can "do is to state whether or not one regards them as apt to cover "or describe the circumstances in question in any particular "case."

The Act itself does not give a definition of the word "floor." It seems to me, therefore, that while having in mind all the evidence and the assistance afforded by the plans and the photographs, the question must be posed whether one can fairly and reasonably describe the place on which the deceased was standing as being a floor. Approaching the matter in this way, although recognizing that the judge has come to a different conclusion, I feel obliged to record my opinion that I would not describe the place as being a floor.

There might have been a further question as to whether the place vacated by reason of the absence of the ladder could properly be described as an "opening" in the floor, because it might have been said that the only floor laid down, if there had been a floor at all, was that which went to the right of the iron ladder. But it is unnecessary to say anything in regard to that matter for the reason that in my judgment the planking on which the deceased was standing was not properly to be regarded as a floor. I agree, therefore, that the appeal succeeds.

Appeal allowed.
Judgment for the defendants, with costs in the Court of Appeal and below.

Solicitors: T. D. Jones & Co. for Linsley & Mortimer, Newcastle-upon-Tyne; Rowley Ashworth & Co.

M. M. H.

[HOUSE OF LORDS.]

* FOMENTO (STERLING AREA) LTD. . APPELLANTS;
AND SELSDON FOUNTAIN PEN CO. LTD. AND OTHERS . . . . . RESPONDENTS.

H. L. (E.)†
1957
Oct. 22, 23, 24; Dec. 4.

Patent—Licence to manufacture under—Assessment of royalties—Manufacture of patented articles—Terms as to royalties—Auditors' duties—Scope of inquiry—Sale of articles claimed to be outside patent field—Provision as to granting of licence to another trader at lower royalty—Construction of licence.
Accountant or Auditor—Auditor—Duties—Right to obtain professional advice.

---

† Present: VISCOUNT SIMONDS, LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON, LORD TUCKER, LORD KEITH OF AVONHOLM and LORD DENNING.

H. L. (E.)

1957

FOMENTO (STERLING AREA) LTD. v. SELSDON FOUNTAIN PEN CO. LTD.

On the granting of a non-exclusive licence under certain patents relating to ball-pointed writing instruments and their refills, the deed of terms entered into in 1950 provided by clause 7 that the licensed company should "keep . . . all necessary books of account "relating to the sale or distribution by it of the patented articles "and containing such true and complete entries as may be necessary "or appropriate for computing royalties hereby reserved . . . and "shall . . . when required by [the licensor company] produce the "said books of account to its auditors . . . and shall give to the "said auditors all such other information as may be necessary or "appropriate to enable the amount of the royalties payable here-"under to be ascertained as aforesaid provided that such auditors "shall if so required by the [licensee] company give an undertaking "to treat all such information obtained as confidential information "disclosed only for the purpose of verifying the amount of royalties "which have become payable . . ." By clause 3 it was provided that the licensee company was to pay by way of royalty (a) 6 per cent. on complete writing instruments sold at £1 or less, (b) 4 per cent. on such instruments sold at between £1 and £2, (c) 3 per cent. on such instruments sold at more than £2, and (d) 6 per cent. on refills, ink and writing paste. By clause 15 it was provided that should another licence be granted at a lower royalty, "that lower "royalty shall apply in substitution for the royalty herein agreed." When the auditor of the licensor company was making the investigations provided for by clause 7, the licensee company produced documents concerning refills therein described as "Type A" and admittedly within the relevant patent field. The documents also referred to sales of other refills described as "Type B" and "Type C" which were stated not to have been included in the returns because they were outside the relevant patent field. The licensee company refused to supply the auditor with specimens or specifications of these types so as to enable him to satisfy himself of the correctness of this contention. The licensee company also contended that by reason of the fact that in 1953 the licensor company had granted to another company a licence stipulating for a royalty of 5 per cent. on the price of all articles sold to the public, the royalty of 6 per cent. stipulated for by clause 3 of the deed of terms should be reduced to 5 per cent. under the terms of clause 15:—

Held (Viscount Simonds and Lord Tucker dissenting), that, on the true construction of the agreement, the auditor was entitled to require the information and, in refusing it, the respondent company committed a breach of the agreement, since the information in question fell within the words "all such other information as may "be necessary or appropriate to enable the amount of the royalties "payable hereunder to be ascertained." The auditor was not confined to the mere mechanics of checking vouchers and making arithmetical computations.

Held further, unanimously, that, on the true construction of the agreement, the royalty payable by the licensee company under clause 3 (a) and (d) should be reduced from 6 per cent. to 5 per cent., and it was immaterial that in respect of the goods dealt with by clause 3 (b) and (c) royalties of 4 per cent. and 3 per cent. were prescribed since "royalty" meant the relevant royalty for articles in a comparable category.

Decision of the Court of Appeal [1956] R.P.C. 344 reversed in part and affirmed in part.

APPEAL from the Court of Appeal (Lord Evershed M.R., Birkett and Romer L.JJ.).

This was an appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal dated November 8, 1956, allowing an appeal from a judgment of Harman J. dated July 30, 1956, in an action in which the appellants, Fomento (Sterling Area) Ltd., were plaintiffs and the respondents, Selsdon Fountain Pen Co. Ltd., Ralph Selsdon and Rebecca Selsdon, his wife, were defendants. The hearing before Harman J. occupied three days and before the Court of Appeal five days.

The facts are fully stated in the opinions of Viscount Simonds and Lord Morton of Henryton.

K. Shelley Q.C., Kenneth Johnston Q.C. and John Whitford for the appellants.

Charles Russell Q.C. and Owen Swingland for the respondents.

The following cases, besides those referred to in their Lordships' opinions, were cited in argument: Couchman v. Greener [1]; British Industrial Plastics Ltd. v. Ferguson [2]; In re London and General Bank (No. 2).[3]

Their Lordships took time for consideration.

December 4. VISCOUNT SIMONDS. My Lords, in the action and counterclaim out of which this appeal arises the appellants claimed that the respondents had committed a breach of an agreement to which I shall refer and that they had accordingly rightfully determined it. The respondents, denying the breach and rightful determination, alleged that the appellants had themselves broken a term of the agreement relating to the grant of a licence at a lower royalty and claimed the appropriate relief. On both points Harman J. gave judgment in favour of the appellants, but on both points was reversed by the Court of Appeal.

I have referred to an agreement between the parties, but in fact there were two documents which must be read together. The first was a deed, referred to as a "deed of terms," dated May 17, 1950; the second a formal sub-licence of the same date. A complicated history of dispute lies behind the execution of these documents. I think it necessary only to say that they were originally entered into in settlement of litigation between a company called the Miles Martin Pen Co. Ltd. and the respondents. That company changed its name first to Biro Pens Ltd. and then to Biro Swan Ltd.; the head licence, under which the sub-licence to the respondents was granted, was at a later date surrendered by Biro Swan Ltd. with the benefit of the sub-licence which had been granted to the respondents, while at the same time a head licence was granted to the appellants for the area within which the sub-licence to the respondents was operative. In settlement of further disputes the appellants and respondents and other

[1] (1884) 1 R.P.C. 197.
[2] [1940] 1 All E.R. 479.
[3] [1895] 2 Ch. 673; 11 T.L.R. 573.

H. L. (E.)
1957
FOMENTO (STERLING AREA) LTD. v. SELSDON FOUNTAIN PEN CO. LTD.
Viscount Simonds.

parties in 1954 executed another deed of which I need only say that its practical effect was that for the purposes of that appeal the relevant clauses of the deed of terms and sub-licence can be read as if the name of the appellants were substituted for that of the Miles Martin Pen Co. Ltd. I am not in a position, nor is it necessary, to explain the purpose or effect of these moves and counter-moves in the history of the relations between the parties. Nor need I refer to the terms of the formal sub-licence. It is sufficient to refer to the deed of terms, and that I must do in some detail.

The deed of terms (to which a Uruguayan company whom I need not further mention was also a party) first recited that the Miles Martin Pen Co. Ltd. (in whose shoes the appellants now stand) owned a sole and exclusive licence for twenty years from December 9, 1945, to manufacture, distribute, market, service and exploit ball-pointed pens, refills and ink or writing paste, such licence being granted as therein mentioned, and had agreed to grant to the respondent company a sub-licence upon the terms thereinafter appearing. It then, so far as material, proceeded as follows, the respondent company being referred to as "the "Selsdon company":

"2. Miles Martin hereby agrees to grant and the Uruguayan "company and Martin hereby agree to confirm to the Selsdon "company full but non-exclusive sub-licence to manufacture use "and sell writing instruments spare parts therefor refills ink and "writing paste which or any part of which is protected by the "patents which are granted or which shall proceed to grant "(hereinafter called 'the patented articles') in the countries and "territories listed in the Schedule hereto (hereinafter called 'the "'licensed territory') upon and subject to the terms herein and "in the said sub-licence contained for a term of twenty years "from December 9, 1945.

"3. During the continuance of the said sub-licence and of "any further sub-licence which may hereafter be granted by "Miles Martin in pursuance of these presents and provided that "all or any of the patents which are granted or which shall "proceed to grant remain subsisting in the United Kingdom and "have not all been declared invalid by a court of competent "jurisdiction therein the Selsdon company shall pay to Miles "Martin as and by way of royalty the following sums subject to "the deduction of United Kingdom taxes required by law, that "is to say:—

"(a) Six per cent. on the full selling price to the public "(excluding purchase tax) if such price is £1 or less of all or "any complete writing instruments sold by it which or any part "of which is protected by the patents.

"(b) Four per cent. on the full selling price to the public "(excluding purchase tax) if such price is £2 or less but more "than £1 of all or any such writing instruments as aforesaid.

"(c) Three per cent. on the full selling price to the public "(excluding purchase tax) if such price exceeds £2 of all or any "such writing instruments as aforesaid.

"(d) Six per cent. on the full selling price to the public "(excluding purchase tax) of all or any parts for writing instru- "ments refills ink and writing paste sold by it which or any part "of which is protected by the patents. The 'full selling price "'to the public' shall mean the full price at which the article is "normally offered for sale to the public (i.e. the price commonly "known as the full list price) at the time and place of the sale in "question irrespective of the price actually paid or received and "in the case of writing instruments shall mean the price of the "complete fully assembled writing instrument or if the writing "instrument is sold in disassembled parts shall mean the "aggregate price of all the parts PROVIDED that nothing in "this clause shall make subject to royalties any articles which "are returned otherwise than for resale to the Selsdon company "for full credit."

"7. The Selsdon company shall keep or cause to be kept at "its principal place of business for the time being all necessary "books of account relating to the sale or distribution by it of the "patented articles and containing such true and complete entries "as may be necessary or appropriate for computing royalties "hereby reserved and showing all relevant sale prices and shall "at all reasonable times if and when required by Miles Martin "produce the said books of account to its auditors for the time "being and permit them to inspect the same and take copies of "extracts therefrom and shall give to the said auditors all such "other information as may be necessary or appropriate to enable "the amount of the royalties payable hereunder to be ascertained "as aforesaid provided that such auditors shall if so required by "the Selsdon company give an undertaking to treat all such "information obtained as confidential information disclosed only "for the purpose of verifying the amount of royalties which have "become payable provided further that the Selsdon company will "supply when called upon so to do by Miles Martin full details "of all ball-pointed pens and other supplies returned to them for "credit."

On August 10, 1954, the parties entered into a further agreement, the expressed purpose of which was to remove doubts as to the proper construction of clause 7 of the deed of terms. It failed so signally of its purpose that neither party relied on it in your Lordships' House.

I come now to the alleged breach by the respondents of their obligations under clause 7 which gave the appellants the right to determine the sub-licence.

In the course of carrying out the audit for the period April 1, 1953, to June 30, 1954, for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of royalties payable, the appellants' auditor ascertained, as the fact was, that there were recorded in the books of the respondents

BIBL. LONDON

H. L. (E.)
1957
FOMENTO (STERLING AREA) LTD. v. SELSDON FOUNTAIN PEN CO. LTD.
Viscount Simonds.

sales of three types of refills which were called Type "A," Type "B" and Type "C." The respondents included in their returns for royalty purposes the refills of Type "A": they did not include those of Type "B" or Type "C." The auditor asked for further information regarding Type "B" and Type "C." He demanded a specification or description or a specimen of these types in order that he might satisfy himself that they were not patented articles (i.e., articles which or any part of which were protected by the patents in question) and accordingly subject to royalty. The respondents declined to give this information, deeming it sufficient to say that they were not patented articles and that it was only in regard to patented articles that they were required to give information. The appellants claim and the respondents deny that the respondents have committed a breach of their obligations under clause 7. This was and remains the issue between the parties, and the difference of judicial opinion upon it suggests that it is not easily determined. It is not disputed that the sub-licence has been lawfully determined if there has been such a breach.

My Lords, it is an irrelevant consideration that the question asked is an easy one to ask and, maybe, an easy one to answer. Certainly it is easy to demand a Type "B" refill and easy to hand one over, though it may require a decision of this House to determine whether or not it is a patented article. Nor can it be determined whether it is necessary or appropriate that the respondents should furnish certain information to enable the appellants' auditor to perform his duty unless the scope of that duty is precisely defined. It is a deceptively easy answer to say that it is his duty to ascertain the amount of the royalties payable under the sub-licence and that any information which helps him to do so must be necessary or appropriate. It would, of course, be properly assumed in such an answer that the information would be asked for in good faith and for no extrinsic purpose. But, my Lords, I am satisfied that this answer is radically unsound and, as I unfortunately differ from some of your Lordships, I must give my reasons fully. They are not materially different from those given by the Court of Appeal.

The relevant clause is such a clause as I should expect to find in a licence to exploit a patent. It is a reasonable protection for the licensor that his licensees should keep books of account showing the distribution and sale of patented articles, and that such books should contain true and complete entries to enable the royalties to be computed and should show all relevant sale prices, and that they should if required at all reasonable times produce the books to the licensor's auditors for their inspection and allow them to take copies of extracts. Nor does it surprise me that the licensees should be required to give "all such other "information as may be necessary or appropriate to enable the "amount of the royalties payable hereunder to be ascertained." It was conceded that much information could be gleaned about admittedly patented articles from price cards and other literature which would not appear from the books of account. It is obvious that such further information might form a valuable check upon what appeared from the books alone. But it is at this point that the controversy begins. For the appellants claim that their auditor is entitled to information which will not only enable him to check the number of patented articles sold and the price at which they have been sold, but also to examine and, I suppose, decide whether other articles have not been included for computing the royalty which ought to have been included. In the present case the demand is a simple one: "Hand over the article "and I will see whether by mistake or deliberately you have "been falsifying the account," though, as I have pointed out, the question may be one of extreme nicety. To this the respondents give an answer, which is somewhat contemptuously described as their "ipse dixit," that, however easy it may be to do so, they will give no information about anything which is not a patented article and that this was not a patented article. Let me observe at this stage that no charge of fraud or mistake has been made: if it were, other considerations would arise. Here the position is quite different. In effect the auditor says: "I "have all the information which enables me to compute the "amount of royalties upon the articles which you say are "patented, but how do I know that you are not mistaken or "fraudulent? Let me see other articles that I may form my "own judgment upon them." My Lords, I cannot too strongly express the view that this forms no part of the right or duty of an auditor under such a clause as this. I say "right or duty," for, if it is his right, it is also his duty. It is unnecessary to consider what may be his right or duty under other and different clauses, and it is wholly irrelevant to refer to his statutory duties under the Companies Acts. I cannot, however, forbear to recall that it has often been said that his duty is not detection but verification, and on one occasion more picturesquely that he is a watch-dog, not a bloodhound (see In re Kingston Cotton Mill (No. 2) [1]).

In their consideration of this clause the Court of Appeal have, in my opinion, rightly laid great stress on the fact that it is an auditor whose rights they are considering. No one will deny that in the course of their professional practice accountants, chartered or incorporated, may acquire a wide range of commercial knowledge, but the accountant will not claim that it is part of his professional skill and expertise to determine whether or not an article or any part of it is protected by a patent. The accountant here concerned frankly said that, given the article, he would take the advice of a patent agent—who in his turn might well say it was a question about which he would like to consult counsel. This appears to me to throw a flood of light upon the scope of the

[1] [1896] 1 Ch. 331; 12 T.L.R. 123; affd. [1896] 2 Ch. 279, 288 (C.A.).

H. L. (E.)
1957
FOMENTO (STERLING AREA) LTD. v. SELSDON FOUNTAIN PEN CO. LTD.
Viscount Simonds.

clause. The obligation of the licensees is to give to the auditor books and other information which will enable him as an accountant to ascertain or (to use another word in the same context) to verify the amount of royalty payable under the licence. If he must rely, not on what his own professional skill and knowledge have taught him, but upon the advice of others—on a question of patent likely enough to be but tentative—for the ascertainment and verification of the amount of royalty payable, he cannot fairly say that he has himself ascertained or verified anything at all. He can at most say that, though the licensees claim that a certain article is not, such and such a patent agent or counsel has advised that it is or may be, protected by a patent. I decline to believe that the clause has such a scope as this.

But, it is said, even if the clause has such a result as I have indicated, at least it will have the advantage for the licensor that it will give him information which he would otherwise have difficulty in getting. I am by no means satisfied that he would have any difficulty. But suppose it to be so. I see no valid reason for saying that the clause is intended to authorise a roving inquiry by the licensor through the auditor in order to see whether the licensee is manufacturing under the patent other articles than those which he admits to be protected and brings into the royalty account. Where is this to end? Harman J., from whose opinion I am always reluctant to differ, committed, I think, a fundamental error which was repeated many times at the Bar when he said that the refills of Type "B" and Type "C" were prima facie articles carrying royalty. They were nothing of the kind, any more than were any other "writing instruments spare "parts therefor refills inks and writing paste" which the licensees sold in the course of their business. He may have been influenced by the fortuitous and insignificant fact that articles of Type "A" and Type "B" or Type "C" were recorded as having been sold at the same time and under the same docket. I say "insignificant" because there is as little significance in a vendor of "writing instruments" selling two different types at the same time to the same purchaser as there would be in the same manufacturer making two types in one factory. And so I ask, where is this demand by the auditor for further information to end? If it is his right and therefore, as I have pointed out, his duty to require further information because he ascertains that in addition to Type "A" refills the licensees sell other refills, he will presumably be entitled to inquire, and fall short of his duty if he does not inquire, about every other article sold by the licensees which falls or might be claimed to fall within the so-called patented field, and demand specimens for submission to expert opinion. Thus under the guise of an accountancy transaction a far-ranging investigation of the licensees' manufactures will be involved. At the risk of repeating myself I must say that an interpretation of the clause which has this inevitable result is plainly repugnant to common sense and should be rejected.

A second consideration which to some extent influenced the Court of Appeal lay in the clause requiring the auditor to give an undertaking to treat as confidential any information given to him, and a good deal of argument was addressed to it at the Bar. I find it enough to say that the clause certainly does not militate against the opinion that I have otherwise formed, though I am not satisfied that it adds any weight to it.

I turn now to the second matter of appeal. It is independent of the first and arises upon clause 15 of the deed of terms, which provides that should Miles Martin (that is now, the appellants) grant a licence under the patents in question at a lower royalty, that lower royalty should apply in substitution for the royalty therein agreed with a proviso which is immaterial. On July 16, 1953, the appellants granted a non-exclusive sub-licence to Biro Swan Ltd. to exploit the patents which had been the subject of the sub-licence to the respondents. It was provided by clause 5 (a) of this sub-licence that Biro Swan Ltd. should pay to the appellants during its continuance by way of royalty a sum at the rate of 5 per cent. of the advertised price to the public in the country of sale (less purchase tax) of all ball-pointed writing instruments manufactured and sold or manufactured and delivered by way of gift but not trade samples. When this sub-licence was brought to the notice of the respondents they not unnaturally claimed that clause 15 of their own sub-licence was brought into play and that the royalty of 6 per cent. payable by them under clause 3 (a) and 3 (d) thereof should be reduced to 5 per cent. I do not know whether before action brought they were aware of the further clause in the sub-licence to Biro Swan Ltd. whereby the appellants acknowledged that that sub-licence was granted on more favourable terms than that to any other sub-licensee. It would not, I think, have deterred them from prosecuting their claim, but it must not be regarded as conclusive in their favour.

It is clear that the effect of the Biro Swan sub-licence, as I will call it, is to enable that company, which presumably competes with the respondents, to pay only 5 per cent. royalty in respect of the wide range of goods covered by clause 3 (a) and (d) of the respondents' sub-licence as against 6 per cent. payable by the respondents. That is precisely the competitive advantage against which clause 15 was intended to protect the respondents.

But it is said that, if the sum of the royalties at 5 per cent. paid by Biro Swan in respect of all the articles covered by clause 3 of the respondents' sub-licence (the royalties upon which vary from 6 per cent. to 3 per cent.) is added up over a certain period. it will be found or may be found, or at least it has not been proved that it will not be found, that it is not a lower sum than if they had paid at the several rates prescribed by the respondents' sub-licence. This is an ingenious but unconvincing argument. Clause 15 of the respondents' sub-licence is by its nature intended to come into operation at once and once for all when a licence at a lower royalty has been granted. The appellants' contention

H. L. (E.)
1957
FOMENTO (STERLING AREA) LTD. v. SELSDON FOUNTAIN PEN CO. LTD.
Viscount Simonds.

involves that at the end of some arbitrary period a calculation, which the respondents would have no means of making or checking, must be made to ascertain both what Biro Swan in fact paid and what they would have paid if they had paid at different rates. Only then could it be said that the appellants had or had not granted a licence at a lower royalty, so as to bring clause 15 retrospectively into operation. Nor is it clear whether a fresh calculation would in this view have to be made at the end of the next arbitrary period. My Lords, this is to make nonsense of what is intended to be a workable commercial document, and it does so unnecessarily. For it is easy to give an effective meaning to it by the simple process of expanding the clause in the Biro Swan sub-licence so that a royalty of 5 per cent. is chargeable against each of the groups of articles comprised in 3 (a), (b), (c) and (d) of the respondents' sub-licence and then asking whether in respect of any of those groups a lower royalty is payable under the Biro Swan licence. This is well expressed by the learned Master of the Rolls where he says [2] that the phrase in clause 15, "the royalty herein agreed," "means "the relevant royalty, and that if it turns out, therefore, as "regards any particular section of the patented field another sub-"licensee is granted the right to sell them at a royalty which in "respect of that class of articles is lower than the appropriate "or relevant royalty in [the respondents' sub-licence], then the "latter is reduced to the level of the former." I agree with this and would add only two further observations. It appears to me that to give effect to the appellants' contentions would be to open the door to trickery, for nothing could be easier than to alter slightly, even insignificantly, the structure of the royalty clause in a later sub-licence and then to argue as the appellants have argued here that the earlier royalty clause has no effective operation. Finally, it was argued that under the Biro Swan sub-licence the sub-licensees had to pay royalty on all ball-pointed writing instruments, etc., whether or not they were manufactured under the relevant patents. This was said to add to the difficulty of determining whether the royalty payable under the Biro Swan sub-licence was a lower one or not. I dare say it would, but without determining a question in the absence of one of the vitally interested parties I would say that such an interpretation has little to commend it and, if it is the right one, it makes clause 15 upon the appellants' construction even more unworkable than I had supposed.

I would dismiss the appeal on both points.

LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON. My Lords, on May 17, 1950, predecessors in title of the appellant company granted to the respondents "full but non-exclusive sub-licence to manufac-"ture use and sell writing instruments spare parts therefor "refills ink and writing paste which or any part of which is

[2] [1956] R.P.C. 344, 352.

"protected by the patents which are granted or which shall "proceed to grant . . . in the countries and territories listed in "the schedule hereto" as on and from December 9, 1945, for a term of 20 years, subject to certain terms and conditions. The patents in question related to ball-pointed pens and accessories thereto, covered by a large group of patents. On the same day the same parties entered into a "deed of terms" setting out the terms upon which the sub-licence was granted. It is common ground, for the purposes of this appeal, that the appellant company was from 1954 the successor in title of the company referred to in this deed as "Miles Martin."

Clause 3 of the deed of terms provided that the respondent company (therein referred to as "the Selsdon company") was to pay to Miles Martin as and by way of royalty (a) 6 per cent. on complete writing instruments protected by the patents which were sold at a price of £1 or less; (b) 4 per cent. on such writing instruments sold at a price between £1 and £2; (c) 3 per cent. on such writing instruments sold at a price exceeding £2; and (d) 6 per cent. on parts for writing instruments, refills, ink and writing paste. The royalty was to be measured on the "full "selling price to the public," which was more fully defined in the deed.

Clause 7 of the deed of terms must be quoted at length. It is as follows: [His Lordship read the clause, and continued:]

Clause 8 provided that the Selsdon company should render a quarterly statement showing the total sales effected by it of the patented articles during the preceding three months, together with the relevant sale prices and the sum due to Miles Martin for royalties in respect of such period, and should, with each such statement, pay or remit to Miles Martin the sum for royalties thereby shown to be due.

Clause 11 provided that the Selsdon company should notify Miles Martin of all the names under which they were selling any of the patented articles.

Clause 13 provided that if either of the parties to the agreement should commit any breach of any of the obligations or agreements on their part therein contained, the other party might give notice in writing calling upon the party committing such breach to remedy the same; and if such breach should not be remedied within 30 days thereafter, the other party should be at liberty to terminate the sub-licence by notice in writing.

Clause 15 is of importance and is in the following terms: "Should Miles Martin grant a licence under the said patents "at a lower royalty that lower royalty shall apply in substitution "for the royalty herein agreed. . . ." Then there followed a proviso which is irrelevant for the present purpose.

Two quite separate questions arise on this appeal, the first under clause 7 of the deed of terms, the second under clause 15.

The first question is: Did certain information requested by

H. L. (E.)
1957
FOMENTO (STERLING AREA) LTD. v. SELSDON FOUNTAIN PEN CO. LTD.
Lord Morton of Henryton.

the appellant company's auditors, and refused by the respondents, come within the description of "all such other information "as may be necessary or appropriate to enable the amount of "the royalties payable hereunder to be ascertained as aforesaid" within the meaning of clause 7 of the deed of terms?

The events giving rise to this question are as follows.

The auditors of the appellant company were Messrs. Farrow, Bersey, Gain, Vincent & Co. and the partner carrying out the audit under clause 7 was a Mr. Young, who gave evidence at the trial. It is, I think, obvious that Mr. Young could not "ascertain" the amount of the royalties payable under the deed without satisfying himself upon two points—(a) the total number of articles sold which were within the patents, and (b) the full selling price of each of these articles. He found from inspection of the books and documents before him that the respondent company had sold, amongst other articles, refills described as Type "A," Type "B" and Type "C" respectively, and it is to be noted that refills are included among the articles mentioned in clause 1 of the sub-licence and in clause 3 of the deed of terms.

Consequently, Messrs. Farrow & Co. wrote, on October 13, 1954, to the accountants of the respondents saying that Mr. Young would like an appointment with Mr. Selsdon (the second respondent) to discuss certain matters which had arisen during the audit of the royalties payable to the appellants. They continued: "In particular we would mention the following "points which Mr. Young wishes to discuss with him:—(a) The "sale of Types 'B' and 'C' refills and the patents by which "these refills are covered. . . ." The respondents' accountants replied on October 28, 1954: "With regard to the points raised "in your letter, we are instructed to say:—(a) 'B' and 'C' "refills are not covered by patents. . . ."

On November 23, 1954, Messrs. Farrow & Co. replied saying (inter alia): "We should also be obliged if you would obtain for "us specimens or specifications of each of the 'A,' 'B' and "'C' type refills so that we may satisfy ourselves which are "covered by the Biro patents. We feel sure that as accountants "you will agree that the above information constitutes the "minimum necessary to enable us to certify the royalties payable "by your clients." Further correspondence followed, but the respondents by their accountants took up the attitude that the auditors were not entitled to the information which they requested. Thereupon the appellant company served the necessary notice under clause 13 of the deed of terms, and as the respondents failed to comply with it the appellant company purported to determine the licence by letter dated March 22, 1955, and issued the writ in this action claiming that the sub-licence and deed of terms had been terminated. The respondents filed a counterclaim to which I shall refer later.

Harman J. granted the declaration as claimed, but his decision was reversed by the Court of Appeal.

I now return to the first question which I have already stated. My Lords, all the words of clause 7 of the deed of terms are English words in common use, and it seems to me clear that the information sought by Mr. Young was, in the circumstances, "necessary or appropriate to enable the amount of the royalties "payable hereunder to be ascertained as aforesaid." Mr. Young could not ascertain the amount of the royalties payable without ascertaining whether the refills called by the respondents Type "B" and Type "C" were or were not within the patents. The respondents might honestly believe that the types of refills to which they had given these names did not come within the patents, but they might well be mistaken. Further, it is, I think, important to note the wording of the proviso to clause 7: "provided that such auditors shall if so required by the Selsdon "company give an undertaking to treat all such information "obtained as confidential information disclosed only for the "purpose of verifying the amount of royalties which have become "payable." The word "verifying" affords a strong indication that the auditors were not bound to accept the statement of the respondents which was, after all, merely a statement of their opinion.

It is indeed difficult to see why the respondents should have refused to supply specimens of Types "B" and "C" to the auditors. These articles had been sold, and any person who purchased one would be entitled to take it to pieces and observe its construction if he so desired. If the specimens had been supplied, all that Mr. Young had to do was to show the articles to a patent agent, hand him the patents, and ask him whether either of the articles came within any of the patents. In so doing he would not be revealing any information which was not already in the possession of the public.

The result is that, in my opinion, if the words in clause 7 are read in their ordinary meaning and without putting any gloss upon them, the auditors were entitled to ask for the information now in question, and the respondent company committed a breach of clause 7 in refusing it. The respondents, however, invite your Lordships to put a very limited construction upon the clause. This construction is stated in clause 14 (i) of their printed case. Mr. Russell amplified this statement in argument but did not depart from its terms. It is as follows: "Clause 7 of the deed "of terms in all its parts, including that referring to information, "is related only to patented articles: unless an article dealt "in by the licensee is established as being a patented article "there can be no breach in its absence from the books of "account kept or from the entries therein 'necessary or appro-"'priate for computing royalty hereby reserved': nor conse-"quently can information as to such article be required on the "ground that it is information 'necessary or appropriate to "'enable the amount of the royalties payable hereunder to be "'ascertained as aforesaid.'"

H. L. (E.)
1957

FOMENTO (STERLING AREA) LTD. v. SELSDON FOUNTAIN PEN CO. LTD.

Lord Morton of Henryton.

My Lords, I am quite unable to accept this construction of the clause. It involves, in effect, implying in clause 7, after the words "all such other information" the insertion of the words "relating to articles stated by the Selsdon company to be within "the patents." Thus the appellant company would be bound to rely upon the ipse dixit of the Selsdon company and would have no means of "establishing" (to quote the words of the respondents' case) whether or not any article shown to have been sold was or was not a patented article.

By using the words "all such other information" the parties have made it clear that the auditors are to be entitled to ask for, and receive, information which does not appear in the respondent company's books of account, and they have inserted a clear limitation on the extent of such information—it must be necessary or appropriate to enable the amount of the royalties payable to be ascertained. That is the only limitation, and it seems to me a natural and sensible limitation. The implied limitation suggested by Mr. Russell places the licensors in an impossible position, and I cannot doubt that if the respondents had suggested the insertion of any such limitation the licensors would have rejected the suggestion. If this sub-licence, a business document, had the meaning for which Mr. Russell contends, the result would be as follows: Throughout the period of the licence the licensees could sell ball-pointed pens, spare parts therefor, refills, ink or writing paste, entering all or any of these articles on their books under the wholly uninformative names Type "A," Type "B," or Type "C," and meeting all requests for information with the bare statement of their opinion, "Types 'B' and "'C' are not covered by the patents." This seems to me a result to which no licensor would agree, and I can find no indication in the sub-licence or the deed of terms that any such result was intended.

Mr. Russell relied strongly upon the fact that the information is to be given (to quote again the respondents' case) "not to the "appellants or to patent agents, but to auditors who are not "qualified to appreciate or understand the problems involved in "a question of infringement: this indicates that the quality of "the information referred to does not include that demanded."

My Lords, to my mind it is entirely appropriate that the auditors, and no one else, should be given all information, of every kind, which is necessary or appropriate to enable them to do their work as auditors, that is, the work of ascertaining and verifying the amount of royalties payable. That is exactly what clause 7 says in terms. If the auditors ask for information which is neither necessary nor appropriate for this purpose, the respondent company can refuse to give it; and if a dispute arises, it is for the court to determine whether the information sought is necessary or appropriate.

A further argument advanced by Mr. Russell is stated in paragraph 14 (iii) of the respondents' case as follows: "The "information is receivable by the auditors in confidence. This "confirms that it is of quality exclusive of the information sought "in this case. Moreover, the auditor could not seek advice on "the information without breach of confidence."

My Lords, it is not quite accurate to say that the information is receivable by the auditors in confidence. Clause 7 merely confers a power upon the respondent company to require from the auditors an undertaking to treat the information obtained as confidential information, and there is no evidence that they have ever required such an undertaking. In any event, I cannot see that this portion of clause 7 in any way supports the limitation of the meaning of the word "information" for which Mr. Russell contends. On the contrary, I should have thought that if it was of any assistance in construing the simple words "all "information," it would tend the other way. If the auditors are bound to accept as correct a statement by the respondent company that "Type 'A' is within the patent and Types 'B' "and 'C' are not," it is difficult to see what information of a confidential nature he would desire to obtain. On the other hand, if the words are given their natural meaning, and the only limitation on the information required is that it must be necessary or appropriate for the purpose mentioned in the clause, it seems much more likely that information of a confidential character might be sought. I add that in the present case, as I have already pointed out, if specimens of Type "B" and "C" had been supplied, the auditors could have "sought advice on "the information without breach of confidence."

In the result, my Lords, I am entirely unconvinced that any limitation should be implied upon the words "all such other "information as may be necessary or appropriate to enable the "amount of the royalties payable hereunder to be ascertained as "aforesaid," and I remain of the opinion that the information sought by Mr. Young was information of the kind described in these words. It follows that, in my view, Harman J. arrived at the right conclusion and his order should be restored.

The second question for decision arises under a counterclaim by the respondents. They refer to clauses 3 and 15 of the deed of terms, to which I have already referred, and contend that in the case of the articles described in clause 3 (a) and 3 (d) the appellant company has "granted a licence under the said patents at a "lower royalty" within the meaning of clause 15, and consequently, that lower royalty should be substituted for the royalty mentioned in clauses 3 (a) and 3 (d).

The Court of Appeal held that this contention was well founded, as the appellant company, on July 16, 1953, granted a licence to Biro Swan Limited to sell (inter alia) articles coming within clause 3 (a) and 3 (d) of the deed of terms at a royalty of 5 per cent. My Lords, on this part of the case I agree with the reasoning and conclusion of the learned Master of the Rolls, which was accepted by his brethren; and as I understand your

H. L. (E.)
1957

FOMENTO (STERLING AREA) LTD. v. SELSDON FOUNTAIN PEN CO. LTD.

Lord Morton of Henryton.

Lordships are all in agreement upon this point, I shall not delay you by any observations of my own.

The result is that I would allow the appeal so far as regards the claim of the appellant company, and restore the order of Harman J.; but I would dismiss the appeal so far as regards the counterclaim of the respondents.

If your Lordships share my view, the order as to costs should be that the respondents do pay the appellants' costs of the claim, here and below, and the appellants do pay the respondents' costs of the counterclaim, here and below.

LORD TUCKER. My Lords, I would dismiss this appeal for the reasons which have been stated by my noble and learned friend, Viscount Simonds, with which I am in complete agreement.

LORD KEITH OF AVONHOLM. My Lords, I agree with the speech of my noble and learned friend, Lord Morton of Henryton.

LORD DENNING. My Lords, in this case auditors were appointed "for the purpose of verifying the amount of royalties" payable by the Selsdon company in respect of certain patented articles such as ball-pointed pens, refills, inks, and so on. In the course of their investigation the auditors found that royalties had been paid on refills of Type "A" but not on refills of Types "B" and "C." They thereupon asked the Selsdon company for further information about these refills, saying that they wanted to discuss: "The sale of Types 'B' and 'C' refills and "the patents by which these refills are covered." The only reply they got was: "'B' and 'C' refills are not covered by patents." The auditors pressed for specimens or specifications but they got no more information.

The question is whether the auditors were bound to accept the assertion of the Selsdon company that "'B' and 'C' refills "are not covered by patents," as being honest, accurate and sufficient: or whether they were entitled to insist on further information so as to check whether or not the assertion was correct. This depends on the true construction of clause 7 of the deed of terms. The words which impose an obligation to give information are very general. The Selsdon company must give "all such other information as may be necessary or appropriate "to enable the amount of the royalties payable hereunder to be "ascertained." Those words—especially the word "payable"—would seem to cover the information here sought. But the apparent width of these words has been held by the Court of Appeal to be cut down by several considerations, and in particular by these four: 1. That the information was to be given to auditors. 2. That it was to be given under a seal of confidence. 3. That it was limited to the patented articles. 4. That it could not have been intended to authorize a roving inquiry over the business of the Selsdon company. I propose to consider them in order.

1. The first point raises the question: What is the proper function of an auditor? It is said that he is bound only to verify the sum, the arithmetical conclusion, by reference to the books and all necessary vouching material and oral explanations: and that it is no part of his function to inquire whether an article is covered by patents or not. I think this is too narrow a view. An auditor is not to be confined to the mechanics of checking vouchers and making arithmetical computations. He is not to be written off as a professional "adder-upper and subtractor." His vital task is to take care to see that errors are not made, be they errors of computation, or errors of omission or commission, or downright untruths. To perform this task properly he must come to it with an inquiring mind—not suspicious of dishonesty, I agree—but suspecting that someone may have made a mistake somewhere and that a check must be made to ensure that there has been none. I would not have it thought that the Kingston Mill case[3] relieved an auditor of his responsibility for making a proper check. But the check to be effective may require some legal knowledge, or some knowledge of patents or other specialty. What is he then to do? Take, for instance, a point of law arising in the course of auditing a company's accounts. He may come upon a payment which, it appears to him, may be unlawful in that it may not be within the powers of the corporation, or improper in that it may have no warrant or justification. He is then not only entitled but bound to inquire into it and, if need be, to disallow it, see Roberts v. Hopwood,[4] and In re Ridsdel.[5] It may be, of course, that he has sufficient legal knowledge to deal with it himself, as many accountants have, but if it is beyond him, he is entitled to take legal advice on the principle stated in Bevan v. Webb,[6] that "permission to a man to do "an act, which he cannot do effectually without the help of an "agent, carries with it the right to employ an agent." So also with an auditor who is employed for the purpose of checking the royalties payable. It is part of his duty to use reasonable care to see that none have been omitted which ought to be included. He is not bound to accept the ipse dixit of the licensee that there are no other articles which attract royalty. He is entitled to check the accuracy of that assertion by inquiring the nature of any other articles which, it appears to him, may come within the patented field. If he cannot be sure, of his own knowledge, whether they attract royalty or not, he can take the advice of a patent agent, just as, within the legal sphere, he can take the advice of a lawyer. This is, however, subject to the seal of confidence, which brings me to the second point.

2. The auditor here acknowledged that, if he got the information, he would need the advice of a patent agent. It is said that

[3] [1896] 2 Ch. 279; 12 T.L.R. 430.

[4] [1925] A.C. 578, 605; 41 T.L.R. 436.

[5] [1947] Ch. 597, 604; [1947] 2 All E.R. 312.

[6] [1901] 2 Ch. 59, 75; 17 T.L.R. 440.

H. L. (E.)
1957
FOMENTO (STERLING AREA) LTD. v. SELSDON FOUNTAIN PEN CO. LTD.
Lord Denning.

he could not take such advice without breaking the seal of confidence imposed on him by the agreement. I do not think this is correct. If once the auditor were given the desired information about refills "B" and "C," he could get all the technical advice he needed without breaking any confidence. He could, for instance, put before the patent agent a hypothetical case. Or he could ask his advice on a specimen refill of Types "B" and "C" which had already been sold on the open market and were thus in the public domain. In such a case, although he would have been put on the track by means of the confidential information, he would not actually be disclosing it. Such would not be a breach of the stipulation. In any case, I do not think the stipulation should be construed so narrowly as to prevent the auditor consulting his own servants and agents. The stipulation is that the auditor shall treat the information as "confidential information disclosed only for the purpose of "verifying the amount of royalties . . . payable." Even without this express stipulation the auditor would be bound to keep the information confidential and not divulge it to the outside world. The effect of this stipulation is to prevent the auditor from disclosing it even to his own client. He can only report to him the result of his investigation, not the information he obtains in the course of it, such as the names and addresses of the licensees' customers. But the stipulation does not prevent the auditor from disclosing the information to his own servants and agents when it is necessary to enable him to carry out the very purpose for which the information is disclosed, namely, to verify the amount of royalties payable. Each of his servants and agents is bound, just as the auditor himself is, to keep the information confidential and not to divulge it: and this is a duty which, by the very nature of the case, is owed to the party who has given the information.

3. It is said that clause 7 is confined to "patented articles" and therefore that it cannot be invoked by the auditor except in respect of articles which are admittedly patented articles or are established to be patented articles: which refills of Types "B" and "C" are not. This argument put a gloss on the words "patented articles" which is not warranted by the definition in the agreement. "Patented articles" mean articles which are in fact protected by the patents, not merely those which are admitted or established to be protected. If it should turn out that refills of Types "B" and "C" are within the patents, then they attract royalty, and have done so all the time, no matter how fiercely the Selsdon company may have asserted the contrary. But how is it to be ascertained, one way or the other, whether they attract a royalty unless the Selsdon company give the information that is desired? Mr. Russell said that the licensors could find out for themselves. They could do the same, he said, as any patentee did, who wished to ascertain if his patent was being infringed. They could buy the offending article in the market, take it to a patent agent, and pursue all the usual inquiries until the offence was brought home. Mr. Shelley said that this would be quite impracticable, because there were a large number of Biro pens and refills on the market, and it was impossible to tell the Selsdon refills from any others. Howsoever that may be, the information is clearly "appropriate to enable the amount of the royalties payable" to be ascertained. It is much more appropriate for it to be obtained direct from the Selsdon company than for the licensors to go searching up and down the market for it. It is therefore information which the auditor may properly require.

4. It was said that, if the auditor were authorized to require information of this kind, it would mean that the Selsdon company could be interrogated about all the articles they sell—even those which had nothing to do with ball-pointed pens—and that this could not have been intended. The short answer to this is that the auditor is only entitled to such information "as may "be necessary or appropriate." If his inquiries went as far as is suggested, they would not be necessary or appropriate. They would be oppressive, and the Selsdon company could justifiably refuse to answer them. But that cannot be said of the simple inquiry here.

I find myself, therefore, unable to put any such limitations on the clause as the Court of Appeal did. I think the auditor's question was appropriate to ascertain the royalties payable and should have been answered. I would allow the appeal in this respect and restore the order of Harman J. on this part of the case.

I turn now to the other part of the case. This depends on the true construction of clause 15, the "most-favoured licensee" clause. The object of that clause is to ensure that if the licensors should grant a new licence at a lower royalty than that agreed in this licence, then the agreed royalty should be reduced to the level of the new lower royalty. The question that arises is what is to be done when the royalty structure in the new licence is different from that in this licence.

Mr. Shelley started with the proposition that under clause 15 the word "royalty" meant the total sum payable for the licence. On this basis he argued that you could not say, by looking at the new licence, whether it was granted at a lower royalty than the agreed royalty. The agreed royalty was on a sliding scale varying from 6 per cent. on the cheapest articles to 3 per cent. on the most expensive. The new royalty was 5 per cent. on all alike. Whether it was more favourable or not depended on the way in which the sales were spread. If there was a large sale of the cheapest models and few of the expensive ones, the new royalty would be lower, but otherwise not.

Such being the problem, Mr. Shelley said that the matter must be tested by taking the sales of the Selsdon company for the appropriate accounting period—one quarter of a year—and

H. L. (E.)
1957
FOMENTO (STERLING AREA) LTD. v. SELSDON FOUNTAIN PEN CO. LTD.
Lord Denning.

seeing how the rival royalties would work out when applied to those sales. If 5 per cent. on all the sales of the Selsdon company gave a total which was less than that given by the sliding scale, then they would have the option of substituting 5 per cent. thenceforward for the rest of the term. Pressed with the question: Which quarter of which year was to be taken for the test? Mr. Shelley said it was open to the Selsdon company to take any quarter they liked, but as they had taken none in this case and had given no evidence, they could not say that the royalty under the new licence was lower than that under the agreed licence.

I cannot accept this argument, for the simple reason that clause 15 contemplates that, by simply looking at the new licence, you should be able to see from its terms whether the royalty is lower or not, without testing it by sales. The fallacy in Mr. Shelley's argument lies in his original proposition. The word "royalty" in this clause does not mean the total sum payable for all articles produced under the licence. It means the relevant royalty for articles in a comparable category. Thus if the agreed royalty on articles under £1 is 6 per cent. and the new royalty on like articles is 5 per cent., then 5 per cent. is to be substituted for 6 per cent. Whereas if the agreed royalty on articles between £1 and £2 is 4 per cent. and the new royalty on a like article is 5 per cent., there is no substitution and the 4 per cent. prevails. Any other view would mean that, by the simple device of altering the structure on which royalties are paid, the licensor could avoid the clause altogether: which would not, I am sure, commend itself to your Lordships: seeing that the whole object of the clause is to ensure that the Selsdon company are not exposed to unfair competition.

I would therefore dismiss the appeal on this part of the case.

Appeal allowed in part and dismissed in part.

Solicitors: Payne, Hicks, Beach & Co.; Rowe & Maw.

F. C.

[HOUSE OF LORDS.]

H. L. (E.)†
1957
Dec. 10.

* INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS . PETITIONERS;

AND

WOOD BROTHERS (BIRKENHEAD) LTD. . RESPONDENTS.

House of Lords—Leave to appeal—Terms—Money in dispute deposited at low rate of interest.

† Present: LORD REID, LORD TUCKER and LORD SOMERVELL OF HARROW.

PETITION for leave to appeal to the House of Lords from the decision of the Court of Appeal in Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Wood Brothers (Birkenhead) Ltd.[1]

The Appeal Committee allowed the petition.

It appeared that, the respondent company being in liquidation, the amount of tax in dispute, £9,000, had been deposited with the Board of Trade, which paid only 2½ per cent. interest on the money. In resisting the application it was submitted on behalf of the company that it would be a hardship to it if this sum were to remain outside its control at this low rate of interest during the considerable time which must elapse before a decision could be arrived at by the House.

Alan Orr for the Crown.
Philip Shelbourne for the respondent company.

LORD REID said that leave to appeal would only be granted on terms that the Commissioners of Inland Revenue would not seek to disturb the orders for costs below and would, in any event, pay the respondent company's costs in the House of Lords, and, further, would undertake to pay 3 per cent. interest on the sum involved until the matter was determined, in addition to the 2½ per cent. which the company was receiving from the Board of Trade. If the Commissioners of Inland Revenue wished to proceed, they should be free to do so on these terms.

Solicitors: Solicitor of Inland Revenue; Simmons & Simmons for March, Pearson & Green, Manchester.

[1] [1957] 3 W.L.R. 713; [1957] 3 All E.R. 314.

---

* PELTON . . . . . PETITIONER;

AND

GRIFFITH . . . . . RESPONDENT.

PETITION for leave to appeal to the House of Lords from the decision of the Court of Appeal in Griffith v. Pelton.[2]

The Appeal Committee dismissed the petition.

[2] [1957] 3 W.L.R. 522; [1957] 3 All E.R. 75.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1957
Dec. 4.

Danckwerts J.

* DISTRICT BANK LTD. v. WEBB.

PRACTICE NOTE.

[1955 D. 2215.]

Mortgage—Practice—Summons for possession—Claim by third party to be entitled to possession—Hearing in open court—R.S.C., Ord. 55, r. 5A.

ORIGINATING SUMMONS under R.S.C., Ord. 55, r. 5A.

By this summons possession was claimed of mortgaged property from the mortgagor and from other persons in occupation of the property, the summons was adjourned to the judge in chambers, but was heard by Danckwerts J. in open court.

DANCKWERTS J., in the course of his judgment, said that the judges of the Chancery Division had considered the procedure to be adopted in cases in which a mortgagee was attempting to enforce his security and persons not parties to the mortgage claimed to be entitled in possession to, or to remain in possession of, the mortgaged property. In such cases, if any of the parties was dissatisfied with the decision of the master, the proper practice was for him to adjourn the summons into court and to make, in appropriate cases, an order under R.S.C., Ord. 38, r. 1, for the attendance for cross-examination of deponents to the affidavits filed in the proceedings.

[Reported by JENNIFER WEST, Barrister-at-Law.]

[HOUSE OF LORDS.]

H. L. (E.) †

1957
Oct. 30, 31;
Nov. 4, 6;
Dec. 4.

* MORIARTY . . . . . APPELLANT;

AND

EVANS MEDICAL SUPPLIES LTD. . . RESPONDENT.

(APPEAL AND CROSS-APPEAL.)

Revenue—Income tax—Capital or income receipt—Sale of "know-how" by manufacturing chemists to Burmese Government—To aid establishment of pharmaceutical industry in Burma—Whether receipt of company's trade or proceeds of sale of capital asset—Depreciation of capital asset—Meaning of "know-how"—Income Tax Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 10), s. 123 (Sch. D, Case I).

---

† Present: VISCOUNT SIMONDS, LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON, LORD TUCKER, LORD KEITH OF AVONHOLM and LORD DENNING.

A company which carried on the business of manufacturing chemists and wholesale druggists entered into an agreement with the Government of Burma, by which the company agreed to assist the Government in the establishment and operation of a pharmaceutical industry. Under the terms of Part I of the agreement entered into on October 20, 1953, the company was to supply technical data and designs for the erection of the factory and the installation of machinery required for the manufacture of the pharmaceutical products. They were also to disclose to the Government the secret processes used by them in the preparation, storage and packaging of the various pharmaceutical products. These processes had never been disclosed before to anyone else, and during the seven years' currency of the agreement the company agreed not to disclose them to anyone else in Burma. By Part II of the agreement the company agreed to manage the factory, to train native personnel and to provide the necessary staff meanwhile. The company was permitted to continue its agency in Burma, but that agency would become of less value as the Burmese Government established their own industry. The consideration for the agreement was a lump sum payment of £100,000, together with an annual fee of not less than £25,000 for the obligation to operate and manage the factory during the currency of the agreement. The Commissioners for the Special Purposes of the Income Tax held that the sum "arose to "the company either in the course of the trade which it had hitherto "carried on or in the course of a new trade which it commenced "to carry on on October 20, 1953." They upheld an assessment to income tax in respect of the company's profits as wholesale druggists for the year 1954–1955 under Case I of Schedule D, the sum of £100,000 being treated as a receipt of its trade liable to be included in the computation of its profits. On appeal to the House of Lords:—

Held (per Viscount Simonds, Lord Tucker and Lord Denning), (1) that the £100,000 was not properly included in the assessment because the finding of the commissioners in the alternative form was not sufficient to impose liability on the company, since, if the sum was received in the course of a new trade, it could not be brought into the assessment made in respect of the company's existing trade for 1954–55 which was the only assessment in question. The assessment, accordingly, could not be upheld.

(2) That the case should not in the circumstances be remitted to the commissioners to split up the £100,000 into capital and income.

Viscount Simonds and Lord Tucker were of opinion that the £100,000 was a capital receipt. Lord Keith of Avonholm and Lord Denning were of opinion that it was an income receipt. Lord Morton of Henryton (agreeing herein with the Court of Appeal) was of opinion that it was in part a capital receipt and in part an income receipt.

British Dyestuffs Corporation (Blackley) Ltd. (1924) 12 T.C. 586; Butterworth v. Page (1933) 150 L.T. 262, C.A.; (1935) 153 L.T. 34, H.L., and Edwards v. Bairstow [1956] A.C. 14; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 410; [1955] 3 All E.R. 48 considered.

Decision of the Court of Appeal sub nom. Evans Medical Supplies v. Moriarty [1957] 1 W.L.R. 288; [1957] 1 All E.R. 336 affirmed.

APPEAL from the Court of Appeal (Lord Evershed M.R., Birkett and Romer L.JJ.).

This appeal and cross-appeal were from an order of the Court of Appeal dated December 13, 1956, made on an appeal by the appellant, Louis Moriarty, H.M. Inspector of Taxes, from an order of the High Court (Upjohn J.) dated May 18, 1956. By the order of the High Court an appeal by the respondent company, Evans Medical Supplies Ltd., from a determination of the Commissioners for the Special Purposes of the Income Tax Acts on a case stated by them in respect of an assessment to income tax made on the respondent company was allowed and their determination was reversed. By the order of the Court of Appeal the order of the High Court reversing the determination of the commissioners was discharged and in lieu thereof it was ordered that the case should be remitted to them to ascertain the further facts directed in the order, and to adjust the assessment to income tax made on the respondent company accordingly.

H. L. (E.)
1957
MORIARTY v. EVANS MEDICAL SUPPLIES LTD.

In the original appeal the appellant asked that the determination of the Special Commissioners should be affirmed in its entirety and that the assessment in the amount agreed on the basis of that determination should be maintained. In the cross-appeal the respondent company asked that the determination of the Special Commissioners should be reversed and that the assessment should be reduced so as to exclude from it the whole sum in dispute in the appeals.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion of Viscount Simonds.

Sir Frank Soskice Q.C. and Alan Orr for the appellant.

John Senter Q.C. and Desmond Miller for the respondent company.

The following cases, besides those referred to by their Lordships, were cited in argument: Cordy v. Smith Barry [1]; Balgownie Trust Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [2]; Lomax v. Peter Dixon & Son [3]; Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Reinhold [4]; Vestey's Executors v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [5]; Great Western Railway Co. v. Bater [6]; Gavazzi v. Mace [7]; Federal Commissioner of Taxation v. United Aircraft Corporation [8]; Exchange Telegraph Co. Ltd. v. Gregory & Co. [9]; Inland Revenue Commissioners v. British Salmson Aero Engines Ltd. [10]; Rustproof Metal Window Co. Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [11]; Desoutter Brothers Ltd. v. J. E. Hangar & Co. Ltd. [12]; Margerison v. Tyresoles Ltd. [13]; Bentleys, Stokes & Lowless Ltd. v. Beeson [14]; Howson v. Monsell. [15]

Their Lordships took time for consideration.

[1] (1946) 62 T.L.R. 614; [1946] 2 All E.R. 396.
[2] 1929 S.C. 790; 14 T.C. 684.
[3] [1943] 1 K.B. 671; 59 T.L.R. 376; [1943] 2 All E.R. 255.
[4] 1953 S.C. 49; 34 T.C. 339.
[5] [1949] 1 All E.R. 1108; 31 T.C. 1.
[6] [1922] 2 A.C. 1; 38 T.L.R. 448.
[7] (1926) 135 L.T. 634.
[8] (1943) 68 C.L.R. 525.
[9] [1896] 1 Q.B. 147; 12 T.L.R. 18.
[10] [1938] 2 K.B. 482; 54 T.L.R. 908.
[11] [1947] L.J.R. 1479; [1947] 2 All E.R. 454.
[12] [1936] 1 All E.R. 535.
[13] (1942) 25 T.C. 59.
[14] [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1529; [1952] 2 All E.R. 82.
[15] (1950) 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 916; [1950] 2 All E.R. 1239n.

December 4. VISCOUNT SIMONDS. My Lords, the respondent company, Evans Medical Supplies Ltd., and its predecessors have for a long time carried on in the United Kingdom and elsewhere the business of manufacturing chemists, wholesale druggists and kindred trades. It has a worldwide trade and reputation. In the year 1953 it carried on business in Burma through an agency in that country.

On October 20, 1953, it entered into an agreement with the Government of the Union of Burma under which it became entitled to receive and received the sum of £100,000 and certain other sums therein mentioned. It will be necessary for me to refer in some detail to this agreement.

The company was duly assessed in respect of its profits as wholesale druggists for the year 1954–55 under Case I of Schedule D, and in this assessment the sum of £100,000 was treated as a receipt of its trade liable to be included in the computation of its profits. Against this assessment the company appealed to the Commissioners for the Special Purposes of the Income Tax Acts, who upheld the assessment but at the instance of the company stated a case for the opinion of the High Court. The case came on for hearing before Upjohn J., who allowed the appeal of the respondent company and reversed the determination of the Special Commissioners. From his judgment the Crown appealed to the Court of Appeal. That court discharged the order of the learned judge and ordered that the case be remitted to the Special Commissioners with the direction "to ascertain in accordance with the judgments and "subsequent proceedings of the Court of Appeal what part, "if any, of the amount of £100,000 should be attributed to the "imparting of the secret processes to the Government of Burma, "such part to be treated as a capital receipt, and to adjust the "assessment accordingly, and with power to the parties to call "such evidence as they may consider necessary," and it was further ordered that the commissioners should (if required by either party) state a supplemental case setting forth the facts and their determination. Neither party had asked for, or suggested the propriety of, such an apportionment. The Crown has appealed against the order, inviting your Lordships to restore the determination of the commissioners; the respondent company has cross-appealed, claiming that the judgment of Upjohn J. should be restored. Both sides have argued throughout on the basis of "all or nothing."

My Lords, largely, I think, as a result of the way in which the case was originally presented on behalf of the Crown and the consequent form of the commissioners' determination, a number of difficulties have been created which might well have been avoided. Essentially the case seems to me to be a very simple one, except only on one point, which has caused me some anxiety.

Inasmuch as the case stated raises, amongst other questions,

H. L. (E.)
1957
MORIARTY v. EVANS MEDICAL SUPPLIES LTD.
Viscount Simonds.

the familiar one whether there was evidence upon which they could make their determination, it will be necessary to refer to the case in some detail.

The commissioners, after stating the question as I have already stated it, refer to the fact that at the hearing of the appeal evidence was given by a Mr. Fergusson, the chairman and managing director of the company, and that certain documents (including the agreement of October 20, 1953) had been put in evidence and formed part of the case. They then refer to the incorporation and objects of the company as stated in its memorandum of association, and mention that it took over a business which began in the year 1809 and is one of the leading pharmaceutical manufacturers with a world-wide trade. Paragraphs 4 and 5 of the case have been relied on by one side or the other, and I set them out verbatim.

"4. The company carries on its trade abroad, in some cases "by means of subsidiary companies in various countries, in other "cases by means of foreign agencies, and for a considerable "period prior to the year 1953 it had an agency in Burma. In "the year 1953 the Burmese Government decided to build a "factory and laboratories in Burma for the purpose of estab-"lishing an industry there for the production of pharmaceutical "and other products. Accordingly, the Burmese Government "despatched a trade mission to Europe, with a view to inducing "some leading firm of manufacturing chemists to advise as to "the erection of such a factory, the supply of equipment for "manufacture, and to impart to them the processes, formulae, "and knowledge necessary to the production and manufacture of "pharmaceutical products in Burma.

"5. The said trade mission got into touch with firms of "wholesale manufacturing chemists on the Continent of Europe "and, also, through the medium of United Kingdom Government "Departments, with the Association of the British Pharma-"ceutical Industry, and finally treated with three leading firms "of manufacturing chemists in the United Kingdom of which "the company is one. There was keen competition with several "continental firms and the British Government was anxious that "a British firm should, if possible, come to terms with the "Burmese Government. Negotiations were opened between the "company and the trade mission on behalf of the Burmese "Government, and the company at first suggested a lump sum "of £350,000 for the sale of drawings, designs, plans, and "technical and other data, and 'know-how' necessary for the "establishment, erection and installation of the factory and the "commencement of production, and for management services for "a period of years. The Burmese Government were unwilling "to agree upon a single lump sum, but desired that part of the "consideration should take the form of fees based on production. "The company then made fresh proposals, which were accepted

"on behalf of the Burmese Government and embodied in the "agreement of October 20, 1953 (Exhibit A)."

I come, then, to the agreement, and, as I regard it as the vital point of this case, I must refer to it at length. The recitals have rightly been regarded as of importance. They are as follows:

"(1) The Government of the Union of Burma proposes to "build in Burma a factory and laboratories (hereinafter together "referred to as 'the factory') for the purpose of establishing an "industry there for the production of pharmaceutical and other "products.

"(2) Evans Medical" (i.e., the respondent company) "has "developed and owns processes formulae and knowledge relating "to the manufacture of pharmaceutical products and to the use "of machinery plant appliances and devices used in such "manufacture.

"(3) For facilitating the building and running of such factory "Evans Medical propose to supply the Government of the Union "of Burma with information and to organize the factory in the "manner hereinafter mentioned."

The operative part of the agreement is divided into five parts and again I think it desirable to set out the provisions of Part I in full. They are as follows:

"In consideration of the payment to Evans Medical by the "Government of the Union of Burma of the capital sum of "£100,000 (One hundred thousand pounds sterling) payable in "the United Kingdom free from any deduction whatsoever.

"(A) Evans Medical will provide and make available to the "Government of the Union of Burma all drawings designs and "plans and technical and other data and 'know-how' necessary "for the establishment erection and installation of the factory "and the commencement of production thereat of the pharma-"ceutical and other products mentioned in the schedule hereto.

"(B) Evans Medical will supply to the Government of the "Union of Burma designs and lay-out for the erection of plant "including machinery and equipment and all other requisites "and shall supply full data and specifications with drawings and "instructions and all other information relating to the sources "and manufacturers and suppliers of such machinery and "equipment.

"(C) Evans Medical will make available to the Government "of the Union of Burma all information relating to the supply "of prototype machinery and equipment for the manufacture of "the pharmaceutical and other products mentioned in the "schedule.

"(D) Evans Medical hereby undertake that during the "currency of this agreement the facilities hereby agreed to be "furnished to the Government of the Union of Burma under the "preceding subclauses of this clause shall be exclusive to the

H. L. (E.)
1957
MORIARTY v. EVANS MEDICAL SUPPLIES LTD.
Viscount Simonds.

"said Government and shall not during the currency hereof be "furnished to any other person or corporation in Burma."

Part II of the agreement provides for the giving of advice and rendering of services by the company to the Government. It is, for instance, to advise the Government as to the building and operation of the factory, to act as purchasing agent for the Government, to act as managers, to engage and train the staff, to procure and train as quickly as possible Burmese nationals in Europe and Burma and cause such nationals to be appointed to positions of responsibility in the factory and to render similar services. It then provides that as remuneration for the services provided for in that part of the agreement the Government would pay to the company a fee in respect of each year of the continuance of the agreement of either 5 per cent. of the value of all products whether or not specified in the schedule thereto produced at the factory in accordance with the provisions of that agreement or the sum of £25,000 whichever sum should be the greater. This part contained a number of other provisions to which I need not refer. Nor need I refer to Part III. Part IV provided that the agreement should remain in force for 7 years, but might be renewed as therein mentioned, and contained the term that the Government would not, without the consent of the company, export to any other country any of the goods manufactured in accordance with the provisions of that agreement except as therein mentioned. Part V contained the perhaps important term that the Government would not divulge to anyone the information conveyed to them by the company under that agreement without the written consent of the company, such consent not to be unreasonably withheld.

Having referred to this agreement, the commissioners proceed, in paragraphs 10 and 11, as follows:

"10. (i) The schedule referred to, forming part of the said "agreement (Exhibit A), specifies two main classes of biological "products (A) and (B) and a number of pharmaceutical products "enumerated under a few broad descriptions (C), (D) and (E). "All the products referred to are general types and do not "include any of the company's proprietary products. By far the "most valuable from the company's point of view were the "secret processes involved in the preparation, storage, and "packaging of certain human and veterinary anti-toxins, sera "and vaccines.

"(ii) The secret processes referred to in sub-paragraph (i) "above have been evolved at great cost in several fields over a "period of 50 years and the company considers that such secret "processes are superior to those evolved by other companies. "At least two other companies in the United Kingdom, and "firms in Western Germany and Holland, have the necessary "knowledge to prepare such products and do, in fact, prepare "them. The company has, however, over a number of years "experimented and perfected its own methods of preparing and "conserving these products and has never, until it entered into "this agreement with the Burmese Government, communicated "these methods to any other person or corporation.

"(iii) The pharmaceutical products, as broadly classified in the "schedule to the agreement, number about 3,500 out of 6,500 "such products actually manufactured by the company. Here "again, there is no secret as to the composition of the various "ointments, pastes, tablets and capsules. The ingredients are "set out in the British Pharmacopoeia, and similar products are "manufactured by other British and foreign manufacturing "chemists. The secret processes consist in the actual methods "of preparation of the products and, also, in the method of "storing and packaging. For example, a special type of ampoule "is used by the company for certain of its products, and the "company, by its agreement, undertook to impart its own "methods of manufacture and packing to the Burmese "Government.

"(iv) The processes referred to in sub-paragraphs (i), (ii) and "(iii) above cannot be learned by the study of textbooks. "Knowledge of these processes is in some cases imparted by "the company to the Burmese Government by training suitable "Burmese or European staff for employment in the factory in "Burma. In other cases the knowledge is being imparted by "the direct communication of written information.

"11. The company might have erected its own factory in "Burma, but its directors were convinced that the Burmese "Government was determined to have its own chemical industry "in Burma and that several continental firms were willing and "able to provide the Burmese Government with the means to do "so. In entering into the agreement, the company chose the "method of developing its business which seemed to its directors "to be the best available in the circumstances. No similar "agreement with any other foreign government or any other "party had been made by the company. Since entering into "the agreement, the company has retained its agency in Burma "and has continued to supply this agency with its own products. "The company's Burmese agency will become progressively less "important as the Government factory in Burma comes into "production. At the time of the hearing of this appeal "(February, 1955) the factory was not completed but, as "provided by paragraph 1, Part IV, of the agreement, the mini-"mum sum of £25,000 was being paid as from October 20, 1953."

I have thought it necessary to set these findings out at length, because, in a case such as this in which one question is whether there was evidence upon which the commissioners could properly arrive at their determination, it may do them less than justice to attempt a paraphrase. The same consideration applies to their statement of the contentions of the parties and their own determination. Accordingly I set out these also.

"13. It was contended on behalf of the company: (i) that

H. L. (E.)
1957
MORIARTY v. EVANS MEDICAL SUPPLIES LTD.
Viscount Simonds.

"under Part I of the agreement, to which the sum of £100,000 "was solely annexed, the company was parting with items of "fixed capital; (ii) that, in the alternative, the said sum of "£100,000 was a sum received by the company for an exclusive "licence to the Burmese Government; (iii) that, in either event, "the said sum of £100,000 was, as described in Part I of the "said agreement, a capital sum; (iv) that, in any event, the "sum received by the company for disposing of the fruits of its "experience did not arise in the course of a trade carried on by "the company; (v) that, in any event, the said sum of £100,000 "was not properly included in computing for income tax purposes "the profit of the company for the said year 1954–1955.

"14. It was contended on behalf of the respondent: (i) that, "on the true construction of the said agreement, the said sum of "£100,000, no less than the annual sum of £25,000, was received "by the company for providing services in the course of carrying "on its trade as wholesale druggists; (ii) that, on the true "construction of the said agreement, Parts I and II were inter-"locking and inter-dependent, and involved services to be "rendered to the Burmese Government, and that the payment "of the said sum of £100,000 was only the first instalment of "remuneration for such services; (iii) that the disposal of secret "processes by the company was not the sale or assignment of "property of the company but a method of developing and "exploiting its business by imparting its knowledge and experi-"ence to the Burmese Government in return for a consideration "of an income nature; (iv) that the provision of the facilities "agreed to be furnished under Part I of the said agreement was "within the trading objects of the company, and, in so far as "the said sum of £100,000 was received in consideration for "provision of these facilities, it arose to the company either "from the trade it had previously carried on, or from a new "trade which it had commenced to carry on on October 20, 1953; "(v) that, in any event, the said sum of £100,000 was properly "included in computing for income tax purposes the profits of "the company for the said year 1954–55.

"15. We, the commissioners who heard this appeal:

"(i) Held that it was not possible, on the evidence set out in "paragraphs 3–12 above, to consider each part of the agreement "of October 20, 1953, separately. While the factory was in "course of erection; while the training of staff was proceeding; "and while plant and machinery were being obtained, payments, "which the company admitted to be of an income nature, were "being made, and we were unable to take the view that the "said sum of £100,000 was paid simply for the sale or assign-"ment to the Burmese Government of secret processes analogous "to patents;

"(ii) even if the view were taken that the main part of the "consideration of £100,000 was received by the company for "imparting these secret processes to the Burmese Government,

"we were still of opinion that the company had not sold or "assigned any property. For example, other British and "continental firms admittedly had the knowledge and did "prepare anti-toxins, and the company after the signing of the "agreement, as much as before, was still in a position to prepare "such products according to the formulae and methods which it "had perfected, which remained secret, except to the extent that "some of them had been imparted to the Burmese Government;

"(iii) considering as we do that the whole agreement must "be read together, we think that it is one for the provision of "services. The provision by the company under Part I of the "agreement of what, in clause (D) of that Part, are called "'facilities' is not in our opinion the sale or assignment of a "capital asset in consideration of a capital price, nor is it the "grant of a licence in consideration of a capital payment;

"(iv) we also rejected the company's alternative contention "that the said sum did not arise to the company as a receipt "of its trade as wholesale druggists because it had never "previously entered into such an agreement. On the contrary, "we held that the company had, on the evidence in this case, "chosen the method which appeared to its directors to be the "best means of exploiting its business as wholesale druggists "in Burma, such method being in our opinion clearly within "the powers taken by the company in its memorandum of "association. We, therefore, held that the said sum of £100,000 "arose to the company either in the course of the trade which "it had hitherto carried on or in the course of a new trade "which it commenced to carry on on October 20, 1953, and that "in either event the said sum was properly included in the "computation for income tax purposes of the company's profits "as wholesale druggists for the said year 1954–55."

Finally they stated the point of law for the opinion of the High Court in these terms: "17. The point of law for the opinion "of the High Court is whether on the facts found by us and set "forth in paragraphs 3–12 inclusive, there is evidence on which "we could properly arrive at our determination that the said "sum of £100,000 was properly included in the computation for "income tax purposes of the profits of the company's trade for "the year 1954–55, and whether on the facts so found our "determination was correct in law."

My Lords, it is always easy to be wise after the event, and I would not be unduly critical of the way in which the commissioners discharge their very difficult task. But it is clear that much confusion has arisen in this case from the fact that the Crown was permitted to put forward alternative contentions, and that the commissioners' determination was stated in an alternative form. That part of paragraph 15 (iv) of the case which begins with the words: "We, therefore, . . . " clearly cannot be supported unless there is a finding of fact that the company did commence to carry on a new trade on October 20, 1953, in

H. L. (E.)
1957
MORIARTY v. EVANS MEDICAL SUPPLIES LTD.
Viscount Simonds.

the course of which this sum of £100,000 arose to the company. But there is no such finding, and if there was, the sum could not possibly be included in the computation of the company's profits as wholesale druggists for the year 1954–55. It would not, I think, on this ground alone be improper to say that the commissioners' determination cannot stand. But I prefer to rest my opinion on broader grounds which are substantially those of Upjohn J. and the Court of Appeal.

In my opinion, the fundamental error of the commissioners lay in a misconstruction of the agreement which is the basis of their determination in paragraph 15 (i), (ii) and (iii) of the case. I agree so fully with the way in which Romer L.J. has dealt with this part of the case that I will adopt his words. After a careful analysis of the agreement he says[1]: "From this it follows, and "is in my opinion the fact, that the £100,000 was solely referable "to the promises given by the company under Part I of the "agreement, and none the less because there appears to be some "degree of overlap between those promises and the services which "it agreed to perform under Part II. Accordingly, the only "relevant investigation, for the purposes of this aspect of the "matter, is as to what the company had to do in order to earn "the £100,000 as distinct from what it had to do before it could "claim the annual remuneration." This is wholly at variance with the view of the commissioners that the whole agreement must be read together. I repeat their words: first, "We . . . "held that it was not possible . . . to consider each part of the "agreement of October 20, 1953, separately," and secondly, "considering as we do that the whole agreement must be read "together, we think that it is one for the provision of services." I could not accept the conclusion that the agreement, even if its parts are read together, could be regarded as one for the provision of services and nothing else. For Part I is still there. It was an error of the commissioners to treat the consideration which moved from the company under that part as being for services and nothing else. This argument was persisted in before the House, but it so flatly contradicts the language of the agreement that I need say no more about it.

It was, no doubt, the corollary of their view that the agreement was one for the provision of services, that the commissioners should say that, in any event, the company had not "sold or assigned any property" to the Government. Here, again, they fell into an error which vitiates their determination. For it is manifest that a secret process, whether in composition or methods of storing and packing, is something which can be disposed of for value and that, by imparting the secret to another, its owner does something which could not fairly be described as "rendering a service." I would not think that authority is needed for so obvious a proposition, but it may be found in Butterworth v. Page.[2]

[1] [1957] 1 W.L.R. 288, 307; [1957] 1 All E.R. 336.

It still remains to ask whether, assuming that the £100,000 was in whole or in part consideration for the sale and purchase of an asset or assets, such assets were, to use the language of the company's first contention, "items of fixed capital." This is a question frequently arising in income tax cases and I should be disposed in general to accept the determination of the commissioners. For the line is often difficult to draw. But, in the present case, bearing in mind particularly what Lord Radcliffe said in Edwards v. Bairstow,[3] I come to the conclusion that the view of the commissioners cannot be sustained. It was perhaps a doubt in the mind of the inspector of taxes whether this sum could be regarded as an income receipt of the company's trade as "wholesale druggists" which led to the alternative suggestion of a new trade. But, however that may be, the evidence (I am now looking at the question propounded in the case) is overwhelming that the company parted with a capital asset and received for it a capital sum. Of paramount if not decisive importance is the agreement itself. I need not repeat its recitals or its terms. The company parted with something for which the Government was prepared to pay no less than £100,000. Its possession had secured for the company a substantial share of the Burmese market: its loss will mean (in the words of the commissioners) that the "company's Burmese agency will "become progressively less important," or, in other words, that the company has parted with an asset which was the source, or one of the sources, of its profit. I venture to repeat the question stated by Bankes L.J. in British Dyestuffs Corporation (Blackley) Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners[4]: ". . . looking at this "matter, is the transaction in substance a parting by the com-"pany with part of its property for a purchase price, or is it a "method of trading by which it acquires this particular sum of "money as part of the profits and gains of that trade?" I look, accordingly, at this transaction and, with all respect to those who take a different view, do not see how the question can be answered except by saying that the company has parted with its property for a purchase price, and when I say "its property" I mean, as the Lord Justice meant, a capital asset. In this respect I see no difference between a patent and a secret process, and for that view I find ample authority in the decision of the Court of Appeal in Page v. Butterworth.[5]

A contention was put forward on behalf of the Crown that, even if the divulging of a secret process to the whole world could be regarded as parting with a capital asset, the same could not be said of divulging it to one other. This does not make sense.

[2] (1933) 150 L.T. 262 (C.A.); (1935) 153 L.T. 34 (H.L.).
[3] [1956] A.C. 14; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 410; [1955] 3 All E.R. 48.
[4] (1924) 12 T.C. 586, 596.
[5] 150 L.T. 262.

H. L. (E.)
1957
MORIARTY v. EVANS MEDICAL SUPPLIES LTD.
Viscount Simonds.

The whole value of the secret might conceivably not be lost at once to the original owner but that its value must be greatly diminished is obvious: in the present case it is doubtful whether, within a measurable time, it will have any value at all, at any rate so far as the Burmese market is concerned. I adopt with respect the apt words of Lord Fleming in Haigh's Trustees v. Inland Revenue Commissioners[6]: "... the transaction here "in question was not merely a use of the subject salva rei "substantia but necessarily involved the realization of a con- "siderable part of its capital value."

My Lords, I think that the commissioners have in this part of the case been led into error by two things: first, by the introduction by the Crown of the suggestion of a new trade, consisting presumably of imparting information as to secret processes and other matters, with which I have already dealt; secondly, by the construction they put upon, and the weight they gave to, the evidence of Mr. Fergusson. In paragraph 11 of the case it is summarized thus: "In entering into the agree- "ment the company chose the method of developing its business "which seemed to its directors to be the best available in the "circumstances." In paragraph 15 (iv) they say: "We held "that the company had, on the evidence in this case, chosen "the method which appeared to its directors to be the best means "of exploiting its business as wholesale druggists in Burma." I am inclined to agree with learned counsel for the company that there has been a significant change in the language of the two paragraphs, but I do not attach much importance to it. For the decisive fact is not what was the company's motive in entering into the agreement but what it in fact effected. I cannot, however, suppose that Mr. Fergusson, if he spoke of the best available method of developing the company's business, had in mind any fine distinction between an income or a capital receipt or indeed had anything in mind except that, if the Government were to become competitors in Burma, the company's prudent course was to cut its loss as best it could and use the proceeds in the development of its business elsewhere. I should not care to attribute to any man of business the notion that the best way of developing the company's business in Burma was to take a step which might effectually put an end to it. I conclude, therefore, that the Crown's appeal must be dismissed, and I come to the cross-appeal. Here I have felt greater difficulty.

My Lords, as I observed at the outset of this opinion, both sides have argued this case from the beginning, before the commissioners and Upjohn J. and the Court of Appeal, upon what I have called the "all or nothing" basis. The Crown, appealing from the order of Upjohn J., moved that his order should be reversed and the determination of the commissioners affirmed. It is true that the usual formal words followed, "or that such

[6] 1939 S.C. 676, 685; 22 T.C. 725, 735.

"further or other order be made as to the court may seem just." But there was no specific suggestion that the sum of £100,000 could or should be split up, part being regarded as a capital, and part as an income, receipt. It is probable that, if such a suggestion had been made at the outset, evidence would have been directed to the point. Should the taxpayer now, when it has been decisively determined that the £100,000 was not a sum paid for the provision of services and nothing else, at this stage be subjected to the further or alternative claim that some part at least of that sum was so paid? I have been persuaded by what has fallen from your Lordships that he should not, and in particular by the opinion, which I have had the privilege of reading, of my noble and learned friend, Lord Denning. It would have been reasonable to come to a different conclusion if there had been any concealment by the company of relevant facts which have now come to light. But that has not been the case. Knowing all that was material to know, the Revenue authorities deliberately made a challenge which has been rejected. I do not think they should be allowed to make another. I may add that I am the more ready to adopt this view because I think that both sides were probably right in throughout regarding the whole sum of £100,000 as indivisible. It would, I believe, pass the wit of man to apportion the sum between the items comprised in Part I of the agreement which are clearly, less clearly, or doubtfully, of a capital nature. Nor would the problem be rendered easier by the fact that an item which might in isolation not be regarded as a capital asset could in its context be so regarded. I should, for instance, think it difficult to separate the value of a secret imparted to the Government and the value of the service rendered in imparting it.

I have therefore come to the conclusion that the cross-appeal should be allowed. In the result I move your Lordships that the appeal of the Crown should be dismissed and the cross-appeal of the company allowed, that the judgment of Upjohn J. should be restored, and that the Crown should pay the costs of the company here and in the Court of Appeal.

LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON. My Lords, the relevant facts of this case have been fully stated by my noble and learned friend, Viscount Simonds, and I shall not repeat them. The case has given rise to a remarkable difference of opinion on the question whether the sum of £100,000 now in question was, in the hands of the respondent company, an income receipt or a capital receipt. The Special Commissioners found that it was wholly income, Upjohn J. held that it was wholly capital, and the Court of Appeal took the view that it was capital in so far only as it was to be attributed to the imparting to the Government of Burma of the secret processes mentioned in paragraph 10 of the case stated, and remitted the case to the Special Commissioners to

H. L. (E.)
1957
MORIARTY v. EVANS MEDICAL SUPPLIES LTD.
Lord Morton of Henryton.

ascertain what part, if any, of the £100,000 should be so attributed.

My Lords, I think that this is a difficult and borderline case, but, in my opinion, the Court of Appeal arrived at the right conclusion. I am content to adopt the reasoning of the Master of the Rolls and Romer L.J., in which Birkett L.J. concurred, and I shall not take up your Lordships' time by repeating that reasoning in language of my own; but, having regard to the course of the argument in your Lordships' House, I shall add a few words on two questions. They are, first, whether, having regard to the evidence and to the terms of the agreement of October 20, 1953, it is possible to sever the imparting of the secret processes from the rest of the consideration moving from the company under Part I of that agreement; secondly, whether the course of the proceedings in this House and in the courts below affords any reason for reversing the order made by the Court of Appeal.

My Lords, I realise fully that if the order of that court stands, it will be no easy task for the commissioners to ascertain what part, if any, of the £100,000 should be attributed to the imparting of the secret processes to the Government of Burma, but I do not regard the difficulties as insuperable. Paragraph 10 of the case stated shows that the commissioners already have a considerable amount of knowledge as to the nature of these secret processes, and no doubt further evidence would be given before them as to the value to be attributed to the imparting thereof, on the terms set out in the agreement, as compared with the value of the other matters mentioned in Part I of the agreement. And, to my mind, the imparting of these secret processes, even if it can properly be described as a "service," is a service different in kind from all other services mentioned in Part I. However the imparting may be carried out, it is completed when the secret processes come into the knowledge of the Government of Burma; and I agree with the Court of Appeal in thinking that when that event happens, the company will have sold a part of its property, which is a capital asset. It appears to me that this part of the company's property could have been sold by itself, even if nothing else had been included in Part I; and if so, it must surely be possible to identify it and single it out from the rest of Part I.

As to the course of the proceedings, counsel for the Crown have contended strenuously that the £100,000 is wholly income, while counsel for the company have contended, no less strenuously, that it is wholly capital; but Mr. Senter, for the company, not unnaturally asked your Lordships, if you could not accept his primary contention, to uphold the order of the Court of Appeal. I see no injustice, either to the company or to the Crown, in taking this course; indeed it seems to me the only possible course if the true view is that the part of the £100,000 paid for the imparting of the secret processes was a capital receipt, and that there was evidence which justified the Special Commissioners in finding that the balance thereof was an income receipt.

I would dismiss the appeal and the cross-appeal.

LORD TUCKER. My Lords, for the reasons which have been stated by my noble and learned friend, Viscount Simonds, I agree that the appeal should be dismissed and the cross-appeal allowed.

LORD KEITH OF AVONHOLM. My Lords, this appeal relates to an assessment made under Case I of Schedule D of the Income Tax Act, 1952, and so is concerned with a tax charged in respect of a trade carried on in the United Kingdom or elsewhere. As stated by the Special Commissioners in the case stated, the sole question for their determination was whether a sum of £100,000 paid to the company by the Burmese Government in the circumstances described in the case was a receipt of the company's trade liable to be included in the computation of its profits for the purposes of the assessment for 1954–55. The commissioners have found that the said sum was properly included in such computation, and the question is whether, on the facts found, their determination was correct in law.

I do not repeat the facts found, which have already been sufficiently stated. If I may summarize the position in a few words, the company which had for many years prior to 1953 been selling its pharmaceutical and other products through an agency in Burma, found itself faced with a challenge to the continuance of this trade in the decision of the Burmese Government to set up a factory in Burma and acquire from some firm of manufacturing chemists the process formulae and knowledge necessary for the production of pharmaceutical products there. The company, in the face of keen competition and with the encouragement of the British Government, secured an agreement with the Burmese Government to give effect to this purpose. It is expressly found as a fact by the commissioners that in entering into the agreement the company chose the method of developing its business which seemed to its directors to be the best available in the circumstances. This finding cannot, in my opinion, be challenged, and it may be supplemented by a quotation from a brochure of the company which is made part of the case: "The "agreement will, during the next seven years, add several million "pounds to U.K. exports. A considerable part of the exports "will consist entirely of 'know-how' and will require no raw "materials."

Upjohn J. took the view that the effect of the agreement was to contradict the determination of the commissioners which he took to mean, I think correctly, that the receipt of the £100,000 under the agreement was a trading receipt in the course of carrying on the trade. If the learned judge was correct, that,

H. L. (E.)
1957
MORIARTY v. EVANS MEDICAL SUPPLIES LTD.
Lord Keith of Avonholm.

I think, was an end of the case, for it was only on a trading receipt that the company was being assessed. He went on, however, to consider whether the £100,000 was a receipt of an income or capital nature. The Court of Appeal, on the other hand, took the view that the £100,000 was received by the company in the course of its trade, but appear to have taken the view that in so far as part of the £100,000 can be attributed to the imparting of secret information, or secret processes, to the Burmese Government there was the realization of a capital asset and that only the balance of the £100,000 can be regarded as a trading receipt.

I find myself unable to agree with the learned judge or wholly with the learned Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal. I turn at once to the agreement which is the crucial part of the case. I do not, however, regard the circumstances in which the agreement was made as unimportant. The company intended it, as the commissioners found, to be a trading agreement. But it may, of course, contain terms which as regards some or part of the sums received under the agreement prevent them from being treated as trading receipts.

I accept it that the £100,000 was the consideration for what the company undertook to do under Part I of the agreement. What did it undertake to do? A large part of Part I covers, in my view, nothing but the provision of services which might have been supplied by other concerns with whom the company had been in competition to secure the agreement. Such are the provision of drawings, designs, plans and other data for the establishment, erection and installation of the factory; designs and lay-out for the erection of plant, etc., and data and specifications with drawings and instructions and all other information relating to the sources and manufacturers and suppliers of machinery and equipment. I shall assume, though it is not expressly stated in Part I of the agreement, that the information to be supplied included information on secret processes used by the company. There is a reference to "know-how," and this may be significantly related to the reference to "know-how" in the quotation from the brochure already given.

A person in trade or business who has a secret process which he decides to sell may do so in various situations. He may be retiring from business and selling his business to a purchaser. Obviously this is a capital transaction that attracts no tax. Again, he may remain in business, but, being unable from lack of capital or otherwise to develop his secret process, he may sell it outright to another trader. That again would be the sale of a capital asset which would not attract tax. A third type of case would be where the trader imparts his secret knowledge to some other trader, but retains the right to use it in his own business and it may be to share it further with other traders. In such a case it may be said that the secret knowledge is no longer secret knowledge. But that is not perhaps strictly accurate. It is not so secret as it was, but it may still retain a value. And if a trader, having developed some secret process, made a practice of turning it to profit by selling it like a commodity to other interested parties, possibly with restrictive conditions attached, there would seem to be no sound reason for saying that he was doing anything other than trading in "know-how." Like stock in trade, it might ultimately run down. But in the manifold opportunities of commercial and trading life it might remain a source of profit for a very considerable time. The point to be emphasised is that there is really no difference between trading in "know-how" consisting of a secret process and any other kind of "know-how." I would observe that trading in "know-how" is not quite the same thing as turning one's property to a profitable use. A man may rent his house, or license the use of his patent, without being engaged in trade. With either the trader or the property owner similar considerations may come into play in deciding whether a receipt is a capital or a revenue receipt, but where the receipt is a receipt in the course of trade that may be sufficient to turn the scale in favour of holding a receipt which has the appearance of a capital receipt to be a revenue receipt. Illustrations may be seen in Californian Copper Syndicate Ltd. v. Harris [7] and Ducker v. Rees Roturbo Development Syndicate Ltd.[8] The issue in this case is well focused in a sentence of Bankes L.J. in British Dyestuffs Corporation (Blackley) Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [9]: "The real "question is, looking at this matter, is the transaction in substance a parting by the company with part of its property for "a purchase price, or is it a method of trading by which it "acquires this particular sum of money as part of the profits "and gains of that trade?"

The question, then, and the only question, as I see it, is: Was the company trading in "know-how" or realizing "know-how"? In my opinion, there was ample evidence on which the commissioners could arrive at the conclusion that it was trading in "know-how." I find it impossible to hold that they "acted without any evidence or upon a view of the facts which "could not reasonably be entertained," to use the language of my noble and learned friend, Viscount Simonds, in the case of Edwards v. Bairstow.[10]

If the company had undertaken to build and equip the factory for production it could hardly be doubted that any profit would have been a profit or gain of trade. Instead, it undertook to supply the necessary "know-how" for building and equipping the factory. It is, to my mind, immaterial if included in this "know-how" was information known only to itself. That only goes to show that secret information was thrown into the general pool of things provided. If part of the information, facilities and services was provided as a trading operation, and this, to my

[7] 1904 6 F. 894; 5 T.C. 159.
[8] [1928] A.C. 132; 44 T.L.R. 307.
[9] 12 T.C. 586, 596.
[10] [1956] A.C. 14, 29.

H. L. (E.)
1957
MORIARTY v. EVANS MEDICAL SUPPLIES LTD.
Lord Keith of Avonholm.

mind, is an inescapable conclusion, then the whole, in my opinion, was supplied as a trading operation. I find it impossible to split the £100,000 into a non-trading receipt and a trading receipt according as the information supplied was secret and non-secret.

Further, alongside and contemporaneously with the obligation of Part I, the company was carrying out the obligations of Part II of the agreement. These included training Burmese and others in what must, ex hypothesi, have been both secret and non-secret "know-how." The annual payments made by the Burmese Government under Part II are accepted as payments that attract tax and, as I see it, necessarily so because they are payments for the supply of services. The Special Commissioners have held that the payment under Part I was also for the supply of services, and I think they were right in so holding. The services may have been different in kind from those given under Part II, but both were directed to the same end. I cannot see any essential difference that would lead to the conclusion that one set of services led to a profit earning or trading receipt and the other to the realization of a capital asset.

Lastly, though this is more by way of addendum to what I have already said, the agreement imposed on the Burmese Government an obligation of secrecy not to divulge such information as was conveyed to them by the company without the written consent of the company, which was not to be unreasonably withheld. Also the Burmese Government was not, without the written consent of the company, to export any goods manufactured under the agreement, with certain exceptions, and, if consent was given, the company was to be paid a royalty on exports for a period not exceeding 14 years. These stipulations in themselves go a long way to prevent the agreement resulting in the dissipation of a valuable asset. There is a great difference between giving away knowledge to the world at large or for the exclusive use of a buyer to the exclusion of the seller and selling the knowledge to selected individuals from time to time while retaining the right to continue using the knowledge oneself. In the present case the company could repeat the process, if not ad infinitum, at least for a very considerable time, to governments or individuals all over the world with considerable profit to itself.

I would refer to only a few of the cases cited during the hearing. None of them seems to me to touch the particular circumstances of this case, and they are more useful to point differences rather than similarities.

Reference was made to the case of Withers v. Nethersole.[11] It was, I think, relied on by Upjohn J. to some extent. I do not get much assistance, however, from that case. The critical finding of the commissioners was that Miss Nethersole was not carrying on a profession or vocation at the material time. The question was whether Miss Nethersole was liable in tax under Case VI of Schedule D as having received sums of a revenue nature. What the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords held was that there was a sale or assignment by Miss Nethersole of her rights in a play and that the sums received were capital, the price, in other words, received from the realization of her property. Lord Simon said [12]: "Here we have the sale and "transfer outright of an item of property which previously "belonged to the respondent, not the licence to use it granted by "its unchanged owner, and this does not give rise to annual "profits or gains unless the sale takes place in the course of "carrying on a trade or profession." The emphasis on the concluding words in this passage is mine. The other members of the House took the same view, though Lord Porter and Lord Uthwatt prayed in aid the language of the Copyright Act. I would emphasize again, however, the words of Lord Uthwatt [13]: "A sale, not in the way of trade, of an asset does not attract tax "on the consideration. Whatever else comes within the ambit "of annual profits and gains, the consideration received by Miss "Nethersole does not." If Miss Nethersole had been carrying on the business or profession of authoress or dramatist, very different considerations would have arisen. It would, in my opinion, have been very difficult to reach the conclusion that the sums received by her were not business or trading receipts. A very similar case was that of Haig's Trustees v. Inland Revenue Commissioners.[14] There again it was found that the trustees were not carrying on a trade or adventure, and the Court of Session sitting as Court of Exchequer held that sums received by the sale of publication rights in Earl Haig's war diaries were capital receipts, not revenue receipts, under Case VI of Schedule D. The court proceeded largely on the view that the transaction involved the realization of a considerable part of the value of the diaries, a very material factor in a case under Case VI, but of relatively little importance in a case under Case I or Case II.

[11] [1948] L.J.R. 805; 64 T.L.R. 157; [1948] 1 All E.R. 400.

Lastly, I should mention Page v. Butterworth.[15] This again raised no question of trading. The case was concerned with the nature of sums received under awards made by the Royal Commission on Awards to Inventors in respect of the user of aeroplane designs and patents by H.M. Government and the United States Government during the 1914–1918 war. Mr. Handley Page was at the time of the user the owner of the patents and designs. An assessment to income tax was made on him in respect of the awards. The case was thus one of receipts of ownership, not receipts of trading, and would fall under Case III or Case VI. In this House the assessment was discharged on a point that was not considered by the Court of Appeal. The Court of Appeal had discharged the assessment on the ground that the payment was [12] [1948] L.J.R. 805, 809.

[13] Ibid. 811.
[14] 1939 S.C. 676.
[15] 150 L.T. 262 (C.A.).

H. L. (E.)
1957
MORIARTY v. EVANS MEDICAL SUPPLIES LTD.
Lord Keith of Avonholm.

in the nature of a capital payment and not taxable under Schedule D. The ratio of this decision was that Mr. Handley Page had been compelled by the Government to part with the whole of his property, which was mainly in the designs. As Slesser L.J. put it [16]: "His property was his secret process and "his knowledge, and that property was, at the request or by "compulsion of the Government, dissipated among all his com-"petitors." The case was cited chiefly, however, for a passage in the judgment of Romer L.J. where, assimilating the knowledge of the owner of a secret process to that of the monopoly of a patentee, he says [16]: "The owner of a secret process such as "was possessed by Mr. Handley Page stands in a very analogous "position; he has not a monopoly at law, but he has a monopoly "in fact—a monopoly in fact arising from the possession by him "of the secret knowledge of the process that he is carrying on. "That secret knowledge is as much his capital asset as is the "patent monopoly the capital asset of the patentee, and, like "the patentee, he can use that capital asset in either or both of "the following ways: he can himself carry on the secret process, "or he may—it is very seldom done owing to the obvious danger "involved—grant a licence to a third person to carry on the "secret process, securing himself against his secret process being "divulged by that third party to others. In both these cases the "profits he derives from carrying on the secret process himself "and the royalty he might derive from the licensee would be "annual profits or gains within the meaning of Schedule D. But, "supposing he sells his secret process, or supposing, as here, he "surrenders his quasi monopoly by making it public to the world, "then I say that, if he gets paid for doing either one or the "other of those things, the money he receives in payment is a "capital asset. Here, at the invitation of the Government, he "surrendered to the world his secret knowledge, and his capital "asset thereupon ceased to exist." While the case is not, I think, strictly in point where a man is using his secret process for purposes of trade as here, I would place this case, if necessary, in the second category specified by Romer L.J., and on that view, the sum received would on the learned Lord Justice's analysis be a profit or gain under Schedule D.

Since preparing this opinion I have had the opportunity of reading the speech about to be delivered by my noble and learned friend, Lord Denning. The reference by the commissioners in paragraph 15 (iv) of the case stated to a new trade is a puzzling feature of the case. It does not appear in the statement of facts and it is not, I think, a finding in fact. It is at best an inference in law, and I can find nothing in the findings of fact to support it. What the company did was, in my opinion, no more than a legitimate extension of their existing trade.

In this case it is, I consider, impossible to disturb the determination of the commissioners. I would allow the appeal, dismiss the cross-appeal, and answer the question in law in the case in the affirmative.

[16] 150 L.T. 262, 272.

LORD DENNING. My Lords, the case stated that the sole question was whether "a sum of £100,000" paid to the company by the Burmese Government was a receipt of the company's trade liable to be included in the computation of its profits for the year 1954–55: and the Special Commissioners held that it was. The case treated the £100,000 as being a single undivided amount. Yet the Court of Appeal have remitted the case to the commissioners with a direction to divide it up. They have directed the commissioners to ascertain "what part, if any" of the £100,000 is a capital receipt and to adjust the assessment accordingly.

Both parties now appeal to this House against the order of the Court of Appeal: and well they may, seeing that they had throughout fought their battle on the footing that either the whole £100,000 was a taxable receipt or none of it was. It was "all or "nothing." Yet this order exposes them, not to the one battle they reckoned on, but a long-drawn-out war. The Master of the Rolls, after he made the order, said: "It would not surprise me "if it were years before this case was finally decided after going "back to the Special Commissioners," and Birkett L.J. said: "I can imagine endless controversy."

I very much doubt whether it was open to the Court of Appeal to remit this case as they did. The only point of law stated for the opinion of the court is whether "the said sum of "£100,000" was properly included in the profits. It should be noticed that it does not say "or any part thereof." I realize, of course, that a whole is often taken to include a part without anything being said: but that is not a universal rule. I call to mind covenants against assignment or underletting where it has been held that the whole does not include a part. When this case is construed in its setting, I think "the said sum of "£100,000" does not include a part of it. The case refers to the agreement under which the £100,000 was paid. It was paid as an entire sum for a specified consideration. The consideration was the imparting of information and technical data, all of which may be summed up in the new and expressive word "know-how." The Court of Appeal would seek to divide it into two parts: (1) information about secret processes; (2) information about other things. The information about secret processes had in the past been kept confidential to Evans Medical and their staff, and was especially valuable on that account. The information about other things was technical knowledge which was not secret but was no doubt valuable in that it could only be obtained from firms who were expert in it. I can see no sensible distinction between money paid for information of secret processes and money paid for the other information. The only difference is that in the one case the money was paid for information which

H. L. (E.)
1957
MORIARTY v. EVANS MEDICAL SUPPLIES LTD.
Lord Denning.

up till then had been secret, being obtainable only from the one firm: whereas in the other case it was paid for information which was scarce, being obtainable from three or four firms. But the money was paid for the same sort of thing in either case. At any rate, the parties to this agreement did not seek to draw any distinction between the two. £100,000 was paid for the lot. It was a single payment for "know-how." The case stated follows suit. It does not attempt to divide the £100,000 into parts. No evidence was given before the commissioners about splitting it up. No point was taken on it either before the commissioners or Upjohn J. It is a new point which appeared for the first time in the Court of Appeal.

Seeing that the case stated does not raise this new point about splitting up the £100,000, I do not think it was open to the Court of Appeal to raise it. The court has, of course, power to remit a case to the Commissioners for further findings when such are necessary to determine the point of law which is raised in the case. That was done in Leeming v. Jones.[17] But I do not know of any power to remit it for a finding on a new point which has not been raised before. The general rule of every appellate court is not to allow a new point to be raised except on a question of law which no evidence could alter: and this applies equally to a case stated under a statute worded like section 64 (6) of the Income Tax Act, 1952, see Kates v. Jeffery.[18] London County Council v. Farren.[19]

I turn, therefore, to consider the entire sum of £100,000. It was payable to Evans Medical on the execution of the agreement of October 20, 1953, and was, no doubt, received soon afterwards. The Revenue authorities included it in their assessment upon Evans Medical for the year 1954–55 under Case I, Schedule D. The question is whether it was properly so included.

Applying the statute, this question can be divided into two parts: (1) Was the £100,000 to be included in the "annual "profits or gains?"; (2) Did it arise or accrue to Evans Medical "from any trade" carried on by it? The first of these, for all practical purposes can be turned into the question: Was it capital or income? The second into the question: Was it received in the course of the company's trade?

So far as the first question is concerned, the Special Commissioners made findings which show that, in their view, the £100,000 was in the nature of income and not capital—see findings (i), (ii) and (iii): and Lord Evershed M.R. made it clear that, if he had to treat it as one entire sum, he, too, would say it was income and not capital. I find his reasoning on this part of the case very convincing: and it is forced home by the speech of my noble and learned friend, Lord Keith of Avonholm, to which we have just listened. I would just mention, if I may, that Romer

[17] [1930] 1 K.B. 279, 284 (C.A.); [1930] A.C. 415; 46 T.L.R. 296 (H.L.).

[18] [1914] 3 K.B. 160.

[19] [1956] 1 W.L.R. 1297; [1956] 3 All E.R. 401.

L.J. made what looks to me like a slip at a critical point of his reasoning. He assumed that the £100,000 was only payable after the consideration for it was fully performed. It was in truth payable in advance—and indeed so paid—for information to be given over an indefinite period in the future. This period might run into years and has in fact done so, for the factory was not even built three years later when the case reached the Court of Appeal.

The way I look at it is this: Evans Medical were faced with a difficult problem. The Burmese Government were determined to make these products themselves. This would mean that Evans Medical would be forced out of the Burma market or, at any rate, would lose a good deal of business there. Their goodwill in that country would be diminished in value. But that would not be due to any sale by them of a capital asset. It would take place no matter which of the competing firms obtained the contract. To make up for this coming loss of market, Evans Medical did a sensible thing. They secured the contract to supply the "know-how" to the Burmese Government. This did not purport to be—and was not in fact—a sale of secret processes. All that Evans Medical did was to tell the Burmese Government about those processes so that they could use them too. Evans Medical still retained the right to use the processes themselves and stipulated that the Burmese Government should not divulge the information without their consent. So regarded, the supply of information about the secret processes was nothing more nor less than the supply of "know-how"—a particularly valuable part of it, no doubt—but still the supply of "know-how." And that is how the parties to this agreement treated it. They drew no distinction between it and the other kinds of "know-how" to be supplied in return for the £100,000.

What, then, is the position of "know-how" for tax purposes? It is undoubtedly a revenue-producing asset. The possessor can use it to make things for sale: or he can teach it to others for reward. But he cannot sell it outright. It is rather like the "know-how" of a professional man. He can use it to earn fees from his clients: or he can teach it to pupils for reward: and so produce revenue. But he cannot sell it as a capital asset for a capital sum. He cannot sell his brains. So with a company which has special manufacturing skill and experience, but has no secret processes. Its "know-how" is inseparable from the "know-how" of its staff and servants. It cannot prevent them using it any more than it can prevent them using their own brains: see Herbert Morris Ltd. v. Saxelby.[20] It cannot sell it as a capital asset. It can only use it or teach it. Even with a company which owns secret processes, the supply of "know-"how" is not like the sale of goodwill or a secret process, for such a sale imports that the seller cannot thereafter avail himself of the special knowledge with which he has parted, see Trego

[20] [1916] 1 A.C. 688, 704; 32 T.L.R. 297.

H. L. (E.)
1957
MORIARTY v. EVANS MEDICAL SUPPLIES LTD.
Lord Denning.

v. Hunt,[21] and it may then rightly be regarded as the sale of a capital asset, see Butterworth v. Page.[22] But the supplier of "know-how" always remains entitled to use it himself, as was the case here.

For my own part, therefore, I see nothing wrong in the findings (i), (ii) and (iii) of the commissioners, and am prepared to accept the view that the £100,000 was received for the supply of "know-how"—call it services if you like—over the ensuing years. But I feel difficulty in saying that it was received "in "the course of the company's trade" as wholesale druggists and so forth. It may be said to be an activity of a different kind altogether. The Revenue authorities appear to have felt the same difficulty, but thought it did not matter so long as the £100,000 was received in the course of some trade or other. They took the view that it did not matter whether it arose from the existing trade which Evans Medical had theretofore carried on or from a new trade which it commenced on October 20, 1953. Being in this state of mind, they formulated their contention on this point in the alternative. They contended that the £100,000 "arose to the company either from the trade it had previously "carried on, or from a new trade which it had commenced to "carry on on October 20, 1953." Even if the Revenue authorities did not formulate the contention themselves, the commissioners so understood it and inserted it in the case. It was no doubt submitted to the Revenue authorities and approved by them, so they cannot now disavow it. The commissioners accepted the contention in the very formula which the Revenue authorities had adopted: "We, therefore, held" they said, "that the said sum of £100,000 arose to the company either in "the course of the trade which it had hitherto carried on or in "the course of a new trade which it commenced to carry on on "October 20, 1953."

It is very unfortunate for the Revenue authorities that they formulated their contention in that alternative form or approved it as they did: for it has since become quite apparent that it does matter very much whether the £100,000 was received in the course of the existing trade or at the beginning of a new trade. If it was received in the course of a new trade, it could not be brought into the assessment of the company's existing trade for 1954–55 which was the only assessment here in question: but would have to come into a new assessment for the new trade calculated in the special way that profits are calculated at the commencement of a new trade. When Upjohn J. pointed out this difficulty to Sir Frank Soskice, he abandoned any reliance upon a new trade. But this abandonment does not get the Revenue authorities out of the difficulty. Sir Frank Soskice, for all his wit, cannot cancel half a line of the finding nor can his tears wash out a word of it. The finding by the commissioners still remains an alternative finding. The Revenue authorities have no right to take the first alternative which suits them and reject the second alternative which does not. For aught we know, the commissioners, if asked to decide between the two alternatives, might have come down in favour of the second.

[21] [1896] A.C. 7, 24, 25; 12 T.L.R. 80.

[22] 150 L.T. 262 (C.A.).

Sir Frank Soskice found himself, therefore, forced to say that the only proper inference from the primary facts was that the £100,000 was received in the course of the existing trade. He relied on the fact found by the commissioners that "in entering "into the agreement, the company chose the method of "developing its business which seemed to its directors to be "the best available in the circumstances." But this fact is neutral. "Its business" may mean either its existing business or its new business. When read with the alternative finding, it is clear that the commissioners did not intend by that sentence to decide whether the company was developing its existing business or starting a new one. The case stated, read as a whole, seems to me quite consistent with the view—which Upjohn J. thought was the only reasonable view—that[23] "the company "was not 'exploiting' its business in the only sense in which "that word is relevant, that is, of carrying on its trade of whole-"sale druggists in Burma, but in and by the agreement it "entered into the entirely new activity of acting as adviser of "the Burmese Government by assisting to set up a completely "new industry there." Such new activity might have been taxable as being an adventure in the nature of trade but it cannot be brought into the asessment of the company's existing trade for 1954–55.

The upshot of it all is that, although the Revenue authorities have a finding in their favour that the £100,000 was income and not capital, nevertheless they have no finding that it was received in the course of the existing trade which is being taxed. It may equally well have been received in the course of a new activity which is not being taxed. That is not good enough to enable the Revenue authorities to succeed in this case stated. The law never gives judgment in favour of a plaintiff when the only finding is equally consistent with liability or non-liability. The Revenue authorities have themselves to thank for this result because of the way they formulated their contentions. They are hoist with their own petard. They can go away and ponder again the words of Lord Cairns in Partington v. Attorney-General[24]: "If the Crown, seeking to recover the tax, cannot "bring the subject within the letter of the law, the subject is "free."

[23] [1956] 1 W.L.R. 784, 802; [1956] 2 All E.R. 706.

[24] (1869) L.R. 4 H.L. 100, 122.

H. L. (E.)
1957
MORIARTY v. EVANS MEDICAL SUPPLIES LTD.

I would therefore dismiss the appeal and allow the cross-appeal.

Appeal dismissed; cross-appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Solicitor of Inland Revenue; Whitfield, Byrne & Dean for Whitley & Co., Liverpool.

F. C.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1957
Dec. 6.
Lord Goddard C.J., Devlin and Pearson JJ.

* WERNICK v. GREEN.

Animal—Poultry—Disease—Poultry bought and resold day later for slaughter — Poultry fed — Whether poultry "fed" for slaughter—Live Poultry (Movement Records) Order, 1954 (S.I. 1954, No. 122), art. 2 (1).

By article 2 (1) of the Live Poultry (Movement Records) Order, 1954, "'Poultry dealer' means a person habitually engaged in the "business of buying and reselling poultry . . . a person shall not "be deemed to be a poultry dealer by reason only that he sells for "slaughter poultry which he has purchased and fed for that "purpose."

The defendant was charged that, being a poultry dealer, he failed to keep records as required by article 3 of the order. The defendant bought poultry already fattened and generally kept them on his premises for one day before selling them for slaughter. He fed the poultry to keep them alive and avoid cruelty. The magistrate found that "fed for slaughter" as used in the farming industry meant fattened for slaughter, and held that the defendant, having failed to satisfy him that his poultry were "fed for "slaughter," did not fall within the exemption and, therefore, should have kept records. On appeal against conviction:—

Held, that "fed for slaughter" did not necessarily mean "fattened for slaughter" and, therefore, as the defendant had fed poultry which he sold for slaughter, he was not deemed to be a poultry dealer within the meaning of article 2 (1) and was not required to keep records.

CASE STATED by South Staffordshire stipendiary magistrate.

The defendant, Joseph David Wernick, was charged on an information preferred by the prosecutor, Fredrick Green, that he unlawfully contravened article 3 of the Live Poultry (Movement Records) Order, 1954,[1] made under the Diseases of Animals Act, 1950, in that, being a poultry dealer, he failed to keep a record in which there was correctly entered the particulars specified in article 3 contrary to sections 78 and 79 of the Act of 1950.

[1] Live Poultry (Movement Records) Order, 1954, art. 2 (1): "'Poultry dealer' means a person "habitually engaged in the business "of buying and reselling poultry or "day-old chicks of poultry but does "not include a person who as "auctioneer sells poultry or day-old "chicks of poultry which are the "property of another person, and a "person shall not be deemed to be a "poultry dealer by reason only that "he sells for slaughter poultry "which he has purchased and fed for "that purpose."

The magistrate found the following facts: The defendant was a person habitually engaged in the business of buying and reselling poultry. The greater part of the poultry he bought was already fattened for slaughter. The expression "fed for "slaughter" as used generally in the farming industry meant "fattened for slaughter." All the poultry purchased was sold by the defendant for slaughter. A substantial proportion of the poultry was retained by the defendant on his premises for only one day before being resold for slaughter. The defendant gave food to poultry on his premises to keep them alive and avoid cruelty. The defendant did not keep records in accordance with the Order of 1954.

It was contended on behalf of the defendant that he was not a poultry dealer within the provisions of article 2 in that he sold for slaughter poultry which he had purchased and fed for that purpose; that the onus of proving him to be a poultry dealer within article 2 lay on the prosecutor; and that the article should be strictly construed and the word "fed" given its ordinary natural meaning.

It was contended on behalf of the prosecutor that in the definition of "poultry dealer" in article 2 (1) the emphasis was on the word "only"; that to escape liability the onus was on the defendant to show that purchasing and feeding for slaughter was his only occupation in connexion with poultry dealing, and if he strayed at all from that conception, he could not claim the protection of the exemption; that the onus was on the defendant to satisfy the court that he came within the exemption and he had not done so; that "fed," although it had to be given its ordinary meaning could not be taken out of its context, and had to be read in conjunction with the qualifying words "for that purpose" that was "for slaughter," and that, accordingly, "fed for that "purpose" meant "fed for slaughter"; that the purpose of the exemption in the proviso was to protect poultry keepers, namely, persons who eventually sold for slaughter poultry which they had purchased (as opposed to hatched) and had also fed for slaughter; that the same definition was used in the Live Poultry (Restrictions) Order, 1954, in regulation 5 of which it was thought necessary, in another exemption, to use the words "immediate "slaughter," which indicated that the word "immediate" was not omitted from the exemption to the definition in the Live Poultry (Movement Records) Order, 1954, by inadvertence; that if the defendant's contention were correct, and if "fed" meant, in its ordinary and natural meaning, merely "the casual provision "of sustenance sufficient to avoid hunger," then the definition could be interpreted as permission to contravene regulation 7 (2) of the Live Poultry (Restrictions) Order, 1954, and would make nonsense of that regulation.

The magistrate was of the opinion that the prosecutor had made out a case that the defendant was a poultry dealer within the meaning of the order, unless it could be established that he came within the exemption contained in the definition in article 2 (1). The onus of proving that the defendant came within the exemption to the definition lay on the defendant. In arriving at that opinion the magistrate had regard, among other authority, to section 81 of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952. The word "fed" in the exemption could not be taken out of its context and therefore the defendant had to satisfy the magistrate that he had "fed for slaughter," that was, "fed in preparation for "slaughter," or "fattened" the poultry he had purchased, before he resold such poultry. To "feed for slaughter" in relation to poultry meant to fatten. On the facts the defendant did not so satisfy the magistrate, and since he kept no records, in accordance with the order, he committed the alleged offence, and, accordingly, the magistrate convicted the defendant and imposed a fine of £5 and ordered him to pay £8 14s. 9d. special costs.

1957

WERNICK v. GREEN.

The defendant appealed.

P. C. Northcote for the defendant.
B. S. Wingate-Saul for the prosecutor.

No cases were cited in argument.

LORD GODDARD C.J. By article 3 of the Live Poultry (Movement Records) Order, 1954, it is provided that poultry dealers shall keep certain records. I have no doubt that that is for the purpose of enabling the inspectors of the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries to trace disease, fowl pest, and so on, back to the place where it started. Article 2 (1), having stated that "'Poultry dealer' means a person habitually engaged in the "business of buying and reselling poultry or day-old chicks," exempts auctioneers, but also says "a person shall not be "deemed to be a poultry dealer by reason only that he sells for "slaughter poultry which he has purchased and fed for that "purpose." So if a man is selling poultry for slaughter, he is not a poultry dealer provided that he has fed the birds for that purpose.

The magistrate has construed "fed" as meaning "fattened." He has also found "that all the poultry purchased was sold by "the appellant for slaughter. That a substantial proportion of "the poultry was retained by the appellant on his premises for "only one day before being resold for slaughter." Then: "That "the appellant gave food to poultry on his premises to keep them "alive and avoid cruelty."

I do not think that we are entitled, in a section which creates a criminal offence, to say that "fed" necessarily means fattened because a man may buy poultry for sale but may also buy birds which are already fattened or partly fattened. Why should not he? If he is buying birds and is going to sell them for slaughter he would not want the birds he buys to get thin, so he would feed them. He may give the birds more food or less food, but he certainly would not let them get thin, and I think that they are being fed for the purpose for which he keeps them because he is going to sell them. If the Ministry of Agriculture want to make an exemption which is not so wide, or to limit it in some way, they must try their hands with some other order; but on the finding that the appellant did feed the poultry I do not think any offence is committed, and for these reasons I would quash the conviction.

DEVLIN J. I agree. If, as Mr. Wingate-Saul submits, the Minister intended that "fed for slaughter" should be equivalent to "fattened"—and that is what the magistrate has found—it is difficult to see why the Minister did not use the word "fattened." It is suggested that if he had used the word "fattened," people might have interpreted that to mean that a bird was not being fattened unless the fat content was increased and the lean content remained stationary. I should have thought the word "fattened" would have conveyed what Mr. Wingate-Saul says the Minister intended it to convey to anybody. But we have to construe the phrase "fed for slaughter," and, like my Lord, I am unable to see why if the bird is given food to prevent it getting thinner that is not just as much "fed for slaughter" as giving it food to fatten it and increase its weight.

For these reasons, I agree with the conclusion my Lord has proposed.

PEARSON J. I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co. for Woolley & Co.; Solicitor, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

C. J. E.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* ROYAL COLLEGE OF NURSING v. ST. MARYLEBONE BOROUGH COUNCIL.

1957
Oct. 16; Dec. 2, 13.

Lord Goddard C.J., Donovan and Havers JJ.

Charity—Profession—Nursing—Rates and rating—"Social welfare"—Royal College of Nursing—Claim for rating relief—Two main objects—Whether both charitable—"Advance of nursing as a "profession"—Meaning—Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955 (4 Eliz. 2, c. 9), s. 8.

The Royal College of Nursing, an organization incorporated by Royal charter, claimed to be entitled to rating relief under section 8 (2) of the Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act,

1957

ROYAL COLLEGE OF NURSING v. ST. MARYLEBONE BOROUGH COUNCIL.

1955, in respect of the premises occupied by the college as hall and offices, as an organization "not established or conducted for profit "and whose main objects are charitable or otherwise concerned "with the advancement of . . . education or social welfare," within section 8 (1). Quarter sessions found (1) that the main objects of the college were those specified in its charter, namely, (a) to promote the science and art of nursing and the better education and training of nurses and their efficiency in the profession of nursing, (b) to promote the advance of nursing as a profession in all or any of its branches; (2) that the first of those two objects was admitted to be charitable and the second (under (b)) was either charitable or otherwise concerned with the advancement of social welfare, as both objects were mutually complementary in that both were directed to a single end, namely, the raising of the standard of nursing for the benefit of the community rather than the promotion of the professional interests of nurses as an end in itself:—

Held, (1) that although there was an ambiguity in the second finding of quarter sessions it could not be read to contradict the first finding, which was clear and unambiguous, and the case must be considered on the footing that there were two main objects.

(2) That "the advance of nursing as a profession" meant to improve the quality and range of the services which nurses gave and therefore to enhance the stature and importance of the nursing profession and the esteem in which it was held; accordingly, object (b), on its true construction, was directed to the advance of nursing and not to advancing the professional interests of nurses, and was charitable, and as the object under object (a) was admittedly so, the college was entitled to relief under section 8.

General Nursing Council for England and Wales v. St. Marylebone Borough Council [1957] 3 W.L.R. 1039; [1957] 3 All E.R. 685 distinguished.

Berry v. St. Marylebone Borough Council [1957] 3 W.L.R. 1029; [1957] 3 All E.R. 677; Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Forrest (1890) 15 App.Cas. 334; 6 T.L.R. 456; Institute of Civil Engineers v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1932] 1 K.B. 149; 47 T.L.R. 466; and Geologists' Association v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue (1928) 14 T.C. 271 considered.

CASE STATED by County of London Quarter Sessions Appeals Committee.

On February 11, 1957, the Royal College of Nursing appealed to the County of London Quarter Sessions pursuant to section 4 of the Poor Relief Act, 1743, against the refusal of the St. Marylebone Borough Council to allow them relief against rates prescribed by section 8 (2) of the Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955, in respect of their hall, offices and premises at Henrietta Place, London.

The appeals committee heard the appeal on April 12, 1957, and found the following facts: The college was incorporated by Royal Charter granted on July 28, 1928. The premises were occupied for the purposes prescribed in article II of the charter which was annexed to and formed part of the case. Article II was as follows: "The purposes for which the college is estab- "lished and incorporated are as follows: . . . (B) to promote . . . "the purposes hereinafter set out and in particular:—(a) To "promote the science and art of nursing and the better education "and training of nurses and their efficiency in the profession of "nursing. (b) To promote the advance of nursing as a profession "in all or any of its branches. (c) To assist nurses who by "reason of adversity ill-health or otherwise are in need of "assistance of any nature. (d) To maintain a Roll of Members "of the College. (e) To institute and conduct examinations in "all branches of women's work conducive to the efficient conduct "of the nursing profession and to grant certificates and diplomas "to those who pass prescribed examinations: . . . (j) To do all "other lawful things as may from time to time be conducive "to the attainment and furtherance of the above objects or any "of them."

Out of a total of approximately 180,000 nurses in the United Kingdom between 42,000 and 43,000 were members of the college. Of the total income in the year ending December 31, 1955, amounting to £85,000 some £40,000 consisted of subscriptions of such members. The activities of the college included (i) the provision of educational facilities designed to improve the knowledge and skill of the nursing profession; (ii) the giving of advice and making of representations to Government Departments on all matters relating to the profession; (iii) the obtaining of good and equitable working conditions for the nursing profession, and (iv) the assistance of nurses who by reason of adversity, ill-health or otherwise were in need of assistance. It was admitted that the college was not established or conducted for profit.

It was contended by the rating authority that each of the objects stated in artice II (B) of the charter under subparagraphs (a), (b) and (c) respectively was a main object of the college. That whereas the objects stated in (a) and (c) were charitable, that in (b) was neither charitable nor concerned with the advancement of social welfare, and that, accordingly, the college was not an organization of the kind contemplated by section 8 (1) (a) of the Act of 1955.

It was contended by the college that the purpose stated in article II (B) of the charter under subparagraph (a) was the main object of the college and the other purposes stated were ancillary thereto. That the main objects of the college were charitable or otherwise concerned with the advancement of social welfare and that, accordingly, the college was an organization of the kind contemplated by section 8 (1) (a) of the Act of 1955.

The appeals committee were of opinion that the main objects of the college were such as to attract the application of section 8 (1) (a) of the Act. The rating authority appealed.

On October 16 the Divisional Court remitted the case to the appeals committee to answer the following questions: (1) What is or are the main object or objects of the college? (2) In the case of such object or objects is it (a) charitable, (b) if not, is it otherwise concerned with the advancement of education, (c) is it otherwise concerned with the advancement of social welfare? The answers returned by the appeals committee were: (1) That the main objects of the college were those set out in article II (B) (a) and (b) of its charter. (2) The objects in article II (B) (a) were admitted to be charitable. They were further of the opinion that the object in article II (B) (b) was either charitable or otherwise concerned with the advancement of social welfare, for they were satisfied on the evidence, written and oral, that the objects in article II (B) (a) and (b) were mutually complementary in that both were directed to a single end, namely, the raising of the standard of nursing for the benefit of the community rather than the promotion of the professional interests of nurses as an end in itself.

1957

ROYAL COLLEGE OF NURSING v. ST. MARYLEBONE BOROUGH COUNCIL.

J. P. Widgery for the rating authority.

Michael Rowe Q.C. and Eric Blain for the Royal College of Nursing.

The cases cited in argument are referred to in the judgment.

Cur. adv. vult.

December 13. LORD GODDARD C.J. Donovan J. will read the judgment of the court.

DONOVAN J. The appellants in this case are the St. Marylebone Borough Council, who are the rating authority for the borough. The respondents are the Royal College of Nursing, a non-profit seeking organization. In January last the appellants rejected a claim by the respondents for rating relief under section 8 of the Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955. The respondents appealed against that refusal to London Quarter Sessions, who allowed the appeal. From that decision the appellants now appeal to this court by way of case stated.

Section 8 provides a measure of rating relief in the case of any hereditament occupied for the purpose of an organization, not conducted for profit, whose main objects are charitable, or are otherwise concerned with the advancement of religion, education or social welfare.

The respondents were incorporated by Royal Charter in 1928, and they occupy for the purposes specified in that charter the hereditament for which they seek rating relief, namely, 1 and 1A, Henrietta Place, London, W. The respondents' charter recites that a petition for incorporation by Royal Charter had been presented to the Sovereign by "The College of Nursing Ltd.," and article I of the charter incorporates the respondents under the title of "The College of Nursing."

Article II then provides as follows: "The purposes for which "the college is established and incorporated are as follows: A. To "acquire and take over all the assets property possessions effects "and liabilities of the said company. B. To promote, by means "of such assets and otherwise, the purposes hereinafter set "out and in particular (a) To promote the science and art of "nursing and the better education and training of nurses and "their efficiency in the profession of nursing. (b) To promote "the advance of nursing as a profession in all or any of its "branches."

It is not necessary for the purposes of this case, which is concerned only with the "main objects" of the respondents, to set out any of the other "purposes" specified in article II (B) of the charter, several of which are, in any event, not purposes at all, but simply powers to effect purposes already specified earlier in the article.

The original decision of quarter sessions was in these terms: "We were of opinion that the main objects of the appellants "were such as to attract the application of section 8 of the Act."

Upon the case coming before us we took the view that the findings should be more specific, and the case was returned to quarter sessions for them to state (1) What is or are the main object or objects of the college? (2) In the case of such object or objects is it (a) charitable, (b) if not, is it otherwise concerned with the advancement of education, (c) is it otherwise concerned with the advancement of social welfare?

Quarter sessions have now answered these questions as follows: "(1) We found that the main objects of the college "were those set out in article II (B) (a) and (b) of its charter. "(2) The objects in article II (B) (a) were admitted to be charit-"able. We were further of opinion that the object in article "II (B) (b) was either charitable or otherwise concerned with "the advancement of social welfare for we were satisfied on the "evidence, written and oral, that the objects in article II (B) (a) "and (b) were mutually complementary in that both were "directed to a single end, namely, the raising of the standard "of nursing for the benefit of the community rather than the "promotion of the professional interests of nurses as an end in "itself."

Between the time when the case was sent back to quarter sessions and the further arguments we have now heard on the amplified findings, two cases on section 8 were heard by the Court of Appeal and certain pronouncements made which it will be convenient here to summarize. (1) To qualify for relief under section 8 all the main objects of an organization must be of the kind specified in the section. If one of such main objects is of a different kind, relief is not due: Berry v. St. Marylebone Borough Council.[1] (2) Where an organization has a written constitution the court should normally resort to that alone to ascertain its objects, though its activities are relevant to an inquiry as to what its main objects are, and this may involve oral evidence of such activities. But once the main objects of an organisation are ascertained, extrinsic evidence is not admissible to limit the proper meaning of the language by which such main objects are described in the written constitution.

[1] [1957] 3 W.L.R. 1029; [1957] 3 All E.R. 677.

1957

ROYAL COLLEGE OF NURSING v. ST. MARYLEBONE BOROUGH COUNCIL.

(3) Once the main objects of an organization have been ascertained, and one of them is not of the kind specified in section 8, rating relief under the section cannot be secured by regarding such main object as ancillary to another main object which is of the kind so specified. Ancillary or not, the one object will still be a main object, and if it is outside the scope of the section relief will not be due. "... it may not be useful "or even possible to try and give a primacy to the one purpose "rather than to the other; and all the more, perhaps, should "the attempt be abandoned in the present case, where the "statute speaks of 'main objects' in the plural": per Lord Evershed M.R. in General Nursing Council for England and Wales v. St. Marylebone Borough Council.[2] On the question of treating one object as paramount and the rest subsidiary and subordinate we might perhaps ourselves add without quoting a reference to what Lord Parker of Waddington said upon this point in Bowman v. Secular Society Ltd.[3]

The rival contentions may now be stated. The appellants say that the object specified in article II (B) (b), that is, the advance of nursing as a profession is now found to be one of the respondents' main objects. The language in which this object is expressed is wide enough to cover the advancement of the professional interests of nurses. The respondents in practice do so construe the language, for the exhibits in the case stated establish that they actively concern themselves with the advancement of such interests. Accordingly, the respondents do not qualify for relief under section 8, for the promotion of the professional interests of nurses is neither a charitable object nor an object otherwise concerned with the advancement of social welfare, albeit that one result of pursuing such an object may be the improvement of the standard of nursing generally: General Nursing Council for England and Wales v. St. Marylebone Borough Council.[4] The respondents, it is said, cannot overcome the difficulty by treating this object as ancillary to some other object, for quarter sessions have found it to be one of the main objects.

The respondents contend that, read as a whole, the finding of quarter sessions really means that there are not two main objects but only one, namely, the raising of the standard of nursing for the benefit of the community. Alternatively, that if there are two main objects, the second is the advancement of nursing as opposed to nurses, and the interests of nurses are looked after simply as a means of attaining this object, not as an end in itself. Whichever view be taken, therefore, of the finding of quarter sessions, the respondents are entitled to the relief they seek.

[2] [1957] 3 W.L.R. 1039, 1044; [1957] 3 All E.R. 685.

[3] [1917] A.C. 406, 443; 33 T.L.R. 376.

[4] [1957] 3 W.L.R. 1039.

There is no ambiguity about the language of paragraph 1 of the further findings of quarter sessions. It says expressly that the college has two main objects. In paragraph 2, however, they seem to suggest that the college has really one object (it is called "a single end"), namely, the raising of the standard of nursing for the benefit of the community; so that the two main "objects" are means to that one end. It is this language which raises a doubt as to the sense in which quarter sessions use the term "objects" in paragraph 1 of their further findings. Curiously enough, however, their language is very similar to that used by A. L. Smith L.J. in Art Union of London Ltd. v. Overseers of the Savoy[5]: "If the other object be only a means "to the one end . . . then the society has a sole and exclusive "object, and not another object subsidiary thereto." (It should be said that this was a dissenting judgment but on a quite different point, namely, whether subscriptions to the Art Union were voluntary contributions. A. L. Smith L.J. thought not, and the House of Lords[6] afterwards unanimously upheld him.) In the face, however, of the clear finding that the college has two main objects we do not feel able to read the second paragraph of the further finding in such a way as to contradict the first. We think we should consider the case on the footing that the respondents have the two main objects found by quarter sessions.

The question then becomes this: Is the second main object, as expressed in the charter, charitable or otherwise concerned with the advancement of social welfare? We have already stated the appellants' contention on this point. It is reinforced by Mr. Widgery in this way. He says it is not right to treat this object as being simply the advance of nursing by means of improving the lot of nurses so as to make them more efficient, for that is already covered by the terms of the first object; and if that were all that was contemplated the second object would be unnecessary.

This argument is cogent, but not, by itself, conclusive. For in documents setting out the objects or purposes of an organization tautology is unfortunately the rule rather than the exception. Things are constantly being expressed as "purposes" or "objects" when they are really no more than powers, or means to effect a purpose or object already expressed. There are several "purposes" in article II which are really no more than powers. Article II (B) (j) is perhaps the clearest example. Furthermore, the opening words of article II are apparently intended to be read together with paragraphs (B) (a) and (b); and so read, the result is this: "The purposes for which the college is established and "incorporated are to promote the purpose of promoting the "science and art of nursing . . . and to promote the promotion

[5] [1894] 2 Q.B. 609, 627; 10 T.L.R. 576.

[6] [1896] A.C. 296; 12 T.L.R. 377.

1957

ROYAL COLLEGE OF NURSING v. ST. MARYLEBONE BOROUGH COUNCIL.

"of the advance of nursing as a profession . . . ," which is hardly the best example of the draftsman's art, and affords no inducement to construe article II as though it were a work of precision with no overlapping at all between its various sub-paragraphs.

Finally, upon this point, the language of article II (B) (b) enables the college to take appropriate steps to increase the numbers of those taking up the vocation of nursing, a very necessary thing, but which, on a strict construction, might be thought to be outside the scope of the language of article II (B) (a). We are not able, therefore, to treat the appellants' argument on this point as decisive.

Mr. Widgery also contended that article II (B) (b) is not only wide enough to cover the advancement of the professional interests of nurses, but is so construed by the respondents in practice. He referred to exhibit C to the case, a publication entitled "Royal College of Nursing. Observations and Objec- "tives." It states under the heading: "Conditions of Service: "The Royal College of Nursing, the largest and most repre- "sentative professional organization for nurses, takes a leading "part in obtaining for them good economic and social conditions. "It does so in the spirit of its Royal Charter: 'to promote "'the advance of nursing as a profession in all or any of its "'branches.'" And: "The College takes a leading part in "obtaining good and equitable working conditions for the profes- "sion, both in the interests of nurses themselves and their service "to the community."

But this work is bound to be done whichever of the rival constructions of article II (B) (b) is correct. If the objective is the advancement of the professional interests of members, then obviously these activities are the working out of that purpose. If, on the other hand, the objective is the advance of nursing as an art, the same work still has to be done because the art of nursing cannot be advanced by an insufficient force of drudges. At any rate that is a reasonable view. Accordingly, one cannot draw a safe conclusion in this case merely by considering these particular activities, for they are consistent with the contentions of both sides.

We return, therefore, to the actual language of the article. If it simply read "to promote the advance of nursing in all or "any of its branches," then the object would be clearly and admittedly charitable. It would be a purpose beneficial to the community and entirely analogous to the charitable objects specified in the preamble to the Statute of Elizabeth. It is the addition of the words "as a profession" which cause the difficulty in the present case and give rise to the dispute.

There have been similar controversies before. The Charter of the Institute of Civil Engineers, for example, states its object to be: "The general advancement of mechanical science, and "more particularly for promoting the acquisition of that species "of knowledge which constitutes the profession of a civil "engineer."

The institute held examinations, awarded prizes, maintained a library of great advantage to consulting engineers, laid down rules of professional conduct, and gave members the exclusive right to use distinguishing letters after their name. The institute appealed to the Special Commissioners of Income Tax against the refusal of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue to afford it exemption from income tax as a body of persons established for charitable purposes only. Before the Special Commissioners there was evidence that the expectation of professional advantage probably prompted engineers to join the institute. The report of the council of the institute for 1926–1927 also contained this passage: "The protection of the interests of members of the "institute is engaging the council's earnest attention. . . . The "council wish to assure the members of their intention to resist "to the utmost any impairment of the liberty of professional "practice now enjoyed by members."[7]

The Special Commissioners, and on appeal Rowlatt J., decided that one object of the institute was to benefit its members, and accordingly it was not established for charitable purposes only.[8] The Court of Appeal reversed this decision.[9] Reference was made to an earlier case, Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Forrest,[10] where the House of Lords had held that the institute was relieved from duty upon annual value under the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885, as being a body corporate whose property was appropriated and applied for the promotion of . . . science, and not for the benefit of civil engineers. There too it had been contended unsuccessfully against the institute that its main purpose was to promote the interests of civil engineers. Dealing with this Lord Macnaghten said in Forrest's case[11]: "The question at issue may be stated shortly. Is the property "of the Institution of Civil Engineers legally appropriated and "applied for the promotion of the science of civil engineering, "or is it legally appropriated and applied for the benefit of civil "engineers in order to enable them to practise their profession to "greater advantage?" The majority of the House had answered the first of these questions in the affirmative and the second in the negative.

The Court of Appeal in Institute of Civil Engineers v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue[12] held that the position was still the same. Lord Hanworth M.R. and Lawrence and Romer L.JJ. applied the same test as that laid down by Lord Macnaghten[13] and held that the purpose of the institute was the promotion

[7] Institute of Civil Engineers v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue (1932) 16 T.C. 158, 165.

[8] 16 T.C. 158.

[9] [1932] 1 K.B. 149; 47 T.L.R. 466; 16 T.C. 158.

[10] (1890) 15 App.Cas. 334; 6 T.L.R. 456.

[11] 15 App.Cas. 334.

[12] [1932] 1 K.B. 149; 47 T.L.R. 466.

[13] Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Forrest, 15 App.Cas. 334, 354.

1957

ROYAL COLLEGE OF NURSING v. ST. MARYLEBONE BOROUGH COUNCIL.

of the science of civil engineering and not the interests of civil engineers. It was true that civil engineers benefited professionally from their membership, but that was simply a consequence of the way in which the institute pursued its charitable purpose.

In 1952 the House of Lords had to decide whether the Royal College of Surgeons of England was a charity.[14] The objects of the college were not set out separately in its charter; they had to be extracted from a recital in it. The relevant words were these: "The due promotion and encouragement of the study and "practice of the said art and science," that is, of surgery. The House of Lords, reversing the decision of the Court of Appeal, held that the words did not include the promotion of the professional interests of surgeons. If those interests were benefited, that was simply a consequence of the work done by the college which was the promotion of the art and science of surgery by education both practical and theoretical. It is right to say that Lord Cohen[15] took a different view, namely, that the disciplinary and "defence" activities of the college were themselves "objects" of the college not ancillary to the main charitable object, and that the appeal of the college ought therefore to fail.

For present purposes the decision is material in that the House of Lords tacitly approved the decision of the Court of Appeal in Institute of Civil Engineers v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue,[16] and that Lord Morton regarded it as important that nowhere in the charter of the College of Surgeons could one find a statement that one of the objects of the college was the promotion of the interests of individuals carrying on the profession of surgeons.

Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Yorkshire Agricultural Society[17] was also cited to us, but need not be dealt with at length. The Crown's allegation in that case that one of the society's objects was to benefit its members rested not upon the language in which its objects were set forth but upon the rules of the society and the privileges provided for members pursuant to them. A passage from the judgment of Atkin L.J. is, however, of importance. He says[18]: "There can be no doubt that a "society formed for the purpose merely of benefiting its own "members, though it may be to the public advantage that its "members should be benefited by being educated or having their "aesthetic tastes improved or whatever the object may be, would "not be for a charitable purpose, and if it were a substantial "part of the object that it should benefit its members I should "think that it would not be established for a charitable purpose "only. But, on the other hand, if the benefit given to its mem-"bers is only given to them with a view of giving encouragement "and carrying out the main purpose which is a charitable purpose, "then I think the mere fact that the members are benefited [14] Royal College of Surgeons v. National Provincial Bank Ltd. [1952] A.C. 631; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 978; [1952] 1 All E.R. 984.

[15] [1952] A.C. 631, 675.

[16] [1932] 1 K.B. 149.

[17] [1928] 1 K.B. 611; 44 T.L.R. 59.

[18] [1928] 1 K.B. 611, 631.

"in the course of promoting the charitable purpose would not "prevent the society being established for charitable purposes "only. That I imagine to be this case."

This was followed in 1928 by Geologists' Association v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue.[19] The actual decision, namely, that it was an association for the benefit of its members, which advanced the science of geology only incidentally, is not of importance for present purposes. But in the course of his judgment in the Court of Appeal Greer L.J. said this[20]: "It was "interesting to note how those who argued the case for the "appellants found it necessary to contend that there can in law "be only two kinds of society, one a society whose object was "the cultivation of the interests of its members and another a "society whose sole object is of a public or charitable object. It "seems to me that there may be associations in between these "two, associations with two objects, one being the promotion of "an object which is charitable and the other being the promotion "of the interests of the individual members of the association. "Then it becomes a question which is one of some degree. There "may be a question of fact, or it may be a question of law upon "the evidence given, as to whether the benefits conferred upon "the members of the society are only incidental to the public "objects of the society, or whether, on the other hand, they are "largely intended, or mainly intended, for the benefit of the "members. If you come to the conclusion, as you may in many "cases, that one of the ways in which the public objects of an "association can be served is by giving special advantages to the "members of the association, then the association does not cease "to be an association with a charitable object because incidentally "and in order to carry out the charitable object it is both necessary and desirable to confer special benefits upon the members. "That is the view expressed by Atkin L.J. in the case of Inland "Revenue Commissioners v. Yorkshire Agricultural Society,[21] "and it is a view with which I entirely agree."

Here Greer L.J.[22] is contemplating two objects, one of which is to give benefit to members of the organization, and he appears to say that if that is done simply as a necessary and desirable way of carrying out the charitable object, then the organization would not cease to be an association with a charitable object. In this context of income tax that would mean "a charitable "purpose only."

Bearing all these matters in mind, the question we have to answer is this: Is the second object of the respondents as expressed in article II (B) (b) of its charter the advancement of nursing or the advancement of the interests of nurses? This is purely a question of construction of the language used. In favour of the respondents' construction this may be said, namely, that the actual words are "the advancement of nursing." But they

[19] (1928) 14 T.C. 271.
[20] Ibid. 283.
[21] [1928] 1 K.B. 611, 631.
[22] 14 T.C. 271, 283.

1957

ROYAL COLLEGE OF NURSING v. ST. MARYLEBONE BOROUGH COUNCIL.

are followed by the words "as a profession," and the problem really narrows down to the effect of these words.

What is meant by the advance of some particular calling as a profession? If, for example, one says that in the last 50 years there has been a striking advance in the profession of accountancy, what idea is conveyed? Presumably this, that the profession has greatly increased in stature, importance, membership and general esteem, not simply that the fees have gone up, although that might be assumed as a consequence. How, then, is a profession to be "advanced" in this sense? The answer is, by service. Demands for more pay and better conditions for those engaged, however loud and persistent, and even successful, will not "advance" the profession in the sense we have defined. But improvement in the quality and range of services rendered, and the spectacle of constant endeavour to do better, will certainly have that effect. If, then, one finds an organization one of whose objects is to advance nursing as a profession, there is no great difficulty in interpreting this as meaning to improve the quality and range of the services which nurses give and so to enhance the stature and importance of the nursing profession and the esteem in which it is held. It may well be, of course, that in order to improve nursing services you must attract more entrants into the profession, which in turn will mean improvements in pay and conditions. But such improvements will be means, not ends.

One may look at the matter, perhaps, from another angle also. Suppose that the draftsman had submitted article II (B) (b) to the respondents in a form which read "To promote the advance "of nursing in all its branches," and no more, he might reasonably have been asked: "Is this language enough to enable us "to look after the conditions under which nurses work, for to "improve their conditions is one of the most important ways in "which nursing can be advanced?" And to that he might reasonably have answered: "Well, I will add the words 'as a "'profession,' which will be wide enough to cover the point." In such circumstances the object would still be the advance of nursing.

On the other hand, if the respondents' object were to advance the professional interests of nurses, they might well say: "Why "do we wish to speak about the advance of nursing? Let us "simply say 'To promote the interests of all those in the nursing "'profession.'" There is no avowal here in such clear terms of such an object, as there was not in the case of the College of Surgeons, a fact to which Lord Morton drew attention.[23]

If the article now in question is to be regarded as ambiguous, so that surrounding circumstances may be looked at to help to resolve the ambiguity, then two matters would seem to be important: (1) that the respondents are a college giving full time education in the art and science of nursing, and are not an organization called into being simply to protect and improve the pay and working conditions of nurses; and (2) that quarter sessions seem to have found that under the article in question the activities of the respondents are directed to the raising of the standard of nursing, rather than to the promotion of the interests of nurses as an end in itself.

[23] Royal College of Surgeons v. National Provincial Bank Ltd. [1952] A.C. 631, 655.

The problem here presented is one where no doubt there is room for two views, and in most of the cases we have referred to there was a divergence of judicial opinion. The present case, however, is a somewhat special one, and in the end we have come to the conclusion that upon its true construction article II (B) (b) is directed to the advance of nursing, and not to the advance of the professional interests of nurses. That means that this second main object of the respondents is charitable.

If that be right, there is no conflict between this decision and the recent decision of the Court of Appeal in General Nursing Council for England and Wales v. St. Marylebone Borough Council.[24] On different facts it was there held that the professional benefit of nurses was a main object of the council. For the reasons we have given we do not think it is so in the case of the respondents.

Having arrived at this conclusion, we may mention, although the fact is not referred to in the case, that both sides informed us that ever since 1936 the respondents have been regarded by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue as a body of persons established for charitable purposes only, and so exempt from income tax. In 1936 the same point as has now come before us was argued out before the Special Commissioners, who took a similar view to that we have now taken about article II (B) (b), and the Crown acquiesced in this decision and have done so ever since. We have not been influenced by this in coming to our own view, but we cannot help thinking that the college would have been well advised, after the challenge in 1936, suitably to amend the article in question so as to make its meaning clear. Perhaps their failure to do so is another piece of evidence showing that the respondents do not have as one of their main objects the promotion of the interests of their members as an end in itself. We dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.
Leave to appeal granted.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co.; Charles Russell & Co.

E. M. W.

[24] [1957] 3 W.L.R. 1039.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1957
Dec. 9.

Lord Evershed M.R., Romer and Ormerod L.JJ.

* HAREWOOD HOTELS LTD. v. HARRIS.

[Plaint No. L. 129.]

Landlord and Tenant—Business premises (Security of tenure)—Terms of new tenancy—Rent—Hotel—Rent at which holding might "reasonably be expected to be let in open market by willing lessor"—Evidence as to hotel's profits in previous years—Admissible as indication of earning capacity to potential lessee — Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 (2 & 3 Eliz. 2, c. 56), s. 34.

Landlord and Tenant—Business premises (Security of tenure)—Costs—Application to county court to settle terms of new tenancy—Discretion.

At the hearing of an application by the tenants of an hotel for the grant of a new tenancy under the provisions of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, the only matters in dispute were the length of the term and the rent which the tenants should pay. The landlord had offered a grant at £750 a year for a term of seven years and the tenants had offered to pay £450 a year for a term of 14 years. The county court judge found for the landlord on the first issue and ordered a grant for seven years; but he directed that the rent payable should be £450 for the first three years and £500 for the remainder. The landlord appealed, contending that in fixing the rent the judge had wrongly admitted evidence of the trading accounts of the hotel during the previous five years, and further that he had misdirected himself in awarding to the tenants half of their costs:—

Held, dismissing the appeal, (1) that in fixing the rent in accordance with section 34 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954,[1] the evidence of the trading accounts was rightly admitted and given weight as an indication of the earning capacity of the hotel to a potential lessee, but it would not be admissible for any other purpose in estimating at what rent the property might be let in the open market.

(2) That although the length of the term which the judge ordered was less than that suggested by the tenants, who had, therefore, to that extent been unsuccessful, the rent payable was much nearer to their figure than that offered by the landlord, and the judge had not misdirected himself in awarding them half of their costs.

Le Witt v. Brookes [1956] 1 W.L.R. 1438; [1956] 3 All E.R. 676 distinguished.

[1] Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, s. 34: "The rent payable under a "tenancy granted by order of the "court under this Part of this Act "shall be such as may be agreed ". . . or as, in default of such agree-"ment, may be determined by the "court to be that at which, having "regard to the terms of the tenancy "(other than those relating to rent), "the holding might reasonably be "expected to be let in the open market by a willing lessor, there being "disregarded (a) any effect on rent "of the fact that the tenant has or "his predecessors in title have been "in occupation of the holding, (b) "any goodwill attached to the hold-"ing by reason of the carrying on "thereat of the business of the ten-"ant. . . . (c) any effect on rent of "any improvement carried out by the "tenant . . ." (d) [relates to licensed "premises].

APPEAL from Judge Glazebrook sitting at Tunbridge Wells County Court.

On April 20, 1955, Harewood Hotels Ltd. applied to the Tunbridge Wells County Court for a new tenancy under the provisions of Part II of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, of the premises which they occupied as hoteliers. The premises, which were known as the Harewood Hotel, comprised three adjacent individual structures—Nos. 30, 31 and 32, London Road, Tunbridge Wells—in a row of six. All six had originally been comparable properties, built probably as private dwellings, but the middle properties had been knocked into one to form the hotel and an addition had been made at the back of part of that property. Harewood Hotels Ltd. (hereinafter called "the "tenants") were in occupation of the combined hotel structure under a lease dated August 1, 1935, for 19 years 6 months, expiring February 1, 1955, at a rent of £300 a year. The landlord, Horatio Harris, served a notice on December 20, 1954, terminating the continuance of the tenancy on June 24, 1955. The tenants proposed a new lease for a term of 14 years at a rent of £400 a year, or £450 if the liability to do painting was transferred to the landlord. The landlord did not oppose the grant of a new tenancy but he contended that the term should be for seven years, and that the rent should be £750 a year.

At the hearing before the county court judge the evidence was in three categories. The tenants' managing director in the course of his evidence put in, and referred to, the trading account of the hotel showing the financial results of his operations as a hotelier in the premises during the preceding five years. Secondly, there was expert evidence given by two surveyors on behalf of the tenants as to what in their opinion would be a fair rent that a willing lessor would accept in the open market in the circumstances. Thirdly, there was evidence of actual offers received by the landlord for the other premises in the row, but not for all three together. The county court judge gave judgment for the landlord on the issue of the length of the term and ordered a grant for seven years. He ordered that the rent should be £450 for three years (the painting obligations being transferred to the landlord), rising to £500 for the next four years.

The landlord appealed.

M. A. King-Hamilton Q.C. and N. E. Wiggins (with him Aron Owen) for the landlord.

Dudley Collard for the tenants.

In addition to the case referred to in the judgment, the following were cited in argument: In re 52/56, Osnaburgh Street, and In re 23/43, *Longford Street, N.W.*1 [2]; Weinbaum v. Klein [3]; Kay (John) v. Kay.[4]

[2] (1957) 169 E.G. 656.

[3] 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 414; [1950] 1 All E.R. 353.

[4] [1952] 2 Q.B. 258; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 766; [1952] 1 All E.R. 813.

C. A.
1957
HAREWOOD HOTELS LTD. v. HARRIS.

LORD EVERSHED M.R. stated the facts and said: The judge undoubtedly took account of all the three heads of evidence in reaching his conclusion. If the extent of the emphasis which he gave to any one of them be measured by the mere number of lines used, it may be said that he paid more attention to the evidence about the experience of the tenants' managing director than to some of the other matters. He undoubtedly did take account of what those figures showed. For what purpose he took account of them, I will say presently. He also clearly took account of the third matter, namely, the offers received for the other premises. Finally, he took account (and I think for myself that in the end of all he placed perhaps most reliance upon this) of the expert evidence, and expressed in this regard a preference for the tenants' experts to the landlord's experts, whom he described as optimistic, but not in fact so well-acquainted with this particular type of subject-matter.

The challenge has been first (and this is the really significant question that we have to decide) upon the admissibility at all of the first item of evidence. Before I read the relevant parts of the section and consider that matter, it is, I think, as well to bear in mind that, this being an appeal from a county court judge's decision, the matter is covered, and the extent or scope of the appeal is limited, by the terms of section 105 of the County Courts Act, 1934, save so far as it is amended and altered by section 12 of the Act of 1955. In my judgment, it is tolerably plain from those sections that it is not open to an appellant, upon such a matter as this, to complain merely of the weight which the judge attached, in arriving at a conclusion, to individual matters or subjects of evidence themselves admissible. It is not, in other words, like an appeal, say, from a High Court upon a matter of fact, where the real case is that the conclusion turns out to be against the proper weight of the evidence. As I understand these sections, it is incumbent upon Mr. King-Hamilton to show—and he has indeed assumed the burden of showing—that there was here some misdirection of himself by the judge amounting to an error in law. That, indeed, is the burden of this first point which I have already indicated, namely, that the judge did misdirect himself by giving weight to matters of fact which were in truth wholly inadmissible.

[His Lordship read section 34 as set out above and continued:] It has been Mr. King-Hamilton's main argument that the terms of paragraph (a), upon their ordinary sense, must exclude any evidence at all about the occupation of the tenant; because its only possible admission could be to affect the rent; and it is said, according to the argument, that one cannot allow the quantum of rent to be affected in any way by considerations derived from the tenant's occupation. If that argument is right, then I think it would follow that the judge here must be treated as having in that regard misdirected himself; and even though, in the end of all, the right sum should turn out not to be very different from that awarded, still, I think that Mr. King-Hamilton would be entitled to have the matter remitted for reconsideration. But I am not for my part able to go as far with Mr. King-Hamilton as to produce a total exclusion of any evidence based upon or derived from the tenant's previous occupation.

In the course of his reply, Mr. King-Hamilton referred us to a passage in Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant, second permanent supplement, 1957, Vol. 1, at p. 71, where the author, having cited this paragraph, says: "This seems to dispose equally of "any accretion to the rent attributable to such occupation (the "premises have to be envisaged as empty premises in the market) "and of the 'sitting tenant' concession which was sometimes "allowed for in assessing a 'reasonable' rent under the Act of "1951." I am entirely willing to accept that passage; but it does not seem to me to serve the purpose for which Mr. King-Hamilton invokes it. If the evidence was led for the purpose of showing that these tenants ought to be granted some concession because of some particular hardship that they had suffered, that might be another matter; and I agree also that the terms of the paragraph serve to exclude the consideration that a tenant might be expected to be willing to pay rather more than an outsider because he would not wish to be disturbed in his occupation. But, in my judgment, it is plainly legitimate for a judge to hear evidence which bears upon the question which he has to decide, namely: what would the particular holding reasonably be expected to be let at in the open market? Plainly, I should have thought, in arriving at a conclusion upon that question, it is legitimate to hear evidence of what similar premises which are being let for a particular purpose (as the one in suit is) can be expected to earn for a potential lessee in the market in the place where the premises are; and, if so, then similar evidence is, in my judgment, admissible for proving the same point about the premises in suit. In other words, if the purpose of the evidence of the figures was for that limited objective, then I think for my part that they were perfectly admissible and that no objection can be made to them.

It is significant that the landlord himself sought before the trial to see the figures; and if it had turned out that the business of letting this sort of accommodation in Tunbridge Wells was there shown by that evidence to be a very profitable one—that is to say, if it was proper to infer from such evidence that letting rooms of this kind in Tunbridge Wells was a profitable business—then it would be, I should have thought, proper for the judge to infer that in the open market a person seeking to take a lease of premises for this purpose would be expected to pay an appropriately large rent.

In this particular case it appears that the letting of the Harewood Hotel during the last five years was not particularly profitable. As appears from what the judge says, the kind of

C. A.
1957
HAREWOOD HOTELS LTD. v. HARRIS.
Lord Evershed M.R.

persons who will take the rooms are largely people who have retired. Apart from some who go there during certain special seasons, they are not, therefore, the class of persons from whom high rates can be taken. The judge also was able to draw attention to the physical circumstances of the hotel, for he visited it with the consent, and indeed in the company, of counsel for both sides. He pointed out that it was one which was somewhat old-fashioned: its furnishings were old-fashioned, and it had no lift. It seems to me that the purpose for which the judge used this evidence was just that which I have tried to indicate, namely, to enable him to form a conclusion, based on the experience of these particular premises, of what sort of rent this kind of property, let as a hotel in Tunbridge Wells, would in the open market bring to a willing lessor.

The judge said: "Accounts could not be of any value unless "I was satisfied the place was properly run"; and he went on to say that so far as he could judge it was properly run. He said that it was old-fashioned. Then he dealt with the custom, which I have already mentioned. "Tunbridge Wells is a place retired "people tend to come to." Then he said: "Solution from an "economic point of view may be that residents are under-"charged"—unless you put up the price to residents you cannot put up the price to visitors; and that limits the type of service which can be provided. The judge said that it was a difficult kind of place to run, with three staircases and all the extra cleaning, and after referring to the fall in the value of money, he came, as being relevant to the same question, to the evidence with regard to the other houses, 28, 29 and 33. In that context, I am not prepared to say that the judge used this material in any way illegitimately. I think that he was simply trying to find out what property of this kind in Tunbridge Wells, offered to a potential lessee for a hotel, would be likely to fetch in the open market. It is true that he used the conclusion which he reached as to the amount of profit such a person could make as supporting the view he took of preference for the experts called by the tenants; but that again, I think, was a legitimate use of it.

I, therefore, am not persuaded that, in referring to these figures for the purpose for which he did, and in the way in which he did, the judge did that which paragraph (a) of section 34 told him he was not entitled to do. That ground, therefore, seems to me not to suffice. I add that if paragraph (a) has the wide significance for which Mr. King-Hamilton contends, then paragraph (b) at any rate would appear to be otiose.

Then Mr. King-Hamilton placed (and naturally placed) considerable emphasis on the third head of evidence which I have mentioned—the actual offers for the other premises, 28, 29 and 33. There is no doubt that that evidence, on the face of it, is impressive. Putting it quite briefly, but not inaccurately, it may be summarized in this way: that the landlord was receiving, in answer to his advertisements, offers, in respect of a single one of these houses in the row—and a house which provided less accommodation in fact than two of the three which comprised the Harewood Hotel—at figures of £250 a year or thereabouts (rising after a certain period); from which it might well be said that one could and should treble that figure at least if the offer was not for one single house but was for three combined to constitute one hotel.

I will say at once that, so far as I am able to form an opinion without having seen or heard the witnesses, I get the impression that the figure which the judge eventually hit upon—£450—strikes me as being on the low side, particularly in the light of what I may call these other comparable offers. But it would be, I think, a fallacy to suppose that if £X per annum is offered for No. 28, at least X multiplied by three would be a fair figure to fix for the Harewood Hotel. It may be that, for one reason or another, the smaller premises are more attractive; but in any case that is a matter not of error of law, I think, but of weight. The judge heard, on the other side, the strong view of the surveyors who gave evidence for the tenants that these figures which apparently had been offered—and there is no doubt of the genuineness of the offers—were, for some reason or another, surprising and extraordinary; and neither of these surveyors would, according to their own view, have advised any client of theirs to make such an offer. However, the result is that the judge, although he took account of those offers, did not feel, in the light of everything else that he had put before him, that they ought to be the final arbiters, so to speak, of the figure to be arrived at. At the end of his judgment he expressed his difficulty: "I find it difficult to make up my mind, bearing in mind the "terms of the section and what I have to put out of my mind" —a phrase which seems to me to indicate that he had well in the forefront of his mind the excluding words of the paragraph in section 34. Having so instructed himself, he came to the conclusion that £450 for this property, in this place, was the sum which the holding might reasonably be expected to let for in the open market by a willing lessor. If I am right in the view that I take as to the matters of law, the only criticism that can be made is that, as a matter of fact, as a mere question of weight of evidence, that figure might be criticized as being too low; but such a criticism, if valid (and I am not saying that it is) is not one which is available in this court to the landlord.

That being so, the only other matter is that of costs. After stating his conclusion in the passage which I have reached in the judgment, the judge then ordered the landlord to pay half of the tenants' costs. It is, of course, too well known to need anything more than mere statement that the question of costs prima facie is one entirely within the discretion of the judge. But Mr. King-Hamilton argued that such an award must have been a non-judicial exercise of the discretion—that £450 for seven years was

C. A.
1957
HAREWOOD HOTELS LTD. v. HARRIS.
Lord Evershed M.R.

something very different from that which the tenants had themselves offered, which was £400, possibly £450 (with the painting obligations transferred), not for seven years but for 14 years, a period twice as long. We were referred to Le Witt v. Brookes,[1] in which this court had set aside a county court judge's award in the matter of costs: but in that case it was made quite plain that what the judge had done was to say that if a landlord's offer turned out to be less favourable than that which the court awarded, then the tenant prima facie was entitled to the costs as though the landlord had paid into court, in an action for damages against him, a sum less than the figure ultimately awarded; and the court had little difficulty in saying that that principle was quite inapplicable. As Denning L.J. pointed out in his leading judgment, it was a question for the county court judge to consider in the exercise of his discretion to what extent the offers made on the one side or the other were reasonable approaches to his conclusion.

In this case I am quite unable to say that there has been any misdirection in the matter: the judge has, in the exercise of his discretion, applied for himself the proper test. It is clear from what I have said on this matter of rent that he took the view that the tenants' evidence was a far nearer approximation to the right result than that of the landlord. It is quite true that the judge rejected the tenants' claim for a 14 years' lease as against seven years; but I think that that is reflected in the circumstance that he did not give the tenants all their costs but only half of them. In the circumstances, I am quite unable to see any grounds upon which this court ought to review the order which the judge made as to costs.

For the reasons which I have given, I think that this appeal must be dismissed.

ROMER L.J. I agree; and I only want to add a very few words on one aspect of this case which appears to me to be the only point of any general importance that has arisen. It arises out of Mr. King-Hamilton's submission that the judge was in error in looking, for any purpose, to the accounts of this hotel company which were placed before him in the quest which he was undertaking for the proper rent to be fixed under section 34 of the Act of 1954. Mr. King-Hamilton's contention is that the accounts of the company were, by inference, barred from consideration as irrelevant under paragraphs (a) and (b) of section 34. I cannot take that view of the matter at all. It seems to me that paragraphs (a) and (b) are really directed to saying that (for example) the fact that the sitting tenant has been in occupation for some time past and has built up a goodwill is to be disregarded in assessing the rent which he is to pay under his new lease. Normally, of course, a man who is in the position of sitting tenant and has built up a business and been there for some years and established himself would be prepared to pay a higher rent than anybody else then coming in for the first time. It is that kind of thing, in my view, to which paragraphs (a) and (b) are directed. But I cannot find anything in the language of those provisions which renders it irrelevant to look at such material as the accounts of this company as part of the material on which the judge must make up his mind as to what rent might reasonably be expected to be obtained for the premises in the open market. I should have thought that one of the first things that anybody who was going to set up a hotel business in this type of premises in this locality would want to know would be what prospects he had of making a good thing out of it, and, therefore, what rent he would be prepared to pay for the premises—if, indeed, he decided to take a tenancy of the premises at all. I cannot see any ground, either on common sense or the language of the section, upon which that consideration should be relegated to the realm of the irrelevant. I do not think that the judge would be entitled to look at the accounts for the purpose of seeing what the company could afford to pay. Mr. King-Hamilton suggested that that really was what the judge did in the present case—that he looked to see what profit they made in one year and what loss they made in another year, and so on, and said that this company, having regard to those figures, ought not to be expected to pay more than a particular rent. I should be disposed to agree that that was wrong, if the judge did it; but I do not think that he did it at all. He came to the conclusion that this hotel was being run efficiently; he came to the conclusion—and indeed it was agreed on all hands—that the premises could only be used as an hotel, and then, for the purpose which I have mentioned of seeing what a new person, an outsider, would pay as rent for these premises, he looked into the question of what kind of prospects, having regard to the law of supply and demand, this hotel would have. I am quite in agreement with the Master of the Rolls that the judge was justified in looking at the accounts for that purpose. It is not suggested that he dismissed all other considerations from his mind. He shows in the judgment that he did take into account other matters—the evidence of the experts and the offers which had been made for the adjoining property, which, although comparable in some sense, could hardly be described as completely comparable, and were certainly not offers in relation to these premises themselves. The weight which the judge should attribute to those respective considerations—so long as he bore them all in mind—appears to me to be primarily a matter for him; and I cannot see that he went wrong on any point of law in this case either in disregarding matters which he ought to have regarded, or in having regarded matters of which he ought to have taken no notice at all.

[1] [1956] 1 W.L.R. 1438; [1956] 3 All E.R. 676.

I agree with the Master of the Rolls in thinking that this appeal fails; and I have nothing to add to what he has said on the various other points, including that of costs, which were argued before us.

C. A.
1957
HAREWOOD HOTELS LTD. v. HARRIS.

ORMEROD L.J. I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Dod, Longstaffe & Fenwick; Templer, Thomson & Passmore, Tunbridge Wells.

E. D.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1957
Nov. 22, 26, 27.
Harman J.

*COUTTS & CO. v. DUNTROON INVESTMENT CORPORATION LTD. AND ANOTHER.

[1957 C. 2131.]

Mortgage—Interest restriction—Interest in arrear for more than 21 days —Arrears subsequently paid—Whether statutory protection revived —Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 7 (a).

Mortgage—Interest restriction—Apportionment of principal money—Division of dwelling-house into six flats — Meaning of "other "lands" in Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 12 (5).

Landlord and Tenant — Rent restriction — Premises within the Acts — Dwelling-house subsequently divided into six flats—Date for assessing rateable value—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 71), s. 7.

By a registered charge, dated July 9, 1947, a dwelling-house divided into six flats was charged with the payment of £10,000 with interest payable at six-monthly intervals. The dwelling-house had originally been a single private house but was divided in or before 1947 into the said six flats, each being separately rated, of which four, by reason of their rateable value, fell outside the protection of the Rent Restriction Acts. In 1956 the mortgagees served notice to apportion the principal moneys between those flats which were and those which were not within the protection of the Acts: £2,206 being the sum apportioned to the protected flats and £7,794 to those unprotected. Arbitration subsequently confirmed the apportionment.

Notice was served under section 12 (5) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, which provides that "When a mortgage comprises one or more dwelling-houses to which "this Act applies and other land . . . the mortgagee may apportion "the principal money secured by the mortgage between such "dwelling-houses and such other land. . . ." On July 12, 1957, notice was given calling in the apportioned sum of £7,794, and on the same day the mortgagees issued an originating summons claiming payment of the said £7,794. There was on July 9, 1957, a payment of interest due on the whole principal sum, and this the mortgagor failed to pay within 21 days; it was subsequently paid on July 31, 1957, and acknowledged as payment on account by the mortgagees, who on the same day gave notice calling in the entire principal sum on the ground that there had been default of 21 days in payment of interest and, therefore, the Rent Restriction Acts no longer prevented the enforcement of the mortgage. On September 13, 1957, the originating summons was amended to claim £10,000, and in the alternative £7,794 with interest in each case:—

---

[Reported by JENNIFER L. WEST, Barrister-at-Law.]

Held, (1) that the mortgagees were entitled to enforce the whole of their security since the interest on the principal sum having once been 21 days in arrear the protection of the Rent Restriction Acts was removed and could not thereafter be restored by any subsequent payment of the interest.

Dictum of Russell J. in Evans v. Horner [1925] Ch. 177 at p. 178 applied.

Nicols v. Walters [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1516 followed.

Wallace v. Fogarty [1926] 1 I.R. 255 not followed.

(2) In the alternative, that "other land" referred to in section 12 (5) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, meant property comprised in the mortgage not being dwelling-houses to which the Act applied, so that the mortgagees were entitled to claim payment of £7,794 in respect of the four flats not within the protection of the Rent Acts. Further, the arbitrator was justified in finding as a fact that four of the flats were outside the protection of the Acts, the first rating assessments having been made in 1947, and that being the correct date for consideration under section 7 of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939.

(3) That the amendment of the originating summons on September 13 was defective since the interest was not on July 12, when the summons was issued, 21 days in arrear, and the plaintiff could not by amendment claim a remedy not available at the date of the issue of the originating summons, but, no objection having been taken and evidence having been filed, the mortgagees must be treated as having issued a fresh summons on September 13 for the full amount.

Originating summons.

The plaintiffs, Coutts & Co., claimed as mortgagees by originating summons that the first defendants, Duntroon Investment Corporation Ltd., the mortgagors, and the second defendant, Donald Robert Ivor Campbell, the surety for the mortgagors, should pay to the mortgagees the principal sum of £7,794 secured by a registered first legal charge upon the property known as 4, Holland Park, Kensington, and apportioned upon June 4, 1957, by an arbitration award together with interest at the rate of $3\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. per annum from July 9, 1957, until payment. The summons was issued on July 12, 1957, and was amended by leave of the master on September 13, 1957, to claim payment of £10,000 (the whole principal sum secured by the mortgage) or, alternatively, the payment of £7,794 (the aforesaid apportioned sum).

The facts, as found by his Lordship, were that there was a registered charge, dated July 9, 1947, upon the property, which was at that date divided into six flats, to secure the payment of £10,000 with interest thereon at $3\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. per annum payable at six monthly intervals on January 9 and July 9. The first defendants became the registered proprietors of the property on September 2, 1947.

1957

COUTTS & Co. v. DUNTROON INVESTMENT CORPORATION LTD.

On May 17, 1956, the mortgagees served notice on the first defendants under section 12 (5) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, to apportion the sum of £10,000 between the six flats, £2,206 being apportioned to the flats to which the Act applied, and £7,794 to the four flats outside the Act. The flats had previously been assessed for rates at figures which put the four flats outside the scope of the Act, the whole property having previously been rated at the sum of £288. The apportionment was objected to by the mortgagors but the arbitrator, to whom reference was then made, gave his award on June 4, 1957, agreeing with the principles upon which the apportionment had been made.

On July 12, 1957, notice was given calling in the apportioned sum of £7,794 and the originating summons was issued to enforce the covenant to pay in respect of the said principal sum. On July 9, 1957, three days before, an instalment of interest became due and remained in arrear for a period exceeding 21 days. It was subsequently paid on July 31, and acknowledged by the mortgagees as a payment on account.

On July 31, also, the mortgagees gave notice calling in the principal sum of £10,000 on the grounds that there had been default for 21 days in the payment of interest and the Rent Restriction Acts, therefore, no longer prevented the enforcement of the mortgage. On September 13 the originating summons was amended in order to include the second claim.

S. W. Templeman for the mortgagees.

N. C. Tapp and D. H. Farquharson for the defendants.

Cases cited in argument and not referred to in the judgment: Martin v. Watson and Egan[1]; Glasgow Iron and Steel Co. v. Dickson[2]; Temple v. National Mutual Life Association of Australasia Ltd.[3]; Benninga (Mitcham) Ltd. v. Bijstra[4]; Woozley v. Woodall Smith.[5]

HARMAN J. (having stated the facts) continued: On September 13, the originating summons was amended in order to include the second claim and it seems to me that in that the mortgagees were clearly wrong. At the date when they issued their summons there was admittedly no claim to the whole £10,000. No interest was 21 days in arrear. But supposing it to be true—and I think it is—that there was 21 days' default by August 1, the right course was to issue a fresh summons in respect of that. An amendment cannot be made to include a right which was not a right existing at the date of the issue of the writ, and I see no difference between an originating summons and a writ for

[1] [1919] 2 I.R. 534.

[2] [1925] A.C. 790; 41 T.L.R. 644.

[3] [1955] 2 Q.B. 461; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 264; [1955] 2 All E.R. 758.

[4] [1946] K.B. 58; 61 T.L.R. 519: [1945] 2 All E.R. 433.

[5] [1950] 1 K.B. 325; 66 (Pt. 1) T.L.R. 99; [1949] 2 All E.R. 1055.

this purpose. It is not right to say—and it is not the fact—that at the date when the summons was issued on July 12 this right had accrued to the mortgagees. Consequently, that is at least a technical defect, but no objection was ever taken to the amendment, and evidence has been filed and the matter has gone forward without notice being taken of that defect, which is nevertheless a real one. If necessary I propose to treat the mortgagees as having issued a fresh summons for the amended amount on September 13, the date when they amended their original originating summons. I think this matter only goes to costs.

But there are other points taken by the mortgagors. The first point is this: that at the date when the summons was amended, namely, September 13, no interest was due—it had been paid on August 1. The Act therefore if it ever did cease to apply to the mortgagors, had become applicable to them again, and the statute accordingly prevents the enforcement of the mortgage. That argument depends on section 7 of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, which says: "It shall not be lawful for any mortgagee under a mortgage "to which this Act applies, so long as (a) interest at the rate "permitted under this Act is paid and is not more than 21 days "in arrear . . . to call in his mortgage or to take any steps for ". . . enforcing his security or for recovering the principal money "thereby secured." The mortgagor says that it was not true that on September 13 any interest was more than 21 days in arrear and the claim, therefore, did not lie.

The mortgagees, however, rely on old authority, the decision of Russell J. in Evans v. Horner.[1] The headnote is: "Section 7 "of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) "Act, 1920, suspends the rights of the mortgagee during one "continuous period, which lasts as long as the conditions of the "section are complied with. When once those conditions are "broken a subsequent compliance with them does not revive the "protection given by the section." In that case the interest fell due on May 19, and was still not paid on June 11, when the summons to enforce the mortgage by foreclosure was issued. On June 14, three days after the summons, a cheque for the interest was sent and accepted on account generally, as was the position in the present case. It was argued that even though the mortgagee was right to start his proceedings when he did, those proceedings were bad when the condition ceased to be unsatisfied, but Russell J. would not agree to that, saying as the headnote states, that[2]: "the section only suspends the rights of the "mortgagee during one continuous period," according to certain conditions, "and that when those conditions are broken a "subsequent compliance with them does not revive the pro-"tection given by the section." That decision is not binding here, because here compliance with the payment of interest was made before the date when the proceedings were issued. But the

[1] [1925] Ch. 177.

[2] Ibid.

1957

COUTTS & CO. v. DUNTROON INVESTMENT CORPORATION LTD.

Harman J.

reasoning of Russell J. would cover this case since he speaks of one continuous period, and the protection, therefore, only lasts so long as all the conditions are complied with, and directly one of them is broken the protection is gone, and gone for ever. That case was mentioned with approval by the Court of Appeal in Nichols v. Walters.[3] In that case also there had been arrears, and there were arrears at the date of the issue of the summons. It was held that subsequent payment did not put the matter right or recreate the area of security afforded by the Act. Sir Raymond Evershed M.R. expressly approved of what Russell J. had said.

My attention was, however, called to an Irish case of Wallace v. Fogarty,[4] where a contrary view was taken, but there the circumstances were rather different in that there was no right of action at the date when the proceedings were started. The Irish Act of 1923, is exactly equivalent to the English Act of 1920, in this respect. Meredith J. said that the Act applied because though the mortgagor had been in arrears he had paid up before the proceedings were brought, and he said he did not approve of Russell J.'s view on the matter. That does not absolve me from following the Court of Appeal in any matter binding on me. Although there is a difference between the case before the Court of Appeal case and this case, and although I rather sympathize with the view that the Irish judge took, I feel I am bound and that it must be taken that the period relevant there to call in a mortgage is one continuous period as Russell J. said which, once broken, can never be restored. Consequently I do not think the fact that the mortgage interest was paid, even though it was paid before the proceedings were started, would recreate in favour of the mortgagor the protection which section 7 had hitherto afforded him. Subject to the technical point, therefore, I think that the mortgagees were entitled on September 13 to enforce the whole of their security and therefore were entitled to an order for the repayment of the entire sum.

If that be so, strictly speaking it is not necessary to consider the alternative claim which is a claim as originally made to the £7,794, but as this case I suppose, like many Rent Restriction Acts cases, may go further, I feel I must say something about it. This turns on section 12 (5) of the Act of 1920, which begins by providing: "When a mortgage comprises one or more dwelling-"houses to which this Act applies and other land, and the "rateable value of such dwelling-houses is more than one-tenth "of the rateable value of the whole of the land comprised in the "mortgage, the mortgagee may apportion the principal money "secured by the mortgage between such dwelling-houses and such "other land. . . ." This apportionment was made on the footing that that section applied and that therefore the mortgage did comprise one or more dwelling-houses to which the Act applied, that is to say the two flats which were below £100 in rateable value and other land, namely, the four flats which were outside the protection of the Act. The mortgagors' first argument was that "other land" where it is used in this subsection must mean land other than dwelling-houses. It says "one or more "dwelling-houses and other land" and the argument was that there is a contrast between "dwelling-houses" and "land," and "land" means land without dwelling-houses on it and the apportionment could only be made where for instance there is a house and a park. The mortgagees' claim is that "land" means or includes "dwelling-houses" having regard to the terms of the Interpretation Act, 1889, and that "other land" means any property comprised in the mortgage other than the dwelling-houses to which the Act applies. In my judgment that is the right interpretation, because the section goes on to deal with the value "of the whole of the land comprised in the mortgage." It is clear that the word "land" here covers the mortgaged dwelling-house, and I cannot believe that it means something different where it appears in the same section within two or three lines. Therefore "other land" means property comprised in the mortgage, not being dwelling-houses to which the Act applies. I think, therefore, prima facie the section is applicable.

[3] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1516.

[4] [1926] 1 I.R. 255.

Another point is taken, namely, that these were all dwelling-houses to which the Act applies because for the purposes of the Act one must look, not at what the rating authority did in 1947 when this house was turned into six flats, but to the original rateable value when it was one single dwelling-house and had a rateable value of £288. That depends on the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939, section 3 of which recontrolled a number of houses which had been controlled before and decontrolled, and also brought new property into control. For this purpose it is necessary to find out what was the rateable value on the appropriate date, that was April 6, 1939, so far as London was concerned. If under section 7 (2) there was no separate assessment on the appropriate date, then for the purpose of finding out whether the house would be in the Act or not, it is necessary to assess on the original rateable value on the appropriate day, which here was £288. If, on the other hand, the dwelling-house in question was first assessed after the appropriate day, then it must be treated for the purpose of ascertaining the rateable value as having been assessed when it was in fact first assessed. Here these assessments, as I understand it, were made in 1947, when for the first time this house, which had been a single dwelling-house, became six dwelling-houses to each of which the Act could apply, and they were rated accordingly upon that footing. It seems to me that it would be necessary to prove that those ratings were not ratings which should be considered for the purposes of the Act. It is said that there is no evidence that the entities created in 1947 made the house any different from what it had been before, and Morelle Ltd. v. Wakeling[5] was cited to show that though two flats had been held together, when they were separated that did not create two new hereditaments, but they were to be for the purposes of the Act dealt with as they were before the separation. There, however, the facts were quite different: the property had been originally built as flats and two flats were knocked into one, and were afterwards separated again. That is an entirely different case and not one which really is of very much assistance to me here, although it bears some superficial resemblance. I hold that the arbitrator, who found as a fact that there were six flats, four of them outside the Act and two of them within it, was amply justified in so finding, and no attempt was made, as far as I can see, to contest that finding on the basis that he was not entitled to find it. If he was entitled to find it, it seems to me that there was plenty of evidence on which he could do so. I am of opinion, therefore, that the conditions to bring section 12 (5) of the Act of 1920 into operation did apply and that the mortgagee was entitled to make the apportionment he did.

1957

COUTTS & Co. v. DUNTROON INVESTMENT CORPORATION LTD.

Harman J.

That apportionment was disputed, and under the section the matter went to a single arbitrator who was properly appointed, and he has confirmed the apportionment. In my opinion there was no answer, quite apart from the interest point, to the summons so far as it claims the payment of £7,794 resulting from the apportionment. As in my judgment, however, the mortgagees are entitled to the larger relief. I will make an order for the payment by the defendants of the principal money of £10,000 secured by the charge, together with interest.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Dawson & Co.; Charles Ross & Co.

[5] [1955] 2 Q.B. 379; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 672; [1955] 1 All E.R. 708.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1957
Dec. 3, 5, 6.

Upjohn J.

*RACECOURSE BETTING CONTROL BOARD v. YOUNG (INSPECTOR OF TAXES).

SAME v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.

YOUNG (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. RACECOURSE BETTING CONTROL BOARD.

INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. SAME.

Revenue—Income tax—Expenses—Racecourse Betting Control Board—Operation of totalisator on racecourses—Totalisator fund—Expenditure prescribed by statute for benefit of owners of racecourses and racehorses—Board carrying on trade—Whether deductible expenses —Whether improvements to racecourses capital expenditure—Racecourse Betting Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 41), s. 3—Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 58), s. 18 (5)—Income Tax Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 10), s. 137 (a) (f) (g).

The Racecourse Betting Control Board was a corporation set up under the Racecourse Betting Act, 1928, to operate a totalisator on approved racecourses. The board established the totalisator fund pursuant to section 3 (4) of the Act from a percentage of the moneys staked on the totalisator. Under section 3 (6) the board applied this fund in accordance with schemes prepared by them and approved by the Secretary of State for purposes conducive to the "improvement of breeds of horses or the sport of horse racing" but subject to the payment thereout of "all taxes, rates, charges, and working expenses," and "the retention of . . . any sums . . . "to meet contingencies . . ."

For the year ending December 31, 1953, the board authorized the following expenditure: (1) to racecourse executives from the racecourse fund, £230,977, which was divided among the racecourses approximately in proportion to the cost of maintenance of each racecourse as a fraction of the total cost of maintaining all racecourses, and was normally used for improvement to the racecourse itself; (2) to owners and trainers in reduction of the cost of travelling racehorses to race meetings, £168,555; (3) runners' allowance, attributable to 1954, £3,087, a sum of £1 per runner being paid as an additional allowance to owners of horses who ran their horses in any race; (4) towards the administrative expenses of the Jockey Club and National Hunt Committee and the cost of the race finish recording camera, £62,050; (5) amount paid for assistance of point-to-point meetings, £24,233; (6) for the assistance of racing under the rules of the Pony Turf Club, £1,975. All the items except (3) were included in schemes under section 3 (6) of the Act, item (3) being included in the board's working expenses.

It was conceded that the board was carrying on the trade of totalisator operator. The Special Commissioners held that items (1) to (6) were deductible as expenses laid out for the purposes of the board's trade as such totalisator operator within the meaning of section 137 (a) of the Income Tax Act, 1952; with the exception of certain payments which were reimbursements of expenditure on the provision of certain physical installations on racecourses which they held were of an enduring advantage to the board and were expenses of a capital nature and not deductible.

On appeal by the Crown and cross-appeal by the board:—

Held, (1) that taxes and working expenses having already been deducted from this fund, it had at this stage finished with trading activities; the money was laid out in this manner because the board were required by section 3 (6) of the Act of 1928 to do so, and the expenses had nothing whatever to do with their trading activities.

(2) That "working expenses" in section 3 (6) meant the ordinary expenses connected with working a totalisator, and the deduction of this sum for runners' allowances as "working "expenses" was ultra vires the powers of the board; and even if it were a working expense, it was not a proper deduction for the purposes of income tax.

Semble, that if the expenditure on installations at racecourses was a deductible expense, it would be difficult to treat it as an expense of a capital nature within the type envisaged by Lord Cave in British Insulated and Helsby Cables Ltd. v. Atherton [1916] A.C. 205; 42 T.L.R. 187; 10 T.C. 188.

1957

RACECOURSE BETTING CONTROL BOARD v. YOUNG (INSPECTOR OF TAXES).

APPEALS from the Commissioners for the Special Purposes of the Income Tax Acts and cross-appeals.

These four appeals fell into two groups. The first group contained an appeal by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue and one by the inspector of taxes against the Racecourse Betting Control Board relating to assessments made upon the board for 1953–1954 and 1954–1955. Both appeals raised the same point, one being directed to income tax and the other to profits tax. They were accordingly considered as one appeal. The second group of appeals was by the Racecourse Betting Control Board, in the one case against the inspector of taxes and in the other against the commissioners, also relating respectively to income tax and profits tax; and the same point arose in each, namely, whether a certain expenditure was of enduring capital benefit which ought to be treated as capital and not as a revenue expenditure.

The Racecourse Betting Control Board carried on the trade of running totalisators at a large number (some 72 or 73) racecourses in England. It was set up in 1928 by the Racecourse Betting Act, 1928,[1] which was entitled: "An Act to amend the Betting

[1] Racecourse Betting Act, 1928, s. 1: "(1) Nothing contained in the "Betting Act, 1853, shall apply to "any approved racecourse . . . "(2) . . . it shall be lawful on any "approved racecourse . . . (a) for the "Racecourse Betting Control Board ". . . to set up and keep a totalisa- "tor; (b) for the Board . . . to "operate, . . . for the purposes of "effecting betting transactions on "horseraces only, a totalisator. . . ."

S. 2: "(1) For the purposes of "this Act there shall be established a "Racecourse Betting Control Board ". . . (2) The board shall be a body "corporate . . ."

S. 3: "The Racecourse Betting "Control Board—(1) may for the pur- "poses of this Act issue (subject to "such conditions as they may impose) "and at any time revoke certificates "of approval in respect of race- "courses and ground adjacent there- "to; (2) shall make it a condition "of the grant of a certificate of "approval of any racecourse that the "persons having the management of "such racecourse shall provide a "place, whether in a building or "not, where bookmakers may carry "on their business and to which the "public may resort for the purpose "of betting, and that the charge to a "bookmaker and to any assistant "accompanying him, for admission "to an enclosure on the racecourse "for the purpose of the bookmaker's "business shall, in the case of a "bookmaker, not exceed five times "the amount, and in the case of an "assistant not exceed the amount of "the highest charge made to mem- "bers of the public for admission to "the enclosure; (3) shall distribute "or cause to be distributed the whole "of the moneys staked by means of "a totalisator on any race among "the persons winning bets made by "means of the totalisator on that "race, after deducting or causing to "be deducted such percentage of "those moneys as the Board may "from time to time determine either "generally or with respect to any "particular racecourse; (4) shall "establish a fund known as the "totalisator fund, into which shall "be paid the percentage deducted as "aforesaid of moneys staked by "means of the totalisator, and any "other moneys received by the "Board; (5) may, for the purposes "of this Act, borrow money upon "the security of such fund or other- "wise, and lend money for the "purpose of setting up or operating "totalisators in accordance with the "provisions of this Act; (6) shall "(subject to the payment out of the "totalisator fund of all taxes, rates, "charges, and working expenses, "and to the retention of such sums "as they think fit to meet contingen- "cies, and to the payment out of the "said fund of such sums as they "think fit to charitable purposes) "apply the moneys from time to

"Act, 1853, to legalize the use of totalisators on certain race-"courses, and to make further provision with regard to betting "thereon."

The case stated, so far as relevant, provided: 2. For the purposes of the appeal it was admitted on behalf of the board that it carried on the trade of totalisator operator, and the question for decision was whether it was entitled, in computing its profits of such trade, to deduct as expenses certain payments, details of which were thereinafter set out. The answer to such question depended on two issues: first, whether such payments were wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade, within the meaning of section 137 (a) of the Income Tax Act, 1952,[2] and secondly, whether such payments or any of them were of a capital nature whose deduction would be prohibited by sub-paragraphs (f) or (g) of the same section.

3. The following facts were proved or admitted: . . . (b) Briefly stated the operation of a totalisator consisted in the acceptance of bets at a building on the course from members of the public. When the race was decided the whole of the money staked was, in accordance with section 3 (3) of the Act of 1928, distributed to persons who had won their bets on that race, after deducting such percentage of the money staked as the board might determine. In practice the board only deducted a percentage from the money staked on losing horses except as to special pools accounting for only some 17 per cent. of all money staked, when the percentage deduction was calculated on the whole pool. For the purpose of setting up buildings on racecourses in which the totalisator was to operate, the board entered

"time comprised in the totalisator "fund in accordance with a scheme "prepared by the Board and approved "by the Secretary of State for "purposes conducive to the improve-"ment of breeds of horses or the "sport of horse racing; (7) may do "all such things as are incidental to "the foregoing matters; (8) shall "submit annually to the Secretary "of State a report of their proceed-"ings, together with an account, in "such form as may be prescribed by "the Secretary of State, of the "moneys received and expended by "them during the year, and such "report and account shall be laid "by the Secretary of State before "both Houses of Parliament."

Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934, s. 18: "(5) The purposes for which "the Racecourse Betting Control "Board, acting under paragraph (6) "of section three of the Racecourse "Betting Act, 1928, may, in accord-"ance with a scheme approved by "the Secretary of State, apply "moneys comprised in the totalisa-"tor fund shall include purposes "conducive to the advancement and "encouragement of veterinary science "and education.'

[2] Income Tax Act, 1952, s. 137: "Subject to the provisions of this "Act, in computing the amount of "the profits or gains to be charged "under Case I or Case II of "Schedule D, no sum shall be "deducted in respect of—(a) any "disbursement or expenses, not being "money wholly and exclusively laid "out or expended for the purposes "of the trade, profession or voca-"tion . . . (f) any capital withdrawn "from, or any sum employed or "intended to be employed as capital "in, such trade, profession or voca-"tion; (g) any capital employed in "improvement of premises occupied "for the purposes of the trade, "profession or vocation. . . ."

1957

RACECOURSE BETTING CONTROL BOARD v. YOUNG (INSPECTOR OF TAXES).

into agreements with racecourse owners providing (inter alia) for the demise to the board of the sites of such buildings.

(c) The board had thus left in its hands the above-mentioned percentage of the bets made, and such percentage was, by section 3 (4) of the Act of 1928, termed the totalisator fund. Out of such fund the board paid the working expenses of running the totalisator and such other administration expenses as were necessary. From time to time, and in particular during the years material to this appeal, the board had made certain voluntary payments to the owners of racecourses, to the owners of racehorses entered for races, to the Jockey Club and the National Hunt Committee, to the Pony Turf Club, and to the organizers of point-to-point meetings. It was these payments which the board sought to deduct in computing its profits.

[Details of the amounts of such payments (hereinafter referred to as the "aforesaid payments") for the years ended December, 31, 1952, December 31, 1953, and December 31, 1954, were set out in a schedule as deductions in income tax computations. The facts relating to the payments for the year ending December 31, 1953, were as follows.—]

(d) (i) "To Racecourse executives from the Racecourse "Fund—£230,977." In 1947 the board established a fund then termed the Central Racing Reserve Fund but now termed the Racecourse Fund, and allocated each year a round sum to such fund. Each of the 73 racecourses at which the board operated totalisators was allocated a proportion of such sum, the proportion being determined by the post-war cost of maintenance of each racecourse as a fraction of the total cost of maintaining all the racecourses. The owner of each racecourse was invited to put forward proposals to the board as to how it was proposed to expend the amount allotted to it. Such proposals were considered first by the Jockey Club or the National Hunt Committee, as the authority concerned with horse racing, and then they were considered by the board and finally approved by the Home Secretary. When the racecourse owner had paid the sum in question he applied for reimbursement out of the racecourse fund. If the racecourse owner so desired the amount credited to him in the racecourse fund might be carried forward from year to year until it incurred approved expenditure. For the first few years the amount allotted was normally utilized by the racecourse concerned in the rehabilitation of its buildings and amenities consequent upon their deterioration due to the war, and in the provision of further amenities, such as a new stand or restaurant. In 1952, however, the board, impressed by the difficulty of getting owners to run horses in races, gave a general authority to the racecourses to use up to 25 per cent. of the total amount appropriated to each racecourse for the purpose of augmenting the prize money which was provided for the races. The prize money for a race was constituted in part by funds made available by the racecourse proprietors, and in part out of the entrance moneys paid by the owners of horses running in the races. In 1954 the amount which could be so used for prize money was increased to 50 per cent. of the grant to each racecourse from the racecourse fund.

(ii) "To owners and trainers in reduction of the cost of travelling racehorses to race meetings—£168,555." The cost of maintaining a racehorse had, even before the war, largely exceeded any amount that on an average was obtained by an owner in prize money, and the excess of such cost over the prize money had very largely increased in the years with which the appeal was concerned. In order to assist racehorse owners in meeting the expenses of bringing their horses to racecourses, the board made grants to such owners. A contribution towards such expenditure was also made by the racecourse owners . . . The amount contributed by the racecourse owner varied with each course, but the amount paid by the board was based entirely on a mileage basis. It was hoped by this means to increase the number of runners in the various races, since it was felt that owners would be prevented by the heavy expenditure involved from taking their horses to racecourses some distance from where the horse was kept. . . .

(iii) "Runners allowance, amount attributable to 1954—£3,087." In 1954 the board introduced an additional allowance to owners of horses who ran their horses in any race, the amount being a fixed one of £1 per runner. The object of this allowance was the same as that of the travelling allowance mentioned in the last preceding sub-paragraph, namely, to induce owners to enter and run their horses in races.

(iv) "Towards the administrative expenses of the Jockey Club and National Hunt Committee, and the cost of the race finish recording camera—£62,050." These payments were made by the board to the Jockey Club and the National Hunt Committee. They were used to meet the salaries of racing officials, starters, judges and clerks of the course, who were provided by the Jockey Club or the National Hunt Committee to supervise the racing at flat races and point-to-point meetings respectively. If this amount had not been paid by the board it would have had to be paid by the racecourse owners or the hunts which organized the point-to-point meetings. The supervision by officials of the Jockey Club and the National Hunt Committee ensured that the racing was properly conducted.

(v) "Amount paid for assistance in 1953 of point-to-point meetings—£24,233." The board operated totalisators at some point-to-point meetings, and these payments, which amounted to 5 per cent. of the turnover of the totalisator at such meetings, were made to the hunt which ran such meetings, usually once a year, because without such a subvention the hunt might not have been able to run meetings at all. Some of the meetings were profitable to the board and some were not.

(vi) "For the assistance of racing under the rules of the Pony

1957

RACECOURSE BETTING CONTROL BOARD v. YOUNG (INSPECTOR OF TAXES).

Turf Club—£1,975." The Pony Turf Club ran only two meetings in the years under consideration and neither meeting was a financial success. The board operated totalisators at these two meetings and gave the subvention in question to the club to try to ensure that such meetings should not be discontinued, but in fact pony-racing thereafter ceased, so that the board lost the receipts from totalisators at Pony Club Meetings.

(e) The facts relating to the payments in the years ended December 31, 1952 and 1954, were similar to those relating to the year ended December 31, 1953.

4. It was the experience of the board that the amount of money staked with the totalisator on any race increased with the number of runners in such race. For example, the board's average revenue from a race with only two runners was £76, but from a race with ten runners it was £827. It was thus very much in the interests of the board, considered as a trader, that the number of horses running in any race should be as high as possible. It was also in the board's interests as a trader that as many members of the public as possible should attend a race-meeting, since the receipts of the totalisator would usually be thereby increased. The board obtained its funds principally from the large racecourses and racecourses near populous areas, particularly around London. Approximately two-thirds of the total bets laid with the totalisator were made "on course," and one-third were made "off-"course." . . . It was in the board's interest that the buildings and other amenities of a racecourse should be as attractive as possible, and that the racing public should have confidence in the fair and proper conduct of the racing and in the accuracy of the official results of races. The supervision of racing by officials of the Jockey Club, National Hunt Committee and of the Pony Turf Club, and the provision of a race finish recording camera, ensured so far as possible such fair and proper conduct and such accuracy.

In those respects the interests of the board coincided with the interests of the bookmakers who also benefited by increased attendances, improvements of amenities and proper supervision of racing.

5. . . . All the payments now in question were included in schemes prepared by the board in accordance with the provisions of section 3 (6) of the Act of 1928 and approved by the Secretary of State, with the exception of the "runners allowances" referred to in paragraph 3 (d) (iii) and certain other payments which were included among the board's working expenses in its accounts. The "runners allowances" were included by the board in their accounts as working expenses and not included in any scheme prepared under section 3 (6) in order to test the question whether inclusion in such a scheme was material for tax purposes. The amounts included in such schemes were the amounts set aside each year for that purpose out of the totalisator fund whereas the amounts now claimed as deductions were (except as regards assistance to point-to-point meetings) the amounts actually expended in succeeding years.

. . . . . .

6. If the board had not made contributions (as above shown) to the prize-money paid by the racecourses, and had not paid rent and admission fees for its staff to enter the racecourse (as it did) the total profits for the year 1954 made by 72 racecourses would have dropped from £275,130 to £58,062, the total profits of 9 racecourses where profits exceeded £10,000 would have dropped from £159,800 to £108,850, and the total profits of the 63 racecourses whose profits were below £10,000 would have been turned into losses totalling £50,788. The average attendance at race-meetings had dropped from 10,219 per day in 1948 to 8,425 per day in 1953 and the net amount received by racecourses (i.e. the admission fee less entertainment tax) had only increased between 2d. and 9d. On the other hand the expenses of racecourses were estimated to have increased by two or three hundred per cent. It was the opinion of two witnesses who gave evidence before them that putting up the admission fees by racecourse owners would result in a drop in attendance, and the diminution of prize-money would result in less runners and consequently a diminution in the attendances.

7. The commissioners were satisfied on the evidence that all the aforesaid payments were made by the board with the object of increasing the receipts of its totalisators, although such payments might and in all cases did (in the words of section 3 (6) of the Act of 1928) improve the breed of horses or the sport of horse-racing, and although the increase in such receipts was not in all cases expected to be exactly proportionate to the expenditure.

8. Under the provisions of section 3 (6) of the Act of 1928 the board was empowered to make payment out of the totalisator fund for charitable purposes. By a deed of covenant and trust made on September 1, 1950, the board covenanted to pay to certain trustees annually sums which after deduction of tax would be equal to 8 per cent. of the totalisator fund after paying expenses, rates and taxes (including income tax), and providing for contingencies and repaying borrowed moneys. . . . The board had each year directed the application of the trust fund for purposes conducive to the improvement of the breeds of horses, for the advancement of veterinary science and education, and for various other charitable purposes, but the societies to which donations were made concerned themselves with the breeding of horses other than racehorses.

. . . . . .

10. It was contended on behalf of the board that all the items of expenditure set out above were proper deductions in computing the profits of its trade.

11. It was contended on behalf of the Inspector of Taxes that none of such items of expenditure was so deductible because none of them was wholly and exclusively expended for the purposes of the trade, and such of them as resulted in the creation of enduring assets, e.g., new buildings on racecourses, were of a capital nature.

1957

RACECOURSE BETTING CONTROL BOARD v. YOUNG (INSPECTOR OF TAXES).

12. The commissioners gave their decision in writing on December 5, 1955, as follows:

"1. It is admitted on behalf of the Racecourse Betting "Control Board . . . that its activities constitute the carrying "on of a trade within the meaning of that word in the Income "Tax Acts.

"2. We are concerned with certain items of expenditure by "the board [the aforesaid payments] which it claims are proper "deductions in computing the profits of such trade for the "purposes of income tax. For this claim to succeed it must be "shown firstly that such expenditure was made wholly and "exclusively for the purposes of the trade and secondly was not "of a capital nature.

"3. We do not consider that the terms of the two Acts setting "up the board and regulating its activities, and in particular "section 3 (6) of the Act of 1928, are at all conclusive in deter-"mining the two questions at issue; nor do we think it proper "to conclude that the balance of the totalisator fund after "deduction of the items set out in brackets in that subsection "corresponds with the profit of the trade which is to be taxed. "The Act does not purport to be concerned with taxable profits, "and one of the items in the bracket, namely, payment to "charitable purposes, would only in exceptional circumstances "form a proper deduction in computing the profits of a trade.

"4. We consider that in this as in other cases we have to "determine whether the disputed payments were made wholly "and exclusively for the purposes of the board's trade upon the "evidence of the witnesses called before us, and an examination "of the documents placed before us. Upon a full consideration "of such evidence and documents we find that all the [afore-"said payments] were paid wholly and exclusively for the "purposes of such trade.

"5. We find, on the other hand, that certain of the payments "in question were reimbursements of expenditure upon the pro-"vision of certain physical installations on racecourses . . . Such "installations were of enduring advantage to the board and we "therefore hold that such payments were of a capital nature and "not proper deductions in arriving at the board's profits: see "Coalville Urban District Council v. Boyce.[3]"

F. N. Bucher Q.C., Alan Orr and J. G. Monroe for the Crown.

F. Heyworth Talbot Q.C. and Desmond Miller for the Racecourse Betting Control Board.

Cases cited in argument not referred to in the judgment:

[3] (1934) 18 T.C. 655.

Morgan v. Tate & Lyle Ltd.[4]; Edwards v. Bairstow[5]; Marshall Richards Machine Co. Ltd. v. Jewitt[6]; Newsom v. Robertson[7]; Bentleys, Stokes & Lowless v. Beeson[8]; Odhams Press Ltd. v. Cook.[9]

UPJOHN J. having referred to the issues and to sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Racecourse Betting Act, 1928, continued: The general scheme of section 3 of the Racecourse Betting Act, 1928, is clear enough. The board might issue certificates of approval of racecourses and set up totalisators thereon, but it was to be a provision or a condition of any certificate of approval that there should be a place where bookmakers might carry on their business, though they might have to pay higher charges than were formerly permissible; and then there are the provisions as to what is to happen to the fund created by the deduction of a percentage from the proceeds of a totalisator stake.

From its inception to the year 1954, the general method of procedure was this: the totalisator fund was, each year, a very substantial fund, and in each year with which I am concerned the total amounts invested with the totalisator were, broadly speaking, about £25 million and the dividends paid out were £22 or £23 million. There were the expenses of management and so forth, which left for application each year in accordance with schemes prepared by the board and approved by the Secretary of State something over £500,000.

Those schemes have been set out very fully in the case stated, and I need do no more than attempt a very brief recital of them. In each of the years ending 1952, 1953 and 1954, the surplus went in this kind of way. About a quarter of a million pounds went to a fund set up by the board called the Racecourse Fund, and that sum was divided amongst the racecourses, approximately speaking, in proportion to the cost of maintenance of each racecourse as a fraction of the total cost of maintaining all racecourses. That fund could only be expended by the racecourses in accordance with proposals approved by the board, and that was normally for improvements to the racecourse itself—buying additional land, improving the grandstands, and many other ways of improvement which were set out in the case.

In 1952, such I suppose were economic difficulties that it was difficult to get owners to run horses in races, and the board gave a general authority to racecourses to use up to 25 per cent. of the total amount appropriated to each racecourse for the purpose of augmenting prize money, to attract more entries and, no doubt, of a better quality.

[4] [1955] A.C. 21; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 85; [1954] 2 All E.R. 413; 35 T.C. 367.

[5] [1956] A.C. 14; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 410; [1955] 3 All E.R. 48; 36 T.C. 220.

[6] (1956) 36 T.C. 511.

[7] [1953] Ch. 7; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 636; [1952] 2 All E.R. 728; 33 T.C. 452.

[8] [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1529; [1952] 2 All E.R. 82.

[9] (1940) 56 T.L.R. 704; [1940] 3 All E.R. 15; 23 T.C. 233.

1957

RACECOURSE BETTING CONTROL BOARD v. YOUNG (INSPECTOR OF TAXES).

Upjohn J.

Then another class of expenditure in view of economic difficulties was that travelling allowances were made to owners and trainers to meet the cost of travelling racehorses to race meetings; and in 1952 some £168,000 was so expended.

The scheme was expanded in 1954 by a runner's allowance, and it was then decided to give every owner whose horse ran in a race £1 for doing so; and in the accounts for 1954 the provision of £42,000 under the heading of operating expenses was made for this allowance.

Then the next class of expenditure was towards the administrative expenses of the Jockey Club and the National Hunt Committee and of the Race Finish Recording Camera. In 1952 those apparently amounted to some £60,000, and the sums so applied were used to meet the salaries of racing officials, starters, judges, clerks of the course and others, expenses which, had they not been contributed to by the board, would have had to be paid by the racecourse owners or hunts which organized point to point meetings.

Then about £25,000 was paid for the benefit of point to point meetings, and, finally, a small sum was devoted to the Pony Turf Club, but that seems to have come to an end, because they have ceased to have pony racing.

It is fair to say that the board has been a great benefactor to the sport of racing.

There is no doubt that, at any rate, one of the reasons why those payments were made was that it was in the interests of the board as a trader, for the very simple reason that the more people who can be persuaded to attend a race meeting, the more people are likely to come and bet on the tote. Some of them, of course, will bet with the rivals who have to be accommodated, the bookmakers. But some of them will bet on the tote, and so, to increase the turnover of the tote, one wants to increase the attendance at race meetings; and one way of doing that is to improve the racecourse so that it is more attractive to members of the public. Another way of doing that, of course, is to try to increase the number of horses running and the quality of the horses running. That is done by making travelling allowances and by increasing the prize money; for this was established without a shadow of doubt, that the more horses there are in any given race, the more money is placed on the tote in respect of that race. So these payments were in fact very much to the benefit of the board itself, and, as was pointed out in the case, in these respects the interests of the board coincide with the interests of the bookmakers, who also benefit by increased attendances, improvements of amenities and proper supervision of racing.

Until 1954, those appropriations were made by way of schemes approved by the Secretary of State, and the totalisator fund was operated in this way: the fund, after paying, of course, the dividends to winners of races, was paid to an account and, out of that, the operating expenses and headquarters expenses were deducted. Then the balance was ascertained. Upon that, income tax was paid in the usual way. The surplus, amounting as I have said to something over £500,000 for each of the relevant years, was then dealt with by way of scheme in the manner I have described. In 1954, however, a different attitude was adopted, quite properly, by the board. I can best explain that by reading an extract from the report of the board to the Secretary of State for the year 1954, and I can begin at paragraph 3 (ii): "Shortly after their establishment in 1928 the "board took up with the authorities, at the highest level, the "question of their liability to tax and took advice on the matter. "The outcome was that up to the present, the board have been "treated as carrying on a trade for taxation purposes and, on the "basis of the advice tendered to them, have accepted this "treatment. On this footing, the board's taxable profits have "been regarded, by the Inland Revenue, as being the balance in "the totalisator fund after meeting rates and working expenses "(interpreting the words 'working expenses' in their narrowest "sense) with the result that all expenditure incorporated in "schemes approved by the Secretary of State under the Act, has "been treated as having been paid out of taxed profits. (iii) The "board have now been advised by counsel that—if a trade is "indeed carried on—this treatment is wrong in law and that "disbursements genuinely made by the board for the purposes "of their trade or business are not rendered ineligible as deduc-"tions in arriving at the taxable profits on the ground, simply, "that they are made, have been made or could equally be made, "under a statutory scheme approved by the Secretary of State." Then in subparagraph (v) they say this: "In view of the very "definite advice received by them, the board, in these circum-"stances, have decided that it is their duty to contest the "taxation issues in the courts. The board have also, during the "past year, incurred expense of a kind analogous to that hereto-"fore made under statutory schemes." Then they set out the runner's allowance at £1 per starter. They had done that perfectly fairly and openly with the view of seeing whether that is a proper way of dealing with the matter in the accounts.

The question that I have to determine is whether that view which has been expressed by the board is correct or not, or whether the former procedure is indeed the proper procedure that should be followed from an income tax point of view.

On behalf of the board, Mr. Heyworth Talbot has put the case in this way: He submits that the board is not really a trader at all; it is a statutory administrator which has statutory obligations to fulfil; but he concedes that for the purposes of income tax the activities of the board are in the nature of trade and are taxable if a surplus be shown as such. But he argues that the expenses of making provisions for the improvements of stands and so forth which I have already enumerated are the expenses of carrying on that trade and ought to be allowed before a balance for the purposes of income tax is ascertained. He submits one must look at the activities of the board as a whole for the purpose of income tax. Every penny that it disburses, he points out, should be a disbursement out of the totalisator fund, and he says that the board, if it is to be regarded as a trader at all, must be regarded as a trader throughout its activities. That does not necessarily mean, as he fairly concedes, that all expenses are necessarily deductible for the purposes of income tax. The only expenses that can be deducted are those which fall within section 137 (a) of the Income Tax Act, 1952. [His Lordship read section 137 (a) of the Income Tax Act, 1952.]

1957

RACECOURSE BETTING CONTROL BOARD v. YOUNG (INSPECTOR OF TAXES).

Upjohn J.

It is submitted that the matter must be looked at in this way: at the end of each accounting year the board has a surplus to deal with, and it can consider how that surplus should be dealt with, just like any ordinary trading concern. A trading concern which finds it has a surplus at the end of a year's trading may decide to apply it in a dividend, but it may not. It may, for instance, decide to apply it in paying a bonus wage or in undertaking some advertising activity. Then next year, when it is found that that profit has been applied in paying a bonus wage, that obviously is an expense allowable for income tax, and if some of it has been applied as an ordinary trade advertising expenditure, it, too, will be allowed for the purposes of tax. So, it is said, by Mr. Talbot, that here one finds that the board has a surplus. It decides then to apply it to matters which, it is submitted, are wholly and exclusively laid out for the purpose of the trade, that is to say, for the improvement of racecourses or the increase of prize money and all the other matters which I have discussed, because that is an expenditure which has to be incurred to earn more profits, and he relies on the well-known passage in Inland Revenue Commissioners v. The Stonehaven Recreation Ground Trustees.[1] That is the passage in the judgment of the Lord President, Lord Clyde, who says this[2]: "But it is trite law that, "as Lord President Kinross observed in Harris v. Corporation of "Irvine,[3] 'the term "profits" prima facie means all the net "'proceeds of a concern or adventure, after deducting the neces- "'sary outgoings without which these proceeds could not be "'earned, but when the proceeds have been so ascertained, "'income tax is leviable on the full balance of them, to whatever "'purpose,—whether to the payment of debt or any other pur- "'pose,—they are applied after they have been earned—Mersey "'Docks v. Lucas.[4]'" That is said to be the case here. One must ask for what purpose, for example in the year 1954, were these payments or appropriations made. The answer he submits, must be that if for the relevant purpose, that of collecting tax, the board

[1] (1929) 15 T.C. 419.
[2] Ibid. 426.
[3] [1900] 2 F. 1080, 1084; 4 T.C. 221.
[4] (1883) 8 App.Cas. 891; 2 T.C. 25.

is to be regarded as a trader, those sums were expended wholly for the purpose of the trade with the object and for the purpose of increasing the trade and increasing the profits in future years; and in paragraph 7 of the case the commissioners accept that view. "We were satisfied on the evidence that all the payments "set out in exhibits B, B1 and B2 were made by the board with "the object of increasing the receipts of its totalisators, although "such payments might and in all cases did (in the words of "section 3 (6) of the Act of 1928) improve the breed of horses "or the sport of horse-racing, and although the increase in such "receipts was not in all cases expected to be exactly proportionate "to the expenditure." They came then to the conclusion which they set out in paragraph 12 (2): [His Lordship read paragraph 12 (2), (3) and (4) set out above.]

The question is whether that is a right conclusion, and before going back to the Act there are one or two passages to which I can usefully refer in the speech of Lord Reid in Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Dowdall O'Mahoney & Co. Ltd.[5] where[6] he quotes the passage in the speech of Lord Davey in Strong & Co. of Romsey Ltd. v. Woodifield[7]: "He said of the words in the "rule, 'for the purpose of the trade,' that these words 'appear "'to me to mean for the purpose of enabling a person to carry "'on and earn profits in the trade, etc. I think the disburse-"'ments permitted are such as are made for that purpose. It "'is not enough that the disbursement is made in the course "'of, or arises out of, or is connected with, the trade, or is "'made out of the profits of the trade. It must be made for "'the purpose of earning the profits.'" Lord Reid then continued[8]: "This explanation has always been regarded as "authoritative and is difficult to reconcile with the respondents' "contention." Then, after referring to Smith's Potato Estates Ltd. v. Bolland,[9] he said[10]: "But I cannot reconcile the respon-"dents' contention with the opinions expressed by the majority "in Smith's Potato Estates Ltd. v. Bolland.[11] Lord Porter said, "with reference to the expense of an appeal for the purpose of "discovering the true measure of profits for tax purposes[12]: "'Such expenditure is incurred directly for tax purposes and "'for nothing else, though it may indirectly affect both the "'amount available for distribution to the proprietors of the "'business and that proper to be put to reserve.'" A little later on in Lord Porter's speech (quoted by Lord Reid) he refers to the observations of Lord Selborne in Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Lucas[13][14]: "'"it is reasonably plain that

[5] [1952] A.C. 401; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 560; [1952] 1 All E.R. 531; 33 T.C. 259.
[6] [1952] A.C. 417.
[7] [1906] A.C. 448, 453; 22 T.L.R. 754; 5 T.C. 215.
[8] [1952] A.C. 417.
[9] [1948] A.C. 508; 64 T.L.R. 430; [1948] 2 All E.R. 367; 30 T.C. 267.
[10] [1952] A.C. 418.
[11] [1948] A.C. 508.
[12] Ibid. 521.
[13] (1883) 8 App.Cas. 891, 905.
[14] [1952] A.C. 419.

1957

RACECOURSE BETTING CONTROL BOARD v. YOUNG (INSPECTOR OF TAXES).

Upjohn J.

" ' " the gains of a trade are that which is gained by the trading, " ' " for whatever purposes it is used," and therefore what your " ' Lordships have to determine is whether the expense is " ' incurred in order to earn gain or is the application or distribu- " ' tion of that gain when earned.' " The matter is summed up by Lord Reid [14]: " My Lords, I trust that I have not misrepre- " sented the speeches of noble Lords by giving these short " extracts from them. I have read and re-read those speeches " and they appear to me to establish conclusively (first) the " distinction between money spent to earn profits and money " spent out of profits which have been earned."

I approach the matter by returning to section 3 of the Racecourse Betting Act, 1928. It is quite plain that, although the word " trade " is not used, the activities which the board, exercising its statutory duties, are going to carry out are activities in the nature of a trade; that is, by running totalisators at racecourse meetings where the public can come and bet upon the results of races. The board is to make a deduction as a percentage, and the Act lays down how that percentage is to be dealt with; it is to be paid into a fund known as the totalisator fund, and then there is an express direction as to how it is to be applied in subsection (6). The whole question is whether it is right to consider that the Racecourse Betting Control Board, in making payments in accordance with section 3 (6), are making payments wholly and exclusively for the purpose of making gains.

This Act constituted and set up this statutory body and created a legal entity; its powers and duties must, therefore, be ascertained from the terms of the Act itself. Two main questions arise: first of all, is it proper to look upon the appropriation pursuant to a scheme prepared by the board and approved by the Secretary of State as money laid out for the purposes of section 137? Secondly, is it right to consider whether the same result could be achieved by a debit in the accounts of the board before making an appropriation for the approval of the Secretary of State, and is it proper to debit, by way of example, the sum of £42,000 for runners' allowances?

With regard to the first point, it seems to me that the scheme of the Act is this: the board engages in trade or something in the nature of trade; from that it makes a surplus, and from that surplus certain deductions are to be made. They are set out between brackets in subsection (6): " (. . . the payment out of " the totalisator fund of all taxes, rates, charges, and working " expenses, and the retention of such sums as they think fit to " meet contingencies, and the payment of sums to charitable " purposes . . .)." It seems to me that after that has been done, and possibly before the payment of sums to charitable purposes, the trading activities of the board have come to an end. Their trading activities have resulted in the creation of a fund. That fund is to be held in accordance with the trusts pointed out in subsection (6). It is a fund from which the working expenses of carrying on the trade have been deducted, and from which tax has been deducted. If a claim to income tax cannot be resisted, that includes the deduction of income tax; rates, charges and other working expenses are all to come out of the fund before it is held upon the trust of subsection (6), and, accordingly, in my judgment, this fund at that stage is a fund which has finished with trading activities, and appropriations thereout have no longer any reference to trading activities of the board. The appropriations are made and are made only for the reason, that they have to be so made pursuant to section 3 (6) of the Act. They are made, not for the purposes of trade, but for public purposes conducive to the improvement of breeding of horses and the sport of horseracing and the advancement of veterinary science. The board is under a duty to prepare a scheme. The Secretary of State is the person to approve it. It is a statutory distribution of a fund in the hands of the board, and in my judgment it has nothing whatever to do with the trading activities of the board. True enough, the appropriations made coincide with the trading desires of the board. My comment upon that is how very fortunate it is for the board. But it cannot turn what is, in essence, a statutory distribution in accordance with an Act of Parliament of a surplus of a fund into a trading activity. Accordingly, it seems to me that when the Secretary of State approves an appropriation, that is something which has nothing to do with the trading activities of the board and cannot, in my judgment, form proper subject-matter of a deduction under section 137.

As to the second point, is it proper to regard the "runners' "allowances" as being proper deductions for the purpose of income tax: the first thing is, is it proper to deduct that sum from the fund which is going to be dealt with by section 3 (6)? It can only be deducted if it is permitted by the terms of the subsection as a charge, or a working expense, or a deduction to meet contingencies. Plainly it is not a charitable payment. If any of those, it can only be a working expense. Is it proper to regard a runner's allowance as a working expense? That seems to me entirely a question of construction of this Act of Parliament. This board is not a commercial concern. I have to construe the words "working expenses" as I find them in this Act. In my judgment, "working expenses" there means what one ordinarily thinks of as a working expense in connexion with the operation of the totalisators. It has nothing whatever to do with paying money to attract more horses, which, it is hoped, will attract more of the public, some of whom, it is hoped, will place more money with the totalisator. That is not a proper description of an outlay as a working expense. Accordingly, the deduction of this expense of £42,000 was, in my judgment, ultra vires the board. It could not make it except, of course, by way of a scheme approved by the Secretary of State. As, therefore, it could not deduct it in its accounts, it cannot deduct it for the purposes of income tax. But the matter does not rest there, because, even if it could be treated as a working expense, the question still arises whether it is a proper deduction for the purposes of section 137 of the Income Tax Act. I do not think that it is, because, with all respect to the special commissioners, I do not see how this sum of runners' allowances can be described as a sum wholly and exclusively laid out for the purposes of the trade. It is laid out to attract more horses and more public quite generally to racecourses. It is really an outlay which is as much, in the long run, for the benefit of the public, of racecourse executives and for the benefit of bookmakers, or generally for the sport of racing as it is for the benefit of the board, and, in my judgment, it would not in any event be a proper deduction for the purposes of income tax, even if it were a working expense, which in my judgment it is not.

1957

RACECOURSE BETTING CONTROL BOARD v. YOUNG (INSPECTOR OF TAXES).

Upjohn J.

In my judgment, the special commissioners have failed entirely to give proper weight to the construction and meaning of the Act. It is in the Act that one finds the powers and duties and obligations of the board set out, and I think that they have wholly failed to give due weight to that fact. Accordingly, the appeal must be allowed and the matter must be remitted to the commissioners to adjust the figures in accordance with my judgment.

That brings me to the second group of appeals. That proceeded upon this basis, that on the footing that these appropriations were proper deductions for income tax, a subsidiary point arose which is set out in paragraph 12 (5) of the case stated. [His Lordship read paragraph 12 (5) set out above.]

As I am reversing the commissioners on the main appeals, that question does not now arise, but, as the matter has been fully argued, I should consider the point quite shortly. The expenditure was not allowed on the principle that it was of enduring advantage to the company; that principle was stated by Lord Cave in British Insulated and Helsby Cables Ltd. v. Atherton.[15] The relevant passage is sufficiently set out in the later case of Anglo-Persian Oil Co. v. Dale,[16] and I can go straight to the judgment of Romer L.J., who said this[17]: "It was pointed "out by Lord Cave in Atherton's case[18] that an expenditure, "though made once and for all, may nevertheless be treated as "a revenue expenditure, and he then added this[19]: 'But when "'an expenditure is made, not only once and for all, but with "'a view to bringing into existence an asset or an advantage for "'the enduring benefit of a trade, I think that there is very "'good reason (in the absence of special circumstances leading "'to an opposite conclusion) for treating such an expenditure as "'properly attributable not to revenue but to capital.'" Then Romer L.J. continued[20]: "It should be remembered, in connexion

[15] [1926] A.C. 205; 42 T.L.R. 187; 10 T.C. 188.
[16] [1932] 1 K.B. 124; 47 T.L.R. 487; 16 T.C. 253.
[17] [1932] 1 K.B. 145, 146.
[18] [1926] A.C. 205.
[19] Ibid. 213.
[20] [1932] 1 K.B. 146.

"with this passage, that the expenditure is to be attributed to "capital if it be made 'with a view' to bringing an asset or "advantage into existence. It is not necessary that it should "have that result. It is also to be observed that the asset or "advantage is to be for the 'enduring' benefit of the trade. I "agree with Rowlatt J. that by 'enduring' is meant 'enduring "'in the way that fixed capital endures.' An expenditure on "acquiring floating capital is not made with a view to acquiring "an enduring asset. It is made with a view to acquiring an "asset that may be turned over in the course of trade at a com-"paratively early date. Nor, of course, need the advantage be "of a positive character. The advantage may consist in the "getting rid of an item of fixed capital that is of an onerous "character, as was pointed out by this court in the case of Mallett "v. Staveley Coal and Iron Co. Ltd.[21]"

Each case depends on its own facts; and of Coalville Urban District Council v. Boyce,[22] referred to in the case, I desire only to say this. That was a very special case which turned on its own particular facts and, although it is interesting as an example of the application of the principle, it does not seem to me that it can in any way govern the case before me.

Bolam v. Regent Oil Co. Ltd.[23] was relied upon. That is another example of the principle; in that case it was not applied. But there, again, the facts of that case were so very different from this that it does not afford any guidance in this case. The real question that I have to consider is whether the putting out of this expenditure upon the property of other persons is something which really can be described to be of an enduring advantage to the board. In one sense, it is, of course, because the board hopes to attract more persons to its totalisator windows. But not every advertising expenditure is proper to come within the principle and, speaking for myself (though it is not necessary to come to a final conclusion for the reason I have already given), I find much difficulty in thinking that this expenditure can be treated as being an expenditure of the type envisaged by Lord Cave in Atherton's case.[24] However, in the event, of course, these two cross-appeals must be dismissed with costs.

Appeals allowed; cross-appeals dismissed.

Solicitors: Solicitor of Inland Revenue; Simmons & Simmons.

I. G. R. M.

[21] [1928] 2 K.B. 405; 13 T.C. 772.
[22] 18 T.C. 655.
[23] (1956) 37 T.C. 56.
[24] [1926] A.C. 205.

[CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.]

C. C. C.

1957
Nov. 11.

Slade J.

* REGINA v. JOYCE.

Criminal Law — Evidence — Confession — Inducement — Must relate to charge or accusation to render admission inadmissible.

On Sunday, July 28, 1957, certain accusations were made to the police against the accused. At about 11.30 p.m. two police officers visited the accused at his home, and although he had retired to bed they nevertheless invited him to accompany them to the police station, one of them saying: "I need to take a statement from you." The accused, thinking he had little choice in the matter, accompanied the police to the police station; there he made a written statement which was alleged to contain an admission. At his trial the defence contended that such an admission was inadmissible, being obtained by reason of an inducement held out to the accused:—

Held, that although there had been an inducement, in the colloquial sense, held out to the accused in the invitation of the police both to accompany them to the police station and there to make a statement, it was an inducement insufficient in law to render an admission resulting from it inadmissible. To render an admission admissible, the prosecution must prove that no inducement relating to the charge or accusation was held out to the accused to make it; and this, in the present case, the prosecution had done.

PRELIMINARY POINT on a trial on indictment.

John Stanislaus Joyce was charged on indictment with incest and indecent assault. On the morning of Sunday, July 28, 1957, his daughter had made certain accusations to the police against him. She alleged that certain incidents, which culminated in an incident earlier that morning, had taken place. At about 11.30 p.m. that night two police officers visited the accused at his home; and although he had been working all day and had already retired to bed, they nevertheless invited him to accompany them to the police station, one of the officers saying: "I need to take a statement from you." The accused, although denying that he was guilty of any offence and being extremely reluctant to go to the police station, but thinking that he had very little choice in the matter, nevertheless agreed to accompany the officers to the police station. At the police station the accused made a statement, which was taken down in writing, but which he refused to sign.

At the trial the prosecution alleged that the statement contained an admission. The defence contended that such an admission, if made, was inadmissible, being obtained by reason of an inducement held out to the accused.

J. H. Buzzard and John Worsley for the Crown.

A. S. Wells for the defendant.

[Reported by DAVID CALCUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

The following cases were referred to in argument: Reg. v. Doherty (1) [1]; Reg. v. Doherty (2) [2]; Rex v. James [3]; Reg. v. Reason [4]; Reg v. Rue [5]; Rex v. Thomas [6]; Reg. v. Thompson. [7]

SLADE J. I do not intend to say more now than is necessary, because the case is to continue with the jury.

I have considered the submission of counsel at some length because it is disquieting for anyone who has to try a number of sexual cases to observe, on the one hand, the proportion in which an acquittal takes place through lack of corroboration, and because of the warning that the judge is bound to give to a jury; and to observe, on the other hand, the number of cases where corroboration is found in some oral statement alleged to have been made by the accused and to constitute an admission which, if put into the context for which the defence contends, may well have amounted to a denial of, or at least to no more than a colourless explanation of, the accused's alleged conduct. I am not going to say more because counsel know what I mean in this particular case.

The objection to the admissibility of evidence arises in this way. On Sunday, July 28, 1957, the complainant went to the police station and there made certain accusations against her father. She alleged that certain incidents, which culminated in an incident earlier that morning, had taken place. At 11.30 p.m. two police officers called at the accused's house and, after stating who they were, explaining the nature of their business, having had some conversation with him in which he denied certain accusations that his daughter had made against him at that stage and having made a search of the accused's clothing, invited him (to use a neutral word) to accompany them to the police station.

The accused, who had been in bed, had been awakened and had hastily put on a pair of trousers over his pyjamas. He had been working all that day, although it was a Sunday, and, being not unnaturally reluctant to turn out at that hour of the night, demurred at first to accompanying them to the police station, but then said, according to the police evidence: "All right, I will "come with you then. She has been stopping out, you know, "and she has been telling lies. I have had to chastise her." Then, again according to the police evidence (which on this point is rather more favourable to the accused than his own evidence in the witness-box in the absence of the jury during the trial) Detective Inspector Carter told the accused, and his statement was confirmed in substance by Detective Sergeant Coleman, that he would need to take a statement from him.

[1] (1874) 13 Cox C.C. 23.
[2] (1874) 13 Cox C.C. 24.
[3] (1909) 2 Cr.App.R. 319.
[4] (1872) 12 Cox C.C. 228.
[5] (1876) 13 Cox C.C. 209.
[6] (1834) 6 C. & P. 353.
[7] [1893] 2 Q.B. 12; 9 T.L.R. 435.

C. C. C.

1957

REGINA
v.
JOYCE.

Slade J.

I think it is right to say that the accused probably would not even have accompanied the police officers to the station if he had not thought, rightly or wrongly, that (to use his own words) "he "had very little choice in the matter"; and I will assume that that was the reason why he did so. I think it is further fair to say that the accused might very well have refused to answer any questions at all, even formal ones as to the members of his family and their ages and who occupied the bedrooms and such matters, if he had not been previously told: "I need to take a statement "from you."

The question I have to ask myself is whether that is a sufficient inducement in law to exclude any admission thereafter alleged to have been made by the accused. That it is an inducement of some kind is, of course, manifest. You would not normally leave your house to go to the police station about midnight if you had not been asked to do so in such terms that you thought you had no choice in the matter; and that must, of course, mean that there was an inducement operating on your mind to make you go. If you make a statement after being told: "I need to take "a statement from you," then obviously some inducement, in the colloquial sense, is held out to you to make it; but an inducement of that nature is not a sufficient inducement in law to render inadmissible a statement resulting from it. To render a confession or admission admissible the prosecution must prove affirmatively that no inducement relating to the charge or accusation was held out to the accused to make it. A confession or admission must be excluded if it is made (i) in consequence of (ii) any inducement (iii) of a temporal character (iv) connected with the accusation or relating to the charge (v) held out to the accused by a person having some authority over the subject-matter of the charge or accusation.

In my judgment the words "I need to take a statement from "you," or even words covering a suggestion that you will have to come to the station because we need to take a statement from you when we get there, is not an inducement in any way relating to the charge or accusation. The prosecution therefore have satisfied me that evidence is admissible of the admissions alleged to have been made by the accused.

Evidence admitted.

Solicitors: Director of Public Prosecutions; A. A. Kassman.

[LEEDS ASSIZES.]

* REGINA v. PRITAM SINGH.

1957
Dec. 12.

Mr. Commr. Wrangham.

Criminal Law—Perjury — Oath — Sikh—Oath impracticable—Affirmation — Whether lawfully sworn — Oaths Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 46), s. 1—Perjury Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 6), ss. 1 (1), 15. Evidence—Oath.

The accused, a Sikh, had been a witness in proceedings in a magistrates' court and, according to his religion, an oath sworn on the "Granth" would have been binding on him. He had not objected to taking an oath but no copy of the "Granth" was available and he made an affirmation before giving his evidence. On a charge of having committed perjury in the magistrates' court:—

Held, the accused had not been lawfully sworn within section 1 (1) of the Perjury Act, 1911, because he did not fall into either of the two classes of witnesses who are permitted to affirm under section 1 of the Oaths Act, 1888,[1] and therefore there was no case to go to the jury.

TRIAL ON INDICTMENT.

The accused, Pritam Singh, was charged on indictment with perjury in proceedings at the magistrates' court at Huddersfield, contrary to section 1 (1) of the Perjury Act, 1911. The accused was a Sikh, and according to his religion an oath on the "Granth," the Holy Book of the Sikhs, would have been binding on him. At the proceedings in the magistrates' court he did not object to being sworn, but a copy of the "Granth" was not available and the accused made an affirmation before giving his evidence.

In the present trial, after certain evidence for the Crown had been heard, it was agreed by both counsel that it would be idle to go through the formality of hearing the whole of the evidence if the commissioner was of the opinion that the accused had not been properly sworn in the magistrates' court, and counsel for the accused was permitted to make a submission that there was no case to go to the jury on that particular point.

E. J. Parris for the accused. The accused was not "lawfully sworn" within section 1 (1) of the Perjury Act, 1911, which reads: "If any person lawfully sworn as a witness or as "an interpreter in a judicial proceeding wilfully makes a statement material in that proceeding, which he knows to be false "or does not believe to be true, he shall be guilty of perjury . . ."

[Reported by G. M. SMAILES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

[1] Oaths Act, 1888, s. 1: "Every "person upon objecting to be sworn, "and stating, as the ground of such "objection, either that he has no "religious belief, or that the taking "of an oath is contrary to his "religious belief, shall be permitted "to make his solemn affirmation "instead of taking an oath in all "places and for all purposes where "an oath is or shall be required by "law, which affirmation shall be of "the same force and effect as if he "had taken the oath."

1957

REGINA
v.
PRITAM
SINGH.

The position at common law is set out in Archbold's Criminal Pleading, Evidence and Practice, 33rd ed., at p. 507: "The "general common law rule is that the testimony of a witness to "be examined viva voce in a criminal trial is not admissible "unless he has previously been sworn to speak the truth." As regards persons who can be affirmed, the original Act, the Quakers and Moravians Act, 1833, was enlarged by the Oaths Act, 1888.[1] By section 1 the witness must make the objection—that is a condition precedent before he can be lawfully affirmed—and then there are two grounds on which he may be lawfully affirmed, namely, if he is an agnostic or if the taking of an oath is contrary to his religious belief. Neither of these grounds applies in the present case, and if a witness who says that he is a Sikh is allowed to affirm, the affirmation is unlawful and there is no exception material to this case to the rule at common law.

The case of Reg. v. Moore[2] is exactly on this point, even the religion being the same as in the present case. In that case a witness who had no objection to being sworn, who had a religious belief and who had no religious objection to an oath, made an affirmation and gave evidence. No objection was taken till after the verdict was given and it was held that such evidence was inadmissible.

In Archbold's Criminal Pleading, Evidence and Practice, 33rd ed., at p. 1288, some doubt is thrown on the binding authority of that decision which, being in 1892, was a direct commentary on the Act of 1888, but it is submitted that that doubt is quite wrong. Section 15 (1) of the Perjury Act, 1911, relates to oaths and reads: "For the purposes of this Act, the forms and cere-"monies used in administering an oath are immaterial, if the "court or person before whom the oath is taken has power to "administer an oath for the purpose of verifying the statement "in question, and if the oath has been administered in a form "and with ceremonies which the person taking the oath has "accepted without objection, or has declared to be binding on "him." Section 15 (2) of the Act, the interpretation subsection, deals with affirmation: "In this Act—The expression 'oath' in "the case of persons for the time being allowed by law to affirm ". . . instead of swearing, includes affirmation . . ." The note in Archbold following subsection (1) reads: "(Oath in this sub-"section includes affirmation and it appears to override Reg. v. "Moore[3])." It does not override that case, because "oath" does not include "affirmation" until you have first of all a person who is "allowed by law to affirm or declare," who is a person defined in section 1 of the Oaths Act, 1888, that is to say, a person who objects to taking an oath and states one of the two grounds in that section.

[MR. COMMISSIONER WRANGHAM. Supposing that in this country there was not any copy of the Holy Book of this particular religion and a member of the faith said: "I have a religious belief.

[2] (1892) 8 T.L.R. 287. [3] Ibid.

"I recognize the validity of the oath and the oath the validity "of which I recognize is an oath to be taken on a book of which "no copy is procurable in this country." Does that mean that a man in those circumstances cannot be sworn in this country at all?]

There is no possible way of swearing him in those circumstances. At common law evidence is inadmissible unless sworn before God. The Act of 1888 has made one exception, and another is the case of young children, but only those strict exceptions are permitted.

A. J. Cotton for the Crown. The court in this particular instance was entitled to have the witness affirmed. The practical difficulty in this case was that the "Granth" is a bible of which only three copies are known to exist in this country. Two are kept in the custody of temples and the copy produced here today is, it is understood, from the library in Leicester. No copy was available at the Huddersfield magistrates' court and in those circumstances the accused affirmed. Although the argument put forward on section 15 of the Act of 1911 is correct, it is submitted that a person objecting to be sworn—which he can do impliedly by merely saying "I affirm"—and whom it is impracticable to swear in the manner required by his religion should be permitted to affirm.

MR. COMMISSIONER WRANGHAM (to the jury). The charge against the accused is that he committed perjury in the magistrates' court in a case against a man called Mohammed Ali. It is clear that the first thing that the prosecution have to prove in order to establish their case is that the accused was lawfully sworn. They then have to prove that he said what they say he did. They then have to prove that what they say he said, was untrue, and untrue to his knowledge. But before we get to the question of what he said and whether it was true or not, we have first the question whether he was lawfully sworn. The evidence is that he was not sworn at all, he affirmed; and there is an Act of Parliament which says that any witness who wants to affirm on the ground that he has no religious belief (as, for example, in the case of an atheist), or that his religious belief forbids him to take the oath (as, for example, in the case of a Quaker), can affirm instead of taking the oath. If there was any indication that the accused fell into either of those two classes his affirmation would be as good as his oath and he would be equally liable to be prosecuted for perjury. But unfortunately—from the point of view of the prosecution—the evidence in the present case is precisely the other way. The evidence is that the accused has a religious belief, the Sikh faith; that there is a form of oath which he would regard as binding on him as a Sikh; and that, in any case, he never indicated that he wanted to affirm at all. The real reason why he affirmed instead of taking the oath was because it was impracticable in the magistrates' court to administer the Sikh oath. Apparently the Holy Book of the Sikh religion is very difficult to procure and it was not available in the magistrates' court. You may think that where it was found impossible or difficult that a man should be sworn according to the oath of his own religion, it would be reasonable enough if Parliament provided that he should be permitted with his own consent to affirm and that such affirmation should count as an oath, but Parliament has not yet so provided. In the circumstances I am bound to direct you that there never would be evidence fit for you to consider on this charge, and I therefore ask you to return on my direction a formal verdict of "Not Guilty" against this man on this indictment.

1957

REGINA v. PRITAM SINGH.

Mr. Commr. Wrangham.

Verdict: "Not Guilty."

Solicitors: Drabble & Stephenson, Huddersfield; Harry Bann, Town Clerk, Huddersfield.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

1957 Dec. 20.

Mr. Commissioner Latey Q.C.

*LEACH v. LEACH AND HARROWER.

PRACTICE NOTE.

Husband and Wife — Judicial separation — Costs — Power of court to order woman named to pay wife's costs—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 25), ss. 3 (2), 14 (1).

UNDEFENDED PETITION.

A wife presented a petition for a judicial separation on the ground of her husband's adultery with a woman named, against whom an order for costs was prayed. She was named in the petition as a respondent, and entered an appearance to the suit. At the conclusion of the suit, which was undefended, the wife's claim for costs against the woman named was opposed on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction to make such an order.

H. S. Law for the wife.

Donaldson Loudoun for the husband and the woman named.

MR. COMMISSIONER LATEY Q.C. Mr. Loudoun, representing both the husband respondent and the woman named as an adulteress, who have not defended this suit for judicial separation on its merits, claims that this court has no jurisdiction to make the order for costs which is sought against the woman named. He says that there has been a section in the Matrimonial Causes Acts ever since section 28 of the Act of 1857, now contained in section 3 (2) of the Act of 1950,[1] which permits a woman charged with adultery by a wife in a divorce suit to be made a respondent and to be made liable for the costs of the suit, but that that section applies only to divorce and not to suits for judicial separation, and, indeed, it does, taken by itself. He supports his proposition by reference to Rayden on Divorce, 6th ed., p. 484.

Mr. Law has said, in opposing this submission, that section 14 (1) of the Act of 1950 [2] picks up section 3, a preceding section in the statute. He also argues that nowhere in the Act is there any section which provides in the ordinary way for an order for costs, which must be implied as part of the ordinary duty of the court after a case has been decided, and referred me to Butler v. Butler,[3] and the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 50, as to the unfettered discretion of the judge in regard to costs, which, of course, has to be exercised judicially.

[His Lordship referred to the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957, rule 5 (1),[4] and the fact that the woman named had entered an appearance and was named as second respondent in the title of the suit, and continued:] I cannot accept the submission that the court has no jurisdiction to make an order for costs against the woman named in this suit for one moment; it is negatived by the fact that section 14 of the Act of 1950 picks up section 3 (2) of that Act, and wherever there are parties to a suit the court is entitled to make an order for costs.

In the interpretation clause of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, section 225, it is clearly stated that "'Party' includes every person served with notice of or "attending any proceeding, although not named on the record." In this particular case the woman named is named on the record, and she stands in just the same position as a male co-respondent would in a husband's petition for divorce on the ground of his wife's adultery.

Order for costs against the respondent and the woman named.

Solicitors: Vizard, Oldham, Crowder & Cash; Withers & Co.

E. J.

[1] Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, s. 3 (2): "On a petition for divorce "presented by the wife on the ground "of adultery the court may, if it "thinks fit, direct that the person "with whom the husband is alleged "to have committed adultery be made "a respondent."

[2] Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, s. 14 (1): "A petition for judicial "separation may be presented to the "court either by the husband or the "wife . . . and the foregoing pro-"visions of this Act relating to the "duty of the court on the presenta-"tion of a petition for divorce, and "the circumstances in which such a "petition shall or may be granted "or dismissed, shall apply in like "manner to a petition for judicial "separation."

[3] (1890) 15 P.D. 126, C.A.

[4] Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957, r. 5 (1): ". . . where a wife's "petition alleges adultery with a "woman named and contains a claim "for costs against her, she shall be "made a respondent in the cause."

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1957
Dec. 4.

Danckwerts J.

*DISTRICT BANK LTD. v. WEBB AND OTHERS.

[1957 D. 401.]

Estoppel—By conduct—Mortgage—Recital in conveyance that vendors "seised in unencumbered fee simple in possession"—Conveyance subject to lease—Vendors in possession as lessees—Legal charge—Claim for possession by mortgagee—Whether vendors estopped from setting up existence of lease.

Edward and Mrs. W., the owners in fee simple of a house, demised the house by a lease dated March 25, 1952, to Edward and his partner for a period of 21 years. In July, 1954, Edward and Mrs. W. charged the property in favour of the plaintiff bank to secure Mrs. W.'s bank account by memorandum of deposit and in October, 1954, her brother Edwin executed a further memorandum of deposit for the same purpose. On November 8, 1954, Edward and Mrs. W. conveyed the house to Edwin, and the conveyance recited that the vendors were "seised in unencumbered fee simple "in possession upon trust for sale" of the property in question. On July 7, 1955, by legal charge, Edwin charged the property in favour of the bank in order to secure his account. Edward and Mrs. W. were still at that date, and at all material times, either together or one of them, in possession of the house. The bank, upon failure by Edwin to pay moneys outstanding, claimed possession of the property under the legal charge executed by Edwin. On Edward and Mrs. W. resisting the claim for possession in reliance on the lease dated March 25, 1952, the bank contended that they were estopped from so relying by reason of the recital in the conveyance by them to the brother dated November 8, 1954:—

Held, that Edward and Mrs. W. were entitled to remain in possession in reliance on the lease since the recital that they were "seised in fee simple in possession upon trust for sale" did not constitute a sufficiently unambiguous representation to create an estoppel: a lease or tenancy was not normally to be regarded as an incumbrance and "fee simple in possession" distinguished such an estate from "fee simple in reversion" and did not indicate "vacant possession."

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

By a conveyance dated February 22, 1952, land near Sevenoaks in Kent was conveyed to George Edward Webb and his wife, Constance Lilian Janet Webb, the second and third defendants to the summons. The property included a house called at that time "The Magnet House," although later renamed "Greensleeves."

By a lease dated March 25, 1952, the Webbs demised the house for a period of 21 years, at a rent of £70 a year, to George Edward Webb and Donald Martin, who afterwards became the partner of Webb. That partnership was later dissolved and Donald Martin claimed no beneficial interest in the lease.

[Reported by JENNIFER WEST, Barrister-at-Law.]

On July 28, 1954, the Webbs executed a memorandum of deposit to secure Mrs. Webb's bank account, and on October 14, 1954, a further memorandum of deposit was executed to secure her bank account by her brother, George Edwin Webb, the first defendant to the summons.

On November 8, 1954, George Edward and Mrs. Webb conveyed the house in consideration of the sum of £4,200 to George Edwin Webb, and the conveyance contained a recital that the vendors were "seised in unencumbered fee simple in possession "upon trust for sale" of the property in question. George Edward and Mrs. Webb, either both or one of them, continued in possession of the property.

On July 7, 1955, George Edwin Webb charged the property in favour of the District Bank Ltd., the plaintiffs to the summons. The mortgage was expressed to be a continuing security over the property for payments which George Edwin Webb might be called upon to make to the bank in respect of any advances made by the bank to him.

On September 1, 1955, the bank demanded in writing outstanding moneys, and George Edwin Webb failed to pay in accordance with the demand. The bank accordingly took out a summons for possession.

G. T. Hesketh for the bank.

The first defendant, George Edwin Webb, was not represented.

Mark Nesbitt for George Edward and Mrs. Webb.

DANCKWERTS J., after stating the facts, continued: If, therefore, the lease is effective, the bank cannot gain possession of the property because at the date when the legal charge was executed by George Edwin Webb, and at the date it was conveyed to him, it was subject to an existing lease for 21 years, which had at the date of conveyance to him about 19 years to run and is still, of course, operative. It is said, however, that by reason of their being parties to the conveyance, George Edward and Mrs. Webb are both estopped from setting up the existence of the lease because of the recital in that conveyance that they were "seised "in unencumbered fee simple in possession upon trust for sale."

As regards estoppel, it depends upon representation, and the cases show that in order to be effective a representation relied upon in conveyancing as creating an estoppel must be clear and unambiguous. The question arises, therefore, whether the recital contained in the conveyance is of such a kind. "Seised in "unencumbered fee simple in possession upon trust for sale": was that a representation that no such lease existed? In my view it was not.

In the first place, I am not satisfied that a lease was an incumbrance to these parties. It is true that in certain circumstances a lease may be regarded as an incumbrance, but it seems to me that an incumbrance, normally, is something in the nature of a mortgage and not something in the nature of a lease or tenancy, and since, on the authorities, an unambiguous representation must be shown if an estoppel is to be created, it seems to me that in that respect the recital is not sufficient for the plaintiff bank's purpose. Secondly, the words "in possession" are relied upon, but I do not think that "in possession" means vacant possession. It seems to me that the meaning is "fee "simple in possession" as opposed to "fee simple in reversion" and there again it seems to me impossible for the bank to rely upon such representation in the recital to cause the vendors to be bound by any estoppel.

1957

District Bank Ltd. v. Webb.

Danckwerts J.

It is plain from what I have stated that there was in existence at the date of the legal charge an incumbrance created by the memorandum of deposit and deposit of title deeds by George Edward and Mrs. Webb on July 28, 1954, and also that mysterious incumbrance, if it was an incumbrance, constituted by George Edwin Webb by his memorandum of deposit of October 14, 1954. The bank must have known of these two incumbrances. It is plain from the evidence of Mr. Leech, the bank manager, that all the Webbs, all three of them, were on very close terms. They were always doing business together and it seems to me extremely likely that Mr. Leech must have been aware on the date when the legal charge was executed by George Edwin Webb that George Edwin Webb was not in possession of the property the subject of the charge, and that either or both George Edward and Mrs. Webb were living there and in possession, and if he knew that the person on the title, the owner of the property, was not in possession, but somebody else, there was an obligation to inquire as to the terms under which the person in possession held the property. The evidence is more by inference than positive, and it is not necessary to rely particularly on that ground in the present case. It seems to me that the bank is not entitled to an order for possession by reason of the existence of the lease.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Claude Barker & Partners; Gregsons.

[PRIVY COUNCIL.]

* CHIEF EKE OJA AND OTHERS . . . APPELLANTS;

AND

CHIEF KANU UKPAI AND ANOTHER . . RESPONDENTS.

J. C.†

1958
Jan. 20.

ON APPEAL FROM THE WEST AFRICAN COURT OF APPEAL.

West Africa (Nigeria)—Jurisdiction—Claim to ownership of land—Not a claim to fix boundaries—Jurisdiction of Supreme Court—Not ousted by Inter-Tribal Boundaries Settlement Ordinance (No. 49 of 1933) (Laws of Nigeria, 1948, c. 95), ss. 3, 4 and 5.

Where the respondents, as plaintiffs representing the people of Biakpan, claimed a declaration of title to a piece of land known as "Ekuot Ijoho" at Biakpan in the Calabar Province of Nigeria and defined by a plan, and the appellants as defendants representing the neighbouring people of Asaga contested the claim, it was simply a claim to ownership of the land and not a claim to have a boundary fixed between two tribes, and the decision of the claim was clearly within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Nigeria, on transfer from the Native Court, by the joint effect of the Native Courts Ordinance and the Supreme Court Ordinance. Further, the Inter-Tribal Boundaries Settlement Ordinance, 1933, of Nigeria, did not deprive the Supreme Court of jurisdiction to hear and decide such a claim. That Ordinance contained no express exclusion of the Supreme Court's jurisdiction, did not in section 3 give any tribe a right to have a dispute decided, and by sections 4 and 5 made it clear that the decision under the Ordinance need not be based on any principle of law. A jurisdiction of the kind conferred by the Ordinance could not have been intended to take away the right of any tribe to have its claim to ownership of a defined piece of land decided by the Supreme Court on legal principles after hearing argument.

Judgment of the West African Court of Appeal affirmed in the result.

APPEAL (No. 28 of 1956) from a judgment and order of the West African Court of Appeal (May 28, 1954), affirming a judgment of the Supreme Court of Nigeria (July 14, 1953) in favour of the present respondents.

The following facts are taken from the judgment of the Judicial Committee: This appeal arose out of a suit commenced by plaint in the Native Court of Ubaghara and transferred to the Supreme Court by an order made under section 28 (1) (c) of the Native Courts Ordinance.

It is convenient to refer hereafter to the respondents (who were plaintiffs in the suit) as "the plaintiffs" and to the appellants (defendants in the suit) as "the defendants."

The plaintiffs claimed, for themselves and as representing the people of Biakpan, "(1) Declaration of title to all that piece or † Present: LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON, LORD REID, THE RT. HON. L. M. D. DE SILVA.

J. C.
1958
EKE OJA
v.
KANU
UKPAI.

"parcel of land known as 'Ekuot Ijoho' situate and being at "Biakpan in the Calabar Province, property of the plaintiffs, "the said land to be particularly delineated on the plan to be "produced at the hearing.

"(2) £300 damages for trespass in that in or during the year "1947, the defendants and their people and/or agents broke and "entered into the plaintiffs' said land and therefrom collected "palm fruits and made farms therein, and thereby disturbed the "plaintiffs' quiet possession of the said land, without the leave "or licence of the plaintiffs.

"(3) An injunction to restrain the defendants, their people, "agents, servants and each and every one of them from any "further acts of interference with the plaintiffs' right, title, "interest in, and possession of the said land. Dispute started "since 1947."

By their statement of claim filed on September 15, 1952, the plaintiffs pleaded that the land in dispute was situate at Biakpan in the District of Arochuku, Calabar, was known as "Ekuot "Ijoho," and was and had been from time immemorial the property of the plaintiffs by virtue of first occupation and the exercise of maximum acts of ownership by the plaintiffs and their ancestors. They further alleged that while certain lands lying between the plaintiffs' village of Biakpan and the defendants' village of Asaga had been treated as the common property of both villages, the effective occupation and user and exclusive possession of the land in dispute by the plaintiffs and their ancestors were always recognized by the defendants and their ancestors, who were strangers to the land in dispute, until 1947 when the defendants and their people started to invade the land in dispute and to make farms and collect palm fruits thereon thereby trespassing on the plaintiffs' property and causing them damage.

By their defence dated November 5, 1953, the defendants, for themselves and as representing the people of Asaga, admitted the representative nature of the action and said that the true name of the land in dispute was "Ali Ukwu." They averred that the defendants were the real and true owners of the land in dispute by virtue of inheritance from their ancestors and the exercise of maximum acts of ownership thereover. They pleaded that the plaintiffs enjoyed the land whereon they now lived by virtue of a grant from the defendants and that until recently the plaintiffs had always acknowledged the defendants as their landlords. The defendants denied the trespass and damage alleged in the statement of claim, and pleaded (1) estoppel; (2) res judicata. The defendants did not plead any matters relied on in support of the pleas of estoppel or res judicata nor did they plead either common ownership or common user of the land in dispute.

At the hearing of the suit in the Supreme Court of Nigeria before Dove-Edwin J. it appeared that the parties were in substantial agreement concerning the location and precise boundaries of the land in dispute, the said land being more particularly delineated on two plans (Exhibits A and B) put in evidence by the plaintiffs and defendants respectively. Those plans were substantially identical, save that Exhibit A referred to all physical features by Biakpan names and included more frequent reference to physical features associated with the Biakpan people than to those associated with the Asaga people. In the same way Exhibit B referred to all physical features by Asaga names and included more frequent reference to physical features alleged by the defendants to be associated with the Asaga people.

The plaintiffs and the defendants both called a number of witnesses to testify as to the prior occupation and continuous user of the land in dispute by the party by whom the said witnesses were called. The trial judge considered the plaintiffs and their witnesses to be reliable and accepted their evidence, and in terms said that he considered the defendants and their evidence as unreliable. He gave judgment for the plaintiffs for the declaration sought and for the injunction sought, but gave no damages for trespass.

The defendants appealed to the West African Court of Appeal, and de Comarmond Ag.C.J. (Nigeria) delivered a judgment dismissing the appeal, with which Foster Sutton P. and Henley Coussey J.A. concurred. The Acting Chief Justice said: "I do "not consider that the appellants can succeed in this appeal to "have the judgment set aside on the ground that it cannot be "supported having regard to the weight of evidence or that it is "unreasonable. The important question that falls to be decided "is whether the learned judge was right in rejecting the plea of "estoppel or res judicata raised in paragraph 8 of the Asagas' "statement of defence."

He then dealt with, and rejected, the defendants' plea of estoppel or res judicata and continued: "The last ground of "appeal, which is that the decision is unwarranted, unreason-"able and not supported by the weight of evidence, must also "fail because it cannot be said that there was not sufficient "evidence to support the trial judge's decision. I am satisfied "that the learned judge spared no effort in analysing and "weighing the evidence, and I see no reason for disagreeing "with him."

1957. December 2, 3, 4, 5. Sir Andrew Clark Q.C. and D. M. Ogwo for the appellants.

L. G. Scarman Q.C. and A. S. Trapnell for the first respondent.

The following cases, in addition to those referred to in the

J. C.
1958
EKE OJA
v.
KANU
UKPAI.

judgment, were cited in argument: Assaf v. Fuwa[1]; Chief Kwame Asante v. Chief Kwame Tawra[2]; Rex v. The Steward, etc., of Havering Atte Bower[3]; Vanderpuye v. Botchway[4]; Healey v. Minister of Health[5]; Omanhene Kobina Foli v. Chief Oberg Akesse[6]; Amata v. Modekwe[7]; Chester v. Bateson[8]; Hedley v. Bates[9]; Trevivan v. Lawrance[10]; Magrath v. Hardy[11]; Reg. v. Hutchings[12]; Pasmore v. Oswaldtwistle Urban District Council.[13]

1958. January 20. The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON, who stated the facts set out above and continued: Faced with the concurrent findings of Dove-Edwin J. and the Court of Appeal, Sir Andrew Clark, for the defendants, naturally felt unable to contend that their Lordships should take a different view of the evidence which had been held to establish the title of the plaintiffs to the land in dispute. He contended, however, that neither the judge nor the Court of Appeal had jurisdiction to decide the plaintiffs' claim. In support of this contention he put forward three submissions:

(1) The present action is, in substance, a claim to have the boundary between two tribes fixed by the Supreme Court, and that court has never had any jurisdiction to fix such a boundary.

(2) If the Supreme Court ever had jurisdiction to decide such a claim as is now put forward by the plaintiffs, that jurisdiction was ousted by the Inter-Tribal Boundaries Settlement Ordinance (No. 49 of 1933) and has not existed since November 30, 1933, when that Ordinance came into force.

(3) Alternatively, the Ordinance just mentioned excludes the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to give a judgment the effect of which is to alter an inter-tribal boundary, once such a boundary has been fixed by a decision under the Ordinance; and the boundary between the people of Biakpan and the people of Asaga has been fixed by a joint decision of two Assistant District Officers, Mr. T. G. Connell of the Afikpo Division of the Province of Ogoja, and Mr. C. T. C. Ennals of the Bende Division of the Province of Owerri, dated October 22, 1937.

It is to be observed that Sir Andrew did not rely upon any estoppel, and the alleged decision upon which he relies is not the same as the alleged decision upon which the defendants relied in the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeal. In these courts they relied upon an alleged decision of the Resident of the Province of Ogoja, Captain D. O'Conner, dated April 23 and 24,

[1] [1955] A.C. 215; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 552.
[2] [1949] W.N. 40; 65 T.L.R. 105.
[3] (1822) 5 B. & Ald. 691.
[4] [1956] A.C. 501, 508; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 1080.
[5] [1955] 1 Q.B. 221, 225; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 815; [1954] 3 All E.R. 449.
[6] [1934] A.C. 340.
[7] (1954) 14 W.A.C.A. 580.
[8] [1920] 1 K.B. 829; 36 T.L.R. 225.
[9] (1880) 13 Ch.D. 498.
[10] (1704) 1 Salk. 276.
[11] (1838) 4 Bing.N.C. 782.
[12] (1881) 6 Q.B.D. 300.
[13] [1898] A.C. 387; 14 T.L.R. 368.

1938, but the Court of Appeal held that this document was a nullity, and Sir Andrew did not seek to challenge that decision.

The result is that counsel for the defendants rely upon three submissions which were not put forward in either of the West African courts; but as these submissions challenge the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeal their Lordships feel bound to express their opinion on them.

In support of his first submission, already stated, Sir Andrew cited a number of decisions in England as to the fixing of boundaries by the court, including Parish of St. Luke v. Parish of St. Leonard,[1] Wake v. Conyers[2] and A.G. to Prince of Wales v. St. Aubyn,[3] and one case in Nigeria, Ovat Ebenyam v. Ayigo.[4]

Their Lordships would have thought it regrettable if they had to decide whether or not the Supreme Court has jurisdiction to fix a boundary between two tribes, without the assistance of any discussion of the matter by that court or by the Court of Appeal. In their opinion, however, the plaintiffs in the present suit did not claim to have a boundary fixed between two tribes. The claim and defence in the suit have already been set out with some particularity. They show that the plaintiffs simply claimed ownership of a piece of land, defined by the plan Exhibit A, and the defendants contested this claim. In their Lordships' view the decision of such a claim is clearly within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, on transfer from the Native Court, by the joint effect of the Native Courts Ordinance and the Supreme Court Ordinance. They would observe that the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to decide upon such a claim does not appear to have been questioned in any case in the Supreme Court of Nigeria or in the West African Court of Appeal, and these courts have frequently decided cases of this nature. See, for instance, Okon Owon v. Eto Ndon[5] and Mosalewa Thomas v. Preston Holder.[6]

Sir Andrew Clark's second submission depends upon the true construction of the Inter-Tribal Boundaries Settlement Ordinance already mentioned. This Ordinance came into force on November 30, 1933, and was amended by No. 6 of 1935 and No. 38 of 1938. Section 2 of the Ordinance defines the expressions "District Officer" and "tribe," and section 3 provides "Any "district officer may, with the approval of the Resident in charge "of the province, inquire into and decide any dispute between "two or more tribes as to the boundaries between the lands of "such tribes." Section 4 provides that "In any inquiry under the "last preceding section the district officer may, if he thinks fit, "be assisted by . . . assessors," and section 5 provides that "No "legal practitioner shall appear for or act for or assist any party in "any inquiry held under this Ordinance unless he is a member

[1] (1779) 1 Bro.C.C. 40.
[2] (1759) 1 Eden 331.
[3] (1811) Wight. 167, 229–230, 231, 235.
[4] (1941) 16 Nig.L.R. 30.
[5] (1946) 12 W.A.C.A. 71.
[6] (1946) 12 W.A.C.A. 78.

J. C.
1958
EKE OJA
v.
KANU
UKPAI.

"of one of the tribes which are parties to the dispute, is personally interested in its settlement and receives no remuneration "for his services in the inquiry." Sections 6, 7 and 8 deal with the review of decisions of the District Officer by the Resident in charge of the Province or the Governor, and section 9 provides that "For the purposes of any inquiry under the Ordinance the "District Officer or Resident in charge of the Province, as the "case may be, shall have all the powers of a magistrate in "connexion with any civil cause in respect of enforcing the "attendance of witnesses and compelling the production of "documents." Section 10 provides that "Any decision or order "given upon an inquiry or a review under this Ordinance shall "be recorded in writing and shall be signed by the Officer giving "the same and shall be registered and preserved by the Resident "in charge of the province." Section 11, upon which Sir Andrew particularly relied, is as follows: "Any person who acts "in disregard or defiance of any decision which may be in force "under this Ordinance, or without due authority, removes, "damages or defaces any boundary or other mark erected during "the course and for the purposes of any inquiry under this "Ordinance or erected in connexion with any decision or order "given under this Ordinance, shall be guilty of an offence and "shall be liable to a fine of £50 or to imprisonment for six months "or to both such fine and imprisonment."

Their Lordships are quite unable to hold that this Ordinance deprived the Supreme Court of jurisdiction to hear and decide claims such as the claim of the plaintiffs in the present action. In the first place, they think that if the Ordinance had been intended to have any such striking effect, the intention would have been made plain by an express provision in the Ordinance to this effect. There is no such provision. Secondly, it is to be observed that section 3 of the Ordinance does not give any tribe a right to have a dispute decided. The section might have been construed as conferring such a right but for the words "with "the approval of the Resident in charge of the Province," but these words, in their Lordships' view, make it clear that the Resident has a discretion to give or withhold his approval to a suggestion by the district officer that he should inquire into and decide any particular dispute. Moreover, sections 4 and 5 of the Ordinance make it clear that the decision under the Ordinance need not be based on any principles of law.

Their Lordships cannot think that a jurisdiction of this kind was intended to take away the right of any tribe to have its claim to ownership of a defined piece of land decided by the Supreme Court on legal principles, after hearing legal argument by persons skilled in the law.

As to the third submission on behalf of the defendants, already stated, their Lordships are of opinion that the alleged joint decision of the two Assistant District Officers did not decide anything, and was not intended to be a decision under the Ordinance. The document in question is headed "A Joint "Report by T. G. Connell, Esqr., and C. T. C. Ennals, Esqr., "Assistant District Officers, on the Inter-Tribal Boundary Settle- "ment between the Village of Biakpan, Afikpo Division, Ogojo "Province, and the Eziafor and Asaga Villages of the Bende "Division of Owerri Province." The events leading up to this Report are as follows: On November 3, 1936, Mr. Connell was appointed to hold an inquiry under the Boundaries Settlement Ordinance to determine the boundary between Eziafor and Biakpan. The Asagas and the Eziafors belong to the same clan. On the 16th of the same month Mr. Connell gave his decision. The Biakpans were satisfied but the Eziafors were not, and they brought in on their side the present defendants. Objections were raised against the boundary fixed by Mr. Connell, and, as a result, Mr. Ennals, was appointed to hold a further inquiry. He was instructed to fix the boundary between the Biakpans on the one side and the Asagas and Eziafors on the other. The boundary was so fixed, on April 24, 1937, and it differed in certain respects from the boundary fixed by Mr. Connell. This decision did not satisfy the Biakpans and they petitioned against it. It was as a result of these events that the joint Report of Messrs. Connell and Ennals came into existence. The Report begins "In accordance with instructions received from the "Resident, Owerri and Ogoja Provinces in their Memoranda"—then the numbers of the Memoranda are given—"the above- "mentioned Officers proceeded to the area in dispute on "October 22, 1937, accompanied by representatives selected by "each of the three villages."

The instructions there mentioned were not before their Lordships, but reading the Report as a whole they think it is clear that the two Assistant District Officers did not purport to make any decision under the Boundaries Settlement Ordinance. After describing their investigations they "recommend" an amendment of the Biakpan-Eziafor boundary. Then, after stating certain matters of history, and of the allegations of the respective disputants, they go on to say, in paragraph 5 of the Report, "The amendment in paragraph 2 above is put forward because" —and then they go on to give the reasons why the amendment "recommended" in paragraph 2 was "put forward." Paragraph 6 is as follows: "Ikama Pond: Fishing Rights Ubarar. "No amendment of Mr. Connell's decision is proposed." In paragraph 7 they deal with the Biakpan-Asaga boundary and, after stating certain matters, they end the paragraph "therefore "no amendments are proposed." Finally there is a portion of the Report headed "Description of Boundary. Proposed "Biakpan-Eziafor-Asaga Boundary," and they then go on to state the "proposed" boundary.

Their Lordships think it is impossible to construe a Report so worded as being a decision under the Boundaries Ordinance. The words "decision" or "decide" are not used in any part of

J. C.
1958
EKE OJA
v.
KANU
UKPAI.

the Report. On the contrary, as the quotations already set out show, the two gentlemen use the words "recommend," "put "forward" and, in three different places, "proposed." Moreover, there is a striking difference between the concluding part of this Report and the concluding part of the decision by Mr. Ennals already mentioned. The latter document is divided into two parts, each part being signed by Mr. Ennals on April 24, 1937. The first part is headed "Report" and takes the form of certain recommendations and proposals as to the Biakpan-Eziafor boundary and the Biakpan-Asaga boundary respectively. The second part is headed "Decision" and is in imperative terms. The earlier decision by Mr. Connell is not before their Lordships, but they cannot believe that if Mr. Connell and Mr. Ennals intended their joint Report to be a decision under the Boundaries Ordinance it would have taken the form already described. The document was merely a report intended to assist higher authority to review the two differing separate decisions of Mr. Connell and Mr. Ennals.

For these reasons their Lordships are of opinion that there has never been any decision under the Boundaries Ordinance as to the boundary between the lands of the plaintiffs and the lands of the defendants. Counsel on both sides agree that neither Mr. Connell alone nor Mr. Ennals alone could decide this boundary, since in so doing he would have decided also the boundary between the Province of Ogoja and the Province of Owerri, which he had no power to do; and, as has already been stated, the alleged decision of Captain O'Conner is no longer relied upon. Thus their Lordships are not called upon to decide as to the effect, if any, of a decision under the Boundaries Ordinance upon the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to decide the present case, or to consider the decision of the West African Court of Appeal in the case of Nnamene Anjoku v. Ivube Nwa Nnamani.[7]

Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed. The appellants must pay the respondents' costs of this appeal.

Solicitors: Robert K. George; Sydney Redfern & Co.

C. C.

[7] (1953) 14 W.A.C.A. 357.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

*CARGO LATELY LADEN ON BOARD THE FEHMARN (OWNERS) v. FEHMARN (OWNERS).

THE FEHMARN.

[1956 F. 1260.]

C. A.

1957
Dec. 16, 17.

Lord Denning, Hodson and Morris L.JJ.

Arbitration—Stay of judicial proceedings—Submission to foreign court—Assignment of contract—Both parties strangers to foreign court—Refusal of stay—Arbitration Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 27), s. 4.

The plaintiffs, an English company and the holders of a bill of lading which acknowledged the shipment at a Russian port, in apparent good order and condition, of a cargo of turpentine by a Russian organization for carriage to London, began an action against the owners of the German vessel in which the turpentine was carried for damages arising out of a dispute under the bill of lading, it being alleged that, on delivery in London, the turpentine was discovered to be contaminated. It was a term of the bill of lading that all claims and disputes arising thereunder "shall be "judged in the U.S.S.R." After discharge the turpentine and the vessel were surveyed in the United Kingdom, and all the plaintiffs' witnesses as to their title to sue were in the United Kingdom. The German vessel traded regularly to the United Kingdom. Counsel for the defendants intimated in argument that the defendants might wish to call evidence at the trial as to the condition of the railway wagons from which the turpentine had been loaded. The defendants moved for an order that the writ of summons be set aside for want of jurisdiction, or, alternatively, that the action be stayed.

Willmer J. held that the court had jurisdiction and, exercising his discretion in favour of the English company, refused to stay the action. On appeal by the defendants, it was no longer contended that the court lacked jurisdiction:—

Held, that since the English courts clearly had jurisdiction, and it being shown that, in all the circumstances, the judge had sufficient reason for exercising his discretion in the way he did, the court should not interfere with the exercise of that discretion.

Decision of Willmer J. [1957] 1 W.L.R. 815; [1957] 2 All E.R. 707; [1957] 1 Ll.L.Rep. 511 affirmed.

Per Lord Denning. I do not regard the choice of law in the contract as decisive. I prefer to look to see with what country is the dispute most closely concerned.

APPEAL from Willmer J.

The plaintiffs commenced an action in rem against the defendants for damages arising out of a bill of lading relating to the carriage of turpentine from Ventspils to London. The defendants entered an appearance under protest and moved for an order that the writ of summons be set aside for want of jurisdiction, or, alternatively, that the action be stayed.

Willmer J. held, that by reason of the express provisions of section 1 (1) (g) of the Administration of Justice Act, 1956, the court had jurisdiction, and, accordingly, the writ of summons should not be set aside; and further, that prima facie, in view of the agreement between the parties to refer any dispute to a foreign tribunal, the defendants were entitled to have the action stayed, but that, in all the circumstances, and in particular, since both parties were strangers to Russia, and since the evidence of the plaintiffs was mainly in this country and that of the defendants from their vessel could be easily received in this country, the court ought to exercise its discretion in favour of the plaintiffs and allow the action to proceed. The defendants appealed, but before the Court of Appeal did not contend that there was any want of jurisdiction.

C. A.
1957
The Fehmarn.

After the decision of Willmer J. the Fehmarn was arrested when she returned within the jurisdiction and security was furnished to obtain her release.

T. G. Roche Q.C. and Derek Hene for the appellants.

G. G. Honeyman Q.C. and H. V. Brandon for the respondents.

The following cases were cited in argument: The Athenee [1]; Evans v. Bartlam [2]; Smith Hogg v. Black Sea & Baltic General Insurance [3]; Racecourse Betting Control Board v. Secretary for Air [4]; The Cap Blanco [5]; Kidston v. Deutsche Luft Hansa Aktiengesellschaft [6]; Osenton (Charles) & Co. v. Johnston [7]; Heyman v. Darwins Ltd. [8]

Lord Denning. In September, 1955, a Russian company loaded about 500 tons of turpentine in bulk on a German ship then at a port in the Baltic. The Russian shippers presented to the master a bill of lading for signature. One half of the face of the bill of lading was in Russian and the corresponding half in English. All the conditions on the back were in the English language. The bill of lading said that these goods were shipped in apparent good order and condition on the vessel and that they were to be delivered subject to the conditions on the bill of lading. Amongst the conditions was one that the shipowners were bound to make the ship seaworthy before and at the beginning of the voyage. At the end of these conditions there were two clauses which I must read. Condition 26 says: "All "claims and disputes arising under and in connection with this "bill of lading shall be judged in the U.S.S.R." Condition 27 says: "All questions and disputes not mentioned in this bill of "lading shall be determined according to the Merchant Shipping "Code of the U.S.S.R."

The turpentine was duly shipped in bulk, I suppose by being

[1] (1922) 11 Ll.L.Rep. 6; (1923) 14 Ll.L.Rep. 275.

[2] [1937] A.C. 473; 53 T.L.R. 689; [1937] 2 All E.R. 646.

[3] [1940] A.C. 997; 56 T.L.R. 893; [1940] 3 All E.R. 405. Ll.L.Rep. 253.

[4] [1944] Ch. 114; 60 T.L.R. 147; [1944] 1 All E.R. 60.

[5] [1913] P. 130; 29 T.L.R. 557.

[6] (1930) 38 Ll.L.Rep. 1.

[7] [1942] A.C. 130; 57 T.L.R. 515.

[8] [1942] A.C. 356; 58 T.L.R. 169; [1942] 1 All E.R. 337.

pumped on board the ship, at the port of Ventspils in the Baltic. The Fehmarn was owned by German owners in Hamburg. She made her journey to London, and the Russian shippers sold the goods to English buyers, who became holders of the bill of lading.

After the turpentine was unloaded in England, the English importers made complaint of short delivery and contamination. They say (as it now appears from the statement of claim) that there were some three tons short on delivery and that the turpentine was contaminated owing to the failure of the shipowners to make the ship seaworthy and fit for the reception of the turpentine. They say the tanks of the ship had previously carried linseed oil or other vegetable oils on previous voyages and they had not been properly cleaned out before the turpentine was loaded, with the result that there was a skin of linseed oil on the inside of the tanks, which dissolved and so contaminated the turpentine.

The solicitors to the English importers wrote a letter to the German owners making a claim for some £5,000 and intimating that, as the ship was a frequent visitor to this country, it might be necessary to take steps to arrest the vessel when she next came to this country in order that their claim should be settled. The German owners instructed English solicitors to deal with the claim. The solicitors to the English importers spoke on the telephone to the solicitors for the German owners and told them that, if they did not receive an undertaking for security to be given, they would arrest the ship when she next arrived in this country. Thereupon the solicitors for the German owners, after two months' interval, on November 15, 1956, wrote: "We "understand there will be no objection by our clients to a sub-"mission to a private arbitrator, but having regard to clauses 26 "and 27 of the bill of lading our clients are not prepared to give "security to meet your claim." Clauses 26 and 27 are those which I have already read.

So the parties were at issue. Eventually the English importers, the owners of the cargo, brought an action against the German owners of the ship in the Admiralty Division of the High Court claiming damages. Thereupon the German owners moved to set aside the writ on the ground that the English courts had no jurisdiction or alternatively that by the agreement the parties had agreed that all the disputes should be adjudged in the courts of Russia and not in this country.

As to the first point, it is not now suggested that the Court of Admiralty has not jurisdiction. By section 1 (1) (g) of the Administration of Justice Act, 1956 (following previous statutes), it is plain that the Court of Admiralty in England has jurisdiction to deal with such a claim as this.

Then the next question is whether the action ought to be stayed because of the provision in the bill of lading that all disputes are to be judged by the Russian courts. I do not regard

C. A.
1957
The Fehmarn.
Lord Denning

this provision as equal to an arbitration clause, but I do say that the English courts are in charge of their own proceedings: and one of the rules they apply is that a stipulation that all disputes should be judged by the tribunals of a particular country is not absolutely binding. It is a matter to which the courts of this country will pay much regard and to which they will normally give effect, but it is subject to the overriding principle that no one by his private stipulation can oust these courts of their jurisdiction in a matter that properly belongs to them.

I would ask myself therefore: Is this dispute a matter which properly belongs to the courts of this country? Here are English importers who, when they take delivery of the goods in England, find them contaminated. The goods are surveyed by surveyors on both sides, with the result that the English importers make a claim against the German shipowners. The vessel is a frequent visitor to this country. In order to be sure that their claim, if substantiated, is paid by the shipowners, the English importers are entitled by the procedure of our courts of Admiralty to arrest the ship whenever she comes here in order to have security for their claim. There sems to me to be no doubt that such a dispute is one that properly belongs for its determination to the courts of this country. But still the question remains: Ought these courts in their discretion to stay this action?

It has been said by Mr. Roche that this contract is governed by Russian law and should be judged by the Russian courts, who know that law. And the dispute may involve evidence from witnesses in Russia about the condition of the goods on shipment. Then why, says Mr. Roche, should not it be judged in Russia as the condition says?

I do not regard the choice of law in the contract as decisive. I prefer to look to see with what country is the dispute most closely concerned. Here the Russian element in the dispute seems to me to be comparatively small. The dispute is between the German owners of the ship and the English importers. It depends on evidence here as to the condition of the goods when they arrived here in London and on evidence of the ship, which is a frequent visitor to London. The correspondence leaves in my mind, just as it did in the judge's mind, the impression that the German owners did not object to the dispute being decided in this country but wished to avoid the giving of security.

I think the dispute is more closely connected with England than Russia, and I agree with the judge that sufficient reason has been shown why the proceedings should continue in these courts and should not be stayed. I would therefore dismiss the appeal.

Hodson L.J. I agree. The judge stated in his judgment[1] that "where there is a provision in a contract providing that "disputes are to be referred to a foreign tribunal, then, prima

[1] [1957] 1 W.L.R. 815, 819.

"facie, this court will stay proceedings instituted in this country "in breach of such agreement."

That principle is well established and has been applied in a number of cases. MacKinnon L.J. in Racecourse Betting Control Board v. Secretary for Air[2] made it plain that that general principle was quite independent of section 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, now section 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1950, although in a number of cases where applications for a stay have been made argument has been addressed to the court and judgments have been delivered as if section 4 itself were being invoked. Mr. Roche, in arguing this case on behalf of the defendants, has sought to distinguish, or rather to escape from, the consequences of the decision of this court in The Athenee,[3] by saying that it was based, in part at any rate, upon a concession by Mr. Langton, who was moving to stay the action, in admitting that he was moving under section 4 of the Arbitration Act.

I notice that Atkin L.J. did not proceed on that basis, but founded himself upon the general principle which the judge stated and to which MacKinnon L.J. referred, that where parties have agreed that disputes should be referred to a foreign tribunal there is no indisposition on the part of the courts of this country to give effect to such a bargain. He went on to say that such a bargain is treated as equivalent to an arbitration clause, that is to say, the discretion is to be exercised on the same lines as where there is an arbitration clause.

Looking at the facts in The Athenee,[4] I am bound to say that it makes the argument for the defendants very difficult when an attempt is made to distinguish that case, because the application for a stay was made to the President and, in exercising his discretion in refusing to stay the action, he referred to matters which come under the heading, I think, of convenience, and the Court of Appeal (Bankes and Atkin L.JJ., Warrington L.J. agreeing with Bankes L.J.) referred to matters of the same kind as those which the judge had to consider in the present case, namely, the dispute being as to the condition of the cargo on arrival and the fitness of the ship to carry them and there having been a survey at which both parties were represented. It is true that in The Athenee[5] it was said that all the witnesses were in this country, whereas in this case it is clear that there will be witnesses or may be witnesses some of whom will not be in this country.

The judge, in my view, was quite correct in saying that on the authorities, particularly having regard to what was said in The Athenee,[6] he had a discretion in considering whether a stay should be granted, and he was entitled to take into consideration in exercising his discretion matters of convenience. I cannot see that he erred in any way in so doing and, if that is so, it is not

[2] [1944] 1 Ch. 114; 60 T.L.R. 147; [1944] 1 All E.R. 60.
[3] (1922) 11 Ll.L.Rep. 6.
[4] Ibid.
[5] Ibid.
[6] Ibid.

C. A.
1957
The Fehmarn.
Hodson L.J.

for this court, in my judgment, to substitute its discretion for his. I therefore would dismiss the appeal.

I have not forgotten one matter which was strongly relied upon by Mr. Roche for the defendants, namely that, in addition to the provision that disputes should be judged in the U.S.S.R., there was a subsequent provision in the succeeding paragraph in the conditions of the bill of lading to the effect that Russian law would apply in certain cases. The judge took that matter into consideration, as indeed he took all relevant matters into consideration. In my opinion, his judgment ought not to be disturbed.

Morris L.J. I am of the same opinion. In his judgment in Racecourse Betting Control Board v. Secretary for Air,[7] MacKinnon L.J. referred to contracts by which the parties had provided that the decision of a dispute should be in a foreign court. MacKinnon L.J.[8] said that the power and the duty in such cases to stay arose under what he called "a wider general "principle, namely, that the court makes people abide by their "contracts."

It seems to me that the approach of the judge in the present case was quite correct, for he referred to what he called the prima facie presumption, by which I think he had in mind the same considerations as those referred to by MacKinnon L.J., that the court will insist upon the parties honouring their bargain.

On the other hand, the judge referred to what he called the undoubted jurisdiction of the court, and again I think he was clearly correct in so referring to the jurisdiction of the court. He then considered whether sufficient grounds had been shown for displacing what he called the prima facie presumption so as to entitle the parties to take advantage of the jurisdiction of this court. My Lords have referred to the grounds that existed which, in the opinion of the judge, were good and sufficient reasons, and I am also of the opinion that the reasons to which they have referred are sufficient to displace the presumption that arises from the parties' contract.

Appeal dismissed.
Leave to appeal to the House of Lords refused.

Solicitors: Bentleys, Stokes & Lowless; Clyde & Co.

A. S-R.

[7] [1944] 1 Ch. 114. [8] Ibid. 126.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

* In re MOXON'S WILL TRUSTS. DOWNEY v. MOXON.

1958
Jan. 28.

Danckwerts J.

[1957 M. 1459.]

Trust and Trustee — Power of advancement — Exercise of power — Statutory power—Application of capital—Payment to beneficiary direct—No particular purpose expressed—"Benefit"—Trustee Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 32.

C. S. M. had a life interest in the residuary estate of his father, and his son, B. M., was contingently entitled to the capital thereof if he survived C. S. M. In the event of B. M. failing to survive his father, the fund went to the children of B. M. in equal shares. B. M. was 33 years of age at the present time, and had two infant children. The will contained no power of advancement, and the court was asked whether the trustees of the will could lawfully exercise the power of advancement conferred by section 32 of the Trustee Act, 1925,[1] by the payment, with the consent in writing of C. S. M., to B. M. for his own use of a sum out of the residuary estate not exceeding one-half thereof.

The estate was now worth about £55,000 and the trustees proposed to advance a sum of £20,000 to B. M. The evidence was that B. M. did not require the money for any particular purpose but that he was a responsible person and could be relied on to use the money in the best interest of himself and his family:—

Held, that the word "benefit" in section 32 of the Act was the widest possible word and included a payment of capital money direct to the beneficiary; but that did not absolve the trustees from making up their minds whether the payment in the particular manner which they contemplated was for the benefit of the beneficiary and they must satisfy themselves that it was a proper case for such a payment.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

Albert Edward Moxon made his will on January 25, 1927, and appointed the plaintiff Thomas Philip Downey, his wife, Maude Moxon, and his son, the first defendant, Charles Stone Moxon, as

[1] Trustee Act, 1925, s. 32: "(1) "Trustees may at any time or times "pay or apply any capital money "subject to a trust, for the advance-"ment or benefit, in such manner as "they may, in their absolute dis-"discretion, think fit, of any person "entitled to the capital of the trust "property or of any share thereof, "whether absolutely or contingently "on his attaining any specified age "or on the occurrence of any other "event, or subject to a gift over on "his death under any specified age "or on the occurrence of any other "event, and whether in possession "or in remainder or reversion . . . "Provided that—(a) the money so "paid or applied for the advancement "or benefit of any person shall not "exceed altogether in amount one-"half of the presumptive or vested "share or interest of that person in "the trust property . . . (c) no "such payment or application shall "be made so as to prejudice any "person entitled to any prior life or "other interest, whether vested or "contingent, in the money paid or "applied unless such person is in "existence and of full age and con-"sents in writing to such payment "or application."

1958

Moxon's Will Trusts, In re.

executors and trustees thereof. The testator died on March 21, 1939.

The will contained no power of advancement, and by this summons the plaintiff asked the court: (1) Whether the trustees of the will could lawfully exercise the power of advancement conferred by section 32 of the Trustee Act, 1925, by the payment with the consent in writing of the defendant, Charles Stone Moxon (tenant for life of the testator's residuary estate) to the defendant Bryan Moxon (who was contingently entitled in remainder) for his own use of a sum out of the residuary estate of the testator not exceeding one-half of the said residuary estate. (2) Whether any lawful exercise of the said power in relation to the said residuary estate and with the consent in writing of the defendant, Charles Stone Moxon, would cause the life interest therein of the said Charles Stone Moxon to be forfeited by virtue of the provisions of clause 9 of the will.

The relevant provisions of the will were as follows: By clauses 7 and 8 the testator directed his trustees to stand possessed of his residuary estate (therein referred to as the "trust fund") upon trust to pay the income thereof to his wife, Maude Moxon, for her life.

Clause 9 of the will provided: "And after the death of my "said wife . . . my trustees shall if no act or thing shall have "been done or suffered by my said son Charles Stone Moxon and "if no event shall have happened whereby the income of the "trust fund or some part thereof would or might if belonging "absolutely to my said son become vested in or charged in "favour of some other persons or corporation or my said son "would or might be deprived of the right to receive the same or "any part thereof pay such income to my said son during his "life until some such act or thing as aforesaid shall be done or "suffered by my said son or some event as aforesaid shall happen "and after the failure or determination in the lifetime of my said "son of the trust in his favour hereinbefore contained then my "trustees shall during the residue of the life of my said son "stand possessed of the said income upon the trusts and subject "to the provisions upon and subject to which the said income "would for the time being be held if my said son were then "dead."

Clause 10 provided: "And after the death of my said son "Charles . . . my trustees shall stand possessed of the trust fund "and the income thereof in trust in equal shares if more than "one for all or any the children or child of my said son living at "the date of the death of the survivor of myself my said wife and "my said son who attain the age of 21 years and for all or any "of the issue living at the said date who attain the age of 21 "years of any child of my said son before the said date leaving "issue at the said date such issue to take through all degrees "according to their stocks in equal shares (if more than one) "the share which their parent would have taken if living at the "said date and so that no issue shall take whose parent is living "at the said date and so capable of taking . . ."

The following facts were stated in an affidavit by the plaintiff: The testator's wife, Maude Moxon, died on November 22, 1952. The defendant, Charles Stone Moxon, was the testator's only child and was now aged upwards of 60 years. He had one child only (namely) the defendant, Bryan Moxon, who was upwards of 33 years and who was married and had two children, the infant defendants, Pamela Ann Moxon and Anthony David Moxon.

The plaintiff and the defendant, Charles Stone Moxon, as the trustees of the will intended, if they could do so lawfully and without causing a forfeiture of the life interest of the said Charles Stone Moxon in the trust fund, to exercise the power of advancement conferred by section 32 of the Trustee Act, 1925, by paying a sum of £20,000 to the defendant Bryan Moxon for his own use out of the capital of the trust fund. The trust fund now consisted of investments worth approximately £55,000.

An annuity bequeathed by the will amounting to £52 was paid out of the income of the trust; the other annuities had ceased to be payable.

The plaintiff continued: "to the best of my knowledge the "said Bryan Moxon does not at present require the said sum "for the purpose of any specific purchase or other expenditure. "But, in my opinion, and (as he informs me and I believe) in that "of my co-trustee, the said Bryan Moxon is a responsible and "trustworthy person who can be relied on to deal with the said "money in the best interests of himself and his family. We have "also taken into account the fact that if the said Charles Stone "Moxon lives for five years after the payment has been made a "substantial saving of estate duty on his death will result."

Kenneth Elphinstone for the plaintiff, one of the trustees of the will.

Michael Kelly for the tenant for life, Charles Stone Moxon, and the remainderman, Bryan Moxon.

E. J. Freeman for Pamela and Anthony, infant children of Bryan.

The following cases were cited in the argument: Lowther v. Bentinck [2]; In re Vestey's Settlement [3]; In re Powles [4]; In re Ropner's Settlement Trusts [5]; In re Heyworth's Contingent Reversionary Interest. [6]

DANCKWERTS J. The trustees desire to exercise the power, conferred not by the will but by section 32 of the Trustee Act,

[2] (1874) L.R. 19 Eq. 166.

[3] [1951] Ch. 209; [1950] 2 All E.R. 891.

[4] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 336; [1954] 1 All E.R. 516.

[5] [1956] 1 W.L.R. 902; [1956] 3 All E.R. 332n.

[6] [1956] Ch. 364; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 1044; [1956] 2 All E.R. 21.

1958

MOXON'S WILL TRUSTS. In re.

Danckwerts J.

1925, by making an advance, with the consent, of course, of the life tenant, to the second defendant, Bryan Moxon, the son of the tenant for life, by a payment direct to him. He is 33, and they appear to think that he is a responsible person; but there is no evidence as to the purposes for which he would use the money, nor, indeed, does there appear to have been any inquiry by the trustees as to what he would do with it. There is merely evidence that they believe that he does not require it for any particular purpose or expenditure at the present moment.

The provisions of section 32 are in quite wide and general terms. It confers upon the trustees power in these words. [His Lordship read section 32 of the Trustee Act, 1925.] The second defendant, of course, is entitled contingently to the capital, and I am asked to say whether they may apply that power by a payment to the beneficiary in question directly.

One of the trustees said in evidence that one of the matters which has operated in their minds with regard to the proposed payment is that there will be substantial saving in estate duty on the death of the tenant for life; and that, of course, is undoubtedly a matter which will enure for his benefit. It seems to me that the word "benefit" is the widest possible word one could have and that it must include a payment direct to the beneficiary; but that does not absolve the trustees from making up their minds whether the payment in the particular manner which they contemplate is for the benefit of the beneficiary.

I propose, therefore, to answer the question which I am asked by saying that the power does include a payment of capital moneys directly to the beneficiary, but that the trustees must satisfy themselves that it is a proper case for a payment to be made in that manner.

The second question is covered by the decision of In re Rees,[1] and as that is conceded, I will make a declaration that any lawful exercise of the said power in relation to the said residuary estate, and with the consent in writing of the defendant, Charles Stone Moxon, will not cause his life interest to be forfeited.

Declarations accordingly.

Solicitors: Crossman, Block & Co. for Eaton Smith & Downey, Huddersfield.

I. G. R. M.

[1] [1954] Ch. 202; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 59; [1954] 1 All E.R. 7.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* HAZELL v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION AND ANOTHER.

1957
Nov. 27, 28, 29.

Pearson J.

Railway — Level crossing — Accommodation road — Collision between motor-vehicle and train on foggy day—Whether special precautions to be taken by railway authorities and employees.

Negligence—Standard of care—Question of fact—Relevance of judicial precedent.

Judicial Precedent — Question of fact — Special class of situation—Application of legal principle.

Fact or Law—Negligence—Standard of care—Special class of situation.

The plaintiff's son, who was driving a tractor across an accommodation crossing on a foggy morning, was killed when a train ran into the tractor. In a claim under the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846–1908, and the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, negligence was alleged against the railway authorities and their engine driver. The judge found that, despite the circumstances of fog and damp, the train could have been heard by anyone at the crossing if there was no other noise:—

Held, that although the railway authorities and their employees were bound to follow the basic rule of taking reasonable steps to promote safety, the principle which applied to an ordinary accommodation crossing was that, even in foggy weather, they were not bound to take any special precaution such as reducing speed, whistling on approach, or having whistle boards erected, and, accordingly, the defendants were not negligent.

Although it was a question of fact whether the defendants behaved negligently, it was permissible to look at decisions in other cases, especially Court of Appeal decisions, to see how the basic rule could properly be applied to situations of a particular class.

Kemshead v. British Transport Commission (post, p. 173) followed.

ACTION.

On October 11, 1955, at about 8.15 a.m., Arthur Frederick Hazell, aged 22, the son of the plaintiff, Alfred Frederick Hazell, was killed in an accident occurring at an accommodation crossing. The plaintiff, as administrator of his son's estate, claimed damages under the Fatal Accidents Acts and the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, against the British Transport Commission and the engine driver, Thomas Albert Jarrad, alleging negligence causing his son's death.

The deceased, when he left school, worked for a year or two for a farmer at Creeksea Place Farm. At the time of the accident he was home on leave from the Royal Air Force, and was helping on the farm in his usual way. He was used to driving the farmer's tractors and was an experienced and skilled driver. On the morning of the accident the deceased saw the farmer at about 7.30 and was instructed to do some work with a Fordson Major tractor on the northern side of the railway line. The deceased took the tractor down to the accommodation crossing.

1957

Hazell
v.
British
Transport
Commission.

called Creeksea Level Crossing, and was actually driving it over the line when the train ran into the tractor, throwing the deceased off and causing his fatal injuries.

The railway line where the accident occurred was a single branch line. In a distance of 16 miles, there were 33 level crossings, most of which, including the Creeksea Level Crossing, were accommodation crossings. Creeksea Level Crossing was created primarily for the accommodation of persons farming Creeksea Place Farm who might have other land on the other side of the railway.

The train in question was travelling from west to east, running on the single line round a left-hand bend with a slow down gradient of about 1 in 500. In ordinary weather the approaching train could have been seen by a person approaching the level crossing from the south (as the deceased did) several hundred yards away. On each side of the crossing there was an ordinary farm gate and the crossing was wide enough for the tractor to stand on either side of the line inside the gates. Beside each gate, there was a small wicket gate to enable pedestrians to walk across without opening the main gate. The footpath crossing the line was little used. Probably two or three vehicles a day on average belonging to the farm used the crossing. The gates were kept padlocked except when they were opened for the passage of a vehicle.

The day of the accident was foggy but visibility varied from place to place and the line was wet. The train would have been comparatively silent because (1) the steam had been shut off because the train would have to stop at a station about a mile or a mile-and-a-half away; (2) the train wheels running on wet lines would not make as much noise as usual; (3) the fog would smother the sound to some extent; (4) the train engine was an ex-express engine and therefore relatively silent; (5) it was not a long train, having only one engine, seven trucks and a brake van.

Pearson J. found that the train was comparatively silent, but it could have been heard by a man on the crossing if there was no other noise, and that the obvious explanation of the accident was that the deceased still had the engine of his tractor running and could not have heard the train coming. He could have switched off the engine a short time before he had to cross the line and then he would have heard the train.

N. C. Lloyd-Davies for the plaintiff.
H. Tudor Evans for the defendants.

The cases cited in argument are referred to in the judgment.

Pearson J. stated the facts and continued: The question is whether there was any negligence on the part of the engine driver or of his employers, the British Transport Commission, the owners of the railway. There have been some decided cases on rather similar matters, but, as a matter of general application, in my view, when there is an accusation of negligence against the defendants, it is a question of fact whether in a particular situation the defendants behaved negligently or not. The basic rule is that negligence consists in doing something which a reasonable man would not have done in that situation, or omitting to do something which a reasonable man would have done in that situation, and I approach with scepticism any suggestion that there is any other rule of law, properly so called, in any of these cases. But, of course, one can look at decisions in other cases, especially Court of Appeal decisions, to see how that basic rule can properly be applied to situations of a particular class. The situation in the present case belongs to a well-defined class. When the driver of a railway train is coming towards an accommodation crossing, what can reasonably be expected of the engine driver and what previous precautions can reasonably be expected of the railway company? From the cases which have been decided on similar situations there emerges a principle that, in the absence of special features, the engine driver is not expected either to reduce his speed or to whistle at an ordinary accommodation crossing, and that the railway company is not expected to erect a whistle board at the approach to an ordinary accommodation crossing. I do not think I need go into the reasons for that at great length. They are based on the special conditions of railway traffic. The assumption is that railway traffic has to proceed reasonably. It would not be reasonable to expect an engine driver to proceed at the speed of five miles an hour or so because of fog, and it would not be reasonable to expect an engine driver to whistle at every ordinary accommodation crossing, because that might mean that he would be sounding his whistle almost continuously, which would be a great nuisance to everybody, and would probably be bad for the animals on farms. The method by which an engine driver has to drive his train is completely different from the method by which a ship has to be steered or a road vehicle has to be taken along the roads. The engine driver is going along a fixed track, his direction is predetermined and his main preoccupation is with his own railway signals. He cannot reasonably be expected, to any great extent, to look at the people coming up to the line from side roads, and in a fog (this is very clear from one of the cases) it is not reasonable to expect the engine driver to go slowly and he is expected to go at his ordinary speed. If the engine driver becomes aware that there is something on the line, or that something is likely to come onto it when the train is approaching, he must take the proper steps to avoid an accident. There is no suggestion in any of the cases that the British Transport Commission or an engine driver is absolved from the ordinary rule of taking reasonable steps to promote safety. What I am concerned with is how one applies the basic rule to the situation of a train approaching a level crossing which is an accommodation crossing.

1957

Hazell v. British Transport Commission.

Pearson J.

There have been several cases on the point, all of which I have read for this purpose. One is Smith v. London, Midland & Scottish Railway Co.,[1] a Scottish case; another is Lloyds Bank Ltd. v. Railway Executive[2]; next there is Lloyds Bank Ltd. v. British Transport Commission[3]; and, finally, Kemshead v. British Transport Commission,[4] of which I only have a transcript of the Court of Appeal's judgment. From all those cases one can deduce a general principle that special precautions of the kind suggested cannot reasonably be expected of the British Transport Commission or of its engine drivers where an ordinary accommodation crossing is concerned. By "special precautions," I mean precautions such as having a whistle board erected or making a practice of whistling on approach to a level crossing, of reducing speed to some slow speed. Those special precautions cannot be required in the ordinary case.

[His Lordship read extracts from the judgments of Lord Goddard C.J. and Denning L.J. in Kemshead v. British Transport Commission,[4] and continued:] That being the way in which the Court of Appeal approached a somewhat similar case, can one differentiate this case? There was a fog in that case and there is a fog here. That was an ordinary farm crossing and this is almost an ordinary farm crossing, the degree of user as a footpath being very slight, and there being a slight down gradient to this level crossing. But there must be a great many other accommodation crossings in the country to which there are slight down gradients or more extensive down gradients. The only point about a down gradient is that it causes, or may cause, the train to come coasting down it. Equally, there may be other accommodation crossings which are near some station in which the train will have to stop. Therefore one cannot rely on the fact that it was usual to shut off steam on approaching this level crossing as being an important differentiating feature and, in my view, it was not a differentiating feature. The question of fog was fully dealt with in Kemshead's case. I am unable to say that there is any sufficient differentiating feature here. This is a most tragic and unfortunate case but, in my view, there is no liability either on the British Transport Commission or on the engine driver and, therefore, this action fails.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitors: Alan, Edmunds & Phillips; M. H. B. Gilmour.

C. J. E.

[1] 1948 S.C. 125.

[2] [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1207; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1248.

[3] [1956] 1 W.L.R. 1279; [1956] 3 All E.R. 291.

[4] Post, p. 173.

NOTE.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* KEMSHEAD v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION.

C. A.

1956
July 20.

Lord Goddard C.J., Denning and Birkett L.JJ.

Railway — Level crossing — Accommodation road — Collision between motor-vehicle and train on foggy day—Whether special precautions to be taken by railway authorities and employees.

APPEAL from Stable J.

The defendants, the British Transport Commission, appealed against a decision of Stable J., at Northampton Assizes, in favour of the plaintiff, William Kemshead, in an action in which the plaintiff claimed damages in respect of personal injuries which he suffered in an accident at a level crossing on December 6, 1952, which he alleged was due to the defendants' negligence.

The plaintiff, a master builder, was travelling with a plumber in the plumber's motor-car and a third person, to a small hamlet, consisting of a farmhouse, an old mill and two or three cottages, on the far side of an accommodation crossing, where the plaintiff and the plumber had to do some work. The plaintiff had been down the road in question at least 20 times, and knew that there was a notice on the gate requiring the people who used the crossing to shut and fasten the gates. When the car in which the plaintiff was travelling came to the crossing the gates were found to be open. It was a foggy morning and as the motor-car crossed the railway line a train came into collision with it. The plaintiff and the driver were seriously injured and the third person in the car was killed.

Marven Everett Q.C., Graham Swanwick Q.C. and H. Tudor Evans for the defendants.

Phineas Quass Q.C. and Montague Solomon for the plaintiff.

LORD GODDARD C.J. stated the facts and continued: This case was complicated to some extent by the fact that at a previous assize, which was held, I think, more than a year before, a case had been brought by the widow of the passenger in the car who had been killed. That case was tried before the same judge, and we are told that in that case the judge gave judgment for the plaintiff and awarded her damages, on what ground we do not know, but I imagine that there was more evidence for the plaintiff in that case than there was in the present one. That judgment was never appealed against. Some reference was made by Mr. Swanwick, who was then appearing for the British Transport Commission, in the course of this case, saying that he was not going to call any evidence in this case such apparently as he had called in the previous case when it had not been believed by the judge, who had rejected it. But there was no agreement made by the parties here that the evidence which had been used in the previous case should be used in the present case, nor was any evidence called as to what the evidence for the defendants in the previous case had been. I suppose somebody might have been called to say, "I was present in court and "I heard the defendants' witness on oath say so and so."

That matter becomes very material because Mr. Quass has put his case very much on the ground that no whistle or indication was given of the approach of this train. There is no evidence whether the driver of the train whistled or did not, because both the witnesses who were called by the plaintiff had no recollection whatever of the circumstances just before the accident; all they remembered was that they were

C. A.
1956
KEMSHEAD v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION.
Lord Goddard C.J.

driving down the road and the next thing they knew was that they had been injured. They only remembered what had hit them.

Mr. Quass says that he was entitled, in those circumstances, to have it assumed that there was no whistle. I do not think he was. Evidence could have been given that there was, or if they could give evidence that there was no whistle be it so, but if they did not I do not know that anybody is entitled to draw an inference about it. Supposing this case had been tried before another judge, what then? But in this case the judge expressly disclaimed any recollection of having tried the case at all; at any rate he did not remember any of the details of the case. We did, however, allow Mr. Quass to address us on the footing that the inference was that the train did not whistle. I do not think that is an inference that can strictly be drawn, but in the view the court take it really does not matter whether there was whistling or whether there was not. This was what is known in the statutes as an accommodation crossing. There is no obligation upon a railway company to put watchmen or have signals or bells at such crossings, nor so far as I know to whistle, unless the circumstances are such that an ordinary prudent man would know by reason of the special nature of the crossing that people may reasonably be expected to be upon it at any time.

I refer to a judgment of Scrutton L.J. which Tucker J. read from a shorthand note in Knight v. Great Western Railway Co.[1] I always like, if I can, to find authority from Scrutton L.J., who was one of the greatest judges of my time. His judgment was given in Burrows v. Southern Railway Co.,[2] and the quotation which Tucker J.[3] read was as follows: "The first question, therefore, in our view, and the only "question we are going to decide, is this: Was there evidence upon "which the jury could find that the railway company had not taken "reasonable precautions to prevent danger at this crossing? Now I "should be very reluctant to lay down a rule that at any private "crossing the railway company is bound to use special precautions of "some kind. I can quite conceive of cases where owing to a sharp "turn in the railway, or the presence of large numbers of trees in a "cutting obstructing the view, a jury may find, 'We think some "'reasonable precautions should be taken even at a private crossing.' "But I ask myself, and I have considered the evidence very carefully, "whether at this crossing as we see it, and on the facts we know, there "was anything to distinguish it from any other private crossing where "the railway company has for some reasons granted rights to particular "people in the locality, but not to the whole public, because obviously "there are great differences between cases where any member of the "public, not having seen the crossing before, may come to a crossing "and cases where the crossing is only used by people who are always "using it, because they are in the locality and using it for the purposes "of their business."

The cases which have been cited to us—and several have been called to the attention of the court—were all cases which, upon examining the facts, were shown to be ones in which the court proceeded on the ground that there were special facts or circumstances relating to the particular crossing which might as a matter of common sense and common or reasonable precaution require that special precautions should be taken. In the present case I cannot see any reason for holding that this accommodation crossing was any different from the hundreds of other farm accommodation crossings that exist up and down the country. No evidence was given by the plaintiff here with regard to the nature of this road. We cannot assume that it was a highway, because if it was a highway the probabilities are that precautions would have to be taken.

[1] [1943] 1 K.B. 105; 58 T.L.R. 352; [1942] 2 All E.R. 286.

[2] November 8, 1933, unreported.

[3] [1943] 1 K.B. 105, 108.

because there are special provisions in the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, with regard to the precautions which should be taken on railways where they are crossed by highways.

In this case it looks as if this is a mere lane leading down to the farm. At any rate there is no evidence to the contrary. It is a farm accommodation crossing and not a public crossing, and there are these gates which have to be opened and closed by persons using the crossing. I can see no ground, therefore, for holding that this was any different from the many other farm accommodation crossings which one finds up and down the country.

But it is said—and Mr. Quass has really confined his whole argument to this—that if there is a fog then some special precaution must be taken. I agree there ought to be special precautions taken in the case of fog. But by whom? I should say by the person crossing the line who should stop, look and listen. One sees such notices put up, very often. I should have thought that if these people had stopped and listened they must have heard the train coming. Otherwise the obligation which it is sought to put on the engine driver would be intolerable. There are many crossings where the railway company, recognizing that precautions ought to be taken, put up "whistle" boards. There is no whistle board at this crossing, and so far as I know it was not put forward as a ground of negligence that the railway company had not erected a board directing their drivers to whistle. How can a driver on the railway line remember all the farm gates he may pass on his run, and how can he know exactly how far away he is from any particular crossing when there is a fog which obstructs visibility?

The fact is, as we all know, that trains run in fog, not like ships, but at their ordinary pace very often. Fog signals are used near the ordinary signals and if the distant signal is at danger there is a fog signal detonator set to go off in time for the driver to pull up his train by the time it gets to the home signal where detonators also go off. But in between signals trains, naturally enough, do not go at a crawl at every place, nor can they be expected to go along with the whistle going the whole time, especially in country districts such as this, which appears to be a rural part of Northamptonshire.

Stable J. said: "In the absence of some evidence of some special "precaution under fog conditions such as prevailed on this day it "seems to me quite plain that there was some duty on the railway "company to warn whoever might be using this crossing." With all respect to the judge I do not think there was any duty on the railway company. The special conditions have to be special conditions attaching to the crossing. There were no special conditions attaching to this crossing. I cannot see, therefore, that there was any duty on the railway company or on the train driver to whistle at this place, even if he did not, and there was no evidence that he did not, but I am assuming he did not. Therefore, in my opinion, the appeal succeeds, and judgment must be entered for the defendants.

DENNING L.J. I agree. This accident took place on December 6, 1952. On a foggy morning a car was crossing a level crossing and a train ran into it. One passenger was killed. The driver of the car and another passenger were so severely injured that they remember nothing about it. The representatives of the dead passenger brought an action which came for hearing before Stable J. in February, 1954, in which it was held that the British Transport Commission were liable. Our decision today means that in the self-same accident the commission are not liable. It is very unfortunate that in regard to two different plaintiffs there should be different results in the courts of law, but I would emphasize that the parties ought to have taken a different course. They ought all to have been plaintiffs in one action;

C. A.

1956

KEMSHEAD v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION.

Denning L.J.

or they could have agreed upon one action being a test action. They did not do that. The plaintiff brings his action on his own, separately from the other, and it must be dealt with solely on the evidence in this action.

The case concerns an ordinary accommodation crossing, a farm crossing, with gates which the people using the crossing have to open and close themselves. It is a single line, deep in the country, which is crossed by this farm road. It is not suggested that there has been any increase of traffic since the railway was built. There is a long straight length of line on each side, and a straight farm road crosses it at right angles on each side. What is the duty of the company in regard to such a crossing? It is a duty to take reasonable care, certainly. But this is not a case where there are any special circumstances of danger. In the cases which have been before the courts in recent years, such as Smith v. London, Midland and Scottish Railway Co.,[4] and a case in this country, Lloyds Bank Ltd. v. Railway Executive,[5] there were very special circumstances creating exceptional danger. For instance, in the latter case there was a great increase of traffic on rail and road, many accidents had taken place, and several people killed at the crossing. It was held there by the judge and confirmed by this court that in such a situation the company ought certainly to have put up a "whistle" board so that all their drivers should whistle at that crossing. But in a more recent action, also brought by Lloyds Bank Ltd. [Lloyds Bank Ltd. v. British Transport Commission[6]], a stronger case than the one now before the court, it was held that the circumstances were not such as to compel the railway to put up a "whistle" board. Of course, if there are circumstances in which the company ought to put up a "whistle" board and they do not put it up they will be held liable. That has been held by this court. But nothing of the kind is suggested here. If this accident had happened in ordinary daylight and there had been no "whistle" board and no whistle, no one suggests that the commission would have done anything wrong.

The whole point made by Mr. Quass is that it was a foggy morning and on that account the driver of the train ought to have whistled. But how was the driver of the train to know where all the farm gates were along the line? It was, indeed, as the plaintiff said in his evidence, particularly the responsibility of people crossing the line in a car on a foggy morning, when they found the gate was open (someone unfortunately having left it open), to take special care themselves and to get out and look and listen to see that all was safe before they crossed.

I agree with my Lord that there are no special circumstances in this case which put upon the commission the duty to put up a "whistle" board or upon the driver of this particular train the duty to whistle. No negligence has been proved against the commission, and I agree that the appeal should be allowed accordingly.

BIRKETT L.J. I am entirely of the same opinion and do not desire to add anything.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: M. H. B. Gilmour; Iliffe, Sweet & Co. for Burnham, Son & Lewin, Wellingborough.

C. J. E.

[4] 1948 S.C. 125.

[5] [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1207; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1248.

[6] [1956] 1 W.L.R. 1279; [1956] 3 All E.R. 291.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

* PRACTICE DIRECTION (FOREIGN MARRIAGES).

1958
Jan. 28.

Husband and Wife—Marriage—Foreign marriages—Proof—Proof of foreign marriage in Divorce Division.

Where it is necessary to adduce expert evidence to establish the validity of a foreign marriage which is the subject of proceedings in the Divorce Division, the validity of the marriage not being in issue, such evidence, unless otherwise directed, may be given by affidavit, without prior leave.

This Practice Direction does not apply to marriages celebrated in France or Belgium, which are covered by the Practice Direction of May 16, 1955.[1]

B. LONG,
Senior Registrar.

Principal Probate Registry.
January 28, 1958.

[1] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 668; [1955] 2 All E.R. 465.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

* ALDERMAN v. ALDERMAN AND DUNN.

1958
Jan. 23.

Sachs J.

Husband and Wife — Divorce — Evidence — Admissions by infants—Admissibility.
Evidence—Admission—Infant, by—Admissions by infants before proceedings—Admissibility.

At the hearing of a petition for divorce the petitioner sought to adduce evidence of admissions of adultery made voluntarily to an inquiry agent by the infant co-respondent in the presence of the respondent, and contained in a statement signed by him. It was submitted by the Official Solicitor, as guardian ad litem, that such admissions by an infant were not admissible in evidence, or, if admissible, that they could not be taken into account against the infant:—

Held, that there is no reason why evidence of admissions made by an infant before proceedings are commenced should be excluded in matrimonial causes, or why they should not be given whatever weight the court may consider it proper to attribute to them, and that the evidence should be admitted accordingly.

PETITION for divorce on the ground of adultery.

The marriage took place in 1947 when the husband was 23 and the wife 17. At the end of 1955 the husband discovered that his wife was associating with another man, Dunn, and warned him that his wife was a married woman with five children; but the association continued, and the wife eventually went to live with

1958

ALDERMAN v. ALDERMAN AND DUNN.

Dunn in adultery. The husband decided to petition for divorce, and the couple were interviewed together by an inquiry agent, Buttery. After proper warning that any statement made might be used in divorce proceedings, voluntary statements were made, taken down in writing and signed, by which both the wife and Dunn admitted that they were living together and that the wife was pregnant by Dunn.

Dunn was born in September, 1937, and was therefore a minor throughout these proceedings. An appearance was entered on his behalf as co-respondent by the Official Solicitor, who had been assigned as his guardian in accordance with rule 64 (4) of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1950 (as amended in 1954) (now rule 66 (4) of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957 [1]). By his answer the co-respondent "made no admissions" in regard to the allegations in the petition.

The point was taken on behalf of the co-respondent that because he was an infant at the time his admissions to the inquiry agent were not admissible in evidence, or, if admissible, that they could not be taken into account against him, since an infant was incapable of making an admission binding against him in these proceedings.

Stuart Horner for the Official Solicitor as guardian ad litem for the co-respondent, Dunn, whose contentions are summarized in the judgment, referred, in addition to the rules and textbooks cited therein, to Stanga v. Stanga,[2] and submitted that any decisions prior to the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1937, would, in any event, be no longer binding in view of the new provisions then made in the Matrimonial Causes Rules in relation to the appointment of guardians ad litem. (He called no evidence.)

John Mortimer, for the husband, submitted that the Rules of the Supreme Court relied upon on behalf of the co-respondent related only to admissions made in pleadings, but that if he were wrong, and they related equally to admissions made before proceedings had begun, it would be necessary to consider the practice of the ecclesiastical courts before deciding whether, in matrimonial causes, all admissions by an infant were to be excluded. He referred to Matalon v. Matalon [3] and the reference therein to section 31 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, and to Redfern v. Redfern.[4]

The respondent wife did not appear and was not represented.

[1] Matrimonial Causes Rules, S.I. 1957, No. 619, r. 66 (4): "Where a "petition, answer or originating sum- "mons has been served in accordance "with the last foregoing paragraph "and no appearance has been entered "on behalf of the infant, the party at "whose instance the petition, answer "or originating summons was served "shall, before proceeding further with "the cause, apply for an order that "some proper person be assigned "guardian of the infant by whom he "may appear and defend or intervene "in the proceedings."

[2] [1954] P. 10; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 609; [1954] 2 All E.R. 16.

[3] [1952] P. 233, 235; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1467; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1025.

[4] [1891] P. 139, 146, 148; 7 T.L.R. 157.

SACHS J. stated the facts, saying that the propriety with which the inquiry agent had made his inquiries had been unquestioned, and continued: On those facts the husband petitioner has with complete clarity made out his case against the wife for a decree in accordance with the prayer in the petition, and that decree I accordingly grant.

There remains, however, a point taken on behalf of the co-respondent, who, having been born on September 21, 1937, is still under 21 years of age, and who, having regard to rule 66 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957, is now represented by Mr. Stuart Horner instructed by the Official Solicitor. The point taken is this—as the co-respondent remains under 21 years of age. it is submitted on his behalf, first, that any admissions which he made to the inquiry agent, as given in evidence (de bene esse in the first place) by Buttery, are not admissible. Secondly, that, if admissible, they cannot be taken into account against an infant on the ground that an infant is incapable of making an admission which is binding upon him in these proceedings.

Mr. Horner informs me that this is the first occasion since 1937, when first the Official Solicitor commenced to act in the court for infants whose representation by a guardian had become mandatory [1] under the Matrimonial Causes Rules, that this point has been raised in relation to a co-respondent who was still a minor at the date of trial; and that the point is raised on the instructions of the Official Solicitor lest it might later be taken against him, when the infant co-respondent comes of age, that he has let the matter so to speak go by default.

In support of his careful and, if I may respectfully say so, well-argued submission, Mr. Horner referred to statements in certain books which relate to the practice of the High Court. He referred me first to that passage at p. 2012 of the Annual Practice, 1958, which states generally: "An infant cannot make "admissions, but can now be interrogated, or ordered to make "an affidavit of documents"; to R.S.C., Ord. 19, r. 13,[2] and to the fact that R.S.C., Ord. 31, r. 29,[3] as to discovery, was only introduced in 1893. Next he referred to Daniell's Chancery Practice, 8th ed., vol. 1, p. 114, where it is stated: "Formerly an "infant was not bound by admissions at any stage of the pro-"ceedings, unless, indeed, such admissions were for his benefit." (In so far as the word "formerly" is concerned, that referred, of course, to the state of the Rules of the Supreme Court before

[1] Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1937 (S.R. & O., 1937, No. 1113/L.14), r. 64. For the historical origin of the rule, see Stanga v. Stanga [1954] P. 10.

[2] R.S.C., Ord. 19, r. 13: "Every "allegation of fact in any pleading, "not being a petition or summons, if "not denied specifically or by neces-"sary implication, or stated to be not "admitted in the pleading of the "opposite party, shall be taken to be "admitted, except as against an "infant, lunatic, or person of unsound "mind not so found by inquisition."

[3] R.S.C., Ord. 31, r. 29: "This "Order [which relates to discovery "and inspection] shall apply to infant "plaintiffs and defendants, and to "their next friends and guardians ad "litem." (The rule was added by R.S.C., November, 1893, r. 16.)

1958

ALDERMAN v. ALDERMAN AND DUNN.

Sachs J.

they were amended to enable such admissions to be made.) Mr. Horner also referred to Phipson on Evidence, 9th ed., at p. 240, where it is stated: "An infant, however, cannot bind himself by "any admissions made in an action."

It was the submission made on behalf of the co-respondent that the word "admissions," when used in the phrases to which I have referred, and in other passages of relevant works relating to the practice of these courts, included two categories of admissions: first, those made formally in the course of proceedings; and, secondly, those made before the proceedings commenced.

So far as the first category is concerned, that is a matter which does not arise in the present cause: no admissions were made by the infant in the course of these proceedings. Accordingly, it is not necessary for me to discuss the point raised by Mr. Mortimer that the practice and procedure of this court on such a matter might well prove to be regulated by the old ecclesiastical practice and procedure.

As regards the second category of admissions, those made before proceedings are commenced, Mr. Horner, despite the extensive searches which he had made, was unable to quote to me any authority relating either to the suggested inadmissibility of such evidence or to the court's alleged duty to attribute no weight at all to it. It was conceded in the course of argument that if there was a rule of the nature for which he contended, then on principle it would equally apply to matters of contract and tort. For instance, it would apply where an infant who had contracted to acquire necessaries made any admission that he had been supplied and that he still owed the money. It would apply likewise to an admission by an infant driver of a motor-car who said after an accident: "It is all my fault." Suffice it to say that not only do none of the textbooks of which I am aware refer to such statements on the part of an infant being inadmissible, and that I have so far never heard of the point being raised, but that I have been concerned in a number of cases in which such admissions by an infant were accepted by the court in the normal course of events.

I would also mention, though Mr. Horner rightly points out that there may be a distinction between civil and criminal matters, that it would seem unlikely that in a matrimonial cause evidence would be excluded by a rule which did not even exclude them in a criminal case. I ventured to call Mr. Horner's attention to the daily occurrence in so many courts where the young man who has been arrested after the relevant event says something of the nature of "It is a fair cop."

It is, accordingly, enough for me to say that no authority of any sort has been quoted to me in aid of the submission that admissions in the second category should be excluded from evidence in matrimonial causes or that they should not be given whatever weight the court may consider it proper to attribute to them. Equally, upon general principle, I can find no reason why there should be a rule of that nature; indeed, I have only dealt with the matter in a rather more than cursory way out of respect for the care with which Mr. Horner has put the matter before me.

In those circumstances I admit into evidence that statement of the co-respondent, without which the case against him cannot be established; find he has committed adultery with the wife; and hold that he is capable of being condemned in costs in the normal way.

Decree nisi.
Costs against co-respondent.

Solicitors: Tillson, Phillips & Co.; The Official Solicitor.

J. B. G.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* BARBER v. MANCHESTER REGIONAL HOSPITAL BOARD AND ANOTHER.

[1955 B. 49.]

1957
Dec. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13.
Barry J.

National Health Service — Hospital — Transferred officer — Transfer to service of regional hospital board on setting up of national health service—Terms and conditions of service—Consultant's refusal to accept permanent contract owing to dissatisfaction with terms offered — Termination of services by board — Validity — Duty of Minister to hear appeal—National Health Service Act, 1946 (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 81), ss. 6 (2), 14 (1), 68 (1)—National Health Service (Transfer of Officers and Compensation) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1475), reg. 4.

Tribunal—Statutory—Control by courts—Declaration—Hospital board —Wrongful dismissal—Consultant on staff of hospital—Transfer to regional hospital board on appointed day—New contract incorporating terms and conditions of service issued by Minister—Termination by board—Whether board acted mala fide—Remedy for breach.

The plaintiff, a consultant on the staff of a local authority hospital, continued to serve the hospital after it was transferred to the National Health Service pursuant to the National Health Service Act, 1946,[1] and came under the control of a regional hospital

[1] National Health Service Act, 1946, s. 6 (2): "Subject to the "provisions of this Act, there shall "also, on the appointed day, be trans-"ferred to and vest in the Minister "by virtue of this Act all hospitals "vested in a local authority im-"mediately before the appointed day, "and all property and liabilities held "by a local authority, or to which a "local authority were subject, im-"mediately before the appointed day, "being property and liabilities held "or incurred solely for the purposes of "these hospitals or any of them or for "the purposes of securing accommo-"dation for persons in the area at any "hospital not vested in the authority."

S. 14 (1): "All officers employed "for the purposes of any hospital "providing hospital and specialist "services, other than a teaching hos-"pital, shall be officers of the Regional "Hospital Board for the area in which "the hospital is situated . . . and the "remuneration and conditions of ser-

1957

BARBER
v.
MANCHESTER
REGIONAL HOSPITAL
BOARD.

board. In accordance with regulations[2] made under the Act he continued his existing duties for the preliminary period laid down therein without entering into a new contract with the board. By a circular letter of July 1, 1949, the board informed the plaintiff that permanent contracts on the basis of terms and conditions of service for hospital staff issued by the Minister of Health in June, 1949, would shortly be offered to all whole-time officers, but that pending settlement of such contracts the duties of his present post would be continued "subject to the terms and conditions of service "above referred to." The terms and conditions concerned covered whole-time and part-time consultants and, by clause 16, gave to a consultant who considered his appointment was being unfairly terminated a right to submit his case to the Minister, whose duty it was to place the case before a professional committee, and, in the light of their advice, confirm the termination, or direct reinstatement or arrange some third solution. That procedure was to be completed before the board's decision to terminate was carried into effect. On and after July 1, 1949, the plaintiff continued to serve the hospital. As he refused to sign a permanent contract on the terms offered by the board he was dismissed, and the Minister refused to entertain an appeal under clause 16 of the terms and conditions of service above referred to on the ground that the plaintiff was not, at the time of his dismissal, employed under a contract which incorporated those terms and conditions.

The plaintiff sued the board and the Minister of Health, claiming against the board declarations (1) that he was employed under a contract which did in fact incorporate those terms and conditions; (2) that his employment with the board had never been validly determined and that he was entitled to salary to the date of the writ; alternatively, damages for breach of contract. He claimed a declaration that the Minister had acted in breach of his duty under the National Health Service Act, 1946, in failing to entertain his appeal. He alleged that the board, in dismissing him, had acted mala fide and therefore in breach of its statutory power, and that accordingly his employment had never been validly terminated:—

Held, (1) that by continuing to serve the board after the receipt of the letter of July 1, 1949, the plaintiff must be deemed impliedly to have accepted the offer contained therein and had accordingly entered into a new contract with the board which clearly, having regard to the terms of the letter, incorporated the terms and conditions of service issued by the Minister in June, 1949, in so far as they were applicable to his particular contract.

"vice of all such officers shall, subject "to regulations, be determined by the "Regional Hospital Board. . . . (2) "Regulations may make provision "with respect to the appointment of "such classes of the medical or dental "officers employed on the staff of any "such hospitals as aforesaid as may "be specified in the regulations. . . ."

S. 68 (1): "Regulations shall provide—(a) for the transfer of officers "employed immediately before the "appointed day solely or mainly at "or for the purposes of any hospital "transferred to the Minister by virtue "of this Act, to the regional hospital "board for the area in which the "hospital is situated . . . subject, in "the case of honorary officers, to "such exceptions and conditions as "may be prescribed."

[2] The National Health Service (Transfer of Officers and Compensation) Regulations, 1948, Part II, reg. 4: "All officers who immediately "before the appointed day were employed solely or mainly at or for the "purposes of any hospital which is "transferred to the Minister by virtue "of the Act . . . shall on that day "be transferred to and become officers "of the regional hospital Board for "the area in which the hospital or "premises is situated. . . ."

(2) That clause 16 of the terms and conditions of service was clearly appropriate for inclusion in the contract, and that the clause had contractual force between a consultant and a board notwithstanding that it could only be implemented if the Minister consented to hear an appeal; and therefore, by carrying into effect the termination of his employment before the terms of clause 16 had been complied with and a decision reached by the Minister, the board had committed a breach of its contractual obligations towards him.

(3) That the plaintiff had failed to establish mala fides on the part of the board as, although he had been unfairly treated, the board's decision had been honestly reached in the belief that it was made in the best interests of the national health service, and as this was a matter governed by the discretion of the board it was not for the court to substitute its view for the view of the board.

Short v. Poole Corporation [1926] 1 Ch. 66; 42 T.L.R. 107 and Price v. Rhondda Urban District Council [1923] 2 Ch. 372 applied.

(4) That the contract between the plaintiff and the board was in essence an ordinary contract between master and servant, and accordingly the plaintiff's only remedy for the breach was damages. A declaration that the contract had not been validly determined was not appropriate as the circumstances could not be equated with a case where a plaintiff was working under a statutory scheme of employment.

Vine v. National Dock Labour Board [1957] 2 W.L.R. 106; [1956] 3 All E.R. 939 distinguished.

(5) That the Minister, in denying the plaintiff a right of appeal under clause 16, had acted in breach of his statutory duty under the National Health Service Act, 1946, and the plaintiff was entitled to a declaration accordingly.

ACTION.

The following are the facts relevant to this report. The plaintiff, Alexander Howard Barber, a gynaecological and obstetric surgeon, joined the staff of the Boundary Park Hospital, Oldham, Lancashire, in 1937 as consultant in charge of the gynaecological and obstetric unit. In 1940 he became acting medical superintendent and was carrying out those duties immediately before the National Health Service Act, 1946, came into force on July 5, 1948. Although devoting practically the whole of his time and skill to his hospital duties, the plaintiff carried on a small private practice with the consent of the local authority which, up to July 4, 1948, owned and administered the hospital. On July 5, 1948 (the appointed day under the Act of 1946), pursuant to section 6 (2), the hospital was transferred to and vested in the Minister of Health and thereafter the Manchester Regional Hospital Board, the first defendants (hereinafter referred to as "the board"), became responsible for its administration. Pursuant to section 14 (1) all officers employed at the hospital became officers of the board, and in accordance with the National Health Service (Transfer of Officers and Compensation) Regulations, 1948, made under section 68 (1) of the Act, all those who immediately before the appointed day were employed solely or mainly at or for the purposes of the hospital were to continue their existing duties for a preliminary period without the necessity of entering into new contracts with the board.

1957

BARBER v. MANCHESTER REGIONAL HOSPITAL BOARD.

The plaintiff continued to serve the hospital after the appointed day and, although the senior administrative medical officer of the board was at all times aware of the conditions of his appointment with the local authority hitherto, he was for many months regarded by the board as a whole-time officer and treated as such. On July 1, 1949, a copy of a letter addressed to all whole-time officers was sent to the plaintiff. It was in the following terms: "Hospital Medical and Dental Staff New Contracts. "The board now has in preparation the permanent contracts "which it will shortly offer to all whole-time practitioners now "engaged in the hospital service. These permanent contracts "will be on the basis of the terms and conditions of service agreed "between the Minister of Health and the medical and dental "professions and detailed in the supplement to the British "Medical Journal of June 11, 1949." The letter went on to say that each contract would have to be considered separately with regard to the duties and remuneration of individual officers and continued: "In the meantime, this letter is to inform you that "pending settlement of the permanent contracts the duties of "your present post will be continued with effect from July 5, "1949, in the grade of specialist of full staff and consultant status "and subject to the terms and conditions of service above "referred to. The foregoing applies to all whole-time officers, "subject to the right of a transferred officer . . . to opt to "continue on a personal basis on his or her present salary "scale . . ."

The terms and conditions of service referred to were those contained in a memorandum entitled "Terms and Conditions "of Service for Hospital Medical and Dental Staffs (England "and Wales)" issued by the Minister of Health on June 7, 1949, after consultation with representatives of the medical profession. They were to replace the interim arrangements in operation at the time and to form the basis of new contracts of service. They were to apply retrospectively with effect from July 5, 1948. They applied to whole-time staff and also to part-time consultants. In regard to the latter, clause 5 provided for the duties of the posts to be assessed in terms of hours per week and to be expressed as a number of "notional half-days." The maximum number of hours a week for a part-time appointment was to be 28 and the number of notional half-days nine. By clause 16 it was provided: "Where a consultant considers that his appointment is being "unfairly terminated by a board, he shall be entitled to send a "full statement of the facts to the Minister, who will obtain the "written views of the board concerned and place the case before "a professional committee . . . for their advice. . . . In the "light of their advice the Minister may confirm the termination "of services, or direct reinstatement, or arrange some third "solution agreeable to the parties concerned, such as re-employ"ment in a different post. This procedure shall be completed

"before the board's decision to terminate the consultant's
"appointment is carried into effect."

After the receipt of the letter of July 1, 1949, the plaintiff continued to carry out his duties, but in accordance with the request of the board, stated that he would prefer a permanent contract on a sessional rather than a whole-time basis; that he would give eight half-day sessions at the hospital and also continue his work at an ante-natal clinic, making in all nine half-days. Further circular letters of December 20, 1950, informed him that the existing contracts of practitioners with whom permanent arrangements had not yet been agreed would be extended until April 5, 1950. By a letter of March 20, 1950, he was informed that the board was prepared to offer him an appointment as a consultant under a permanent contract on the basis of 24 hours' and seven notional half-days' work per week. That contract was "to replace the existing interim contract" and would be subject to the terms and conditions of service agreed between the Minister and the profession. The plaintiff intimated his unwillingness to accept a contract on the terms offered, claiming that his work, which had hitherto been regarded as full time, entitled him to a contract based on the maximum number of half-day sessions, namely, nine. He was informed that it was impossible for the board's offer to be increased and urged to give the proposals urgent consideration as the interim contracts for specialist staff would expire on April 4, 1950. The plaintiff refused to accept the offer of seven notional half-days and although this offer was (for certain reasons) subsequently increased to eight notional half-days he maintained his contention that he was entitled to a contract based on the maximum number of half-day sessions, on the ground that his work justified it. He submitted a complaint to the Minister of Health, but the Minister, after receiving a report from the board, decided that it would not be proper for him to intervene and informed the plaintiff accordingly.

Meanwhile, certain events had taken place at the hospital which led to police inquiries, and as a result certain documents containing statements reflecting on the plaintiff's professional conduct were sent to the board by the Ministry of Health. As a result, an inquiry was held and a report made to the disciplinary sub-committee of the board which in fact stated that the plaintiff's conduct in relation to the matters complained of was not deserving of censure. In spite of that report the board, on July 4, 1951, addressed a letter to the plaintiff censuring him severely, and informing him that the board intended to designate a consultant to be in charge of the obstetrical and gynaecological unit at the hospital, and that, although the plaintiff's clinical duties would continue as heretofore, his responsibilities in relation to the medical administration of the unit would cease. The

1957

BARBER
v.
MANCHESTER
REGIONAL HOSPITAL
BOARD.

plaintiff, through his solicitors, asked the board to reconsider its decision and stated that, if necessary, he would appeal to the Minister under clause 16 of the Terms and Conditions of Service. The board insisted on its right to effect such changes in the hospital services for which it was responsible as appeared to it to be proper and necessary in the interests of those services and stated that clause 16 of the Terms and Conditions of Service applied to consultants whose appointments had been unfairly terminated. They referred to the terms of the letter of July 4, 1951, and clearly indicated that they regarded the existence of a contract between themselves and the plaintiff as beyond question.

The new consultant was appointed on October 1, 1951. On October 4, 1951, the terms of a new contract were proposed to the plaintiff which provided for the equal sharing of the beds and the responsibility for the administration between him and the other consultant. The plaintiff sent a statement of the material facts to the Ministry of Health and informed the board that his position could not be considered irrespective of the outcome of that submission. In December, 1951, the plaintiff attended a meeting of the disciplinary sub-committee of the board at which he expressed the view that a contract in the terms offered was unacceptable to him as long as it appeared to stem from the letter of censure of July 4, 1951, which he considered to be wholly undeserved. He was told that if he did not sign the contract offered to him his services would be terminated, but that he would have a right of appeal to the Minister under clause 16 of the Terms and Conditions of Service. The terms previously offered by the board were embodied in a formal contract which the plaintiff was asked to sign by January 14, 1952. On that date officials of the Ministry of Health for the first time informed the plaintiff's solicitors that the Minister queried the plaintiff's right of appeal if he did not sign the contract. He still refused to accept the board's offer and on January 22, 1952, the board passed a resolution authorizing his dismissal on April 30, 1952. That decision was communicated to the plaintiff the following day. In February, 1952, representations were made to the Minister by the Member of Parliament for Oldham West asking him to concede the plaintiff's right of appeal, but the Minister refused to do so, stating that the plaintiff held no contract which entitled him to claim the appeal as a right, i.e., a contract specifically embodying the Terms and Conditions of Service for Hospital, etc., Staffs. The terms of the Minister's letter were communicated to the board, but the board never informed the Minister that the disciplinary sub-committee had given the plaintiff a categorical assurance that he had a right of appeal if he failed to sign the permanent contract, nor did the board tell the Minister of the terms of the letter of July 1, 1949, which had been sent to the plaintiff. The plaintiff was not aware until March 6, 1952, that the right of appeal had been finally refused.

He subsequently asked to be allowed to accept the board's offer but the board refused. His services were accordingly terminated on April 30, 1952, and a few days afterwards he was prohibited from entering the hospital under threat of police action.

In this action the plaintiff claimed (1) a declaration that his employment with the board was subject to the Terms and Conditions of Service of Hospital Medical and Dental Staff (England and Wales) issued by the Minister on June 7, 1949; (2) a declaration that his employment with the board had never been validly determined together with salary at the rate of £2,375 per annum from May 1, 1952, to the date of the writ; alternatively, (3) damages for breach of contract and for wrongful dismissal. Against the Minister, he claimed (4) a declaration that in failing to comply with the terms of clause 16 of the Terms and Conditions of Service above referred to and the procedure therein laid down, the Minister was acting wrongfully and in breach of his statutory duty under the National Health Service Act, 1946.

By his statement of claim the plaintiff alleged, inter alia, that on July 5, 1948, being an officer employed mainly at or for the purposes of the hospital he was transferred to and became an officer of the board by virtue of regulation 4 of the National Health Service (Transfer of Officers and Compensation) Regulations, 1948; that as from June 7, 1949, his employment by the board became subject to the Terms and Conditions of Service of Hospital, etc., Staffs (England and Wales) issued by the Minister of Health on that date and that that variation was confirmed by letter from the board dated July 1, 1949; that the terms and conditions of service were issued by the Minister in pursuance of powers and duties imposed upon him under the provisions of the Act of 1946 and that the Minister had directed regional hospital boards, including the first defendants, to comply with them. He contended that the terms and conditions of service having been issued by the Minister, it was his statutory duty to carry out any obligations assumed by him thereunder. He relied on clause 16 thereof as a term of his employment, and alleged that it was the duty of the Minister to comply with the procedure laid down therein before any decision of the board to terminate his employment was carried into effect; in breach whereof by letter dated January 23, 1952, the board had purported to determine his employment as from April 30, 1952. He alleged, further, that the Minister, in breach of his statutory duty, contending that the terms and conditions did not apply to him or his employment, refused to take the steps laid down in clause 16. By an amendment to the statement of claim the plaintiff alleged that in purporting to terminate his employment the board acted at the instigation or with the connivance of the Minister and that both the board and the Minister, in purporting to exercise their statutory powers towards him, failed to act in a bona fide manner in breach of their duty. In the premises he contended that his employment with the board had never been validly determined and that he was still a consultant on the staff of the hospital. By reason of the matters complained of he alleged that he had been deprived of his employment wrongfully and had lost the major part of his livelihood and had suffered damage.

1957

BARBER v. MANCHESTER REGIONAL HOSPITAL BOARD.

The defendants denied that the plaintiff's employment by the board became subject to the terms and conditions of service relied on by him, or that any contract of employment arose out of the board's letter of July 1, 1949. They contended that the plaintiff had never accepted the offer to employ or appoint him as a consultant made to him by letter of March 20, 1950; although it was admitted that he performed duties at the hospital and received payment therefor, they denied that the plaintiff had after receipt of the offer of March 20, 1950, any appointment or contract either within the meaning of or governed by the terms and conditions of service or at all; or that clause 16 of the Terms and Conditions of Service constituted a term of his alleged employment. They contended moreover that the plaintiff had failed to invoke the clause. They denied the alleged breach of contract and specifically denied that either defendant had acted otherwise than bona fide towards the plaintiff. They claimed that the plaintiff was not entitled to any of the relief claimed.

J. Scott Henderson Q.C. and A. Munro Kerr for the plaintiff.

John Foster Q.C., J. T. Molony Q.C. and Alan Garfitt for the defendants.

The following case (other than those referred to in the judgment) was cited in argument: Taylor v. National Assistance Board.[3]

BARRY J. stated the facts, read the relevant sections of the National Health Service Act, 1946, and the National Health Service (Transfer of Officers and Compensation) Regulations, 1948, made thereunder, referred to the Terms and Conditions of Service for Hospital Medical and Dental Staff (England and Wales) issued by the Minister on June 7, 1949 (clause 16 of which is set out above), and continued: It being admitted that the actual, or the purported, termination of the plaintiff's appointment was carried into effect before completion of the procedure laid down in clause 16 of the Terms and Conditions of Service for Hospital Medical and Dental Staffs, issued by the Minister in June, 1949, the first question for my consideration is whether or not that clause was incorporated in the contract under which the plaintiff was serving the board as a consultant on the date when his services were terminated. From a consideration of the correspondence I should have thought that the answer to this question was obvious despite Mr. Foster's subtle and ingenious arguments. After the appointed day, July 5, 1948, there can, I think, be no doubt that the plaintiff entered into the board's employment under terms similar to those which were applicable to his contract with the Oldham Borough Council before the appointed day. If nothing further had been done, and no further contractual arrangements had been made, I think that there is a great deal to be said in favour of the view of the Ministry that the terms and conditions of service would have had no application until the plaintiff had entered into a new contract with the board in which those terms and conditions were incorporated. In the present case I am entirely satisfied that the plaintiff did enter into a new contract with the board on the terms indicated in the board's letter of July, 1949. If anything in that letter is clear it is that from that date, or, from July 5, 1949, four days later, the plaintiff was being offered a continued service with the board "subject to the terms and "conditions of service above referred to," which were the terms and conditions issued by the Minister on June 7, 1949, and reprinted for the whole medical profession in the issue of the British Medical Journal of June 11.

[3] [1957] P. 101; [1957] 2 W.L.R. 189; [1957] 1 All E.R. 183.

The plaintiff continued to serve the board after the receipt of this letter, and by so doing I am satisfied that he must be deemed impliedly to have accepted the offer which it contained. I wholly reject the argument that the letter of July 1, 1949, had no effect because it purported to refer to whole-time officers. The plaintiff was plainly a "transferred officer" within the meaning of the National Health Service (Transfer of Officers and Compensation) Regulations, 1948. There was not, at any time, any possible doubt on that point. As a transferred officer his position was identical with that of a whole-time transferred officer, except that, when the terms and conditions came into force with regard to remuneration, he would, as a part-time officer, be remunerated on a different basis. Whether by mistake or otherwise, the defendants did in fact address this letter to the plaintiff, and they never suggested that it was not to be regarded as governing his terms of employment. Indeed, as the long history of this case shows, they more than once relied upon the terms and conditions in order to adjust the plaintiff's salary in various directions. In this connexion one cannot forget the Ministry's direction which is printed in full in the British Medical Journal of June 11, 1949: "Remuneration and condi-"tions of service are interdependent and the application retro-"spectively of the former should ideally be accompanied by "the application retrospectively of the latter."

Mr. Foster's second submission, as I understand it, was to this effect: if, contrary to his submission, any of the terms and conditions were incorporated in this contract, it does not mean that they became part of the contract in the sense that

1957

BARBER
v.
MANCHESTER
REGIONAL HOSPITAL
BOARD.

Barry J.

the applicable terms and conditions became terms of the contract between the plaintiff and the defendants. As I understand his argument, the phrase "subject to the terms and conditions "of service" should only be regarded as meaning that the terms and conditions will regulate the future relationship between the plaintiff and the board as regards leave and other such matters, and that the regulations will ultimately be incorporated into a permanent contract. I am bound to say that in my judgment the second paragraph of the board's letter of July 1, 1949, cannot possibly be held to bear that suggested interpretation. I say no more about that branch of Mr. Foster's argument.

Thirdly, he submitted that even if the letter and the words "subject to the terms and conditions of service above referred "to" can be said to incorporate some of the terms and conditions, they cannot be said to incorporate all of them. In a sense, of course, as Mr. Scott Henderson conceded, this argument is obviously correct. The terms and conditions are a code and obviously there cannot be incorporated into the contract with a part-time officer the terms and remuneration applicable to whole-time officers. Similarly, certain other paragraphs in the terms and conditions are more applicable to the board itself, and really contain directions to the board rather than directions which may be incorporated in any contract between either a whole-time or a part-time officer and the board.

However, in my judgment, clause 16 is a clause which can quite clearly be incorporated in a contract made with either a whole-time or a part-time consultant, and if a whole-time or a part-time consultant is employed by the board subject to these terms and conditions, clause 16 is one of the terms and conditions incorporated into his contract. That clause gives him a measure of security of tenure in his employment, and prevents its termination, if he considers such termination to be unfair, until the procedure laid down in clause 16 has been carried out. I can see no foundation for saying that the words "subject "to the terms and conditions of service" can on any reasonable interpretation be said to exclude clause 16. If any terms and conditions are to be incorporated in the contract, why should clause 16 be excluded? I have been unable to find any satisfactory answer to that question. It is a clause clearly appropriate to inclusion in the contract of a consultant, just as appropriate as the clauses relating to his terms of remuneration, leave and other matters of a similar kind. The long-term contract offered to the plaintiff did include words exactly similar to the words used in the board's letter of July 1, 1949. It is common ground that it was the intention of the Ministry and of the board that the terms and conditions should in fact be incorporated in the long-term contracts, and they were in fact incorporated by the use of words exactly similar to the words used in the letter of July 1, 1949.

In my judgment those words clearly mean that those of the terms and conditions which are applicable to any particular contract are to be incorporated in it, and I am quite satisfied that under the letter of July 1, 1949, which was never altered or amended in any way, except as regards remuneration, the plaintiff's employment with the board was, throughout his service, from that date regulated by those terms and conditions.

Mr. Foster, however, went further than the suggestion that clause 16 was not incorporated in this particular contract. He submitted that in every contract, be it what might be described as an interim contract of this kind or a permanent contract, that clause could not form the basis of any contractual and binding agreement between the board and a consultant. He adduced as one reason for that submission, that the operation of this clause involved the co-operation of the Minister and that the board could never be sued on the ground that the Minister had refused that co-operation and denied the right of appeal to any particular consultant. Even if it does form the basis of some contractual obligation, Mr. Foster submits, it must be subject to an implied term that its operation can only be effective if and when the Minister consents to entertain an appeal; if he does not do so prior to the termination of the consultant's employment, then the clause can have no operation. In view of the relationship between the Minister and the board, which is made quite clear in sections 3, 11, 12, 13 and 14 of the National Health Service Act, 1946, I have no hesitation in rejecting that argument. I see no reason to suppose that in the negotiations which took place between the Ministry and the representatives of the medical profession it was ever doubted that this clause would have contractual force. I am quite satisfied that it has contractual force.

I am unimpressed by the question raised by Mr. Foster as to what would happen if the Minister failed to entertain an appeal. I do not think that the board would have to continue to employ a consultant until that consultant's death or until he reached the retiring age. It is, of course, a very unreal consideration, having regard to the relationship between the Minister and the board. The board are administering the hospital and specialist services on behalf of the Minister, and subject to such regulations and directions as the Minister may give. If that were a real dilemma I see no reason why its solution should be thrust upon the consultant rather than upon the board. If, indeed, in the inconceivable event of the Minister refusing to entertain an appeal, although a right of appeal had under his authority and directions been conferred upon the consultant, the board were then placed in a difficulty, it would be for the board to apply for an order of mandamus to compel the Minister to exercise his functions, and not for the consultant.

I am, therefore, satisfied that at least from July 5, 1949, this term formed part of the plaintiff's contract with the board.

1957

BARBER
v.
MANCHESTER
REGIONAL HOSPITAL
BOARD.

Barry J.

The plaintiff was, of course, not bound to invoke the clause, and unless he did invoke it, or unless in law he was excused from doing so before his employment was terminated, he cannot, of course, rely on its provisions.

Both the defendants, as I understand it, raise the singularly unmeritorious point, that the plaintiff failed to send a full statement of the facts to the Minister, and that in consequence of that failure the machinery of the clause was never invoked by him, and never came into operation. In addition to its complete lack of merits this point, I think, fails on two grounds. In the first place, it is clear from the correspondence that the plaintiff did in fact supply a full statement of facts to the Minister. But that point seems to me to be of less significance than the second point which I regard as quite fatal to the defendants' submissions on this point. If ever there was a case of waiver, in my judgment, this is one.

On January 14, 1950, the Ministry were saying that no appeal lay. The board, when they received information to that effect, as they did through the secretary on January 14, elected to support the Minister's view of the situation which was, I think, based on wholly inadequate information as to the facts of this particular case. Having done so with some alacrity, they adopted the same position as that which the Minister had adopted in relation to this appeal. In any event, I think the Minister can be regarded in relation to this matter as the principal of the board. If he denied the right of appeal and the board acquiesced in that view after they, at a very early stage, became apprised of it, clearly, in my judgment, it does not now lie in the mouth of the board to say: "We, having "said no appeal will lie, now contend that you cannot invoke "the provisions of clause 16 because you did not put into "operation the appeal which we said we would refuse to enter-"tain." I think that there is no substance whatsoever in that submission.

In those circumstances I am quite satisfied that the plaintiff's contract was governed by clause 16, and that no omission to send a full statement of facts to the Minister, even if such omission was established, invalidates his contractual right, which was that his employment should not be terminated until the machinery envisaged in clause 16 had been put into effect and a decision reached by the Minister. Clearly, therefore, the termination of the plaintiff's services on April 30, 1952, was a breach of the board's contractual obligations to him. That having been established, it necessarily follows that the plaintiff is entitled to some remedy.

Before I turn to the question of the remedies or remedy available to the plaintiff, I must say a few words concerning the other ground upon which he bases his claim, namely, that the board's decision to dismiss him was made mala fide. The law, I think, is clear: in ordinary circumstances, by giving the appropriate notice, a master can terminate his servant's employment and no one can question the motives of the master in reaching a decision to do so. The position differs somewhat in relation to statutory bodies which can only act for the purposes for which they are created. A statutory body has equally an untrammelled right to terminate the services of one of its own employees by giving appropriate notice, provided that decision is arrived at bona fide and, as I understand the meaning of the word, it is that the decision must be reached, and honestly reached, in the belief that it is a decision made in the best interests of the objects of the statutory body—in this case, the administration of the health services in the region under the board's control—and not made for some wholly extraneous reason. An obvious one would be shown if it could be proved that a decision to terminate the employment of a servant was made, not because it was genuinely or perhaps mistakenly thought by the statutory authority that the termination of his services was in the best interests of the service which they were administering, but, while knowing that they were not furthering the interests of that service by dismissing him, they dismissed him owing to personal spite against him. In that case I think that their decision could be impugned in the courts.

One thing is quite clear: the discretion of the authority must be the governing factor in cases of this kind, and the court cannot substitute its views on whether or not a servant should, in certain circumstances, have been dismissed for the views of the board, provided that the views of the board were bona fide held.

I need not cite a great deal of authority on this point. The law is most fully explained in the judgment of Warrington L.J. in Short v. Poole Corporation,[1] where there are passages which explain the position very clearly, and I need refer only to a passage from the judgment of Eve J. in Price v. Rhondda Urban District Council,[2] which reads thus: "Argument has been "addressed to me on the question whether the authority in "engaging and dismissing its employees is to be regarded as "acting in a fiduciary capacity, but I do not think it necessary "to deal fully with these arguments, because in my opinion it "is sufficient to point out that this body, being a statutory body "entrusted with statutory powers, can only exercise those powers "for the purpose and with the object of giving effect to the "statutory duties imposed upon it, and as one must assume that "in dismissing employees or in doing any other administrative "act or adopting any particular policy consistent with the powers "conferred upon it it acts in good faith, it lies upon those who "assert the contrary to establish the truth of that assertion if "they can."

Mr. Scott Henderson, on behalf of the plaintiff, asks me to say that in the present case the board, through their members

[1] [1926] Ch. 66, 90; 42 T.L.R. 107.
[2] [1923] 2 Ch. 372, 389.

1957

BARBER v. MANCHESTER REGIONAL HOSPITAL BOARD.

Barry J.

and officials, were not acting bona fide or in the proper performance of their statutory powers when they reached their decision to terminate the plaintiff's employment.

[His Lordship referred to the events following the report of the panel of investigators, and said that, in his judgment, the plaintiff was in the result unfairly treated, but that no one individual who took part in the consideration of those matters had any intention to act unfairly. He was satisfied that both the senior medical administrative officer and the secretary of the board had, for a long time prior to the plaintiff's ultimate dismissal, formed the conclusion that he was a nuisance and that it would be in everybody's interests if his services were terminated. His Lordship continued:] I am not, however, satisfied that, however wrong they may have been in reaching that conclusion, they were in any way lacking in bona fides, or that they reached that conclusion on any ground other than the belief (albeit a mistaken belief) that it would be in the best interests of the health service if the plaintiff were excluded from it. Similarly with regard to those who sat on the various committees, I am far from saying that I agree with a great deal of their conduct, or with a number of decisions which they made. None the less, I am satisfied that none of those people intended to act unfairly.

The fact that certain officials of the board were prejudiced against the plaintiff; the fact that he might have been given a much greater opportunity of presenting his own case to the board if they decided to reject the panel's report; the fact that they might well, having misled him about his right of appeal, have been somewhat more generous in renewing their offer of a contract when they found the Minister was refusing to recognize that right, are all matters which might affect the judgment of the court, if it was for the court to decide whether or not the plaintiff's services were to be determined, but that is not the legal position. The court has to be satisfied that these people were acting mala fide, and I am not so satisfied; indeed I am satisfied that throughout, however mistakenly, they were all acting in what they honestly believed to be the best interests of the service.

I come now to the question of the plaintiff's remedies, which I regard as perhaps the most difficult problem in the present case. In the statement of claim the plaintiff asked for a declaration that his employment was subject to the "Terms "and Conditions of Service for Hospital Medical and Dental "Staff." I have already found that it was so subject and whether or not that declaration is made, is a matter which is only of academic importance. The second claim is for a declaration that his employment with the board has never been validly determined. The significant word is the word "validly." If the declaration asked for was one which merely declared that the plaintiff's employment had never been lawfully or rightly determined, that is a declaration which, if necessary at all, would follow from the findings which I have already made.

However, Mr. Scott Henderson's case is that the termination of the plaintiff's employment on April 30, 1952, was not only a breach of the plaintiff's contractual rights, but was in fact a nullity. In law, Mr. Scott Henderson submits, the plaintiff's services were not terminated on April 30, 1952, and have never been terminated up to today. In consequence he relies on the third prayer, namely, for an order for payment of salary at the full rate of £2,375 per annum from May 1, 1952, to the date of the writ. Mr. Scott Henderson puts the case in a way which, at first sight, appears attractive. The terms and conditions, as he points out, provide in the clearest possible terms that the procedure laid down in clause 16 shall be completed before the board's decision to terminate a consultant's appointment is carried into effect. That procedure was never completed and, therefore, he argues, the board's decision to terminate the plaintiff's appointment can never have become effective; he is still in their service, and is still entitled to his agreed rate of remuneration.

Mr. Scott Henderson relied on certain authorities and in particular on Vine v. National Dock Labour Board,[3] and on the judgment of Jenkins L.J. when the case came before the Court of Appeal,[4] a judgment which was approved on appeal to the House of Lords.[5]

In reply to this argument, Mr. Foster submits that this is an ordinary relationship of master and servant. In his submission, the law in relation to master and servant is clear: a contract for personal services cannot be enforced by an order for specific performance, nor is it open to a servant to refuse to accept the repudiation of the contract of service by his master and to sit back saying that the contract had never been validly terminated and insist on the payment of his wages for the remainder of his working days. Mr. Foster rightly said that it could not be suggested that a servant who, by the terms of his contract, was entitled to three months' notice on dismissal, could say, if he was instantly dismissed without notice, that that dismissal was ineffective, because no lawful dismissal could take place without the giving of the requisite period of notice. Similarly he says here that the plaintiff cannot say that the de facto determination of his services, which undoubtedly took place on April 30, 1952, or just after—as he was threatened with criminal proceedings if he entered Boundary Park Hospital—can be said to be a nullity because it was in breach of a contractual obligation not to put that decision to terminate into effect until after clause 16 had been allowed to operate.

[3] [1957] 2 W.L.R. 106; [1956] 3 All E.R. 939.

[4] Reversing [1956] 1 Q.B. 658, 673; [1956] 1 All E.R. 1.

[5] [1957] 2 W.L.R. 106.

1957

BARBER
v.
MANCHESTER
REGIONAL HOSPITAL
BOARD.

Barry J.

Lord Keith, in considering this question in Vine's case,[6] used these words: "This is not a straightforward relationship of "master and servant. Normally, and apart from the interven-"tion of statute, there would never be a nullity in terminating "an ordinary contract of master and servant. Dismissal might "be in breach of contract and so unlawful but could only sound "in damages."

Giving this matter the best consideration I can, I am unable to equate this case to the circumstances which were being considered by the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords in Vine v. National Dock Labour Board.[7] There the plaintiff was working under a statutory scheme of employment, and clearly in those circumstances all the Lords of Appeal who dealt with the case in the House of Lords[8] took the view that it could not be dealt with as though it were an ordinary master and servant claim in which the rights of the parties were regulated solely by contract. Here, despite the strong statutory flavour attaching to the plaintiff's contract, I have reached the conclusion that in essence it was an ordinary contract between master and servant and nothing more. In those circumstances I feel bound to apply the general rule stated by Lord Keith,[9] and to reach the conclusion here that the plaintiff's only remedy against the board is the recovery of damages.

[On the question of damages, his Lordship said that although, on the evidence, three months' notice seemed to be the appropriate period, as he had held that the plaintiff's contract was subject to clause 16 of the Terms and Conditions of Service for Hospital Staffs, it was subject to three months' notice only if, on appeal to the Minister, the Minister took the view that his services had not been unfairly terminated. He was reasonably satisfied that if the appeal procedure under clause 16 had been put into effect the Minister would have been advised that a substantial element of unfairness had entered into the termination of the contract and that the Minister would have accepted that advice. It was almost certain that as a result the plaintiff would have continued to be a consultant at the hospital on the basis of eight notional half-days a week, for which the basic salary was £2,375; but it did not necessarily follow that he would have held that position for the rest of his working life and a fair period to take in relation to loss of remuneration was five years. In addition, he assessed the loss to the plaintiff's private practice arising from the termination of his employment at £1,500, and taking into account tax deductible awarded total damages of £7,437 10s. He gave judgment for the plaintiff against the board for that sum. He declined to make the declarations asked for by the plaintiff against the board but against the Minister, against whom judgment was also given, he made the declaration asked

[6] [1957] 2 W.L.R. 106, 118.
[7] [1956] 1 Q.B. 658.
[8] [1957] 2 W.L.R. 106.
[9] Ibid. 118.

for by the plaintiff, namely, that in failing to comply with the terms of clause 16 he had acted wrongfully and in breach of his statutory duty under the National Health Service Act, 1946.]

1957

BARBER v. MANCHESTER REGIONAL HOSPITAL BOARD.

Judgment for the plaintiff, against both defendants.

Solicitors: Gregory Rowcliffe & Co. for Ponsonbys, Oldham; Solicitor, Ministry of Health, for Solicitor, Manchester Regional Hospital Board.

E. M. W.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* In re D., AN INFANT.

[Plaint No. W. 326.]

C. A.

1958 Jan. 27.

Lord Evershed M.R., Parker and Sellers L.JJ.

Adoption—Consent of person liable to maintain—"Unreasonably withheld"—Test in case of putative father—Welfare of infant—"Parent"—Adoption Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 26), ss. 2 (4) (a), 3.

The putative father of an illegitimate infant was convicted of having murdered the mother. Whilst he was serving a life sentence for that offence, he opposed an application to the court for an adoption order in respect of the infant, then about three years old. It was assumed in his favour that he was a "person . . . liable by ". . . order . . . to contribute to the maintenance of the infant" within section 2 (4) (a) of the Adoption Act, 1950,[1] because before the murder an affiliation order had been made against him ordering him to contribute towards the infant's maintenance:—

Held, that although it had been assumed that he came within section 2 (4) (a) of the Act of 1950, the putative father was not on the same footing as a legal parent and had no parental rights which would be taken away by the adoption. Consequently, the primary test in considering whether to make the order was the welfare of the infant, and on the facts that pointed overwhelmingly in favour of an immediate order.

In re M. [1955] 2 Q.B. 479; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 320; [1955] 2 All E.R. 911 applied.

Hitchcock v. W. B. and F. E. B. [1952] 2 Q.B. 561; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1550; [1952] 2 All E.R. 119 distinguished.

APPEAL from Judge Harcourt Barrington, sitting at Woolwich County Court.

In 1955 a male child was born to a single woman, and complaint having been made by her to the West London Magistrates'

[1] Adoption Act, 1950, s. 2 (4): "Subject to the provisions of section 3 "of this Act, an adoption order shall "not be made—(a) in any case, except "with the consent of every person ". . . who is liable by virtue of any "order or agreement to contribute to "the maintenance of the infant."

S. 3 (1): "The court may dispense "with any consent required by para-"graph (a) of subsection (4) of section "2 of this Act if it is satisfied—"(c) . . . that his consent is un-"reasonably withheld."

C. A.
1958
D., AN INFANT, In re.

Court an affiliation order was made against the father ordering him to pay to the clerk of the court 30 shillings per week for the maintenance and education of the boy until he should attain 16 years. In 1956 the father murdered the mother of the boy. The boy was put into the care of two persons, hereinafter called the applicants, and in 1957 they applied under the Adoption Act, 1950, for an adoption order to be made in their favour in respect of the boy. At that time the father, who had been convicted of the murder, was serving a life sentence in Her Majesty's prison at Wormwood Scrubs. He opposed the application, stating in his evidence that one of his four sisters, who was then about 30 and unmarried, would come from India (the father's home country), that she would get work and get someone to look after the boy whilst she was at work, and that she would be in effect the boy's foster-mother. He further stated that having paid for the boy's maintenance in pursuance of the order made against him, he had only stopped doing so because the mother had said that she was going to Scotland on a visit, leaving the boy in England, and that when she returned they would be married. She did not return and marry him but apparently married someone else. The father concluded his evidence by saying that the sole reason why he opposed the adoption was that he wanted his sister to have the boy because he was his son and he loved him.

The county court judge refused to make the order, and the applicants appealed.

A. Lloyd Stott for the applicants.
Jonathan Sofer for the father.

In addition to the cases referred to in the judgments, the following were cited in argument: In re K.[2]; In re Aster[3]; Barnado v. McHugh.[4]

LORD EVERSHED M.R. We need not trouble you, Mr. Stott.

In the very strange circumstances of the present case I have come to a clear conclusion that the county court judge, with all respect to him, fell into error and misdirected himself upon a vital matter. The case is one which arises under the Adoption Act, 1950, two paragraphs of which require some consideration.

[His Lordship stated the facts, commenting that, as the county court judge had said, there was nothing which could be said against the applicants, and much, as it seemed to him, in their favour. His Lordship continued:] It is, no doubt, true that in the case of a man serving a life sentence it does not at all follow that he will remain in prison for the rest of his days.

[2] [1953] 1 Q.B. 117; sub nom. K. (an Infant), Re Rogers v. Kuzmicz [1952] 2 All E.R. 877.

[3] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 465; sub nom. In re A. (an Infant) [1955] 2 All E.R. 202.

[4] [1891] A.C. 388; 7 T.L.R. 726.

He said somewhat blandly, in the course of his evidence: "I "have not been told when I can expect release from prison." Indeed, I have been forced to wonder if he regards murder as a really serious matter—as serious, say, as dipsomania, which might in certain cases deprive the father of a legitimate child of the right to look after it. But it is quite certain that, having murdered the child's mother, he is (and in the foreseeable future is likely to remain) in a position in which he would be quite unable to perform any parental obligations towards the child, or in which any ties of affection could conceivably flourish at all. Still, he opposed the application, and I have referred to the reason for his opposition. On his behalf it may perhaps fairly be said that the mother did not do well by him; but, of course, that cannot possibly excuse his conduct.

Two points arise on the Act of 1950.

[His Lordship read sections 2 (4) and 3 (1) and continued:] The first question which was before the judge, and which Mr. Stott intimated that he would desire to put before us, is whether on the facts of this case the father is a person "who is liable "by virtue of any order . . . to contribute to the maintenance "of the infant" within section 2 (4) (a). He puts forward the point that at the relevant date the father, having murdered the mother, had ceased to be under an obligation to pay the maintenance. It was, therefore, questioned what was the effect of the murder of the mother on the obligations under the order on the father: did they survive, or did they not? If the true view is that at the relevant date the father could not be said to be a person "liable by virtue of any order . . . to contribute "to the maintenance of the infant," then his consent was no longer required under the section. We have not heard argument on that point, which the judge decided or assumed in the father's favour, and, therefore, I say nothing further about it, because in my judgment it is sufficient to say that if the father is a "person" within paragraph (a) of section 2 (4), on the facts of this case his consent was unreasonably withheld within the terms of paragraph (c) of section 3 (1); and it is upon that point—whether consent was or was not unreasonably withheld —that the present argument has been put before us.

The judge in concluding, as he did, that the refusal on the father's part was not unreasonable, directed himself as follows. He said that since the father is within section 2 (4) (a)—that is to say, that he was a "person" comprehended by that paragraph—"he must qua parent be treated on the same footing "as a legal parent for the purpose of deciding whether his "consent is being unreasonably withheld; that is, the principle "of Hitchcock v. W. B. and F. E. B.[1] applies, and the test is "whether his attitude, as a father, in refusing consent, is un-"reasonable," and the judge referred to a passage in the judgment of Devlin J. in that case.

[1] [1952] 2 Q.B. 561; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1550; [1952] 2 All E.R. 119.

C. A.
1958
D., An Infant, In re.
Lord Evershed M.R.

With the greatest respect to the county court judge, I think it is at that point that he fell into error, for I do not agree that the principle of Hitchcock's case [1] applied, and I do not agree that because the father was (as we assume) a "person" within paragraph (a) of section 2 (4), for the reasons that I have stated, he must therefore qua parent be treated on the same footing as a legal parent. Hitchcock's case [1] was that of a legitimate child. It was a case in which an order for custody had been made by justices in favour of the child's mother, and thereafter application was made for the child's adoption. Having become separated from the mother, the father objected. The magistrates had taken the view that by reason of the order for custody, the father's objection should be disregarded, and held unreasonable. But the Divisional Court did not take that view; they came to the conclusion on the evidence that this was a case in which, though the father had had in the past a somewhat shady career, he had pulled himself together, was working well and satisfactorily, and was in a position to make proper provision for the child, and look after it. But, more important than that, the court observed that the father was the child's father, having the rights of parenthood which belong to the father of a legitimate child; and, there being no disqualification —for it was at this point that reference by way of example was made to dipsomania being a disqualification which might prevent the father prima facie from exercising those natural and legal rights—it was not right that his consent should be disregarded.

In my judgment, that case, and the principle of it, has no application to the present. It depended first and last upon the circumstances that the father in Hitchcock's case [2] was the father of a legitimate child, claiming as such to exercise his parental rights. In the present case, the father is not here as the father of a legitimate child, but as the putative father of an illegitimate child; and this court has decided in the case of In re M.[3] that the putative father of an illegitimate child, for the purpose of the Adoption Act, has not the rights of a parent. More precisely, the word "parent" in section 2 does not comprehend the father of an illegitimate child, and so he cannot come to court and claim (as could the father of a legitimate child) to exercise the parental rights which would then belong to him. As my brother Parker pointed out in the course of the argument, that position under the Act is emphasized if one looks, for example, at section 5 of the Act where parental rights are spoken of in circumstances which quite clearly exclude the consideration of someone in the situation of the respondent in this case. Indeed, Mr. Sofer has not argued to the contrary so far; he concedes that the judge at this point fell into error in saying that the principle of Hitchcock's case [4] applied. But Mr. Sofer has, none the less, contended that one cannot sensibly treat the father here as though he was a total stranger. He observes that had the father taken steps to make the child a ward of court, the views that he put forward for the child's welfare would be entitled to receive consideration from the court. That, no doubt, is so. The father has not in fact taken any such step. But at most I venture to think that argument cannot get Mr. Sofer beyond this point, that since we are not here concerned with any parental rights which would be taken away by the adoption, the primary test at any rate (without putting it any higher) of the right order to make is that of the welfare of the infant; and again in that I think I am saying no more than Mr. Sofer has said for the father.

[2] [1952] 2 Q.B. 561.

[3] [1955] 2 Q.B. 479; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 320; [1955] 2 All E.R. 911.

Looking at the matter from that point of view, therefore, what is the answer? It will be recalled that in putting his case before the county court judge, the father had informed the court of the pending arrival in England of his sister. For some reason or other—it does not matter why—that did not take place; the sister appears still to be in India, and all we know is that she has suggested that the child might be sent to India. Mr. Sofer says that he has some further information, and his suggestion was that, in the interests of the child, it was desirable that this matter should be re-heard. I am not persuaded that that is so. I think that in the circumstances of this case an end should be made of this matter, and that an order should be made in favour of the applicant adopters. One reason for that view (and it will suffice) is that so far as I can see in the very peculiar circumstances of this case, where nothing whatever can be said from the child's point of view, against the adopters, the welfare of the child seems to me almost overwhelmingly to point in favour of an order being made, and made now. After all, if such an order is not made, what is going to be this child's future? He is going to be brought up by some relative of the father. He will clearly not at any relevant age, so far as I can see, be able to enjoy anything comparable to a father's affection and protection. On the contrary, he will inevitably find out sooner or later (and probably sooner) that he is the illegitimate child of a union, that his mother was murdered by his father, who is serving a life sentence for that offence. I cannot think that bringing the child up in that state of affairs would be to his advantage. Indeed, it may well be that here, even if the father could assert the rights of what I will call a legitimate father, that the fact of his having murdered the boy's mother (for which offence he was imprisoned for life) would itself—the other circumstances in this case being the same—disqualify the father from successfully refusing his consent. But it is unnecessary to go so far because, as I have more than once said, the father can assert no parental rights; and, once

[4] [1952] 2 Q.B. 561.

C. A.
1958
D., AN INFANT, In re.
Lord Evershed M.R.

that is out of the way, it appears to me tolerably plain in the very singular and distressing circumstances of this case that there is an overwhelming advantage from the infant's point of view in taking advantage of the generous offer of the adopters, and making an order in their favour.

I would, therefore, allow this appeal, and make an adoption order accordingly.

PARKER L.J. I entirely agree. It seems to me clear that the county court judge, in considering whether consent had been unreasonably withheld, fell into error in treating the test as the same in this case as in the case of a parent. He approached the matter on the principles laid down in Hitchcock's case,[5] which was the case of a parent as opposed to a putative father, and, applying that test, held that consent was not unreasonably withheld. I think it is clear that in a case, such as this, of a putative father, the primary consideration, if not the only one, must be the welfare of the infant; and as to that, it appears to me that the case is overwhelmingly made out in favour of adoption.

I would merely add that if one applied the tests laid down by Devlin J. in Hitchcock's case,[6] it seems to me that, even if this father had been the parent, he would certainly still have unreasonably withheld consent. Accordingly, I would allow the appeal.

SELLERS L.J. I entirely agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Braund & Fedrick; Pratt & Sidney Smith.

E. D.

[5] [1952] 2 Q.B. 561. [6] Ibid. 572.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.
1958
Jan. 23.
Lord Evershed M.R., Parker and Sellers L.JJ.

* CRADDOCK v. HAMPSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL AND ANOTHER.

[Plaint No. 5078A.]

Landlord and Tenant—Business premises (Security of tenure)—Application for a new tenancy—Landlord's intention to demolish—Whether intention merely ancillary to intention to relet—Right of landlord to possession—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 (2 & 3 Eliz. 2, c. 56), s. 30 (1) (f).

Agriculture—Agricultural holding—Smallholding—County council as smallholdings authority—Delegation of powers to "Smallholdings "committee"—Committee's intention to demolish buildings on demised premises — Premises not a "smallholding" — Whether intention of local authority established — Agriculture Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 48), ss. 47, 66—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, s. 30 (1) (f).

Judicial Precedent—Court of Appeal decision—Decision on effect of Court of Appeal decision—Ratio decidendi—Whether early or later decision binding on Court of Appeal—Two members of court parties to both decisions.

The Hampshire County Council in 1953 let ·229 acre to a tenant for one year. The premises had formed part of the adjoining agricultural land of the council, and, being less than one acre in extent, did not constitute a "smallholding" within the definition of that term in section 66 of the Agriculture Act, 1947. On the premises were a cowshed and Nissen hut in which the tenant carried on the business of repairing motor-vehicles. The council having served notice to quit on the tenant, he applied under Part II of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, for the grant of a new lease. The council served a notice, opposing the application on ground (f) in section 30 (1) of the Act of 1954,[1] that they intended to demolish the premises.

It appeared from the evidence that in 1950 the council had passed a resolution delegating their powers and duties as a "small-"holdings authority" under Part IV of the Agriculture Act, 1947, in relation to smallholdings to their smallholdings committee. That committee had passed a resolution that the buildings on the tenant's premises should be demolished with a view to the premises being relet for agricultural purposes. The county court judge ordered the grant of a new tenancy on the ground that the council's intention to demolish, though genuine, firm and settled, was merely ancillary to their intention to relet the premises for agricultural purposes:—

Held, (1) that intention to demolish was not made ineffective because it might be called ancillary, or subsidiary, to some other purpose, namely, to incorporate the premises in a tenant's agricultural holding.

Fisher v. Taylor's Furnishing Stores Ltd. [1956] 2 Q.B. 78; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 985; [1956] 2 All E.R. 78 followed.

Atkinson v. Bettison [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1127; [1955] 3 All E.R. 340 distinguished.

(2) That the powers and authority of the council as a smallholdings authority under Part IV of the Agriculture Act, 1947, were not limited to dealing with units which were themselves smallholdings and that a determination of intention of the council's smallholdings committee might be a determination of intention on the part of the council themselves, but that the evidence showed that the intention to demolish was, in fact, not only the intention of the committee, but of the council themselves, and that a new tenancy should not be granted as the council had established the ground of its objection.

[1] Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, s. 30: "(1) The grounds on which a "landlord may oppose an application "[for a new tenancy under the Act] ". . . are such of the following "grounds as may be stated in the "landlord's notice . . . that is to "say:— . . . (f) that on the termination of the current tenancy the landlord intends to demolish or reconstruct the premises comprised in the holding or a substantial part of those premises or to carry out substantial work of construction on the holding or part thereof and that he could not reasonably do so without obtaining possession of the holding; . . ."

C. A.

1958

Craddock v. Hampshire County Council.

Appeal from Judge Tyler, sitting at Portsmouth County Court.

By a tenancy agreement of April 30, 1953, the Hampshire County Council let to Reginald William Craddock ·229 acre at Cosham Purbrook for a year from October, 1952, and thereafter on a yearly tenancy. There was on the land a cowshed and a Nissen hut which the tenant undertook to remove, if required to do so by the council. The land in question was carved out of a larger area which had been let by the owner of the freehold, Mrs. Eva Sardinia Borthwick-Norton, to the council.

The tenant, who had been in occupation for some 15 years in all, had carried on the business of motor-car and agricultural machinery repairer on the premises.

In 1950 the council had passed a resolution delegating their duties as a "smallholdings authority" under Part IV of the Agriculture Act, 1947, to the Hampshire Smallholdings Committee. The terms of the resolution are contained in the judgment of Lord Evershed M.R.

By notice to quit dated March 21, 1957, the council determined the tenancy as from September, 1957. By an application dated May 27, 1957, the tenant applied under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, for the grant of a new tenancy of the premises pursuant to Part II of the Act for a term of 14 years. The council served a counter-notice dated June 6, 1957, in which it was stated that the council would oppose the application for the grant of a new tenancy on the ground that, on the termination of the current tenancy, they intended to demolish and reconstruct the premises, and, further, that they intended to occupy the holding for the purpose of a business to be carried on by them. The counter-notice further stated that the council were tenants under a lease having less than 14 years unexpired, and that their immediate landlord was Mrs. Borthwick-Norton. The counter-notice was signed by the solicitor and clerk of the council. On appeal, it was admitted that the council did not intend to reconstruct the premises, nor did they intend themselves to carry on a business on the premises.

On June 27, 1957, the smallholdings committee passed a resolution that the buildings on the premises should be demolished and the cleared site let for agricultural use to one Meares.

The county court judge, while stating that he was satisfied that the council had a bona fide intention of demolishing the buildings on the premises, made an order for the grant of a new tenancy. He held that the demolition of the buildings was merely ancillary to the main purpose of the council, which was to let the land to another tenant for agricultural purposes. The council accordingly had not, having regard to the decision in Atkinson v. Bettison,[2] established their ground of opposition under section 30 (1) (f) of the Act of 1954.

The council and Mrs. Borthwick-Norton appealed.

[2] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1127; [1955] 3 All E.R. 840.

David Stinson for the county council and the freeholder.
A. J. Balcombe for the tenant.

The following case was cited in argument in addition to those referred to in the judgments: Betty's Cafés Ltd. v. Phillips Furnishing Stores Ltd.[3]

LORD EVERSHED M.R. In this case the respondent to the appeal had for some years carried on, on the premises which are the subject of the proceedings and described as London Road, Purbrook, Hampshire, an engineering business, doing repair work to motor-cars, and, more particularly, to agricultural vehicles. The freehold of the premises of the holding is vested, and at all material times was vested, in the second appellant, Mrs. Borthwick-Norton. It is for that reason that she is joined in the proceedings, since the tenant's claim for a new tenancy under the Act of 1954 is for a tenancy extending beyond the interest of the Hampshire County Council, the first of the appellants, themselves tenants of Mrs. Borthwick-Norton. There is, however, no issue between the county council and Mrs. Borthwick-Norton; and for the purposes of the rest of this judgment I will assume that the only party, other than the tenant, with whom the case is concerned is the Hampshire County Council.

On April 30, 1953, the county council made a written agreement of tenancy of these premises with the tenant. The term granted to him was a single year from October 1, 1952, to September 29, 1953; and thereafter from year to year at an annual rent of £52. The subject-matter was stated to measure ·229 acre, and it was delineated on an attached plan. The covenants on the part of the tenant were (in addition to the normal covenants for paying rent, rates and taxes, etc.) "To "keep the garage and workshop and other works and buildings "erected on the land . . . in good repair and condition"; and later, (ix) "If required by the county council and" (the estate now represented by Mrs. Borthwick-Norton) "to remove the "buildings," and certain other things.

The tenant continued in occupation on the terms of that document until, in due course, a notice of determination was given, and thereupon he applied under the Act of 1954 for a grant of a new tenancy. The notice of objection on behalf of the county council is signed by the solicitor to and clerk of the county council, and two grounds are put forward: namely, (a) that on the termination of the current tenancy they intend to demolish and reconstruct the premises comprised in the holding or a substantial part thereof; and (b) that on the termination of the current tenancy they intend to occupy the holding for the purposes of a business to be carried on by them.

[3] [1957] 1 Ch. 67; [1956] 3 W.L.R. 1134; [1957] 1 All E.R. 1, C.A.; reversing [1956] 1 W.L.R. 678; [1956] 2 All E.R. 497.

C. A.
1958
CRADDOCK v. HAMPSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL.
Lord Evershed M.R.

Those two objections reflect the provisions of paragraphs (f) and (g) of section 30 (1) of the Act. So far as paragraph (g) is concerned, I need not make any further reference to it. Whatever else may be said about the county council and their powers and intentions in this case, it is reasonably manifest that they did not and do not intend to occupy the holding themselves for the purpose of any business of their own; that objection, therefore, goes out of further consideration. As regards the first objection, it will be noticed that in terms the objection—the draftsman having perhaps allowed his eye to be too much attracted by the language of the paragraph and too little by the actual subject-matter with which he was dealing—is said to be the intention to "demolish and reconstruct." Nobody has the smallest doubt that it never was the intention of the county council to "reconstruct" anything. The alleged intention from the start had been—and nobody, including the tenant, had been in any doubt about it—to demolish all buildings, the so-called garage and workshop, so that the land might revert to agricultural uses unencumbered by any building.

During the course of the case it was eventually conceded that the use of the words "and reconstruct" was a mistake, and that therefore this objection should be read as though those words had never found a place in it. Thus, the matter is reduced to this: have the county council established, as a ground of objection, an intention to demolish the premises? The premises themselves are small in extent—when I say "the premises," I mean the whole subject-matter of the holding—and they are carved out of an area which is in general used for agricultural purposes by the council. More precisely, the area as a whole has been used by them in exercise of their powers and duties to provide smallholdings, which will be found in Part IV of the Agriculture Act, 1947.

It is tolerably clear (subject to the point taken by Mr. Balcombe, to which I will come in due course) that the notice served indicated that what the county council were proposing to do was to take down all these buildings (which are not either particularly elegant or firmly built, being of the nature of a Nissen hut, cowsheds, and so forth) and then to use the land as part of a larger unit in exercising the powers of providing smallholdings. That raised the point which appealed to the county court judge, namely, that the avowed intention to demolish—assuming it was established—was merely subsidiary to the intention to let the premises to an agricultural tenant; and the judge thought (following Atkinson v. Bettison [1]) that he must therefore hold that intention not one comprehended by paragraph (f) of section 30 (1) of the Act. Mr. Balcombe, supporting that view, also said that, after all, one of these buildings certainly was originally erected as a cowshed, and there was no reason why it should not remain as a cowshed and be quite convenient as such for an agricultural tenant. In truth (said Mr. Balcombe) this alleged intention to demolish is merely something asserted by the council for the purpose of getting the benefit of the Act: they are not really concerned to demolish: all they want to do is to get it back, so as to be able to let it as an agricultural tenancy; and Atkinson v. Bettison [1] (Mr. Balcombe says, and so the judge said) disqualifies the council from seeking to rely on such an intention.

[1] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1127; [1955] 3 All E.R. 340.

Atkinson v. Bettison [1] was a case (like all these cases) in which it is first necessary to observe carefully what the facts were. It was a case in which the tenant, carrying on a provision business, applied for a new lease from his landlord. The landlord wanted himself to occupy the premises for his business as a jeweller, and he therefore said, first of all: "I am going to "reconstruct"; and he then said he was going to occupy them himself. The second point was, as such, no good to him, because he had not acquired the premises in due time having regard to the provisions of section 30 (2). What this court (undoubtedly) held was that in that case the reconstruction was in truth something put forward to make good the defects with which the landlord was faced in relying on paragraph (g). As the court observed, the reconstruction was in truth nothing more than making what was a provision shop more suitable for a jeweller's business; and in any case, therefore, the reconstruction was not of the premises or of "a substantial part" thereof. But it is true to say that in the course of their judgments the members of this court—Denning, Hodson and Morris L.JJ.—used language which seemed to indicate that, if it appeared that the reconstruction was purely ancillary to the main purpose—which was to repossess—that main purpose not being open to the landlord because of the second subsection, then the court ought not to allow the landlord to evade the difficulties he would be in under paragraph (g) by putting forward a specious case under paragraph (f).

That reasoning came again before this court in a later case of Fisher v. Taylors Furnishing Stores Ltd.,[2] and it is to be noted that in that case two members of the court—Denning and Morris L.JJ.—had been members of this court when deciding Atkinson v. Bettison.[3] I will not in this instance read the facts of Fisher's case [4]: it will be sufficient first to refer to this passage in the headnote: "It was proved to the satisfaction of "the judge that the landlords intended to demolish the whole "of the premises; that they could not reasonably do so without "obtaining possession, and that their object was not to occupy "the old building but to rebuild on the site and to occupy the

[1] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1127.
[2] [1956] 2 Q.B. 78; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 985; [1956] 2 All E.R. 78.
[3] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1127.
[4] [1956] 2 Q.B. 78.

C. A.
1958
Craddock v. Hampshire County Council.
Lord Evershed M.R.

"new building for the purposes of their business of furniture "retailers." It then appeared that the county court judge had felt, none the less, that Atkinson v. Bettison[5] (and in particular the expressions to which I have alluded) bound him to hold that the reconstruction was ancillary to the landlord's wish to repossess and that, since the landlord had not acquired the premises in due time, therefore he must fail.

The headnote in Fisher's case[6] proceeds: "Held, allowing "the appeal, that the grant of a new lease should be refused. "As the landlords had established to the satisfaction of the "court that they genuinely intended to demolish and rebuild "the premises on the expiration of the tenancy, and reasonably "required possession for that purpose, the fact that they "intended to occupy the rebuilt premises themselves did not "deprive them of their right to possession."

The leading judgment was delivered by Denning L.J., who adverted to what he had said in Atkinson v. Bettison.[7] At the beginning of his judgment he said[8]: "The correct ground of the "decision"—that is, in Atkinson v. Bettison[9]—"was that the "proposed work was not 'substantial' within section 30 (1) (f); "but the court considered also section 30 (1) (g) and (2), which "says that if the landlord wants to get possession for his own "purposes, he must have been owner for the last five years. "In this connexion the court gave an emphatic warning against "allowing a landlord too easily to escape from the five years' "rule. That is the full extent of Atkinson v. Bettison,[9] and it "should not be taken to decide anything more." The Lord Justice makes certain citations from his previous judgment, and says[10]: "Whilst I adhere to the view that the landlord should "not be allowed to circumvent the five-year rule by putting "forward a colourable case of reconstruction, nevertheless I "think it is going too far to say that the work of reconstruction "must be the primary purpose." After saying whence the word "primary" had come, and that the Act of 1954 contained provisions different from those of the Act of 1951, which had given rise to the use of the word, he concludes[11]: "In many "cases the landlord will have two purposes, both of which are "genuine and important; the one is to get possession for his own "business, and the other is to reconstruct the premises. He "does not lose the benefit of section 30 (1) (f) simply because he "bought the premises less than five years before. . . . Applying "these principles, I think that the case of Atkinson v. Bettison,[12] "properly understood, did not prevent the judge giving effect to "the view which he had formed."

Morris L.J. gave judgment to the same effect. I will finally cite one short passage from my brother Parker's judgment. He

[5] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1127.
[6] [1956] 2 Q.B. 78.
[7] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1127.
[8] [1956] 2 Q.B. 78, 84.
[9] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1127.
[10] [1956] 2 Q.B. 78, 85.
[11] Ibid. 85.
[12] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1127.

cites the language of the paragraphs and continues[13]: "From "the scheme of the Act as there laid down I should have "thought that it was clear, apart from authority, that if any of "those grounds of objection is established, the tenant's applica- "tion for a new lease must fail. Each ground is entirely "separate and independent, and each, if proved, entitles the "landlord to succeed. Thus, if ground (f) is proved to the satis- "faction of the court, it matters not to what use the landlord "ultimately intends to put the holding. He may intend to let "it when the work is done to a third party. He may intend "ultimately to occupy it himself for his own business; or he may "not have made up his mind at all. To suggest that, if his "intention is ultimately to occupy it himself and he cannot by "reason of subsection (2) of section 30 rely on ground (g), "he is thereby debarred from relying on ground (f), is to apply "a proviso to the operation of ground (f) which is not there and "for which there is no warrant." I need not refer further to my Lord's judgment because he proceeds to deal with Atkinson v. Bettison[14] in exactly the same way as had Denning L.J.

Mr. Balcombe invited us to say that that interpretation of Atkinson v. Bettison[14] is not really justified by the language, or some of the language, of the judgments in Atkinson v. Bettison[14] themselves: and that we now should improve on the performance of Denning, Morris and Parker L.JJ. by giving another interpretation to the earlier case; and he warned us that by the rules applicable to it this court is bound by its previous decisions, right or wrong—unless, of course, they are per incuriam—that we ought to say that this court's attempt to whittle down Atkinson v. Bettison[14] in Fisher's case[15] really went too far; and that in the present case Atkinson v. Bettison[16] should govern.

I am unable to take that view. It seems to me quite plain that we must now regard Atkinson v. Bettison[16] as deciding what this court said in Fisher's case[17] it did decide and no more. In saying that, I am not to be taken to be indicating any doubt as to the correctness of the views in Fisher's case[17] that I have quoted. It follows, therefore, that if the county council establsh a genuine bona fide intention to demolish, it is not made ineffective because it is what might be called ancillary to or subsidiary to some other purpose, namely, to incorporate it in someone's agricultural holding. The judge thought himself bound by Atkinson v. Bettison[18]; but, unfortunately, he did not appear to have in his mind (I am not sure whether his attention had been drawn to it or not when he wrote his judgment) Fisher's case,[19] which is not referred to. I think that had he had Fisher's case[19] in mind, he would not, and could not, have

[13] [1956] 2 Q.B. 78, 91.
[14] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1127.
[15] [1956] 2 Q.B. 78.
[16] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1127.
[17] [1956] 2 Q.B. 78.
[18] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1127.
[19] [1956] 2 Q.B. 78.

C. A.
1958
Craddock v. Hampshire County Council.
Lord Evershed M.R.

regarded Atkinson v. Bettison [20] as laying down a principle which compelled him to decide in the tenant's favour. I therefore think, with all respect to him, that the judge wrongly regarded Atkinson v. Bettison [20] as governing the matter or, indeed, as having anything to do with it.

Of course it would still be open to the tenant to say that the intention to demolish was not really a genuine intention at all—that the council were not concerned to demolish: they were only pretending to say so because they wanted to throw this property into an agricultural holding and knew that, unless they said they were going to demolish, they would not succeed in establishing the objection under the section. But the short answer to any suggestion of that kind (and Mr. Balcombe did not contend to the contrary) is that the judge held that there was here proved a genuine intention, a firm and settled intention, on the county council's part to demolish.

But that last statement of mine remains subject to the final point which Mr. Balcombe took, and it is this: That the county council failed to prove any such intention on their part because all that they established was an intention on the part of one of their committees, which was called the smallholdings committee. Among the papers, we have got a copy of a resolution of the council passed in the year 1950 whereby the following delegation was resolved upon: "that the powers and duties of the county "council (i) as a Smallholdings Authority in relation to Small-"holdings"—I am leaving out (ii) and (iii)—"(iv) in relation "to . . . all other matters in connection with agriculture "except"—certain matters with which we are not concerned—"be delegated to and exercised by the Hampshire Smallholdings "Committee for and on behalf of and in the name of the county "council." We have also a resolution of June 27, 1957, of the Hampshire Smallholdings Committee, which is directly related to this matter of Mr. Craddock's tenancy. Without reading it in full, it is a resolution that the council resist Mr. Craddock's application, and that the council determine to demolish the buildings on the premises, and so forth; and so, Mr. Balcombe says, all we have got is a resolution of the smallholdings committee of the council purporting to be in exercise of their delegated powers, but in truth outside their powers.

Mr. Balcombe sought to make good that proposition by reference to section 66 of the Agriculture Act, 1947, which contains a definition of "smallholding"; and that definition includes the characteristic that a smallholding must exceed in extent one acre. I have said that the subject-matter of the appellant's smallholding was ·229 acre. Therefore (Mr. Balcombe says) the tenant's holding is not and never was a "smallholding" within the meaning of the Agriculture Act, 1947, and, therefore, within the meaning of the word "smallholding" as it was used in these resolutions.

[20] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1127.

But it seems to me that there is more than one answer to this objection. In the first place, I very much doubt whether it could be said that the powers delegated were limited to dealings with units which were all themselves smallholdings. The powers and duties of the county council delegated were their powers "as a Smallholdings Authority in relation to Small-"holdings." That is no doubt a reference to Part IV of the Agriculture Act, 1947, to which I have earlier referred; but it would, I think, be going much too far to say that the powers and duties of the council as a smallholdings authority were limited to dealings with units which were all themselves smallholdings. If further support were wanted, I think it can be found in paragraph (iv) of the delegated powers, which (it will be recalled) included powers "in connection with agriculture "except" certain matters which are not relevant. I am therefore far from satisfied that, if all that there was established was a resolution of the smallholdings committee, it could be said that a determination, an intention on the part of the smallholdings committee, was not an intention on the part of the county council. But I think further (and this is a second answer to the argument) that if it was a question whether the county council had themselves proved an intention, then the evidence which they adduced was sufficient at any rate to establish a prima facie case to that effect. After all, if the smallholdings committee purported to act as they did in exercise of this power, but exceeded it, the county council could ratify what the committee had done.

I have referred already to the circumstances that the notice of objection to Mr. Craddock's application alleged an intention by the county council, and that notice was signed by the solicitor and clerk to the county council; from which it might (I would have thought) have been reasonably inferred that the county council, through their properly authorized officers, were at least adopting what the smallholdings committee had done. What is more, the county council called as a witness John Henry Brown (who, incidentally, appears to have been the individual who made the written tenancy agreement with the tenant), who had been, when he gave evidence, the county land agent of the county council for 15 years and more; and he spoke in his evidence of what the county council intended to do. In 1955 (he said) the county council decided to terminate the tenancy; and in cross-examination he said: "The intention is to use it" (that is, the holding) "for agricultural purposes. The county "council intend to let it to Meares"—all of which means that the county council were themselves intending to do this, that and the other with the holding, to demolish the buildings on it, to let it to Meares, and so forth.

Mr. Brown's right to speak for the council as such was not challenged; and I think that Mr. Brown's evidence is sufficient prima facie to establish the fact that the alleged intention was

C. A.
1958
CRADDOCK v. HAMPSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL.
Lord Evershed M.R.

the intention not merely of some committee but of the county council themselves, on whose behalf the evidence was tendered by the advocate conducting the case, instructed by the county council. I am therefore not satisfied that there is any substance in this point; and I think it is tolerably plain, in the circumstances, that there could be no merit in it. The point was not decided by the judge, because it was in the circumstances, of course, unnecessary for him to reach any conclusion upon it; though it is to be noted that he intimated that he thought on this matter that the county council had made good what they alleged. He said, for example, in an appendix to his judgment: "I was satisfied that the county council had the "bona fide intention to demolish the buildings," etc. It is true to say that he did not in terms decide this point of delegation. He said as regards that: "I am inclined to think that "the objection is cured by the delegation of power by the county "council to the committee"; which I understand to mean that he thought the terms of the delegation covered what the smallholdings committee had in fact done. However that may be, having considered it now and heard Mr. Balcombe's point and Mr. Stinson's answer to it, I am satisfied that, one way or another, the bona fide intention which clearly was established was the bona fide intention of the council as a whole and not merely that of a committee acting outside the strict limits of their powers.

For the reasons which I have tried to state, I think that the judge should not have granted a new tenancy, but should have held that the council had established the first of their two objections.

I ought to have said, and I add by way of conclusion, that the terms of the paragraph (it will be recalled) speak of an intention to demolish "the premises comprised in the holding." The holding was a piece of land ·229 acre in extent, and the buildings—the Nissen hut and the ex-cowshed—do not cover the whole of that space. You might (as was pointed out in argument) get a case in which the holding was substantially open but upon which there was one relatively small building like a pavilion on a cricket ground, and it might be said: It would be a strange thing if all you had to do was to show an intention to destroy one relatively small building in order to justify recovering possession of a very large area. But that is not the case here, and I need not pursue it. The ex-cowshed and the so-called garage cover an appreciable part of the building, to say no more; and those premises—all of them—it is shown to be the intention of the council to demolish. No point, therefore, of the kind intimated arises here; and I have already said that following what the judge held—that the intention has been established within paragraph (f)—I think the judge should have refused the tenant's application.

I would therefore allow the appeal and order accordingly.

PARKER L.J. I entirely agree, and have nothing further to add.

SELLERS L.J. I also agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Walker, Martineau & Co.; Arthur S. Joseph & Cates for MacDonald, Jacobs & Oates, Southsea.

B. A. B.

C. A.
1958
CRADDOCK v. HAMPSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL.

[HOUSE OF LORDS.]

* WIGRAM FAMILY SETTLED ESTATES LTD. . . . . APPELLANTS;

AND

INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS . RESPONDENTS.

H. L. (E.)†
1957
Nov. 25, 26.
1958
Jan. 23.

Revenue—Surtax—Company—Apportionment of undistributed income pursuant to surtax direction—"In accordance with . . . interests "of members"—Meaning—Part of income to be carried to fund for redemption of preference shares — Whether preference shareholders' "interests" included such sums—Investment company—Finance Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 21, Sch. I, paras. 8, 10.

By section 21 of the Finance Act, 1922: "With a view to "preventing the avoidance of the payment of super-tax [now sur-"tax] through the withholding from distribution of income of a "company which would otherwise be distributed, it is hereby "enacted as follows: (1) Where it appears to the Special Com-"missioners that any company to which this section applies has "not, within a reasonable time after the end of any year or other "period . . . for which accounts have been made up, distributed "to its members in such manner as to render the amount distributed "liable to be included in the statements to be made by the members "of the company of their total income for the purposes of super-"tax, a reasonable part of its actual income from all sources for "the said year or other period, the Commissioners may, by notice "in writing to the company, direct that for purposes of assess-"ment to super-tax, the said income of the company shall for the "year or other period specified in the notice, be deemed to be the "income of the members, and the amount thereof shall be appor-"tioned among the members . . ."

Schedule I, para. 8: "The apportionment of the actual income "from all sources of the company shall be made by the Special "Commissioners in accordance with the respective interests of the "members . . ."

An investment company issued to an assurance society 6 per cent. first preference shares, non-voting and redeemable on the terms that the company would maintain a redemption fund out of funds otherwise available for dividend. The assets of the company were amply sufficient at all material times to enable the society's preference shares to be redeemed in full in any foreseeable event.

† Present: VISCOUNT SIMONDS, LORD REID, LORD KEITH OF AVONHOLM, LORD SOMERVELL OF HARROW and LORD DENNING.

H. L. (E.)

1958

WIGRAM FAMILY SETTLED ESTATES LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.

A surtax direction was made on the company under section 21 of the Finance Act, 1922, and the commissioners apportioned the income of the company among the members in accordance with their dividend rights. The company contended that in addition to those rights the assurance society (which was not liable to surtax) ought to be treated as entitled to sums which had been carried to the redemption fund as well as to the dividend rights:—

Held, that, even assuming that the society had an "interest" within the meaning of Schedule I, para. 8, in respect of the redemption fund, on the facts of the present case the commissioners were well justified in treating it as negligible, and apportioning sums carried to that fund among the other members of the company.

F. P. H. Finance Trust Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (No. 2) [1946] A.C. 38; 61 T.L.R. 320; [1945] 1 All E.R. 492 applied.

Decision of the Court of Appeal [1957] 1 W.L.R. 233; [1957] 1 All E.R. 311 affirmed.

APPEAL from the Court of Appeal (Lord Evershed M.R., Birkett and Romer L.JJ.).

This was an appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal dated December 14, 1956, dismissing an appeal by the appellant company, Wigram Family Settled Estates Ltd. (in liquidation), from an order of the High Court (Vaisey J.) dated July 17, 1956, whereby an appeal by the appellant company on a case stated by the Commissioners for the Special Purposes of the Income Tax Acts was dismissed and the determination of those commissioners was affirmed.

The relevant facts are set out in the report of the case when before the Court of Appeal, [1957] 1 W.L.R. 233.

Cyril King Q.C. and Philip Sykes for the appellant company.
John Pennycuick Q.C. and Alan Orr for the respondents.

The following cases were referred to in argument: F. P. H. Finance Trust Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1]; Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Fred's Securities Co. [2]; and Hickman v. Kent or Romney Marsh Sheep-Breeders' Association. [3]

Their Lordships took time for consideration.

January 23, 1958. VISCOUNT SIMONDS. My Lords, this appeal is from an order of the Court of Appeal affirming an order of Vaisey J., who upon a case stated by the Commissioners for the Special Purposes of the Income Tax Acts had affirmed their determination. I have not been persuaded that a wrong conclusion has been reached.

The facts are set out in great detail in the case stated, which can be referred to if necessary. I shall content myself with a brief summary.

[1] [1946] A.C. 38; 61 T.L.R. 320; [1945] 1 All E.R. 492.

[2] [1939] 2 K.B. 734; [1939] 3 All E.R. 241.

[3] [1915] 1 Ch. 881.

The appellant company, which has been in liquidation since May 19, 1952, had at the relevant dates the following capital structure: (A) 100,000 6 per cent. redeemable preference shares of £1 each; (B) 2,500 6 per cent. participating cumulative preference shares of £1 each; (C) 3,500 6 per cent. cumulative non-participating preference shares of £1 each; (D) 1,500 ordinary shares of £1 each. All these shares were issued and fully paid up except 500 of the (B) shares. The special feature in this structure, upon which, in effect, this appeal turns, lies in the provisions relating to the redeemable preference shares. These were (a) that such shares should be redeemed on the expiration of ten years from March 31, 1935, out of the profits of the company which would otherwise be available for dividend or out of the proceeds of a fresh issue made for the purposes of such redemption; (b) that for the purposes of such redemption the company should create, and, so long as any such shares should remain outstanding, should in each year beginning with the year ended March 31, 1936, carry to the credit of, a separate fund out of the profits of the company which would otherwise be available for dividend (i) for the year ended March 31, 1936, the sum of £9,050, (ii) for each subsequent year ended March 31 the sum of £7,797 or such larger sum as the directors might think fit, with a proviso that when and so long as the fund should amount in value to £100,000 no further sum should be carried to its credit; (c) that all sums carried to the fund should be invested in investments thereby authorized with power to vary such investments. The whole of these shares were taken up by the Equity and Law Life Assurance Society (whom I will call "the society"). It may be assumed that they insisted on the redemption terms as a condition of taking up the shares.

The appellant company did not comply precisely with these provisions, no doubt with the assent of the society, but by March 31, 1949, the commencement of the first of the three relevant accounting periods of the company (namely, the years of assessment 1949–50, 1950–51 and 1951–52), a sum of £77,000 out of the profits had been transferred to and stood to the credit of the fund. During the relevant years ending March 31, 1950, 1951, 1952, the following further transfers were made to the fund, namely, £4,000, £10,000 and £4,000. On August 30, 1950, 80,000 of the shares were redeemed by applying to that purpose £80,000 standing to the credit of the fund. The remaining 20,000 shares continued to be held by the society.

I need state only three further facts. First, it is plain from the facts as stated in the case and the documents annexed to it that at all times the net assets of the company were ample to meet its obligations in respect of its redeemable preference shares. Secondly, the company was an "investment company" to which section 20 (1) of the Finance Act, 1936, section 14 (2) of the Finance Act, 1937, and section 14 (1) of the Finance Act, 1939, applied. Thirdly, the actual income from all sources of the

H. L. (E.)
1958
WIGRAM FAMILY SETTLED ESTATES LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.
Viscount Simonds.

company for the same three years ending March 31 was £13,154, £21,885 and £13,527.

It follows from what I have said that the Special Commissioners had no discretion in the matter but were bound to give a direction that these sums should, however much or little thereof had been distributed to the members of the company, be deemed for the purposes of surtax to be their income. This was at one time, but is no longer, disputed.

The direction having been duly given, it then fell to the commissioners to apportion the same income among the several members of the company, that is to say, among the several classes of preference shareholders and the ordinary shareholders. In doing so they have no other statutory guidance than is to be found in paragraph 8 of Schedule I to the Finance Act, 1922, the relevant words of which are: "The apportionment of the actual "income from all sources of the company shall be made by the "Special Commissioners in accordance with the respective "interests of the members."

What, then, were the respective interests of the members in the actual income of the company? The commissioners apportioned to the redeemable preference shareholders, i.e., to the society, £6,000 (being 6 per cent. on the 100,000 shares) for the first year and £3,204 and £1,200 for the second and third years respectively (being 6 per cent. on the unredeemed shares during those years) and no more. They apportioned 6 per cent. per annum to the holders of the other preference shares and the remainder they apportioned to the ordinary shareholders.

The appellant company appealed against the apportionment, contending that the society in addition to their interest in the income of the company to the extent of 6 per cent. on their shares also had a relevant interest in the income in respect of the amounts carried in each of the three years to the redemption fund out of the profits available for dividend, that is to say, the several sums of £4,000, £10,000 and £4,000.

The commissioners rejected this contention. They held that the society's interest as a member was adequately measured by taking 6 per cent. on the amount of its preference shareholding in the material years, and, further, that the guarantee on which the society had insisted as a condition of subscribing for its shares was no more than a security for the eventual repayment of its capital. They further stated that they had also considered whether any fairer method of apportionment could be devised but in the facts of the case were unable to find one after taking into account the voting rights and the rights of ordinary shareholders on a winding up.

My Lords, as I have said, the determination of the commissioners was sustained by Vaisey J. and by the Court of Appeal, and I have no doubt that they were right.

I have already pointed out how little guidance is given to the commissioners in their task of apportionment, but it should, I think, be remembered that section 21 of the Finance Act, 1922, from which this branch of taxation stems, opens with the words: "With a view to preventing the avoidance of the payment of "super-tax through the withholding from distribution of income "of a company which would otherwise be distributed . . ." I should therefore expect any apportionment of the actual income of a company to proceed upon the footing that what any member received upon an apportionment would be a share which, if it had been distributed instead of being withheld, would have the character of income in his hands and, as such, be liable to super-tax or surtax, if he was an individual. But I find myself at once in this difficulty. It would be a fantastic result of this legislation if it increased, even notionally, the income of a 6 per cent. preference shareholder. But, if it does not have that effect and the apportionment beyond his 6 per cent. is to be regarded as a capital payment, then the purpose of the section is defeated. Surtax is neither payable nor avoided.

The strength of the appellant company's case lies in this: that the obligation imposed on it by its articles did preclude it from distributing the whole of its income. It was contractually bound to carry yearly sums to the redemption fund. It may therefore be said that it would be a hardship on the ordinary shareholders that an apportionment should be made to them in any year of income upon which they could not lay their hands. But the question is not whether such an apportionment would be a hardship on them but what are the respective interests of the different classes of shareholders in the actual income of the company. I do not intend to lay down any general rule. It would be hazardous to do so in face of the very general words by which the duty of apportionment is cast upon the commissioners. But on the facts of the present case I cannot fail to be impressed by the consideration that neither at the end of any year nor at the commencement of the liquidation was there any doubt as to the capital of the redeemable preference shares being well secured apart from the redemption fund. The commissioners in their determination regarded the fund as a security for eventual repayment of capital. I think they were right in doing so, and, further, that, if in the event the security proved unnecessary because the capital was secure without it, they were well justified in treating the society's interest in it as negligible. They might ask the simple question whether the society in fact got any benefit from the fund. The answer could only be that it may have got some peace of mind from the knowledge that the fund was there, but that it was the ordinary shareholders who would eventually get the income which was temporarily withheld. And that is what in fact happened.

I was further impressed by the admission which, as I understood him, counsel for the company felt constrained to make—that, if the appellant company had built up the same fund out of profits, not under the compulsion of its articles but as a matter

H. L. (E.)
1958
WIGRAM FAMILY SETTLED ESTATES LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.
Viscount Simonds.

of prudent finance, the society could not be said for the purpose of apportionment to have any relevant interest in it. Yet upon the facts of the case the material interest of the society was precisely the same, whether the fund was established voluntarily or under a contractual obligation. It may be observed, too, that, though in one sense the company were obliged to carry some part of their profits to the fund, yet this was an obligation into which they had voluntarily entered.

Reference was made both in the courts below and in argument before this House to the case of F. P. H. Finance Trust Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (No. 2).[1] I agree with Vaisey J. and the learned Master of the Rolls in thinking that it gives no support to the company's contention. In that case Lord Russell of Killowen said[2] that it was the duty of the commissioners in apportioning the income among the members to determine who are the members "of whom it can be said . . . that they are "the persons who, in view of all their interests in the company, "are the persons really interested in the income in question and "in what proportions." This seems to me to be just what the commissioners in the present case set out to do and fairly did.

The appeal must, in my opinion, be dismissed with costs.

LORD REID. My Lords, in consequence of directions given by the Special Commissioners under section 21 of the Finance Act, 1922, in respect of the years 1949–50, 1950–51, and 1951–52, the actual income of the appellant company for these years was deemed to be the income of its members; and the Special Commissioners had to apportion that income to them "in accordance "with the respective interests of the members," income so apportioned to each being "deemed to represent his income from "his interest in the company." (Finance Act, 1922, Sch. I, para. 8.)

As a result the appellant company became liable to pay surtax on sums apportioned to individual members at rates appropriate to them. But as surtax is a tax on individuals there is no liability to pay it in respect of any sum apportioned to a non-individual member. It is therefore in the appellant's interest to have as large sums as possible apportioned to its non-individual member, the Equity and Law Life Assurance Society, which held all the 6 per cent. redeemable preference shares in the appellant company.

The Special Commissioners have apportioned to that society the sums required to pay the 6 per cent. on their shares, holding that the society's interest as a member was adequately so measured. By virtue of an agreement made when these preference shares were issued the appellant company was bound to carry certain sums out of its profits to the credit of a redemption fund for these shares, and in the years in question it paid into that fund, under the agreement, sums of £4,000, £10,000 and £4,000. The appellant's contention is that these sums ought to have been apportioned to the society, in addition to the 6 per cent. on its shares, because the society had an interest in these sums.

[1] [1946] A.C. 38; 61 T.L.R. 320; [1945] 1 All E.R. 492.
[2] [1946] A.C. 38, 51.

The society was concerned, not merely to receive annually the 6 per cent. on its shares, but also to have its shares redeemed in accordance with the agreement between it and the appellant, and, in order that funds might be available for the redemption at the stipulated date, it was concerned to see that the redemption fund was built up by the appellant carrying part of its profits to that fund. I shall assume, without deciding the point, that this could properly be regarded as an "interest" within the meaning of the Finance Act, 1922. But it would, in my opinion, be erroneous to hold that such an interest necessarily required the apportionment to the society of the whole of the sums carried to the redemption fund. The other shareholders also had an interest in these sums and it appears to me that in the present case the society's interest was negligible in comparison with the interest of the other shareholders. The real interest of the society, beyond payment of their 6 per cent. annually, was to receive payment in due course of its capital. In the present case the assets of the appellant were amply sufficient to enable the society's preference shares to be redeemed in full in any foreseeable event, and the only importance of building up the redemption fund was to facilitate the redemption. Carrying these sums to the redemption fund did not in any way increase the amount of money which the society would receive. It meant in effect that the sums available for distribution to the other shareholders were diminished for the time being, but that the other shareholders' shares became more valuable. They were entitled in the end to the whole of the appellant's assets beyond what was required to redeem the society's shares, and the amount of the appellant's assets was increased by carrying these sums to the redemption fund instead of distributing them. In other words, retaining these sums in this fund postponed the enjoyment of them by the other shareholders, but did not in any substantial way add to the financial return which the society would receive or the probability that they would be paid in full. That appears to me to justify the apportionment made by the Special Commissioners.

It has been said in the Court of Appeal that this is a hard case for the appellant and the other shareholders. No doubt all high taxation is a hardship for the taxpayer but I do not see any special hardship in this case. If an individual, in order to raise more capital, chooses to undertake to set aside part of his income to provide for repayment, he cannot thereby diminish his liability for surtax. I see no reason why a company should be entitled to expect to be better off.

I would dismiss this appeal.

H. L. (E.)
1958
WIGRAM FAMILY SETTLED ESTATES LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.

My noble and learned friend, Lord Denning, who is unable to be here today, has asked me to say that he concurs in the opinion which I have just delivered.

LORD KEITH OF AVONHOLM. My Lords, I agree with the speech delivered by my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack.

LORD SOMERVELL OF HARROW. My Lords, I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Wigram & Co.; Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

F. C.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1958
Jan. 24.
Danckwerts J.

* In re ALLAN, DECD.
CURTIS AND ANOTHER v. NALDER AND OTHERS.

[1957 A. No. 1624.]

Perpetuity Rule—Dependant or independant trust—Void gift of income —Discretionary trust during widowhood—Gift of capital "on the "determination of" that trust—Whether gift of capital valid.
Trust and Trustee—Uncertainty, trust void for—Discretionary trust—Unascertainable class.

A testatrix by her will left her residuary estate upon trust for sale and directed that her trustees should stand possessed of the proceeds thereof upon trust in the events which happened after the death of the survivor of her sister, A. B. N., and her brother, N. F. N., during the widowhood of any wife of the said N. F. N. "for the maintenance and personal support or benefit of such wife "and the children of the said N. F. N. or remoter issue for the "time being in existence whether minors or adults or any other "person or persons in whose house or apartments or in whose "company or under whose care or control or by or with whom the "widow of the said N. F. N. may from time to time be employed "or residing." "On the determination of the trusts hereinbefore "declared" of the income she gave the sum of £7,350 to one charity and the balance of her residuary estate and the income thereof to another charity.

The testatrix died in 1938; her sister, A. B. N., died in 1954, and her brother, N. F. N., died in 1956 leaving a widow.

By the summons the trustees of the will asked whether the trusts declared during the widowhood of the wife of N. F. N. were void for uncertainty or as infringing the rule against perpetuities, and whether, if they were void on any such ground, the trusts in favour of the charities were also consequently void either as to capital and to income or as to income only:—

Held, that (1) the trusts declared during the widowhood of any wife of N. F. N. were void for uncertainty and as offending the rule against perpetuities.

[Reported by JENNIFER WEST, Barrister-at-Law.]

In re Gresham's Settlement, Lloyds Bank Ltd. v. Gresham [1956] 1 W.L.R. 573; [1956] 2 All E.R. 193 followed.

(2) That on their proper construction the words "on the determination of the trusts hereinbefore declared" meant on the death of the widow; and that, since the gifts of capital to the charities had vested in interest, those gifts were valid, although they did not take effect in possession until the death of the widow, but that the gift of income in favour of the second charity during the widow's lifetime failed and passed as on intestacy.

In re Coleman, Public Trustee v. Coleman [1936] Ch. 528, 535; [1936] 2 All E.R. 225 followed.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

By her will, dated April 21, 1933, Evelyn Julia Allan (hereinafter called "the testatrix") appointed her sister, Alice Beatrice Nalder, William Shakespeare and Thomas Smith Curtis to be her executors and trustees, and left her residuary estate upon trust for conversion. By clause (4) of her will the testatrix directed that the trustees should stand possessed of the income arising from the trust fund upon the following trusts:—

(a) As to one moiety of the said income upon trust to pay the same to the said Alice Beatrice Nalder during her life, and upon her death to hold the same upon the trusts thereinafter declared as regards the second moiety of the said income.

(b) As to the other or second moiety of the said income upon trust during the life of her brother, Noel Francis Nalder, or during such shorter period as her trustees should think fit to pay all or any part thereof for the maintenance and personal support or benefit of the said Noel Francis Nalder and his wife and issue and certain other persons therein referred to and subject to such discretionary trust to hold the same upon trust and for the purposes upon and for which the same would be held if the said Noel Francis Nalder were then dead.

(c) After the death of the said Noel Francis Nalder to apply the last mentioned moiety of the said income during the widowhood of any wife of the said Noel Francis Nalder who might survive him for the maintenance and personal support or benefit of such wife and the children of the said Noel Francis Nalder or remoter issue for the time being in existence, whether minors or adults, and any person or persons in whose house or apartments or in whose company or under whose care or control or by or with whom the widow of the said Noel Francis Nalder may from time to time be employed or residing.

(d) On the determination of the trusts of the said last mentioned moiety of the said income thereinbefore declared to pay such moiety of the said income to the said Alice Beatrice Nalder during the remainder of her life.

By clause (5) of her said will, the testatrix declared that "on the determination of the trusts hereinbefore declared of the income of the trust funds I give and bequeath to the Royal National Life Boat Institution" (the second defendant to the summons) the sum of £7,350 free of legacy duty to be used and devoted to the cost of a lifeboat as therein mentioned, and subject to the payment of such legacy directed her trustees to pay any balance of her residuary estate and the income thereof to the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (the third defendants to the summons).

1958

ALLAN, DECD., In re.

The testatrix died on February 15, 1938, and her will was duly proved by her executors. All the executors and trustees thereafter died, Alice Beatrice Nalder being the last surviving trustee and dying on February 27, 1954. By her (Alice's) will she bequeathed the whole of her residuary estate to her trustees upon trust subject to certain life interests for the Barristers' Benevolent Association, the fourth defendant to the summons, who were joined to represent the persons entitled in the intestacy of the testatrix (Evelyn Julia Allan); her brother, Noel Francis Nalder, and her sister, Alice Beatrice Nalder, were at her death her statutory next-of-kin.

Noel Francis Nalder died on May 27, 1956, intestate and without issue but leaving his widow, Kathleen Nalder, the first defendant to the summons, him surviving. No appointment of new trustees of the testatrix's will had been made and the executors of Alice Beatrice Nalder were accordingly empowered to exercise the trusts thereof and were the plaintiffs to the summons.

The plaintiffs by the summons asked whether the discretionary trusts declared by clause 4 (c) of the will during the lifetime of the widow, the first defendant, were void for uncertainty or as infringing the rule against perpetuities, and whether if the said trusts were void on any such ground aforesaid the trusts declared by clause 5 in favour of the charitable institutions, the second and third defendants, were also void having regard to the failure of the said trusts either as to the gift of income and capital or as to income only.

D. A. Ziegler for the plaintiffs.
J. L. Arnold for the first and fourth defendants.
R. R. A. Walker for the second and third defendants.

Cases cited in argument and not referred to in the judgment: In re Abbott *; In re Mill's Declaration of Trust.†

DANCKWERTS J., after stating the facts, continued: It is plain that the discretionary trusts contained in paragraph (c) of clause 4 of the will are void for uncertainty, because the form is in substance exactly the same as that which was considered by Harman J. in In re Gresham's Settlement,[1] and though Mr. Arnold has submitted that that case was wrongly decided, in order to keep the point alive, it is plain to me that I ought to follow the decision in question and apply it in the present case.

* [1893] 1 Ch. 54.
† [1950] 1 All E.R. 789, D.C.; [1950] 2 All E.R. 292, C.A.
[1] [1956] 1 W.L.R. 573; [1956] 2 All E.R. 193.

The clause, however, also seems plainly to offend against the rule against perpetuities, because Noel Francis Nalder might have married a woman who was not in being at the date of the testatrix's death, and when there is the possibility of that event in regard to a discretionary trust, it is invalid by reason of the rule against perpetuities as has been recognized in a number of cases. The question which then remains is a difficult one: Does it have the effect also of rendering invalid the provisions which were contained in clause 5 of the will in favour of the two charitable institutions?

The principle as stated in Jarman on Wills, 8th ed., vol. 1, at p. 365, is as follows: "It is submitted that if the ulterior "limitation must become vested in interest (though not neces-"sarily in possession) within the perpetuity period and cannot "be divested, accelerated or postponed by any event operating "under the earlier void limitation, then the ulterior limitation "is independent and valid." On the other hand, if it is dependent upon the earlier limitations, then it is well settled that the ultimate limitation is also void under the rule against perpetuities, and the question is whether this is a case in which the final gift is valid or invalid. There is no other gift of capital in this will except that which is contained in clause 5. All the other provisions which preceded that gift are limited to the income.

I have been referred very properly to a number of cases, but it seems to me that there is one case which, on the construction I put upon this will, decides the matter. It seems to me that it is not correct to say that one can regard the provisions of clause 5 of the will as operating without regard to the earlier provisions at all, as in effect was contended by Mr. Walker on behalf of the two charitable institutions. His contention was that as the provisions in question and discretionary trusts were void for uncertainty, they disappeared from the will, and all that finally remained was a gift of the capital, carrying the intermediate income, to these charitable institutions. It seems to me that the proper construction of the words "On the deter-"mination of the trusts hereinbefore declared" is upon the death of such widow, being the widow mentioned in clause 4 (c) of the will. The trusts are limited during, first of all, the life of the testatrix's sister as regards one half; then during the life of the brother as regards the other half, and in the event which happened of him surviving, as regards the whole; and then after his death they operate during the lifetime of his widow whoever she may be.

It seems to me that In re Coleman[2] really covers that situation. In that case under the will of a testator a share of residue given to one of his sons, W., was settled upon discretionary trusts for W. during his life, and after his death upon similar discretionary trusts for any widow that W. might leave and for all or any

[2] [1936] Ch. 528; [1936] 2 All E.R. 225.

1958

Allan, decd., In re.

Danckwerts J.

of the children of W., and after the death of such widow, upon trust for the children of W. at 21 or marriage, in equal shares; and it was held that though the discretionary trust in favour of W.'s widow was void for remoteness, as W. might marry a woman who was not born at the death of the testator, the ultimate trust in favour of W.'s children being vested, and not contingent or dependent on the void trust, was valid. In this case it will be observed that the children had to attain 21 or marry under that age, but presumably they had already attained the age and, therefore, the persons had attained vested interests; otherwise it is difficult to follow how Clauson J. would refer to them as having "vested shares." In the present case that difficulty, at any rate, does not arise, because the two charitable institutions are, of course, well established bodies and there is no doubt that they have vested interests.

It seems to me that the key to the matter is given by Clauson J. when he says[3]: "Where, as in the present case, "with which I am dealing, the limitation which it is sought to "impeach creates a future interest which becomes vested in "interest (though not in possession) within the limits of the "rule against perpetuities and cannot in any event be subse-"quently divested by the operation of the earlier trust, it would "be entirely inconsistent with the principle on which the decision "in In re Canning's Will Trusts[4] proceeds to hold such a future "interest to be adversely affected by the invalidity of the trusts "which it follows, but of which it is wholly independent."

Applying that statement to the present case, it seems to me that while the trusts during the lifetime of the widow are invalid, the gift of the capital which takes effect upon the termination of the widow's life interest is unaffected and is perfectly valid.

Accordingly, while the gift of capital is valid, it does not take effect in possession until the death of the widow who is referred to in the preceding paragraphs. There is, therefore, an intestacy as regards the income during that period.

Declarations accordingly.

Solicitors: Collyer-Bristow & Co.; Nicholl, Manisty & Co.; Clayton, Leach, Sims & Co.

[3] [1936] Ch. 528, 535.

[4] [1936] Ch. 309.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

*HAYNES v. QUALCAST (WOLVERHAMPTON) LTD.

C. A.

1958
Jan. 24.

Lord Evershed M.R., Parker and Sellers L.JJ.

[Plaint No. 1327A.]

Negligence—Safe system of work—General precautions—Metal moulding—Protective clothing available for workman—No orders or advice to wear it—Workman injured—Employers' liability.
Causation—Negligence—Contributory negligence.

The plaintiff, an experienced moulder, was employed in the defendants' foundry. While he was handling a ladle of molten metal the handle slipped and the metal splashed onto his foot and ankle with the result that he suffered injuries. At the time of the accident the plaintiff was not wearing the protective spats which would have saved his foot and legs from injury. The defendants kept a stock of spats at the foundry which could be had for the asking; in addition they had a stock of protective boots which they supplied to their workmen at cost price. The plaintiff knew that spats and boots were available, but he had not been ordered, or indeed advised, by the defendants to wear spats. This was because he was an experienced workman. The county court judge held that the fact that the defendants had made spats available was not a sufficient performance of their duty to take reasonable care for the safety of their workmen, and that the defendants were negligent and were 25 per cent. to blame for the accident and the plaintiff 75 per cent.:—

Held, (1) that in the case of work such as that in which the plaintiff was engaged there was a duty on employers not only to have protective clothing available but to inform anyone coming into their employment that the equipment was available and to take steps to educate the employee to wear the equipment for his own safety, and that the hazard in some employments might be so great and the injury, if it occurred, so serious that it might be necessary to make the wearing of protective clothing a rule of the factory, but that where the matter was not so serious, advice might be sufficient, and that the defendants should have taken some steps to educate their workmen to wear protective clothing.

(2) That, notwithstanding that the defendants were in breach of their duty to conduct their operations so that their workmen were not subjected to unnecessary risks, the county court judge was, on the facts, entitled to hold that their breach of duty was to blame for the accident only to the extent of 25 per cent. and, accordingly, that his decision should not be disturbed.

Extent to which Bonnington Castings Ltd. v. Wardlaw [1956] A.C. 613; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 707; [1956] 1 All E.R. 65 had modified the law as stated in Roberts v. Dorman Long & Co. Ltd. [1953] 1 W.L.R. 942; [1953] 2 All E.R. 428 and Drummond v. British Building Cleaners Ltd. [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1434; [1954] 3 All E.R. 507, C.A.; reversing [1954] 1 W.L.R. 501 considered.

APPEAL from Judge R. H. Norris, sitting at Wolverhampton County Court.

The plaintiff, John Henry Haynes, was employed by the defendants, Qualcast (Wolverhampton) Ltd., as a moulder. On September 22, 1954, the plaintiff was splashed with molten metal and his feet and legs were injured. In this action, started on March 16, 1957, he claimed damages, alleging that the defendants had failed to provide a safe system of work and safe and proper plant and equipment. The county court judge rejected the allegations in the plaintiff's particulars of claim as to the circumstances in which the accident occurred. The judge found that the plaintiff was casting and the ladle he was using slipped and metal splashed which went over his leg and foot. At the time the plaintiff, who was an experienced moulder, was not wearing protective spats but ordinary boots. The judge found that the plaintiff knew that there were spats in the defendants' store which could be had for the asking, and that there were in the store protective boots which he could have had on payment.

C. A.
1958
Haynes v. Qualcast (Wolverhampton) Ltd.

The judge further found that the defendants had not ordered or advised the plaintiff to wear protective clothing. This omission the judge considered was due to the fact that the plaintiff was an experienced moulder. The judge stated that, if he were not bound by authority, he would decide that the plaintiff was so experienced that he needed no warning and that what he did was with full knowledge of the risks involved and that there was no negligence on the part of the defendants. Having regard, however, to the authorities, he held that, although protective spats were available, since the plaintiff was never told that he must wear them, a safe system of work had not been provided. The plaintiff was entitled to succeed. The major part of the blame rested on him and the judge apportioned three-quarters of the blame for the accident to the plaintiff and one-quarter to the defendants. He assessed the damages at £233, awarding one-fourth of that sum, £58 5s., to the plaintiff.

The defendants appealed upon the ground that the judge misdirected himself in law in holding that the defendants had been negligent. The plaintiff cross-appealed against the apportionment of the damages.

Marven Everett Q.C. and John Garrard for the defendants.
John Thompson Q.C. and Irvon Sunderland for the plaintiff.

The following cases, in addition to those referred to in the judgments, were cited in argument: Crookall v. Vickers-Armstrong Ltd.[1]; Finch v. Telegraph Construction and Maintenance Co. Ltd.[2]; Richards v. Highway Iron Founders (West Bromwich) Ltd.[3]; Cooper v. K. and L. Steel Founders and Engineers Ltd.[4]; Bilsbury v. Harrison, McGregory & Guest Ltd.[5]; Brooker

[1] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 659; [1955] 2 All E.R. 12.
[2] 65 T.L.R. 153; [1949] 1 All E.R. 452.
[3] [1957] 1 W.L.R. 781; [1957] 2 All E.R. 162.
[4] Unreported decision of Lynskey J., April 12, 1951.
[5] Unreported decision of Gerrard J., Manchester Assize, January 18, 1955.

v. Jenkins Bros., Proprietors Ocean Steamship Co. Ltd.[6]; Webb v. Smith, Bingley & Evans Ltd.[7]

LORD EVERSHED M.R. The plaintiff suffered an injury on September 16, 1954, the circumstances of which and the nature of which were as follows: he was then, and had been for some three months, employed in the foundry of the defendants, as a moulder. In the course of that day he was handling a ladle containing molten metal which he was seeking to pour into another receptacle; and, according to the finding of the judge, the ladle slipped and the metal splashed onto his left ankle and foot. The story which he put forward to the judge gave a different account, for he said that he was not pouring from the ladle into the moulding boxes but carrying the ladle along a passage in the foundry and that the spillage was caused by an obstruction over which he stumbled. But that account of the misfortune was entirely disbelieved by the judge. Still, the injury was sustained. The claim was made up of loss of wages, together with general damages, and the total sum found as compensation for the injury was £233—£133 being special damage and the balance general damage. The judge found that responsibility for the accident, though in part proper to be laid at the defendants' door, was, for the greater part, that of the plaintiff himself. He apportioned the blame as to 25 per cent. to the defendants and 75 per cent. to the plaintiff. Thus, the sum actually awarded to the plaintiff was £58 5s., or one-quarter of £233.

The defendants have appealed against that conclusion, upon the ground that in this case, on the facts proved, there was in truth no breach of duty by the defendants; or alternatively, if there was a breach of duty, that the damage was not attributable to the breach. There is a cross-appeal, whereby the plaintiff complains of the apportionment and suggests that there was in truth no, or no such, contributory negligence on the plaintiff's part.

From my statement so far it will be apprehended that there are really two points presented for our decision: first, was there a breach of duty on the defendants' part, and, second, if there was, has the plaintiff established that the damage, in some degree at any rate, must be properly attributed to the breach? I will say at once that of the two I think that the second is the more difficult. Upon the first, the judge was of opinion, according to his judgment (uninstructed by authority), that the plaintiff was himself so experienced a moulder that he needed no warning of the hazard involved in carrying molten metal about; that he did carry it about, unprotected as to his feet, entirely at his own volition; and accordingly, so far as the first [6] Unreported decision of Gorman J., Liverpool Winter Assize, February 20, 1956.

[7] Unreported decision of Stable J., Birmingham Assize, December 18, 1956.

C. A.
1958
Haynes v. Qualcast (Wolverhampton) Ltd.
Lord Evershed M.R.

point is concerned, that there would be no breach of duty on the defendants' part.

The judge then considered a number of authorities which had been drawn to his attention, some of them unreported cases. Those authorities I do not find it necessary to consider in detail. The conclusion which they compelled him ultimately to embrace is thus expressed: "In the present case, the spats and boots "were there, and the plaintiff knew they were there, but he was "never told that they must be worn. He decided the matter "himself. In view of this I feel that my judgment must be in "favour of the plaintiff"; and he went on to consider apportionment. In other words, I think the judge was of opinion that the cases compelled him to hold that the nature of the occupation in which the plaintiff was engaged and of the hazard which it involved was such that the obligation of the defendants was to make the wearing of protective clothing a necessary—a compulsory—characteristic of the job. There is no doubt whatever that the defendants did not attempt to do that. I have referred to the protective clothing, which, so far as relevant here, consisted of spats—a form of legging which would protect the instep and the lower joints of the leg against splashing of heated or molten metal.

The facts, so far as they seem to emerge and as the judge found, in regard to those items of protective clothing, were these. The defendants kept a stock at their foundry of these spats; and the evidence further established to the judge's satisfaction that they were there for the asking: that is to say, that any workman who said he wished to wear a pair of spats when doing his moulding operations had only to ask for them and they would have been supplied free of any cost. In addition, the defendants were mindful enough of their obligations to those they employed to have in stock and available pairs of a particular type of boots —whether of leather or asbestos I am not quite clear, but at any rate of a kind which were sufficient to keep from the foot splashings of molten metal. In the case of the boots, however, they were not there for the asking in the way that the spats were: they had had these boots supplied and were prepared to let workmen take for themselves a pair on paying only the cost price of the boots to the defendants; and it is to be noted that the defendants put up a notice telling their workmen that these boots could be so had on those terms—though perhaps a little surprisingly (for we all like to be virtuous if we can) they did not put up a notice to say not only that but also "You can have "spats for no charge at all." Indeed, so far as the evidence goes and as I understand the finding, the defendants in truth took no steps at all to bring to the attention of their men the availability of the spats or to advise them that, if they wished to protect their ankles and insteps from possible injury, they would be well advised to take advantage of the offer.

The evidence is, of course, shortly recorded, as is common in a county court case. As regards the plaintiff, I do not take any particular notice of what he said, because he was not a person whom the judge on other aspects of the matter believed. The defendants' witnesses certainly did not support the view that they had taken any steps to bring the availability of these spats to the attention of the men. True, one witness said that Bloor (who was the foundry foreman) used "to go on to the "men about not wearing spats"; but Bloor himself, when called, by no means supported that statement. Bloor did indeed say that in the case of an inexperienced man, a learner coming to the job, he would advise him to wear spats; from which at least it may be inferred that Bloor appreciated that there was a risk—a risk against which an inexperienced man ought properly to be warned. However that may be, the finding is to the effect I have indicated.

The judge says: "The plaintiff was not ordered or advised "by the defendants to wear protective clothing." He went on, "and I think that was because he was an experienced moulder." Later he said: "He" (the plaintiff) "was never told that they "must be worn." The judge later said: "He" (the plaintiff) "knew that there were spats and boots in the stores; that spats "were to be had for the asking and the strong boots at a price "which the defendants consider to be reasonable; and he decided "to wear ordinary boots"; and so on. I take that to be a finding (and it is well supported by the evidence) that the defendants did not in fact take any steps to inform their men as to the supply and availability of the spats, still less to advise them, and still less again to make the wearing in any sense a condition of the employment. The judge found, and I am fully prepared to accept his finding, that they did not do so because they thought that this plaintiff, being an experienced moulder, should be taken as knowing—as in fact he did know—what the risks were. That, however, goes rather to the second point—the question of causation. The first question is: Was the provision, in the sense of having them available for the asking, of these spats a sufficient performance of whatever be the true measure of the obligation of the defendants in this case?

The test I take to be the general one is that it is the duty of an employer in such a case as this to take reasonable care for the safety of his workmen. Mr. Thompson has pointed out that molten metal is of a temperature of something like 1,300 degrees centigrade. From that fact it is, of course, plain that if it gets upon the skin or the body it is likely to do serious and painful injury; though it may not be (and was not in this case) of any lasting effect.

If, then, that is the nature of the hazard, I think for my part that the obligation of the defendants extended to more than merely having the spats available in case any experienced moulder thought he would like to ask for them. I do not think it is necessary to attempt to define in this case the extent of the

C. A.
1958
HAYNES v. QUALCAST (WOLVERHAMPTON) LTD.
Lord Evershed M.R.

duty to warn or advise. I am certainly not prepared, for my part, to say that this is a case in the class of those, for example, where the eye is at risk and where, having regard to the nature of the hazard, there is a duty on the employer to go to very considerable lengths to try to see that his workmen do take advantage of the protective equipment supplied. Lord Morton of Henryton, in Paris v. Stepney Borough Council,[1] draws attention to the fact that the extent of the duty will depend in some degree upon the gravity of the hazard which is involved and of the consequences which may ensue if damage is suffered. But here, since, on the judge's finding, the defendants did nothing at all, other than have the gaiters ready for those that asked, I think they did fall short of their duty. I therefore agree with the judge that there was a breach of duty.

I now come to what I consider the more difficult part of the task. There has been much discussion which properly invokes considerations of common sense, and also the point that if an employer tries too much to assume the functions of a matron or grandmother it may be far from good for the safety of the workman; and Mr. Thompson himself said that he would be the last to suggest that in the interests of safety all responsibilities, so far as possible, should be removed from the men themselves. I have, too, in mind that prima facie a plaintiff in an action must establish his case. If, therefore, there is no direct evidence which can be said to link the consequence with the cause, it must, I take it, be a matter of consideration of all the probabilities—Can the damage be fairly attributable to the failure to perform the duty? But I think that aspect of the matter was considered by the judge; because having, contrary to his first impression (and rightly, in my judgment), concluded that there was a duty which had not been performed, he then proceeded to consider to what extent the plaintiff on his part and the defendants on their part were responsible for the accident—which consisted of an injury to the foot, which, prima facie, would have been avoided had protective clothing been worn. Having heard all the evidence (and I do not forget that he was not at all impressed favourably by the plaintiff as a truthful man), he came to the conclusion that to the extent of 25 per cent. he should attribute the damage to the defendants' breach of duty. It is quite true, and I do not forget, that at this stage he seems to have assumed the duty to be of a more extensive character than I am prepared myself to concede; it was a case (if I have read his judgment aright) in which he thought that the defendants should have made the wearing of protective clothing what we called in the arguments a local rule. But I am not satisfied that that disables the conclusion. Thus, if the plaintiff was the type of man who always knows much better than anybody else who tries to advise him —if, knowing all that he did know as an experienced moulder, the proper inference ought to be that he would have disregarded any advice and warning—then it does not seem to me, for this purpose, to matter very much, if indeed at all, that the breach consisted not in not making this a local rule but in failing to give any advice at all.

[1] [1951] A.C. 387; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 25; [1951] 1 All E.R. 42.

But the judge's conclusion being in the end a conclusion of fact, I am myself unwilling to disturb it; and I would therefore leave the whole of this matter, including apportionment, as the judge concluded it. It will follow from what I have said that I reject the cross-appeal; but I think that the judge was most amply justified, in this case, in holding that this experienced man was, to the extent of 75 per cent., the author of his own calamity.

Dealing with it in that way, I find it unnecessary to express any view upon a question which may have some time to be considered in this court, or indeed the House of Lords—namely, to what extent certain decisions in this court are now entirely reconcilable with the judgments of the House of Lords in Bonnington Castings Ltd. v. Wardlaw.[2] The decisions of this court which I have in mind are, first, that of Roberts v. Dorman Long & Co. Ltd.[3] and, second and later, Drummond v. British Building Cleaners Ltd.[4] In the Drummond case[4] the question was as to the use of certain safety devices by a man engaged in cleaning windows; and at the end of his judgment my brother Parker said: "In my view . . . the defendants, having failed "in their duty by not giving him instructions to use the rope, "cannot be heard to say that even if they had, he would not "have used it"; and he relied upon a passage in a judgment of Lord Goddard C.J. when sitting in this court in the earlier case of Roberts.[5] As I have said, it may be that that way of expressing the matter, in the light of Bonnington's case,[6] may require consideration hereafter; but Mr. Everett has not invited us to say that Roberts[7] and Drummond[8] must be treated as overruled by the Bonnington[9] decision. I therefore leave the matter thus: that in the present case, whatever be the effect of Bonnington[9] upon the earlier cases, it seems to me undoubtedly still law that the question of causation is one of fact, to be considered in the light of all the circumstances and the probabilities; so that if, in this case (as I think he did), the judge, properly considering those matters, concluded as a fact that to the extent of 25 per cent. the plaintiff's damage was attributable to the breach of the defendants' duty, I cannot see any ground in law why that conclusion is not to be sustained. There is, no doubt, a suggestion in the evidence, and indeed in the judgment, that the plaintiff was a person of the type who knows better than

[2] [1956] A.C. 613; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 707; [1956] 1 All E.R. 615.
[3] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 942; [1953] 2 All E.R. 428.
[4] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1434; [1954] 3 All E.R. 507.
[5] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 942.
[6] [1956] A.C. 613.
[7] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 942.
[8] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1434.
[9] [1956] A.C. 613.

C. A.
1958
Haynes v. Qualcast (Wolverhampton) Ltd.
Lord Evershed M.R.

everybody else; and, if it were true to say that, according to the fair balance of probabilities, nothing really would have persuaded him to take proper steps for his own protection, then, of course, the answer would be to relieve the defendants; but the judge has not so held; and I do not think that in this court we should be justified in so holding now.

On the whole, therefore, it seems to me that the right answer here is that the careful judgment of the judge, whereby he awarded in the end one-quarter of the damages to the plaintiff, ought not to be disturbed; and I would dismiss the appeal and the cross-appeal.

Parker L.J. I have come to the same conclusion; and in approaching the matter I have done so without very great sympathy with the plaintiff. By his particulars of claim he raised a great number of issues, all based on an allegation that what had happened was that he had stumbled over an obstacle in the gangway. On that he was completely disbelieved. One also cannot ignore the fact that this is what I may call a stale claim. The accident occurred on September 16, 1954, and the particulars of claim were not delivered until March 22, 1957. But the fact remains that there was an allegation that the defendants had "failed to provide any or any proper spats or "other sufficient protective clothing," and that they "failed to "provide a safe system of work and safe and proper plant and "equipment."

The common law duty is, in the words of Lord Herschell in Smith v. Charles Baker & Sons,[10] to take reasonable steps so to conduct the operations that the men are not subjected to unnecessary risk. It is quite clear that in an operation of this sort there is a risk, and a risk of serious injury—true, not injuries which are likely to be fatal or to affect the eyes, but clearly such as are likely to produce injury by burning; and it seems to me perfectly clear, in those circumstances, that there is a duty on employers not only to have protective clothing available but to inform anybody coming into their employment that they have got that equipment, and to take some steps to educate the man to wear the equipment for his own safety. Exactly what those steps should be I find it unnecessary to determine. In some cases the hazard may be so great, and the injury, if it occurs, so serious, that it might be necessary to make the wearing of the protective clothing a rule of the factory. Again, where the matter is not so serious, mere advice might be sufficient. But at any rate in this case some steps, as it seems to me, had to be taken to educate men for their own protection to wear this clothing.

In the present case the employers did nothing. True, they had in their store protective equipment; but when the plaintiff came into their employment he was not told by them that that equipment was available; nor was he in any way advised to wear it. The answer given is: That is true, but that was because this man was an experienced moulder: he was 38, and he had been all his life in the trade. But even so, from the employers' point of view, when he came into their employment they would not know that he knew or would have any chance of knowing that they had equipment available. Undoubtedly by the time of the accident he did know that that equipment was available in store, and with his experience he must have known that that equipment was there for use for his own safety. I say that he knew that the equipment was there: that is the finding of the judge, which I accept, despite Mr. Thompson's suggestion that there was no evidence upon which the trial judge could make such a finding. It is true that the evidence on that is not altogether clear, but read as a whole I should have thought there was ample evidence on which the judge could make that inference.

[10] [1891] A.C. 325, 362; 7 T.L.R. 679.

That being so, the employers having been originally in breach, did that breach play any causative part in the accident which occurred? I confess that it is that point, and that alone, which has given me some difficulty in this case. Mr. Thompson has relied strongly on the decision in this court (to which my Lord has referred) of Roberts v. Dorman Long & Co. Ltd.[11] In that case, Lord Goddard C.J., presiding in this court, said[12]: "The "fact that they"—that was, safety belts in that case—"were "not available gave him no opportunity of exercising his election. "Had one been available, and had he elected to use it, while it "might not have prevented him meeting with some injury, it "would certainly have prevented him from falling to his death. "Some actions for negligence are based on the failure of a person "to make inquiries when the circumstances are such as to show "that he was put on inquiry." Then the Chief Justice refers to Alderwood Ltd. v. Bank of Liverpool,[13] and he goes on: "If "a person who has to make an inquiry fails to do so, he cannot "be heard to say: 'But even if I had, it would have led to no "'useful result.' So, I think that if a person is under a duty to "provide safety belts or other appliances and fails to do so, he "cannot be heard to say: 'Even if I had done so they would not "'have been worn.'" That case and that passage was followed again in this court in Drummond's case.[14]

It is true that since then there has been the decision in Bonnington Castings Ltd. v. Wardlaw,[15] in the House of Lords; but that case, as I understand it, has not overruled Roberts v. Dorman Long & Co. Ltd.[16] Nevertheless, I think for my part that there may be special circumstances in Roberts' case[16]

[11] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 942.
[12] Ibid. 946.
[13] [1924] 1 K.B. 775; 40 T.L.R. 302.
[14] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1434.
[15] [1956] A.C. 613.
[16] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 942.

C. A.
1958
HAYNES v. QUALCAST (WOLVERHAMPTON) LTD.
Parker L.J.

justifying that conclusion. It is to be observed that it was a decision on regulation 97 of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, which provides that safety belts in certain circumstances should be available to enable such persons as elect to use them to carry out the work without risk of serious injury; so that there was a specific regulation providing that there had to be provision of apparatus which the man could elect to use. The second point was that in that case the injured man died and there was no opportunity for him to say: "If I "had had an election I should have chosen to wear a safety "belt."

For my part, I would accept the finding (and it must have been a finding) of the county court judge in this case that the original breach did play some part. I say he must have found that because, having found the plaintiff himself guilty of contributory negligence, he apportions the blame and holds that the defendants, by reason of their original breach, were to blame, but only to the extent of 25 per cent. On the whole of the evidence in this case, I do not see any ground for interfering with that finding of the judge. It follows that I would accordingly dismiss the appeal and the cross-appeal.

SELLERS L.J. I have felt some doubt in this case, and unaided by the views of my Lords I might well not have come to the conclusion which I now express—that I, too, agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

The case, I think, is a difficult one, and the county court judge so regarded it. The plaintiff was an experienced moulder, who (as was found) well knew of the danger or dangers which beset the operation that he had to carry out: indeed, he himself made provision to meet them by wearing strong working boots which he bought himself. Mindful as he must have been, and as he has been found to have been, that molten metal might splash upon his legs, he did not avail himself of the protection provided, in the sense that suitable spats were kept in the stores by the employers. He well might have done. If the judge is right (and I think he must be held to be right) that the workman knew that the spats were there, the workman could, if he had so chosen, have worn them. But his attitude, as revealed in his evidence, was that he did not think it necessary to wear spats for his protection, and that is why he did not wear them. One interpretation of the evidence is—and one that was made by the judge—that he did not even wear them after he had met with the injury which is the subject-matter of this claim. But it cannot be overlooked that the employers might have done a little more. They might have put (as my Lord has said) an accompanying notice about the availability of spats alongside the notice about the boots which were for sale; or they might, through the usual channels, have sought to impress upon their workmen that they should wear them.

In those circumstances, although I regard it as a narrow and border-line matter, I am not prepared to dissent from the view which my Lords have taken, that there is material here to establish a duty to this workman and a breach of it. But I think it is a very slight breach, and that becomes perhaps more material in considering whether, having regard to that, the second finding ought to have been made, that the plaintiff's injury had been shown to have been caused by the defendants' breach of duty. There is, I think, material on which the county court judge could have found affirmatively that this particular plaintiff, even if he had had considerable pressure put upon him, having regard to the way he acted and his views on this matter and what he said, would not have worn the protective spats and, therefore, at the time of this accident, he would not have been protected by them, and the defendants' breach of duty would not thereby have caused his accident. But there is no such affirmative finding, and I must accept that there is material for inferring, from the apportionment which the county court judge made when he felt himself driven to find by authority a breach of duty, that he must have thought that some part of the defendants' breach brought about this injury.

Somewhat reluctantly, because I feel that this is an extreme case and one where the workman might have been held, from any general point of view, responsible for his own injuries—he could so easily have prevented them by taking those precautions of which he knew and which he knew some of his colleagues were taking—I feel I am bound to support the judge and dismiss this appeal.

Appeal and cross-appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Berrymans for T. Haynes Duffell & Son, Birmingham; W. H. Thompson.

B. A. B.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* SAMROSE PROPERTIES LTD. v. GIBBARD.

[Plaint No. MP. 222.]

C. A.
1957
May 2, 3.
Lord Evershed M.R., Morris and Pearce L.JJ.

Landlord and Tenant—Rent restriction—Premium—Commuted rent—Rent reduced below two-thirds of rateable value—Lump sum payment—Whether premium or rent in advance—Whether tenant protected—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 12 (7).[1]

[1] Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, s. 12 (7): "Where the rent "payable in respect of any tenancy "of any dwelling-house is less than "two-thirds of the rateable value "thereof, this Act shall not apply to "that rent or tenancy nor to any

C. A.

1957

SAMROSE PROPERTIES LTD. v GIBBARD.

The plaintiffs were the owners of an old block of flats in which was a flat consisting of two rooms, the tenant sharing a kitchen and lavatory. In August, 1955, the defendant, a lorry driver, when he applied for a tenancy of that flat, was required to sign an application form giving particulars of his financial circumstances and the state of his family and the names of two referees. By an agreement dated August 23, 1955, made between the landlord and the tenant, after reciting that the landlord was not prepared to grant a lease so that the Rent Acts would apply to the premises, in consideration of the sum of £35 paid by the tenant the landlords agreed to grant a lease of the flat for the term of one year from August 30, 1955, at the quarterly rent of £1 1s., being a rent less than two-thirds of the rateable value of the flat, such lease to be in the form of the draft annexed. The agreement was conditional on the landlords being satisfied in their absolute discretion that the tenant was a suitable tenant. That agreement was endorsed with a certificate signed by a solicitor that the agreement had been explained to the tenant, who understood it. By a lease dated August 30, 1955, the flat was demised to the tenant for a term of one year. On a claim by the landlords for possession:—

Held, that, on the true construction of the agreement and lease of 1955, the sum of £35 paid by the tenant was commuted rent and that the reality of the matter was that the landlords had let the premises to the tenant for an annual rent of £39 and, accordingly, that the tenant was entitled to the protection of the Rent Acts.

Observations of Cohen L.J. in Regor Estates Ltd. v. Wright [1951] 1 K.B. 689, 698; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 242; [1951] 1 All E.R. 219, and of Evershed M.R. in Woods v. Wise [1955] 2 Q.B. 29, 44; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 734; [1955] 1 All E.R. 767, 776 applied.

APPEAL from Judge Clothier, sitting at Lambeth County Court.

The plaintiffs, Samrose Properties Ltd., were the owners of a block of flats in Waterloo Square, Lomond Grove, Camberwell, which included No. 117 Waterloo Square. The block of flats was an old block and flat No. 117 consisted of two rooms, with a right for the tenant to use a kitchen and lavatory in common with other persons. In these proceedings the landlords sought to recover possession of flat No. 117 from their tenant, Kenneth Gibbard, who was a lorry driver.

The tenant had applied in August, 1953, to the landlords' agent for a tenancy of the flat. He signed an application form dated August 16, 1955, giving particulars of his wages, those of his wife, the state of his family and the names and addresses of two persons as references. An agreement dated August 23, 1955, was entered into between the landlords and the tenant in the following terms: "Whereas: (1) the applicant is desirous of "being granted a lease of the premises hereinafter mentioned "(2) the company is not willing to grant a lease such that the "Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Acts would apply to "the said premises Now it is hereby agreed as follows:—1. In "consideration of the sum of £35 now paid by the applicant to "mortgage by the landlord from "whom the tenancy is held of his "interest in the dwelling-house, and "this Act shall apply in respect of "such dwelling-house as if no such "tenancy existed or ever had "existed."

"the company (the receipt whereof the company hereby acknow-"ledges) the company agrees to grant and the applicant agrees "to take a lease of all that flat No. 117 Waterloo Square, Lomond "Grove, Camberwell, London, S.E.5, for a term of one year "from the 30th day of August 1955 at the quarterly rent of "£1 1s. payable in advance . . . 2. The said lease shall be in "the form of the draft annexed hereto. 3. Completion of the "said lease shall subject as hereinafter provided take place on "the 30th day of August 1955. The said lease and a counter-"part thereof shall be prepared by the company's solicitors . . . "4. This agreement is conditional upon the company being "satisfied in its absolute discretion that the applicant will in all "respects be a suitable tenant and the applicant shall accordingly "furnish references forthwith. In the event of the company not "being satisfied as aforesaid with the suitability of the applicant "then the company shall refund to the applicant the said sum "of £35 and this agreement shall be null and void. 5. On "completion the applicant shall pay to the company the sum "of £5 5s. as a contribution towards the company's costs in "respect of this agreement and the said lease."

That agreement was endorsed with a certificate of a solicitor signed by him in the following terms: "I ..... solicitor "hereby certify that I have explained the above proposed agree-"ment to the applicant therein named and that he appeared "fully to understand the same. I further certify that he has "instructed me that he is entering into such agreement in "reliance only on its contents and he acknowledges that there "is no verbal agreement or representation relating to the subject-"matter thereof."

By a lease dated August 30, 1955, the landlords demised the flat to the tenant for the term of one year from August 30, 1955, at the quarterly rent of £1, which was less than two-thirds of the rateable value of the flat. The flat had formerly been let at approximately 6s. 4d. a week.

In his defence the tenant alleged that the agreement was a sham and an unlawful attempt to circumvent the provisions of the Rent Act of 1920 and he claimed to be entitled to the protection of the Acts.

The county court judge held that the sum of £35 paid by the tenant was commuted rent and not a premium, and dismissed the landlords' claim to possession.

The landlords appealed on the following grounds: (1) that the judge had misdirected himself in law in holding that the terms of the tenant's tenancy of the premises were not fully and exclusively set out in the lease of August 30, 1955, between the landlords and the tenant and that the rent of the premises under the lease was not therefore less than two-thirds of the rateable value of the said premises; (2) that the judge had misdirected himself in law in holding that the sum of £35 paid under the agreement of August 23, 1955, in consideration whereof the landlords agreed to grant the lease was commuted rent; (3) that there was no evidence on which the judge could find that the said sum was commuted rent.

C. A.
1957
SAMROSE PROPERTIES LTD. v. GIBBARD.

R. E. Megarry Q.C. and E. Ashley Bramall appeared for the landlords.

The tenant did not appear and was not represented.

The following cases were cited in argument which are not referred to in the judgments: Ford v. Langford [2]; Hill v. Booth [3]; Samuel v. Salmon & Gluckstein Ltd. [4]; Rush v. Matthews [5]; Property Holding Co. v. Clark [6]; Hughes v. Waite. [7]

LORD EVERSHED M.R. The sole question raised in this appeal is whether the rent payable in respect of certain premises (which were the subject of a tenancy made in August, 1955), was less than two-thirds of the rateable value of the premises. It is not in doubt for the purposes of this appeal that the rateable value of the premises is or was at all relevant dates £7 per annum; so that if the rent payable in respect of the tenancy was less than two-thirds of £7, then the inevitable effect of section 12 (7) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, is that the tenant cannot claim, as he has sought to do, the protection of the Rent Acts. The tenant, having succeeded before Judge Clothier in the county court, has not thought it necessary to appear in person or by counsel to support the judgment in this court. I have come to the conclusion that we cannot disturb the conclusion at which the county court judge arrived.

The premises consist of a flat known as 117, Waterloo Square, Lomond Grove, Camberwell; but even that description might be thought to be in some degree euphemistic, for the subject-matter of the tenancy was two rooms, the tenant having the right to share with other occupants the kitchen and the lavatory. The subject-matter being of this somewhat meagre character, the tenant must, if he reflected upon it, have been somewhat surprised by the extraordinary elaboration of the arrangements for the letting with which he was presented. The documents which we have to look at were three in number, and a period of a week separated the second from the first and the third from the second. Anticipating for a moment the oral evidence which was given before the judge, this elaboration was the declared policy of the landlords and, as the second of the three documents plainly and quite properly declares, their object was to avoid the impact upon the premises in question of the rent restriction

[2] [1949] W.N. 87; 65 T.L.R. 138; [1949] 1 All E.R. 483.

[3] [1930] 1 K.B. 381; 46 T.L.R. 50.

[4] [1946] Ch. 8; 62 T.L.R. 28; [1945] 2 All E.R. 520.

[5] [1926] 1 K.B. 492; 42 T.L.R. 287.

[6] [1948] 1 K.B. 630; 64 T.L.R. 76; [1948] 1 All E.R. 165.

[7] [1957] 1 W.L.R. 713; [1957] 1 All E.R. 603.

legislation. But it is plainly a matter to which this court must properly address itself in matters where the Rent Restrictions Acts might be said to apply, whether the transaction, viewed as a whole and according to the substance of it, is in truth one which, to use Mr. Megarry's phrase, is on that side of the line which frees the premises from the impact of the Act, or whether, so regarded, the transaction is one which is of the mischief which the Acts were designed to avoid.

My authority for that view I take from the language of Cohen L.J. in Regor Estates Ltd. v. Wright.[1] The particular passage was cited in this court by me in Woods v. Wise.[2] I think it unnecessary to read again the passage which I cited there; but I may perhaps venture to refer to my own language rather later in Woods v. Wise,[3] which the county court judge in the present case also invoked. "In cases," I said,[3] "under the "ordinary law, unaffected by the Rent Acts, the question, how "much rent should be payable under, and what other con-"siderations there should be for, a demise were matters for free "bargaining. A landlord might charge any sum that he could "get for rent. If he preferred, he could charge a low rent and "demand a 'premium' or lump-sum payment. There was no "such purpose as now exists in any attempt to disguise the "one in the shape of the other. In these circumstances, the "word 'rent,' even though not confined to the old common law "meaning of that for which distress might be levied, would "naturally and ordinarily be used to signify the periodic pay-"ments under a demise in contrast to lump-sum or other kinds "of consideration." And then a little later, after considering whether a lump-sum payment called a "premium" might none the less be rent, I said[4]: "I cannot, for my part, think that the "arm of the law would be so short as to disable it from dealing "appropriately with such a case as that last suggested, if it "appeared that the so-called premium was, in truth and sub-"stance, nothing more or other than the rent quantified and "provided for in 'an abnormal form.'"

I therefore approach the present case with that matter of principle to guide me. I, of course, fully accept the proposition which Mr. Megarry made the foundation of his case, that a landlord is entitled so to arrange his affairs that the legal result will bring him outside the statutory provisions; but, on the other hand, merely giving a label to a particular type of payment will not by any means necessarily have the effect indicated by the label; for the truth and substance, in cases of this kind, must be examined. There are, I think, three circumstances which convince me that the judge here was well entitled to reach the

[1] [1951] 1 K.B. 689, 698; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 242; [1951] 1 All E.R. 219.
[2] [1955] 2 Q.B. 29; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 734; [1955] 1 All E.R. 767, 776.
[3] [1955] 2 Q.B. 29, 44.
[4] Ibid. 45.

C. A.
1957
SAMROSE PROPERTIES LTD. v. GIBBARD.
Lord Evershed M.R.

conclusion he did: The first is the disproportion which the arrangements made appear to me to bear to the subject-matter of that arrangement. I am dealing here with two rooms, and for a term, a period of occupation, which was limited to 12 months. This is not a case of a lease of some piece of land or a house for 14 years or some other long period at a ground rent upon payment of a sum designed to produce the effect that the periodic rent will be small; we are not dealing with that kind of case; and, tempting though Mr. Megarry's arguments always are, I do not find it necessary to indicate where any line should be drawn. We are here dealing with a period of one year—no more—and with two rooms, but with the right to share the kitchen and the lavatory. That is the first point.

The second point is that, when you examine it, the vital document upon its face seems to have not only indeed the declared object which it is intended to serve, but also an important inconsistency in itself. And, thirdly, I think that on further examination it is seen that this vital second document in truth is very largely, if not altogether, unnecessary. The cumulative effect of those reasons is, as I think, to justify the judge's conclusion. Let me, however, repeat that I am not for a moment suggesting that there is any deception or impropriety on the part of these landlords. They acquired these premises (it appears) in 1952, and they adopted this method of procedure which they instructed their agents to require from all proposed tenants, in the hope, belief and expectation, if you will, that thereby they would not be within the scope and restrictive effect of the Rent Restriction Acts. If they fail, that does not therefore reflect upon the ethics of their business methods.

In order to make clear those grounds which I have indicated, I can do no better than refer in such detail as is necessary to the three documents which were executed and which form the three stages of this elaborate superstructure for the letting of two rooms, together with the use of the kitchen and lavatory in Waterloo Square. The first was a document called "Application "for tenancy," signed by the tenant, and bearing the date August 16, 1955. It is addressed to the landlords' agents: "I "hereby apply for a tenancy of a flat at Waterloo Square, "Lomond Grove, Camberwell." He gave his name in full and his present address. He stated how long he had been where he was; that he was married and had one son aged five years living with him. He stated that he required two rooms; that his occupation was that of a lorry driver; he gave the name and address of his employer, his weekly wages, the income of his wife, and the name and address of his present landlord. Finally, he stated the rent which he was then paying and gave two references. It will be observed that the questions which were asked enabled the landlords to obtain quite a lot of information about the proposed tenant's status and circumstances; but, most important of all, the proposed tenant gave the names and addresses of two referees. A week then passed, and on August 23 the document, which is the real foundation of the landlords' case, was executed. [His Lordship read clauses 1–4 of the agreement and continued:] Then there were two features which might have been regarded by the tenant as "stings in the "tail." Paragraph 5: "On completion the applicant shall pay "to the company the sum of £5 5s. as a contribution towards "the company's costs in respect of this agreement and the said "lease." And, finally, it was part of the arrangement that, in addition to paying those sums for legal costs, the tenant should himself consult a solicitor, who was required to sign the following certificate at the foot of this agreement: "I"—then the name of the solicitor appears—"hereby certify that I have explained "the above proposed agreement to the applicant therein named "and that he appeared fully to understand the same. I further "certify that he has instructed me that he is entering into such "agreement in reliance only on its contents and he acknowledges "that there is no verbal agreement or representation relating "to the subject-matter thereof."

That was on August 23, and on August 30, one week later, there is executed the lease bearing that date. It is a lease of the same flat at the rent of £1 per quarter. There is no reference in it in fact to the previous agreement. There are certain covenants in common form, though not commonly found in tenancies for one year only for two rooms in a building of this kind; but they included a covenant: "On the expiration or "sooner determination of the said term"—that is one year—"to deliver up the said premises."

Those are the three documents, and upon the first of the three points I mentioned I think I need add little, if anything. When the subject-matter is borne in mind, this superstructure is clearly disproportionate. But, secondly, I draw attention particularly to this, as I think, very important circumstance: by the second recital in this agreement the landlords stated that they were not willing to grant a lease such that the Rent and Mortgage Interest Acts would apply. The landlords were saying—perfectly properly, of course: "What we are doing is asking you to embark upon this "elaborate arrangement because we are not willing, if we can "help it, to grant such a lease as will bring the Rent Restriction "Acts into force as regards the premises." Having, therefore, declared that that was what they were about, it is interesting to see how they proceeded to achieve it; for the consideration for the £35 was stated to be the landlords' agreement to grant the lease. But it will not be forgotten that two clauses later there is a provision that the agreement to grant the lease was not, as might here be supposed, a positive agreement so to do; for the whole instrument was expressed to be conditional on the landlords being satisfied, in their absolute discretion, that the tenant will be a suitable tenant; and presumably so long as the landlords acted bona fide, they could, for any reason at all, say that they

C. A.
1957
SAMROSE PROPERTIES LTD. v. GIBBARD.
Lord Evershed M.R.

were not satisfied that the proposed tenant would be a suitable tenant. So that it manifestly is not really true to say that the £35 was paid as consideration for a promise, in any real sense of the term, on the landlords' part to grant a lease. And then it will be observed that this clause went on to say that "the "applicant shall accordingly furnish references forthwith."

That brings me to the third of my grounds, for it will not be forgotten that the tenant a week before had already produced the references. Whether a week would have been sufficient in order that those referees might be consulted is a question on which I think some light is thrown by the fact that the completion date of the lease in this document was stated to be a week—no more—from the date when the document was executed. As here earlier stated, in truth this agreement practically serves no useful purpose at all. It was stated (and I have no doubt it was the fact) that the form of the lease was already agreed; it was to be prepared by the landlords. No real purpose then was served by making these intermediate arrangements, the landlords already being in possession of all the information they required about the tenant, including the name of his referees.

As I have said, I think these considerations amply justify the conclusion to which the judge arrived; but before I make a brief reference to the way in which he expressed that conclusion, I should say that two witnesses were called for the landlords. It is a point made and made with force by Mr. Megarry that though the tenant said in his defence that the vital agreement or the general substance of it was a sham, he did not come forward to say so; nor did he call any evidence himself; and if by the use of the word "sham" he was suggesting that there was some deception on the part of the landlords, I of course entirely disagree with him: the matter was entirely above board in that sense. It was made plain to the tenant that this was the means whereby the landlords were openly saying that they were proposing to keep outside the scope of the Rent Acts. But the witnesses showed, I think, two things: first, that the scheme of operations, which resulted in these three documents, was part of the deliberate policy of the landlords, designed, as was freely admitted, for the purpose expressed in the recital. But there was one other matter also, appearing in an answer to cross-examination of the first witness, the agent of the landlords, which I think is of some significance. The evidence as recorded by the judge is this: "We have made lettings of other flats in block "at about 13s. a week. On expiration of term of lease the tenant "can apply for a new lease. The terms of the new lease 'might "'not be the same.'" I ask myself what is really the effect of that? If the landlords are right, what will happen at the end of the year in what I take as a hypothetical case, where the tenant says: "Can I please have another year"? This performance will have to be gone through again. Will it be found that there will be a series of arrangements whereby for a payment of £X down and the promise to pay a periodic rent of say £1 a quarter, these tenants will on such occasion get the right to occupy for a year—no more—their respective premises? Looked at over a period of time, I think it would be impossible to avoid the conclusion that the whole 12-monthly consideration in each succeeding case formed in truth the compensation, the money payment, for the use of the flat; that is to say, was the rent. I think that consideration clearly entered into the conclusions of the judge, for he referred to the evidence which had been given before him. His conclusion is summarized in these terms: "Whilst giving every consideration to the argument, that the "landlords are entitled to evade the Acts, I feel it is my duty "to scrutinize very carefully the scheme proposed for this "purpose. In my view the scheme fails. In my judgment, if "the agreement and the lease are viewed together, it becomes "clear that the real substance of the transaction is the landlords' "demand of £39 for a year's occupancy, and that this is simply "divided into an immediate payment of £35, and the balance "by quarterly instalments of £1 each. I regard the £35 as "commuted rent, which, in my view, together with the quarterly "rent, is the true consideration for the letting. If I am right, "this tenancy is one protected by the Acts."

I think on consideration of all the evidence—the intrinsic evidence of the documents and the evidence of the witnesses—the judge was well entitled to reach the conclusion that he did. And, I, independently agree with it. It is perhaps to be noted —and this is my last point—that £39 a year happens to be 15s. a week. I am not saying that that was at all an excessive rent, but that may have a bearing upon the way in which this sum was calculated. However that may be, I think the judge was entitled to reach the conclusion he did, that he rightly reached it, and I would therefore dismiss the appeal.

I hope Mr. Megarry will forgive me if I do not travel through the many cases which he rightly brought to our attention. None of them, I think, can be said to form any authority governing the present case. The principle I have taken from the decision of Woods v. Wise[5] in this court, as did the county court judge, and I do not find it necessary to refer to any of the many other cases cited.

MORRIS L.J. I have reached the same conclusion. When the landlords brought their claim for possession, the tenant relied upon the Rent Restriction Acts. The landlords, in turn, said that the tenancy was not subject to the Rent Acts, and reliance was placed upon the provisions of section 12 (7) of the Act of 1920. As Mr. Megarry has pointed out, that subsection is in quite general terms: "Where the rent payable in respect of any "tenancy of any dwelling-house is less than two-thirds of the "rateable value thereof, this Act shall not apply to that rent or

[5] [1955] 2 Q.B. 29.

C. A.
1957
Samrose Properties Ltd. v. Gibbard.
Morris L.J.

"tenancy . . . and this Act shall apply in respect of such "dwelling-house as if no such tenancy existed or ever had "existed." Mr. Megarry submits that Parliament has by that subsection drawn a line. He points out that the provision so enacted has remained ever since 1920. That, of course, if I may say so, is all entirely correct; but the question that is raised in this case is whether the tenant's rent was a rent of £4 or whether in fact it was a higher rent, namely, a rent of £39. In the documents the so-called rent is £4. That amount was fixed because it was just below two-thirds of the rateable value, which was £7. If the true state of affairs was that the rent was £4 and only £4, then it is clear that the Rent Acts did not apply to the tenancy. If that was the true state of affairs, then the fact that the parties had ordered their dealings with the intention that the Rent Acts should not apply would be immaterial. On that basis the parties would be availing themselves openly of the provisions of the Acts; they would not be evading the Act: they would be making it operative.

In Foster v. Robinson,[6] my Lord, the Master of the Rolls, referred with approval to some words which are to be found in Mr. Megarry's book on the Rent Acts, 5th ed., p. 10: "There "is nothing to prevent the parties from so arranging matters "that there is nothing to which the Act can apply, provided "the transaction in question is a genuine transaction and not a "mere sham." And rather to the same effect were some words that were used in the earlier case of Maclay v. Dixon[7] by Scott L.J.: "There was no shadow of deception practised by the "landlord upon the tenant. In my opinion, they were both "entitled so to arrange the matter, as not to attract the control "of the Acts, or, putting it positively, as to prevent the Acts "from applying. If the actual transaction was not within the "Acts, it made no legal difference that the parties had intention-"ally kept it out of the Acts."

I think, if I may say so, that a most helpful approach to the problem presented in this case was contained in the words used by my Lord in his judgment in Woods v. Wise.[8] My Lord has referred to the passage and I do not refer to it again.

In another case, O'Connor v. Hume,[9] where the facts were rather different, Somervell L.J. had also indicated that in cases of this kind a measure of care in approach is necessary. I do not refer to the facts in this case, but in his judgment Somervell L.J. said this[10]: "If the proper construction of this agreement, "with any admissible extrinsic evidence, were that the £47 was "a premium and the rent, with any sums which could properly "be treated as rent, was only 2s., then it is plain—and this was "the view of the county court judge—that the landlord is

[6] [1951] 1 K.B. 149; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 120; [1950] 2 All E.R. 342.
[7] [1944] 1 All E.R. 22, 23.
[8] [1955] 2 Q.B. 29, 44.
[9] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 824; [1954] 2 All E.R. 301.
[10] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 824, 826.

"entitled to an order for possession." And then, a little further on he said: "if the court is satisfied that the document pur-"porting to set out the rights between the parties is a sham—"and I am not attempting to define what a sham is—then the "court will accept and consider evidence as to the real bargain "between the parties. I see no ground, having had the evidence "and the letters read to us, for regarding this agreement as a "sham, whatever that may mean. It is clear that there was no "trickery or anything of that sort. The landlord made it "perfectly plain that he wished the transaction arranged in this "way at this low rent because he did not desire to part with "possession for more than a year. The tenant's replies and the "letters indicate, as, indeed, counsel agreed, that that was well "understood." And then Somervell L.J. added: "Although "there is nothing contrary to the Act in agreeing to a premium "in the case of a tenancy where the rent is below two-thirds of "the rateable value, the court would scrutinise a sum in such "a case which was put forward as a premium."

Mr. Megarry has submitted to us in this case that, there being here no substantial extrinsic evidence and there being no rule of law, as he submits, governing the matter, the judgment of the county court judge ought not to stand unless by intrinsic examination of the documents his conclusion can be supported. It seems to me that all that one can do in a case of this kind is to seek to ascertain what was the true nature and effect of the transaction; what was the substance of the matter; what was the reality of it, not being guided unduly by any labels that may have been used. My Lord has stated the facts of this case, and the decision depends upon an appreciation of these facts. The property in question, called a "flat," in fact consists only of two rooms in oldish property, there being a right to share a kitchen and lavatory accommodation with others. We have these three documents, and, like my Lord, I pose the question: what possible useful purpose was served by the second of the three documents in this case? One must consider all the facts and see whether they afford some pointers towards forming a conclusion as to what was the reality of the matter. The permissible rent of these two rooms, we are informed by the evidence, would have been something over 6s. 4d. a week. The so-called rent, the stated rent, was put at £4, which I think is approximately 1s. 6d. a week. There is a £35 premium and then this so-called rent of £4, equivalent to 1s. 6d. a week. The contrast between those two figures in relation to a tenancy for a short period of one year is one pointer. Furthermore, the formality and the elaboration of these documents, which effect a letting for this relatively short time of these two rooms in this oldish property at a so-called rent equivalent to about 1s. 6d. a week, constitute another pointer, which in my judgment one can consider when forming a conclusion as to what was the real substance of the matter, without being deluded by its form. Looking at the

C. A.
1957
SAMROSE PROPERTIES LTD. v. GIBBARD.
Morris L.J.

totality of the circumstances, I am led to the view that was reached by the county court judge. I think the reality of the matter was that the tenant was paying £39 by way of rent. The real substance of the transaction was that the landlords required £39 rent and the tenant was willing to pay that rent and to pay £35 of it in advance as commuted rent. I am therefore of the opinion that the county court judge was amply warranted in his conclusion and that he came to a correct conclusion.

PEARCE L.J. I agree.

Solicitors: Meaby & Co.

B. A. B.

[LIVERPOOL CONSISTORY COURT.]

1957
Dec. 13.
Steel Ch.

* In re MATHESON, DECD.

Ecclesiastical Law—Faculty—Burial ground—Disinterment—Jurisdiction to grant faculty for disinterment of body from consecrated ground for cremation and subsequent re-interment of ashes.

M. died on May 20, 1946, and was buried in the Churchyard of St. Luke's, Orrell, Wigan, on May 23, 1946. Ten years later his widow, having decided that her own body should be cremated when she died, wanted to have M.'s remains disinterred and cremated after her death, and to have her ashes placed with those of M. The widow died before she was able to present a petition for a faculty to enable this to be done, and the application was made by her son:—

Held, that the court had jurisdiction in a proper case to grant a faculty to enable remains to be disinterred from consecrated ground for subsequent cremation and a faculty should issue as prayed.

In re Dixon [1892] P. 386; 8 T.L.R. 744 considered.

PETITION for faculty.

A faculty was sought to enable the body of the late Dr. Alexander Matheson to be removed from the Churchyard of St. Luke's, Orrell, so that the remains might be cremated and that the ashes might be placed with the ashes of his widow, Mrs. Mary Margaret Matheson.

R. P. Heaton (solicitor) for the petitioner.

STEEL Ch. In this case the court is asked to grant a faculty to enable the remains of the late Dr. Alexander Matheson to be removed from the consecrated churchyard of St. Luke, Orrell, so that the remains may be cremated and the ashes placed with the ashes of Mrs. Mary Margaret Matheson who was his widow.

[Reported by M. B. KELLY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Dr. Matheson died on May 20, 1946, and his remains were interred on May 23, 1946, in St. Luke's Churchyard. I understand that the decision as to the place of interment was made by his widow and it seems fair to assume that in making such decision she was either carrying out what she knew to be the wishes of the deceased or what she at that time believed to be the wishes of her late husband. In 1955 and 1956 it would appear that Mrs. Matheson was considering what arrangements she wished to make for the disposal of her own remains after death and decided in favour of cremation. Having reached this decision Mrs. Matheson desired, if it were possible, to have the remains of her late husband disinterred, such remains cremated and, when the time came, for her own ashes to be placed with the ashes of her husband. Having reached this decision Mrs. Matheson wrote to the registrar of this court with a view to presenting a petition for a faculty. However, before she was able to present a petition she died and the present application is made by her son. Having seen and heard the petitioner I am satisfied that his motive in presenting the petition is the laudible desire to carry out his mother's wishes, and that if this petition were refused considerable distress would be caused to him.

The vicar and churchwardens of St. Luke have signified their consent to the removal of the remains should a faculty be granted. The petitioner stated in evidence that so far as he was aware his late father had never expressed any desire to be cremated.

At the outset I felt some doubt as to whether the faculty prayed for was one which I could lawfully grant. Such doubt arose from consideration of In re Dixon.[1] That was an application in the Consistory Court of London which was heard by Tristram Ch., and the facts were almost identical with the facts in the present case. The applicant was the widow and she desired to disinter the remains of her husband with a view to cremation. Evidence was given by the widow that her late husband had told her that she might either bury his body or have it cremated as she wished. To that extent the applicant in that case was in a rather stronger position than the present petitioner, for I know that Dr. Matheson had never expressed any views at all with regard to cremation.

At first sight it would appear from the headnote to this report that the learned Chancellor refused the application on the ground that it was one which he could not lawfully grant, and this view is supported on a first reading of the report itself.

I am very much indebted to the petitioner's solicitor, Mr. Heaton, for the assistance which he gave me and for the research which he conducted. As a result of his researches he informed me that he believed that faculties for the removal of bodies from consecrated ground with a view to cremation had been granted in recent years in the Dioceses of Carlisle, Winchester

[1] [1892] P. 386; 8 T.L.R. 744.

1957

MATHESON, DECD., In re.

Steel Ch.

and Bath and Wells, and the correctness of this information has been confirmed by the registrar of this diocese. It follows from this that at least three Chancellors have decided that in a proper case and for sufficient reasons there is no legal impediment to the granting of a faculty for the disinterment of remains from consecrated ground for the purpose of cremation. I have taken time to consider the matter and have re-read In re Dixon [1] several times and with great care. Although the language used in the report is not free from difficulty, I have come to the conclusion that Tristram Ch. did not refuse the faculty prayed because he was satisfied that he was precluded by law from granting it, but because, in the exercise of his discretion, he was not satisfied that it should be granted.

From the earliest time it has been the natural desire of most men that after death their bodies should be decently and reverently interred and should remain undisturbed. Burial in consecrated ground secured this natural desire because no body so buried could lawfully be disturbed except in accordance with a faculty obtained from the Consistory Court. As all sorts of circumstances which cannot be foreseen may arise which make it desirable or imperative that a body should be disinterred, I feel that the court should be slow to place any fetter on its discretionary power or to hold that such fetter already exists. In my view there is no such fetter, each case must be considered on its merits and the Chancellor must decide as a matter of judicial discretion whether a particular application should be granted or refused.

[The Chancellor then proceeded to examine the facts of the particular case and concluded that, in the exercise of his discretion, this was a proper case in which a faculty could be granted.]

Faculty as prayed.

Solicitors: Ackerley, Heaton & Pigot, Wigan.

[1] [1892] P. 386.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1958 Jan. 23, 24.

Diplock J.

* HEAVEN & KESTERTON LTD. v. SVEN WIDAEUS A/B.

Arbitration—Costs—Discretion of arbitrator—Successful party normally entitled—Claimants awarded one-tenth of their claim—Ordered to pay whole costs of arbitration — Whether judicial exercise of discretion—Based on mistake of law—Whether judge may consider mistake of law.

Various quantities and descriptions of timber having been delivered by the sellers under a contract of sale, the buyers claimed damages for defects of quality in some of the goods and the right to reject certain other goods. An umpire awarded the buyers

£73 but ordered them to pay the total costs of the arbitration, amounting to £179 10s. The buyers gave notice of motion to set aside the award on the ground, inter alia, that the umpire misconducted himself in failing to exercise his discretion in a judicial manner on the matter of costs. In an affidavit, the umpire said that in coming to his decision on costs he had regard to all the facts and circumstances of the case, including the fact that (a) he found against the buyers on their claim for rejection; (b) in respect of their total claim for nearly £700 damages he only found them entitled to £73; (c) he formed the view that the buyers had presented an exaggerated claim; and (d) had the buyers claimed a sum similar to that awarded, it was unlikely that the costs of the arbitration would have been incurred. Counsel for the buyers claimed that the umpire (as was indicated by his affidavit) was wrong in law in dismissing the claim for rejection, and that, therefore, his four reasons for awarding costs against the buyers disappeared and his order as to costs should be set aside:—

Held, that although a court had jurisdiction to set aside the part of an arbitrator's award dealing with costs where it appeared (whether on the face of the award or by affidavit) that the arbitrator had exercised his discretion in a non-judicial manner, the court could not take into consideration the fact that the exercise of the arbitrator's discretion was based on a mistake of law; accordingly, although the umpire might have been wrong in law in holding that there was no right to reject the goods, as the court had no jurisdiction to set aside the substance of the award on the ground of mistake of law, the court had to judge the umpire's exercise of discretion as to costs by putting itself in the umpire's position when he made his award, and, on the facts and the law as the umpire understood them, the court could not say that he exercised his discretion unjudicially.

Per curiam. Where an umpire was not asked to state an award in the form of a special case there was no reason why he should have given any reasons for any part of his award.

Observation in Smeaton Hanscomb & Co. Ltd. v. Sassoon I. Setty, Son & Co. (No. 2) [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1481; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1588 explained.

MOTION to set aside an umpire's award.

By a contract dated March 8, 1957, the buyers, Heaven & Kesterton Ltd., ordered from the sellers, Sven Widaeus A/B, various quantities of upper gulf redwood timber described by dimensions only, except as to the dimension 3 ins. by 5½ ins., to which was added the description "2 ex log," which meant that the timber of that description was not to include the heart of the tree for reasons which affected its usefulness.

The contract was on the "Albion" 1955 terms and whereas there was a special condition, clause 7, which related to the right of rejection in the event of over-shipment and under-shipment, and varied what would otherwise be the rights of the parties under the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, there was no provision which affected the normal rights of the parties relating to the rejection of goods for failure to comply with the description. The arbitration clause (clause 20) in so far as relevant was in the following terms: "Any dispute and/or claim regarding shipped goods "which it may be found impossible to settle amicably shall be

1958

Heaven and Kesterton Ltd. v. Sven Widaeus A/B.

"referred to arbitration to be held in the country of destination "of the goods and, except as otherwise herein provided, to be "conducted according to the laws of the country . . . Where the "claim is for quality and/or condition and has not been settled "amicably within 10 days after receipt of claim as stated in the "first paragraph of clause 18 either party may at once proceed "to arbitration. The reference shall be to a sole arbitrator "mutually agreed upon. In default of such agreement claims of "more than £100 or on more than 25 standards shall be referred "to two arbitrators, one to be appointed by each party, and "claims of smaller amounts or on smaller quantities to a sole "arbitrator to be appointed as stipulated in the next para-"graph. . . . Should the arbitrators fail to agree upon an award "they shall appoint an umpire. . . . Inspection by the arbitra-"tor(s) or the umpire, as the case may be, of the goods claimed "upon shall take place within 14 days after their appointment, "unless they consider inspection unnecessary. An award shall "be final and binding upon both parties. The costs of such "arbitration shall be left to the discretion of the arbitrator(s) or "umpire. In deciding as to costs, the arbitrator(s) or umpire "shall take into consideration the correspondence between the "parties relating to the dispute and to their respective efforts to "arrive at a fair settlement."

The goods under the contract were delivered in August, 1957, and shortly afterwards, by a letter dated August 22, 1957, to the sellers' agents, the buyers made a claim in general terms, which was acknowledged by the sellers' agents on August 23, 1957. On August 26, a detailed claim was put forward by the buyers regarding various complaints as to quality in relation to a large number of different sizes and that part was quantified at £455 4s. 4d. There was also a claim to reject certain quantities of two particular sizes for failure to comply with contract specifications, it being alleged that the 3 ins. by 5½ ins. were not "2 ex log" and that the 2 ins. by 3 ins. were not of the dimensions specified and described, the width being under size and the thickness varying from 1⅝ ins. to 2½ ins. That part of the claim was quantified at £495 9s. 10d. with an additional claim for damages and loss of profits bringing the total claim under that head to £573 8s. 4d. The claim was put in the alternative, if rejection was not upheld, in the form of damages for breach of warranty, which were quantified at £231 4s.

An agent of the sellers subsequently inspected the goods, and there was some desultory conversation about the first part of the claim, during which the buyers offered to reduce that part of the claim for £455 by £50. The sellers' agent indicated that he might be prepared to recommend to his principals a figure in the region of £125. That was all that happened in the way of attempts to settle the claim and arbitrators were appointed by the two parties. The arbitrators, on September 11, 1957, made an inspection of the goods which took them the greater part of the day, and having failed to reach agreement, they appointed an umpire. They discussed the matter with him and each of them left with him written submissions of their views and contentions. In the course of the afternoon of September 12, the umpire made his own inspection of the goods. His award dated September 14, after reciting that a dispute had arisen regarding quality, condition and manufacture of the goods shipped by the Westfjord and reciting the submission, read, so far as relevant, as follows: "Now I, the undersigned, having "carefully considered the findings of the arbitrators, examined "the goods as stored in Hull Docks, and studied the correspon-"dence, hereby, decide and award that sellers shall forthwith pay "to the buyers the sum of £73, that buyers shall pay the total "costs of the arbitration amounting to £179 10s."

The buyers gave notice of motion to set aside the award on three grounds. The second ground was: "That the said arbitrator "misconducted himself in that he made no proper judicial inspec-"tion of the goods the subject-matter of the dispute and arrived "at the conclusion set out in his award on the basis of an inspec-"tion which was not a proper and judicial inspection and which "has caused a substantial injustice to the applicants."

The third ground, with which alone this report is concerned, was: "That the said umpire misconducted himself in that he "did not in dealing with the costs of the reference exercise his "discretion in a proper judicial manner in that he made an award "in favour of the applicants but nevertheless ordered them to "pay the whole of the costs of the reference and stated no reason "therefor."

The umpire then swore an affidavit. In reference to the second ground of motion he stated (inter alia): "Regarding the 3 ins. "by 5½ ins. sold as 2 ex log . . . I readily found that part of "them were not 2 ex log and awarded accordingly"; and "With "regard to the 2 ins. by 3 ins. . . . although they were some-"what unevenly sawn, in the main I found them to be over "measure."

With regard to costs he stated: "I gave considerable thought "and attention to the question of costs and I had clearly in mind "that normally it would be right to award the whole or part of "the costs of the arbitration to the successful party. In the "present arbitration in coming to my decision upon costs I had "regard to all the facts and circumstances of the case, including "the following: (a) I had found against the claimants upon their "claim for rejection; (b) in respect of their total claim for "damages amounting to £686 8s. 4d. I had only found them "entitled to recover £73; (c) I formed the view that the buyers "had presented an exaggerated claim; (d) it was my view that "if the claimants had only put forward a claim for a sum "approximately equivalent to that which I had awarded it is "unlikely that the substantial costs of this arbitration would "have been incurred."

1958

HEAVEN AND KESTERTON LTD. v. SVEN WIDAEUS A/B.

Michael Kerr for the buyers, the applicants.
Mark Littman for the sellers, the respondents.

The following cases, in addition to those referred to in the judgment, were cited in argument: Heaven & Kesterton Ltd. v. Etablissements Francois Albiac & Cie [1]; Czarnikow v. Roth, Schmidt & Co.[2]; Cooper v. Whittingham [3]; Lipman v. George Pulman & Sons Ltd.[4]; French Government v. Owners of S.S. Tsurushima Maru [5]; In re Fuerst Bros. & Co. Ltd. and R. S. Stephenson [6]; Finlayson v. M'Leod [7]; Leckhampton Quarries Co. Ltd. v. Ballinger and Cheltenham Rural District Council [8]; Pettey v. Parsons [9]; Ellesmere v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [10]; Pitkin v. Sanders and Forster Ltd.[11]; Bradshaw v. Air Council [12]; Stotesbury v. Turner [13]; Anglo-Cyprian Trade Agencies Ltd. v. Paphos Wine Industries Ltd.[14]; Lloyd del Pacifico v. Board of Trade [15]; Donald Campbell & Co. Ltd. v. Pollak [16]; Williams v. Stanley Jones & Co. Ltd.[17] and Wootton v. Central Land Board.[18]

DIPLOCK J., having stated the facts and held that there was no reason for setting aside the award on two other grounds in the notice of motion, continued: The third ground on which it is sought, not that the award should be set aside, although that is how it is put in the motion, but that part of the award should be set aside which directed the buyers to pay all the costs of the arbitration, is: "That the said umpire misconducted himself in "that he did not in dealing with the costs of the reference "exercise his discretion in a proper judicial manner in that he "made an award in favour of the applicants but nevertheless "ordered them to pay the whole costs of the reference and stated "no reason therefor."

I think I might perhaps first deal with the last four words that I have read, "and stated no reason therefor." This is not an award in the form of a special case, and I am bound to say that I can see no possible reason why an umpire who has not been asked to state an award in the form of a special case should give any reasons for any part of his award, whether the substantive part or the costs part. I suspect that that particular part of the objection is founded on the words of Devlin J. in Smeaton Hanscomb & Co. Ltd. v. Sassoon I. Setty, Son & Co.

[1] [1956] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 316.
[2] [1922] 2 K.B. 478; 38 T.L.R. 797.
[3] (1880) 15 Ch.D. 501.
[4] (1904) 91 L.T. 132.
[5] (1921) 37 T.L.R. 961.
[6] [1951] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 429.
[7] (1818) 1 B. & Ald. 663.
[8] (1905) 93 L.T. 93.
[9] [1914] 2 Ch. 653; 30 T.L.R. 655.
[10] [1918] 2 K.B. 735; 34 T.L.R. 560.
[11] (1923) 128 L.T. 789.
[12] [1926] Ch. 329; 42 T.L.R. 197.
[13] [1943] K.B. 370.
[14] [1951] W.N. 205; [1951] 1 All E.R. 873.
[15] (1930) 46 T.L.R. 476.
[16] [1927] A.C. 732; 43 T.L.R. 787.
[17] [1926] 2 K.B. 37.
[18] [1957] 1 W.L.R. 424; [1957] 1 All E.R. 441.

(No. 2).[1] In that case Devlin J. was dealing with a case stated in which there was an unusual order made for costs. While in that case Devlin J. said[2] that where an arbitrator makes an unusual award as to costs in a case stated he ought to give the reasons for it, I certainly do not understand those words as applying to ordinary awards as well and not merely to awards in a case stated. I have no doubt that the umpire in an arbitration of this kind has power to deprive a successful claimant of his costs and, indeed, to order a successful claimant to pay the costs of the other side in appropriate circumstances. The mere fact, therefore, that on the face of the award the buyers have succeeded as to the sum of £73 but have nevertheless been ordered to pay the costs of the sellers would, in my view, of itself be no ground for setting aside the award. If, in reply to this notice of motion, nothing had been said by the umpire, who is of course not a party to these proceedings, as to the reasons why he had made an order of that kind, I do not think that there are any grounds on which I could have interfered with his award. In In re Fearon and Flinn[3] the question arose as to whether an umpire was entitled, having made an award in favour of the claimants, to direct them to pay the other side's costs, and Bovill C.J. said this[4]: "The parties have selected the "tribunal which is to settle the disputes between them, and "have agreed that the costs of the submission, reference and "award shall be in the discretion of the arbitrators or umpire. "The umpire, who had all the facts before him, has exercised "his discretion. Assuming his judgment to be wrong, what "power have we to interfere, or how can we exercise a discretion "in the matter? I am far from saying that the umpire has not "arrived at a just conclusion. It may be that there was no "dispute about the smaller sum, and that all the costs incurred "in the reference resulted from the excessive claim made by "Fearon: and in that case the umpire might well be justified "in imposing all the costs upon him. But, be that as it may, "we cannot sit in judgment upon his decision." Keating J. came to the same conclusion.

Mr. Kerr has urged that since that decision, which was in 1869, the law has changed in that the court has exercised a wider power to interfere with the exercise by an arbitrator of his discretion as to costs. To a certain extent I think that is true because in Foster v. Great Western Railway Co.[5] the Court of Appeal accepted the view that an arbitrator or umpire must exercise his discretion in awarding costs judicially on the same principles, subject to any exceptional circumstances, as a judge must do. Foster v. Great Western Railway Co.[5] was certainly not referred to with any great enthusiasm by the House of Lords

[1] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1481; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1588.
[2] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1481, 1485.
[3] (1869) L.R. 5 C.P. 34.
[4] Ibid. 36.
[5] (1882) 8 Q.B.D. 515.

1958

HEAVEN AND KESTERTON LTD. v. SVEN WIDAEUS A/B.

Diplock J.

in Gray v. Ashburton,[6] but it is an authority which is still binding on me, and it is an authority which has been followed recently in two cases in the Queen's Bench Division—Smeaton's case,[7] to which I have already referred, a decision by Devlin J., and Lewis v. Haverfordwest Rural District Council,[8] a decision of Lord Goddard C.J.

Those cases, on which Mr. Kerr strongly relies, were cases in which the court set aside an award of an umpire or arbitrator as far as it related to costs on the grounds that it appeared from the material before the court that the arbitrator or umpire had exercised his jurisdiction unjudicially; that is to say, that he had, in the Smeaton case,[9] failed to have regard to an important matter to which he should have had regard, namely, who won or who lost the action, and in the Lewis case [10] that he had had regard to something to which he ought not to have had regard, namely, that he had no evidence that during the long time between the event, which was compulsory acquisition, and the date of the arbitration, any serious effort had been made by either party to settle the question.

Two things are clear from those authorities. First, that the court has jurisdiction, where it appears on the material before it that an arbitrator has exercised his discretion in a non-judicial manner as to costs, to set aside his award so far as it relates to costs. The second proposition which follows from those cases, and, I think, also from Gray v. Ashburton,[11] is that it matters not whether the material on which the court comes to the conclusion that there has been a non-judicial exercise of discretion appears on the face of the award, as it did in Smeaton's case,[12] or appears by affidavit evidence which comes before the court, as I have ascertained from looking at the official file, it did in Lewis's case [13] and, indeed, as it appears it did from the report in Gray v. Ashburton.[14] While, therefore, it may be that, had the umpire in this case put in no affidavit and given no reasons, the applicants would have had little that they could say to me, as he has in fact given his reasons for doing so, I am entitled to look at those reasons and see whether he has exercised his discretion judicially.

Before I look at those reasons, I think it is desirable to consider what is the principle that lies behind the now established right of the court to interfere with the exercise of the discretion of an arbitrator as relates to costs. The basis and utility of arbitration as a method of determining disputes is that the parties select their own tribunal and agree to be bound by its decision not only on fact but also in so far as they do not take advantage of the special remedies by way of case stated, on law. In general, an award of an arbitrator cannot be set aside for error,

[6] [1917] A.C. 26.
[7] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1481.
[8] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1486; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1599.
[9] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1481.
[10] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1486.
[11] [1917] A.C. 26.
[12] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1481.
[13] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1486.
[14] [1917] A.C. 26.

whether of fact or of law, except by the machinery which is supplied through case stated, save that if he chooses to make a speaking award, it may be set aside for error on its face. But an award can always be set aside for misconduct. That word, as many judges have pointed out, is rather an unfortunate word in that it suggests moral blame, whereas it covers irregularities of a kind which involve no moral blame, although it is conduct which is not proper in relation to a quasi-judicial proceeding. It seems to me that misconduct in that wide sense in which it is used in relation to arbitration is also a ground on which the court can interfere with the exercise by the arbitrator of his discretion as to costs. Indeed, I am inclined to think that an appellate court, as a matter of practice, in interfering with the exercise by an inferior court of its discretion as to costs only, does interfere in the sort of case which would amount to misconduct in the sense of arbitration law, but with this difference of course, that an appellate court can always correct an inferior court on matters of law, and alter any order as to costs which is ancillary to an error of law.

I think, therefore, that in considering whether I have a right to set aside the umpire's award as respects costs in this case, I must apply the same sort of principles as I would apply to setting aside any other part of the award, reminding myself that if the umpire exercises his discretion as to costs in the sort of way which a High Court judge ought not to do, that would amount to misconduct, subject to this, that if the terms of reference direct him that he may or should take into consideration matters which a High Court judge should not take into consideration, he can, and indeed if so directed must, do so.

The umpire's reasons for making the award which he did as to costs in this case are set out in his affidavit. [His Lordship read them.]

So far as the first three reasons are concerned, they are really to this effect: "I came to the conclusion that the claimants "had put forward an unjustifiable claim for rejection and that "they had put forward a claim for damages exaggerated by "nearly ten times." That to fail upon one important issue in a case is a matter which can and should be taken into consideration in dealing with costs needs no authority; that to put forward an exaggerated claim on which the claimant succeeds on only a small part is a matter which can result in his being ordered to pay the costs, despite his success as to a small part, again, I think, needs no authority, but if authority be needed it is to be found as long ago as 1879 in Harris v. Petherick.[15]

The fourth ground put forward, namely, that the umpire thought that the matter could have been settled if what he regarded as an unexaggerated claim had been put forward, is a matter which Mr. Kerr suggested was an extraneous matter which ought not to be taken into consideration. He relied [15] (1879) 4 Q.B.D. 611.

1958

HEAVEN AND KESTERTON LTD. v. SVEN WIDAEUS A/B.

Diplock J.

on the decision in Lewis v. Haverfordwest Rural District Council.[16] I think there would be a good deal to be said for that if it were not for the special terms of the submission and the umpire's discretion as to costs in the final sentence of the arbitration clause: "In deciding as to costs the arbitrator(s) "or umpire shall take into consideration the correspondence "between the parties relating to the dispute and their respective "efforts to arrive at a fair settlement." If the umpire took the view, as it appears from his affidavit he did, that this was a grossly exaggerated claim, exaggerated by ten times, and if he looked at the correspondence where such a claim was put forward, I think that he might legitimately take the view that the putting forward of an exaggerated claim of the kind he thought it was, was a matter which made it highly unlikely that any fair settlement could be arrived at by the other side, and that is a matter he is entitled to take into consideration. It seems to me that taking the view that he did as to the failure of the right to reject and as to the amount of damages, he was entitled on that view to make the award as to costs which he in fact made. I am not saying for a moment that it is the same award that I should have made, but he has a discretion in the matter, and it does not seem to me that there is shown here sufficient ground for saying that I should interfere with the umpire's discretion on the facts as he found them.

But, says Mr. Kerr, assuming that to be right—and he has contested strenuously that it is not—it is apparent on the material before the court that the umpire was wrong in law, in deciding that there was no right to reject those goods which formed the subject-matter of something more than half the total amount claimed in the action. He relies on passages in the affidavit which were put in in order to deal with the allegation that he had not inspected the goods properly, such as: "Regarding the 3 ins. by 5½ ins. sold as 2 ex log referred to in "paragraph 19 in the affidavit of Mr. Blackburn, I readily found "that part of them were not 2 ex log and awarded accordingly"; and, says Mr. Kerr, if that is what he found, there is an elementary error of law in that he has found against the right to reject the goods which he in terms found did not comply with the description. Similarly, says Mr. Kerr: As regards the 2 ins. by 3 ins. timber, the umpire says in his affidavit: "With regard "to the 2 ins. by 3 ins. referred to in that paragraph "although they were somewhat unevenly sawn, in the main I "found them to be over measure." That shows that he has found that they were not in accordance with the description which included, among other things, the dimensions. It may be that as regards the 2 ins. by 3 ins. there are customs in the trade as to tolerances and the like of which I am not aware and which are not mentioned in the affidavit because the umpire was primarily dealing with an inspection, and he was not bound to deal with the merits, but it does seem fairly clear that he has made an error of law as regards the 3 ins. by 5½ ins. 2 ex log description; and, said Mr. Kerr, if he had corrected that error of law then probably all four of his reasons for awarding costs against the buyers would go. The first must go because he should not have found against them on their claim for rejection. The second must also go because on their total claim for damages he would have found a much larger sum in their favour. The third must go, or at any rate must go in part, because he formed the view that the buyers presented an exaggerated claim. The fourth, I think, must go because he says it was his view that if the claimants had only put forward a claim for a sum approximately equivalent to that awarded, it is likely that the costs of the arbitration would not have been incurred, whereas if they had put forward such a claim they would have put forward a claim for less than they were entitled to. On the true position in law, therefore, the reasons for ordering the buyers to pay the costs of the sellers disappear. I do not know what the umpire would have done if he had not made that mistake as to rejection, but if I am entitled to look at the real position in law, then I should set aside the award as respects costs and, I think, probably remit it back to the umpire to deal with the costs, since I do not think that I have all the material on which I could deal with costs myself.

[16] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1486.

Mr. Kerr urges that in exercising my jurisdiction to set aside the award as regards costs, I am entitled to look at the real position and to ask myself, on the true position in law, whether it was a judicial exercise of his discretion by the umpire. Mr. Littman, on the other hand, perhaps encouraged by me, says: No, arbitrators are entitled to make mistakes, they are entitled to make mistakes of fact, they are entitled to make mistakes of law, and in considering whether or not there has been a proper exercise of judicial discretion as respects costs this court has got to put itself in the position of the arbitrator at the time at which he was making his award, and has got to make the same errors in law and the same errors of fact, if there were any, as the arbitrator. I think the matter can be tested in this way: Assuming that the only issue which had gone to arbitration in this case was whether or not the buyers were entitled to reject the 3 ins. by 5½ ins. 2 ex log timber, and the umpire had made the same mistake in law as he has made in the present arbitration, and had accordingly awarded that the buyers were not entitled to reject and awarded the sellers their costs of the arbitration, if on a motion to set aside the award as respects costs—not on a special case—for misconduct there appeared on the evidence before the court what appears now in this case, that there was an error in law on the part of the arbitrator in deciding in favour of the sellers, I find it very difficult to see how I could have any jurisdiction to set aside his award as to costs which is ancillary to his substantive award when, quite plainly, I would have no jurisdiction to set aside his award as to the substance. I think the reason I would have no jurisdiction to do so would be because there is nothing in that case which amounts to misconduct on the part of the arbitrator. What there is, is a mistake or mistakes, and the mistakes of arbitrators are what the parties agree to accept when they go to arbitration. I think here, therefore, that I am not entitled to say: "With the material before me it is apparent that the "umpire has made a mistake as to his award and that mistake "has also affected his judgment as to costs." I think I must judge his exercise of discretion as to costs by putting myself in the position in which he was when he made his award with all the errors in law or fact he made. If I do that, for the reasons I have already given, I cannot say that he on the facts and law as he understood them exercised his discretion unjudicially or, as I would prefer to put it, because I think it is the right way of looking at it, I cannot say that he was guilty of misconduct in the way he exercised his discretion as to costs. This motion, therefore, fails.

1958

Heaven and Kesterton Ltd. v. Sven Widaeus A/B.

Diplock J.

Motion dismissed.

Solicitors: Theodore Goddard & Co. for Andrew M. Jackson & Co., Hull; William A. Crump & Son.

C. J. E.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

1958
Feb. 14.

* PRACTICE DIRECTION (MAINTENANCE AGREEMENTS).

Husband and Wife—Maintenance—Agreement—Death of party—Alteration of agreement after death of one party—Permission of court to apply—Application to be included in summons for directions—Maintenance Agreements Act, 1957 (5 & 6 Eliz. 2, c. 35), s. 2 (1).

Where it is necessary to obtain the permission of the court to apply for an order under section 2 of the Maintenance Agreements Act, 1957, in a case in which more than six months have elapsed since the date of the grant of representation, the application for leave should be included in the summons for directions under rule 58A (6) of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957.

B. Long,
Senior Registrar.

February 14, 1958.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* SILVER v. SILVER.

C. A.

1958
Feb. 4, 5.

Lord Evershed M.R., Parker and Sellers L.JJ.

[Plaint No. 4091.]

Husband and Wife—Property—Proceedings under Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 17—House purchased for home—Purchase in name of wife—Mortgage instalments paid by husband—Presumption of advancement — Husband's claim to share in house — Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 17.

Advancement — Presumption — Husband and wife—Purchase of matrimonial home in name of wife.

A husband and wife had purchased successively four dwelling-houses for use as their matrimonial home. In each case, the property had been purchased in the name of the wife and in each case the purchase had been financed by building society mortgages the instalments payable thereunder being paid as to their entirety by the husband. On the sale of the earlier purchased premises substantial profits had been realised which in part had been used to finance the next purchase and in part had been paid to the wife. After the last dwelling-house was purchased in the wife's name and when £1,300 remained unpaid on the building society's mortgage, the husband left the wife and he applied under section 17 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, for an order that the house was held by the wife upon trust for herself and himself jointly. The county court judge held that there was nothing in the evidence to rebut the equitable presumption that in having the house purchased in his wife's name and in paying the instalments due under the mortgage, the husband intended to make an advancement and the wife was not a trustee of the house in whole or in part for the husband:—

Held that, on the facts, the findings of the county court judge should not be disturbed and that, since the matrimonial home was purchased in the name of the wife it was presumed to be a gift by the husband to the wife in the absence of evidence of a contrary intention.

Rimmer v. Rimmer [1953] 1 Q.B. 63; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 767; [1952] 2 All E.R. 863 and Fribance v. Fribance (No. 2) [1957] 1 W.L.R. 384; [1957] 1 All E.R. 357 distinguished.

Per Parker L.J. In the case of a family asset, such as the home or the furniture acquired for the joint use of a husband and wife, the presumption of advancement which arises from the property being put in the name of the wife can be easily rebutted, for that case is different from that where what is acquired is for the wife's personal use.

APPEAL from Judge A. H. Armstrong, sitting at Bournemouth County Court.

The plaintiff, Harry Silver, by this application under section 17 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, sought a declaration that No. 11, St. Ledger's Road, Bournemouth, being freehold premises standing in the name of his wife, Lena Silver, was held by her upon trust for him and herself jointly.

The premises, which had been the matrimonial home until the husband left the wife, were purchased in part out of the

C. A.
1958
Silver
v.
Silver.

proceeds of sale of an earlier dwelling-house also purchased in the name of the wife, and in part with the assistance of a building society mortgage. All the instalments payable under the mortgage and also under previous mortgages had been paid by the husband. The wife had no income of her own. The facts are fully stated in the judgment of Lord Evershed M.R.

The county court judge held that the husband had not rebutted the equitable presumption which arose from the husband having purchased the property in his wife's name and paid all the instalments and he had no beneficial interest in the property.

The husband appealed.

Michael King for the husband.
T. R. Crawford for the wife.

The following cases were referred to in argument but are not mentioned in the judgments: In re Salisbury-Jones, Hammond v. Salisbury-Jones [1]; Marshal v. Crutwell [2]; Dunbar v. Dunbar [3]; Thornley v. Thornley [4]; Gascoigne v. Gascoigne [5]; McNaught v. McNaught.[6]

Lord Evershed M.R. This was an application made under section 17 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, by a husband seeking an order to the effect that certain property in Bournemouth, known as 11 St. Ledger's Road, was held by the respondent, the wife, upon trust either for him, the husband, or for the two of them jointly. In this court the husband has confined his claim to the latter alternative, and he has also in this court said that if such an order were made, he would regard himself as under a continuing obligation to discharge certain mortgage instalments. The house in question, 11 St. Ledger's Road, Bournemouth, is in fact the fourth of what I might call a series of houses which constituted the matrimonial home over a long period of time of the husband and the wife and their children. It is indeed a peculiar tragedy of this case that husband and wife having been married in 1931 and having lived together for more than a quarter of a century, their marriage came to grief at the end of 1956, when the husband left the wife and the matrimonial home in St. Ledger's Road, Bournemouth.

The first of the premises bought was a house in North Wembley, Middlesex. The sum required was £895, and of it £90 was paid in cash and the balance was the subject of a mortgage repayable in instalments to the Burnley Building Society, who have remained mortgagees in these transactions throughout. The house some 10 or 11 years later was sold at a substantially improved price, namely, £1,700; and then another house was bought at a price of £2,000. In that case £1,500 of the £2,000 was left on mortgage. That house, which was in Bournemouth,

[1] [1938] 3 All E.R. 459.
[2] (1875) L.R. 20 Eq. 328.
[3] [1909] 2 Ch. 639; 26 T.L.R. 21.
[4] [1893] 2 Ch. 229.
[5] [1918] 1 K.B. 223; 34 T.L.R. 168.
[6] (1909) 54 S.J. 135.

was sold four years later at a very greatly enhanced figure, namely, £4,500; and, cutting the matter short, as I can, the two last items in the series, Brockenhurst Road, Bournemouth, and St. Ledger's Road, Bournemouth, were again houses of increasing values according to the figures, bought as to part by using the proceeds of sale of what preceded them, the remainder being left on mortgage. It is, however, to be noted that in the one case of Richmond Wood Road, Bournemouth (the second house bought), where, as I have said, a very greatly enhanced price was obtained on the sale, there was available after the purchase of the new house a sum of something in the neighbourhood of a thousand pounds, which might be described, to use language which was used in Rimmer's case,[1] as a windfall. It was a substantial profit which had been made by good fortune in the purchase of these houses, though it must be emphasized that they were bought not for investment purposes but as the matrimonial home. I shall come back to show something more about that £1,000 later. It remains only at this stage to say that in every case the houses were conveyed to the wife and into her name. She accordingly was the mortgagor, but the husband joined in the mortgage deed as a guarantor—a transaction which I imagine is common enough. His obligations as guarantor, we were told—though there is very little evidence about it—were secured by the deposit of a policy of insurance on his life. The mortgage instalments have throughout been paid directly or indirectly by the husband. I use that phrase, "directly or "indirectly," for this reason: it seems that the husband throughout the time that husband and wife lived together, paid his wife a weekly sum out of which she paid, among other things, the household expenses, and so forth. She also provided out of it—either by handing the money back to him or otherwise—the mortgage instalments.

Those are the broad circumstances, and the question is, now that unhappily the husband and wife are parted, in what shares ought this house to be treated as being held beneficially? Where there is a subject-matter such as the matrimonial home or what might be called part of the matrimonial joint stock—furniture and so forth—it is obviously tempting to say that equity delighteth in equality, and that one should treat the subject-matter as a joint investment in the true sense, so as to allow each to share equally in it. But, however tempting it is, there are difficulties in the way of so broad and general a view. If Parliament had thought that that would be a fair solution in these cases, it could have so provided. There is a rule of equity which still subsists, even though in this day and age one may feel that the presumption is more easily capable of rebuttal—a rule that if a husband makes a payment for or puts property into the name of a wife he intends to make an advancement to her. As was said by Sir George Jessel M.R. some time ago, such a [1] [1953] 1 Q.B. 63; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 767; [1952] 2 All E.R. 863.

C. A.
1958
Silver
v.
Silver.
Lord Evershed M.R.

disposition by the husband, unless otherwise explained, will be treated in equity as intended to effect a gift.

In the case before us the question is, as I have said, one to be determined according to section 17 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the language of which, so far as relevant, is: "In any question between husband and wife as to the title to ". . . property, either party . . . may apply" to a judge named, who "may make such order with respect to the property in "dispute . . . as he shall think fit." In this case the judge heard the husband and the wife. Upon one very important matter of fact he showed a clear preference for the wife's evidence; and having heard all the evidence, he came to the conclusion—bearing in mind, as he was bound to do, the existence of the equitable rule—that there was here no reason established on the husband's application for saying that this property, vested as it is exclusively in the name of the wife, belonged wholly or in part to the husband. We are invited in this court to take a different view, but I must say at once that, having given the case anxious consideration—not the less anxious because, as has been pointed out, there is a certain air of unreality in these cases in trying to discern an intention in acts and circumstances which occurred when the present events were quite outside contemplation—I have in the end concluded that we should not be justified in disturbing the judge's conclusion.

This, let me say, is not a case which is commonly met with today in which husband and wife are both wage-earners, where both may contribute, either equally or unequally, to some subject-matter of acquisition. In Rimmer v. Rimmer[1] the husband and wife had both so contributed, though in unequal shares. The property was there vested in the husband, not the wife, and the question was, in the circumstances how ought the property to belong beneficially? At first instance it had been thought proper to make the beneficial interests proportionate to the figures of the total contributions; but we thought in this court that that was too artificial a result and that in the circumstances the appropriate order to make under the section and the one most in accordance with what the two parties should be taken as having meant was to say that they were entitled equally. The judge thought that the present case was not covered by Rimmer[1] and to be distinguished from it, and I think rightly. To begin with, in Rimmer's case[1] the property was in the husband's name and both had contributed out of their earnings towards it. Here the property was—as were all the preceding items in the series—in the wife's name. On the other hand, the wife contributed in cash herself nothing. She was not a wage-earner and unfortunately now is obviously incapable of being one, since she appears to be crippled by arthritis; but the judge has, I think rightly, looked back to the beginning of the series of transactions to try to see what the right answer is.

[1] [1953] 1 Q.B. 63.

Of the price of the first house, amounting to £875, £90 had to be provided in cash. That sum in fact was provided by the wife's parents. The husband said that he had repaid that sum. The wife disagreed with that evidence, and on this matter the judge expressed a preference for the wife's evidence. Thus one starts with the fact that here is a property in the name of the wife, the cash requisite for which had been provided by the wife's father or parents; and she was herself as owner the mortgagor, though the husband was the guarantor. On the face of it, it was plainly the wife's property. But over this long period the husband paid the mortgage interest and instalments, and the matter which the judge had to determine was, what was the proper inference from that long continuing conduct? His conclusion was that, in so far as he made these contributions, he must be taken to have been advancing to the wife, since they were to the benefit of the equity of redemption, which belonged to the wife. I mention again at this stage the important matter of the sale of the second house in the series, when there was what I have called a cash windfall. The evidence about that is to this effect: it was not put into joint names; it was handed to or taken by the wife; but she provided out of it a sum of £400 or thereabouts towards the purchase by the husband for himself and for his own use of a new motor-car; and we are also told, though there is no recorded evidence about it, that the wife utilized other parts of the £1,000 in making provision for the children; and it is said that of that figure there is virtually nothing left now.

In cases of this kind where one is concerned with the matrimonial home, there is an obvious temptation to hold that a fair result would be to say that it was a joint enterprise and the two should be jointly entitled; but, if we so concluded in this case, I have come to the conclusion that we should be in effect inventing a case. The material before us in the way of the record of evidence is extremely slender. Unfortunately the judge was not even invited to look at the note taken of his reasons for judgment, and upon such note as we have it would be usurping the functions which more properly belong to the trial judge for us to say that he should have found facts which he did not find. Indeed, I feel that if in this case the Court of Appeal were to say that equity favoured equality, we should determine by anticipation that nearly all cases relating to the matrimonial home should likewise follow suit. I do not think that would be right. The judge did not find, on the material before him, sufficient to justify that conclusion, and he thought that, following the principles which still apply and having regard to the fact that the house was in the wife's name, he should treat the case as one in which the husband had not rebutted the presumption that arose from his having paid in the wife's favour all these instalments.

One result, which Mr. Crawford accepts, of such a conclusion is this: after the unhappy separation the husband did not pay off

C. A.
1958
Silver
v.
Silver.
Lord Evershed M.R.

mortgage instalments, at any rate for a little time; arrears accumulated. Later he did pay because the mortgagees drew his attention to his obligation as guarantor so to do. But Mr. Crawford concedes that from the date of the separation sums which the husband paid and will have to pay as guarantor are sums which as between husband and wife he can treat as charged upon her interest. It would appear as a matter of figures that some sum like £1,300 will eventually have to be so charged, and to that extent the husband will be entitled, in effect, to be subrogated to the mortgagees' rights against the wife. This is conceded. It was, on the other hand, conceded by Mr. King that if we were persuaded to hold that the right answer was to treat the beneficial interests as joint and equal, then he should continue at his own cost and out of his own resources to pay off the rest of the mortgage. That is no doubt a sensible result, but it rather emphasizes, I venture to think, that we really should be substituting for the facts proved, such as they appear from the note before us, what we should regard as a sensible settlement of the unhappy differences between husband and wife; because I find great difficulty in discerning any basis on this material for such an arrangement, such an obligation on the husband's part, to go on in such circumstances paying all the instalments; and if there were no such obligation, I am not quite clear what, on the husband's view, the result would be as regards the future payments. However, I need not pursue that further. I have on the whole come to the conclusion in this case, having regard to the very slight material we have, that we should not be justified in interfering with the conclusion which the judge reached after hearing and observing the parties. I think he did without error apply the principles which are applicable in cases of this kind.

I would therefore dismiss the appeal.

Parker L.J. I have come to the same conclusion, though I confess with considerable reluctance. We are here considering what I may call a family asset, the matrimonial home, something acquired by the spouses for their joint use, with no thought of what is to happen should the marriage break down. In these circumstances, it seems to me that in the present age common sense dictates that such an asset should be treated as the joint property of both, in the absence of evidence to the contrary. This view is well expressed by Denning L.J. in Fribance v. Fribance [2]; and also in Rimmer v. Rimmer.[3] I need only refer to the passage in his judgment in the latter case where he said [4]: "It seems to me that when the parties, by their joint efforts, "save money to buy a house, which is intended as a continuing "provision for them both, the proper presumption is that the "beneficial interest belongs to them both jointly. The property "may be bought in the name of the husband alone, or in the

[2] [1957] 1 W.L.R. 384, 387; [1957] 1 All E.R. 357.
[3] [1953] 1 Q.B. 63.
[4] Ibid. 74.

"name of the wife alone, but nevertheless if it is bought with "money saved by their joint efforts and it is impossible fairly "to distinguish between the efforts, of one and the other, then "the beneficial interest should be presumed to belong to them "both jointly."

Now, both those cases were cases where the family asset, the matrimonial home, was bought in the husband's name and not in the wife's name. When, however, the house is bought in the wife's name, as here, there is no doubt that the presumption of advancement applies: it is presumed to be a gift, in the absence of evidence of a contrary intention. That principle is too well established to be disregarded, and Denning L.J. in dealing obiter in Rimmer's case[4] with a house put into the wife's name, could not I think have had that principle in mind. It is quite true, as my Lord has said, that section 17 of the Act leaves a very wide discretion in the court; but, as Bucknill L.J. said in Newgrosh v. Newgrosh,[5] which is quoted in Rimmer v. Rimmer,[6] it does not entitle the court to make an order which is contrary to any well-established principle of law.

Turning to the present case, it seems to me that the county court judge properly directed himself. The question posed was whether the husband had satisfied him that the parties had a contrary intention. He answered that question in the negative and I do not see how on this question of fact this court can interfere. For myself, I think that in the case of a family asset, such as the home or the furniture, acquired for their joint use, the presumption of advancement can be easily rebutted. It is different from a case where what is acquired is, for instance, for the wife's personal use. Here the instalments of principal and interest payable to the building society all came out of the husband's pocket. When a house was sold and a new one was purchased, the full proceeds of sale were not invested in the new house: part was retained and expended—true by the wife, but, broadly speaking, for the joint benefit of the spouses; and again in regard to the new house the husband undertook the payment of the instalments to the building society. Those actions to my mind are much more consistent with a joint endeavour by the spouses to save by building up a family asset rather than with a succession of gifts by husband to wife, as was held to be the case in Moate v. Moate.[7] However, the county court judge saw the witnesses; he heard a considerable amount of evidence of which we have but a very scanty note; and, in those circumstances, I cannot see how this court can interfere. Accordingly, I also would dismiss the appeal.

SELLERS L.J. I agree, but I do so with no feeling of satisfaction. In the abbreviated note of the judge's judgment there appears towards the end of it a note to the effect that "there

[5] June 28, 1950, unreported.
[6] [1953] 1 Q.B. 63, 68.
[7] [1948] 2 All E.R. 486.

C. A.
1958
Silver v. Silver.
Sellers L.J.

"is no evidence here that the parties ever thought it was to be "their joint property. The matter was not raised." Were it not for those observations of the judge, I should have been more ready to take the view that the matter was open for consideration by this court, and would have striven, I think, to have applied the statement of the law to which Parker L.J. has referred enunciated by Denning L.J. in the two cases which were quoted. It seems to me, on the facts of this case, that those observations might well have been applied and have resulted in a decision that there was here a joint holding of this property. However, in all the circumstances, the county court judge having taken a different view and not having misdirected himself and the facts being for him, I agree with regret that this court cannot interfere. Therefore this appeal in my view must be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solocitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co. for Andrews, Wetherall, McQueen & Co., Bournemouth; Peacock & Goddard for Trevanion, Curtis & Walker, Bournemouth.

B. A. B.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.
1958
Feb. 4, 5.
Lord Denning, Hodson and Pearce L.JJ.

*REID v. THOMAS BOLTON & SONS LTD.

[Plaint No. N. 432.]

Costs—County court action—Action for "payment of money"—Claim for unliquidated damages—Costs incurred by plaintiff before issue of summons—Fixed costs marked on summons by court officers—Payment into court within eight days—Whether plaintiff can recover taxed costs—Whether claim for damages an action for "the payment of money"—County Court Rules, 1936 (S.R. & O., 1936, No. 626/*L.*17), Appendix D—County Court (Amendment) Rules, 1957 (S.I. 1957, No. 174 (*L.*1)), Ord. 11, r. 1 (1) (b).

Order 11, r. 1 of the County Court Rules, 1936,[1] as amended by the County Court (Amendment) Rules, 1957,[2] provides: "(1)

[1] County Court Rules, 1936 (S.R. & O. 1936, No. 626/L.17), Ord. 5, r. 19: "(1) In any action in which "money or damages is or are claimed "by or on behalf of or for the benefit "of an infant or a person of unsound "mind. . . ." Ord. 6, r. 2: "(1) "An action other than an admiralty "action may be—(a) an ordinary "action, which may be brought "against any person in respect of any "cause of action; or (b) a default "action, which may, subject to the "next succeeding paragraph, be "brought to recover any debt or liqui-"dated demand."

[2] Ord. 11, r. 1 (as amended by the County Court (Amendment) Rules, 1957 (S.I. 1957, No. 174 (L. 1)): "1. (1) Where the only relief "claimed in an action is the payment "of money, the defendant may, with-"in eight days of the service of the "summons on him inclusive of the "day of service, pay into court in "satisfaction of the claim—(a) the "whole amount of the claim and the "costs stated on the summons; or "(b) so much of the claim as he "admits to be due from him to the "plaintiff, together with the costs "(including court fees) which would

"Where the only relief claimed in an action is the payment of "money, the defendant may, within eight days of the service of "the summons on him . . . pay into court in satisfaction of the "claim . . . (b) so much of the claim as he admits to be due "from him to the plaintiff, together with the costs (including court "fees) which would be entered on a summons for that amount "under Part I of Appendix D."

Appendix D [3] sets out under the heading of "Fixed Costs" tables which "show the amount to be entered on the summons "in respect of solicitor's charges—(a) in an action for the recovery "of a sum of money for the purposes only of Order XI, rule 1 "and Part II of this Appendix."

A plaintiff issued a summons in the county court, claiming damages from his employers for personal injuries suffered in the course of his employment as a result of their alleged negligence. Before issuing the summons he had incurred costs for doctors' and counsel's fees and other charges. His summons claimed damages (as set out in the attached particulars) for a sum not exceeding £400; and the court officers inserted on the summons an amount of £7 for court fees and solicitor's charges. Within eight days of service of the summons the defendants paid into court the sum of £91 5s. plus the amount of fixed costs marked on the summons. The plaintiff accepted the sum in full settlement of his claim, and thereafter applied to the registrar for the taxation of his costs. The registrar allowed taxed costs of £24 1s. 6d. The employers appealed, contending that on the true construction of the County Court Rules they were liable only for the fixed costs marked on the summons:—

Held, that this action for unliquidated damages was within Ord. 11, r. 1 (1) (b), as the only relief claimed was "the payment "of money"; accordingly, as the defendant had complied with the requirements of the rule the plaintiff could not recover costs in excess of the amount properly entered on the summons by the court officers.

APPEAL from Judge Harold Brown, sitting at St. Helens and Widnes County Court.

The plaintiff, on December 5, 1956, sustained an accident in the course of his employment with the defendant company as a

"be entered on a summons for that "amount under Part I of Appendix "D."

Ord. 47, r. 5: "(1) For the regulation of solicitors' charges and disbursements other than court fees "there shall be four scales, namely, "Scale 1, Scale 2, Scale 3, and "Scale 4. (2) The Scale of Costs "applicable to a sum of money only "shall be as follows:—Sum of money "Exceeding £2 and not exceeding "£10—Scale 1; Exceeding £10 and "not exceeding £30—Scale 2. . . . "(3) Where the sum of money does "not exceed £2, no solicitors' charges "shall be allowed, unless a certificate "is granted under Rule 13 of this "Order." R. 6: "(1) Subject to "Rules 7, 8, 9 and 13 of this Order, "the Scale of costs in an action for "the recovery of a sum of money only "shall be determined—(a) as regards "the costs of the plaintiff, by the "amount recovered; and (b) as regards the costs of the defendant, by "the amount claimed; and (c) as "regards costs payable to a third "party, by the amount claimed "against him; and (d) as regards "costs payable by a third party, by "the amount recovered against him. ". . ."

[3] Appendix D.: "Fixed Costs, "Part I Summonses Directions 1. "Tables I to VI of this part of this "Appendix show the amount to be "entered on the summons in respect "of solicitor's charges—(a) in an "action for the recovery of a sum of "money for the purposes only of "Order XI, Rule 1 and Part II of "this Appendix; . . ."

C. A.
1958
Reid
v.
Thomas
Bolton
& Sons
Ltd.

result of their alleged negligence. The usual letter before action was written on behalf of the plaintiff on December 18, 1956, and he was medically examined by his own specialist and by a doctor instructed by the employers' insurers. Particulars of his claim were settled by counsel in March, 1957.

On March 14, 1957, the plaintiff issued a summons—"ordinary summons"—in the county court on the usual form supplied by the court officials. It was as follows: "The "plaintiff claims debt or damages—see particulars. Costs: Court "fee £3. Solicitor's charge £4." The figures as to fixed costs were, according to usual practice, inserted by the court officials. Damages claimed in the particulars of claim were stated to be "not exceeding £400," and that maximum included £41 5s. special damages. The summons was served on the employers on March 20, 1957, and within eight days of service, namely, on March 27, 1957, they paid into court the sum of £91 5s., plus £7, the amount of the costs marked on the summons. The employers did not deny liability. On March 30 the plaintiff's solicitors gave notice of acceptance of the sum of £91 5s. "in full satisfaction "of the claim in respect of which it is paid in."

On May 30, 1957, application was made by the plaintiff's solicitors for taxation of his costs; and on June 24, 1957, notwithstanding opposition by the employers, the registrar of the court held that he was entitled to tax the plaintiff's costs, and did tax and allow them at £24 1s. 6d.; and he ordered that the employers should pay that amount to the plaintiff.

The employers appealed to the county court judge, contending that they were not liable for any costs beyond those stated in the summons.

The county court judge allowed the appeal. He said: "The "payment into court without a denial of liability was an admis-"sion of liability limited to the sum paid in. Accordingly, the "case falls within Ord. 11, r. 1 (1) (b) . . . and the registrar "had no right to tax costs. . . . The determining factor is the "speed with which payment into court is made. While the "point is one of difficulty, this appeal must be allowed, and I "find support for my view in the fact that I am following what "I understand to have been the regular practice in the Liverpool "and neighbouring county courts."

The plaintiff appealed.

Norman Brodrick for the plaintiff.

Montague Berryman Q.C. and Raymond Kidwell for the defendants.

Lord Denning stated the facts and continued: The importance of this case is that it raises the question as to what is the proper practice in the county court. When the county court officers are presented with particulars of a claim for personal injuries, are they to put in the appropriate fixed costs, as they did in this case, or are they to put in "costs to be taxed"? Reading through all the County Court Rules, it seems to me that it all depends on whether an action for damages for personal injuries is an action for "the recovery of a sum of money" within Appendix D of the County Court Rules, 1936, dealing with fixed costs, or, put in other words, is the only relief claimed "the payment of money" within Ord. 11, r. 1? The argument, which has been attractively put before us by Mr. Brodrick, is that the word "money" there means a liquidated sum or demand such as a claim for goods sold and delivered or money lent, and that it cannot be intended to apply to actions for unliquidated damages such as these which everyone knows often do involve considerable costs far in excess of the fixed costs given by Appendix D. Mr. Brodrick indeed referred us to a rule [Ord. 5, r. 19] which in regard to infants shows a distinction between a claim for money and a claim for damages. But, on the other hand, Mr. Berryman has drawn our attention to a number of rules where, when the makers of the rules intend to refer to a liquidated sum, they do so specifically, such as Ord. 6, r. 2, about a default action; and indeed in Appendix D (Part 2) itself. Further (and I think most significantly) he referred us to the rules relating to the scale of costs, such as Ord. 47, rr. 5 and 6, which show that in an action of this kind the amount of costs that may be recovered depends on the amount of the sum that you recover in the action; and indeed, as everyone with any practice in the county court knows, that is the case. In an action of this kind it does not matter what your claim is. Your claim may be up to £400, but if you get only £90, you get your costs on the appropriate scale unless some special order is made.

Weighing the arguments on both sides I have come to the conclusion that Mr. Berryman's argument is right. This action is an action for the recovery of a sum of money. It is an action in which the only relief claimed is a sum of money. What the plaintiff wants is money and nothing else, and therefore it is an action which comes within the rule as to fixed costs. It all comes to this, that in an action for personal injuries—which is an action for the recovery of money—it is the proper course for the fixed costs to be entered by the county court officers in the summons. If the defendant pays in a proper sum within the stated period plus those fixed costs, and the plaintiff accepts the sum paid in, those are the only costs recoverable, and the action is at an end. The convenience of the system may outweigh the apparent injustice of the result. I think that the decision of the county court judge was right, and I would dismiss the appeal.

Hodson L.J. I entirely agree. I think the judge was right, for the reasons which he gave and those which my Lord has given. The order under consideration (Ord. 11, r. 1) uses the phrase: "Where the only relief claimed is the payment of "money." Prima facie that covers not only payment of money

C. A.
1958
Reid v. Thomas Bolton & Sons Ltd.
Hodson L.J.

where the claim is liquidated, but also unliquidated claims. I see nothing in the other rules in the context of which this rule appears to displace the prima facie meaning of the word "money" except that Mr. Brodrick was able to point out that in one rule—Ord. 5, r. 19—there was a reference to money or damages as if there were a distinction between a claim for a liquidated sum and a claim for general damages. But apart from that, I think that the rules consistently throughout, where they wish to refer to a liquidated payment, do so. As Pearce L.J. pointed out in the course of the argument, Ord. 47, r. 6, really clinches the matter, because the recovery of money is dealt with, and a scale of charges is fixed. If the argument for the appellants is right there is no provision at all made for the scale of charges in respect of unliquidated claims, such as the claim in this case, except the general discretion in the county court judge to award costs. I agree that this appeal fails, and should be dismissed.

Pearce L.J. I agree with what my Lords have said. Although this is an unliquidated claim I think that it must come within the words of Ord. 11, r. 1, and that the relief claimed is "the "payment of money." It appears to me that there is no answer to the point founded on Ord. 47, r. 6, which lays down the scale of costs which shall be allowed in an action for the recovery of a sum of money only. If that is to be construed as limited to liquidated demands and as not including unliquidated claims, then nothing at all is laid down with regard to the costs of a very large and very important class of actions. I cannot believe that to have been intended. I doubt if plaintiffs as a class lose by the rule as we construe it. It gives an incentive and an impulse to defendants to dispose of an action at an early stage by a sufficiently generous payment in. They know that they can do so then without risk of finding that the case has already been overloaded with costs. Of course, in cases where costs cannot be avoided before the action, it may create hardship. In liquidated claims under the rule there are admittedly hardships for plaintiffs who have to incur rather unusual costs, and I think that the hardship here is no greater than in those cases. In general the rule works to keep down the costs and to bring about a speedy settlement. Viewed on a more general basis, and not on the facts of a particular case, I think that it is perfectly reasonable if one gives to it the construction which we have given. For these reasons, and those that my Lords have given, I agree that the appeal fails, and should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Mawby, Barrie & Letts for Silverman & Livermore, Liverpool; Gardiner & Co. for Barrell & Co., Liverpool.

M. M. H.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

*LONDON EXPORT CORPORATION LTD. v. JUBILEE COFFEE ROASTING CO. LTD.

1958
Feb. 7, 10.

Diplock J.

Arbitration — Arbitrator — Misconduct — Trade custom — Agreement to arbitrate according to rules of trade association—Trade custom that umpire should remain with appeal board in the absence of parties—Communication by umpire to board—Provision in rules that umpire not to be member of board or to elect members of board—Whether adoption of custom contrary to natural justice—Whether custom excluded by implication from terms of arbitration agreement.
Contract—Custom or usage. Natural justice—Arbitration.

A contract for the sale of ground nuts incorporated all the terms, conditions and rules of Contract Form No. 75 of the Incorporated Oil Seed Association [I.O.S.A.], which contract contained a clause providing for arbitration according to the rules appended thereto. By those rules, "Any dispute arising out of a contract embodying "these rules shall be referred to arbitration in London, each party "appointing one arbitrator . . . and such arbitrators shall have "the power if and when they disagree to appoint an umpire," both arbitrators and umpire to "be a member of the association, "or a partner in a member's firm, or a director of a company "represented by a member." The rules also gave a right of appeal to a board of appeal consisting of four members of the association's committee of appeal and provided that "No member of the com-"mittee of appeal who has an interest in the matter in dispute, "or who has acted as arbitrator or umpire in the case and no "member of the same firm or company to which either of the "arbitrators or the umpire shall belong, shall vote on the question "of the appointment of members of the board of appeal or shall "be appointed a member of the board of appeal." The rule did not detail the procedure to be adopted at the hearing of an appeal. A dispute between the parties to a contract was referred to arbitration and an umpire was appointed in accordance with the rules. The umpire awarded in favour of the sellers and the buyers appealed to the board of appeal. Throughout the hearing by the board of appeal the umpire was present and at the conclusion of the hearing, at the request of the chairman and after protest by the buyers, he remained with the board. It was the customary practice in I.O.S.A. arbitrations, and had been so for about 50 years, for the umpire to remain with the board of appeal in the absence of the parties. After the parties had retired the chairman asked the umpire if the evidence and contentions put before the board differed from those before him; the umpire replied "No" and volunteered the information that he had taken a certain view of the contract. The board of appeal upheld the umpire's award. On a motion by the buyers that the award be set aside on the ground that the board of appeal had misconducted themselves in asking the umpire to remain and communicating with him in the absence of the parties:—

Held (1) that the court would normally refuse to imply into a contract a term permitting an arbitrator or an appeal board to hear evidence or receive argument from a stranger in the absence of the parties, but that where the parties had agreed to arbitration by arbitrators and umpires with an appeal to a board of appeal who must all be members of a trade association there must be taken to be incorporated into the arbitration agreement an agreement to accept that association's customary procedure in so far as it was not unreasonable or in conflict with the written terms of the agreement; that the custom of the I.O.S.A. in allowing the umpire to remain with the board of appeal after the parties had retired, which had commended itself to commercial men for 50 years and apparently worked to their satisfaction, was not so unreasonable (as opposed to unusual) as to exclude in principle its incorporation into the arbitration agreement as a custom; and that it followed that its adoption afforded no ground for setting aside the award on the grounds of public policy as contrary to natural justice.

1958

London Export Corporation Ltd. v. Jubilee Coffee Roasting Co. Ltd.

Mediterranean and Eastern Export Co. Ltd. v. Fortress Fabrics (Manchester) Ltd. (1948) 64 T.L.R. 337; [1948] 2 All E.R. 186 and W. Naumann v. Edward Nathan & Co. Ltd. (1930) 37 Ll.L.Rep. 249 applied.

(2) That a trade custom or practice might be excluded from an arbitration agreement by express terms and also by necessary implication from those terms; that since the rules provided not only that the umpire was not to be a member of the board of appeal but also that he was not to have any voice in its selection and made it clear that he was to be a stranger to the decision of the board, the necessary implication from the express terms of the contract was that the umpire was to have no influence direct or indirect on the board in reaching its decision and that the board had no right to seek any information from the umpire in the absence of the parties or to allow him to attend their deliberations after the conclusion of the hearing; and that, therefore, the board's conduct in asking the umpire to remain was contrary to the implied terms of the contract and, accordingly, the award must be set aside on that ground.

Per curiam. One of the commonest types of arbitration contemplated by the agreement is a quality arbitration in which the umpire not merely weighs expert evidence given before him, which may be repeated before the appeal board, but is entitled to exercise his own expertise; if he communicates to the board the views that he has formed as a result of such expertise that is in no different category from any other expert evidence given at the hearing before the board.

Motion.

By a contract in writing, dated April 3, 1957, sellers, the London Export Corporation Ltd., agreed to sell, and buyers, the Jubilee Coffee Roasting Co. Ltd., to buy, 10 long tons (5 per cent. more or less) Chinese groundnuts in Shell H.P.s no count shipment from China Port during April/first half May, 1957, to London at £120 per long ton c.i.f. On May 6, 1957, an amendment to the contract was signed on behalf of both parties which provided "Shipment per s.s. Ursula Rickerms scheduled to sail "about May 18, 1957."

By the contract "All the terms, conditions and rules con- "tained in contract Form No. 75 of the Incorporated Oil Seed "Association [I.O.S.A.] . . . shall . . . be deemed to be incor- "porated in and to form part of this contract note."

By clause 16 of the I.O.S.A. contract form No. 75: "All "disputes from time to time arising out of this contract, including "any question of law appearing in the proceedings . . . shall "be referred to arbitration according to the rules appended to "this contract . . ."

Rule 1 of the rules appended to the contract provided for reference to arbitration in London, each party to appoint one arbitrator "who shall be a member of the association, or a "partner in a member's firm, or a director of a company repre-"sented by a member, and such arbitrators shall have the power "if and when they disagree to appoint an umpire, who shall be "a member of the association, or a partner in a member's firm, "or a director of a company represented by a member, whose "decision is to be final." Rule 5 gave to a party dissatisfied with the award a right of appeal to the committee of the I.O.S.A. By rule 6: "The appeal shall be determined by a board of "appeal consisting of four members of the committee of appeal "of the association . . . No member of the committee of "appeal who has an interest in the matter in dispute or who "has acted as arbitrator or umpire in the case and no member "of the same firm or company to which either of the arbitrators "or the umpire shall belong, shall vote on the question of the "appointment of members of the board of appeal or shall be "appointed a member of the board of appeal." By rule 8: "The board of appeal shall confirm the award appealed from "unless not less than three members of the board of appeal "decide to vary such award."

A dispute arose between the parties to the contract and the sellers claimed arbitration. The arbitrators were unable to agree and an umpire was appointed who made an award in favour of the sellers. The buyers appealed. At the hearing of the appeal representatives of both parties addressed the board of appeal, and at the conclusion of the hearing, when the parties were about to retire, the chairman asked the umpire, who had been present throughout the appeal, to remain with the board. In I.S.O.A. arbitrations it was the customary practice, and appeared to have been so for many years, for the umpire to remain with the board of appeal in the absence of the parties, but the buyers' representative protested and asked permission to remain so as to hear what the umpire said. Permission was refused, and the buyers' representative left under protest. After the parties had retired the chairman asked the umpire whether the evidence and contentions before the board differed from those before him and the umpire replied "No," and volunteered the information that in making his award he had taken the view that the contract as amended was for shipment by a named steamer.

The board of appeal confirmed the award of the umpire in favour of the sellers. The buyers now moved the court that the award of the board be set aside or remitted to a differently constituted board on the ground that the board of appeal misconducted themselves in that, after the close of the hearing and before making their determination, they held communication with the umpire and allowed or requested him to address them with reference to the appeal in the absence of the parties and without giving the parties an opportunity to comment on what was said.

1958

London Export Corporation Ltd. v. Jubilee Coffee Roasting Co. Ltd.

The facts are more fully stated in the judgment.

H. Fisher for the buyers.

John Donaldson for the sellers.

The following cases were cited in argument: In re Fuerst Brothers & Co. Ltd. and R. S. Stephenson's Arbitration[1]; Walker v. Frobisher[2]; Dobson and Sutton v. Groves[3]; Royal Commission on Sugar Supply v. Trading Society Kwik-Hoo-Tong[4]; Duke of Buccleugh v. Metropolitan Board of Works[5]; Middlesex County Valuation Committee v. West Middlesex Assessment Area Committee[6]; Rex v. Sussex justices, Ex parte McCarthy[7]; Reg. v. Barry (Glamorgan) Justices, Ex parte Kashim[8]; W. Naumann v. Edward Nathan & Co. Ltd.[9]; Local Government Board v. Arlidge[10]; In re Hopper[11]; Mediterranean and Eastern Export Company Ltd. v. Fortress Fabrics (Manchester) Ltd.[12]; E. E. & Brian Smith (1928) Ltd. v. Wheatsheaf Mills Ltd.[13]; In re Badger[14]; Hutton v. Warren[15]; L. Sutro & Co. v. Heilbut, Symons & Co.[16]; and Produce Brokers Company Ltd. v. Olympia Oil and Cake Co. Ltd.[17]

The following cases not cited in argument are referred to in the judgment: Spence v. Eastern Counties Railway Co.[18]; Czarnikow v. Roth, Schmidt & Co.[19]; and David Taylor & Son Ltd. v. Barnett Trading Co.[20]

Cur. adv. vult.

February 10. Diplock J. This is a motion to set aside an award of a Board of Appeal of the Incorporated Oil Seed Association (which I shall call "I.O.S.A.") on grounds of misconduct—that is to say, irregularity. The facts are simple. The applicants (who were the buyers) and the respondents (who were the sellers) entered into a c.i.f. contract for the sale of ground nuts. The contract expressly incorporated all the terms, conditions and rules of Contract Form No. 75 of the I.O.S.A.

[1] [1951] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 429.
[2] (1801) 6 Ves. 70.
[3] (1844) 6 Q.B.D. 637.
[4] (1922) 38 T.L.R. 684.
[5] (1872) L.R. 5 H.L. 418.
[6] [1937] Ch. 361; 53 T.L.R. 365; [1937] 1 All E.R. 403.
[7] [1924] 1 K.B. 256; 40 T.L.R. 80.
[8] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1320; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1005.
[9] (1930) 37 Ll.L.Rep. 249.
[10] [1915] A.C. 120; 30 T.L.R. 672.
[11] (1867) L.R. 2 Q.B.D. 367.
[12] (1948) 64 T.L.R. 337; [1948] 2 All E.R. 186.
[13] [1939] 2 K.B. 302; 55 T.L.R. 599; [1939] 2 All E.R. 251.
[14] (1819) 2 B. & Ald. 691.
[15] (1836) 1 M. & W. 466.
[16] [1917] 2 K.B. 348; 33 T.L.R. 359.
[17] [1916] 1 A.C. 314; 32 T.L.R. 115.
[18] (1839) 7 Dowl. 697.
[19] [1922] 2 K.B. 478; 38 T.L.R. 799.
[20] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 562; [1953] 1 All E.R. 843.

This contract form appears to have been drafted in its present terms in 1956; it is probably the latest modification of several predecessors. The only clause in the contract to which I need refer is clause 16, the arbitration clause, the relevant portions of which read as follows: "All disputes from time to time "arising out of this contract, including any question of law "appearing in the proceedings, whether arising between the "parties hereto, or between one of the parties hereto and the "trustee in bankruptcy of the other party, shall be referred to "arbitration according to the rules appended to this contract." There follow provisions making this a Scott v. Avery clause.

The rules appended to the contract are fifteen in number, only a portion of which need I read. Rule 1 is as follows: "Any dispute arising out of a contract embodying these rules "shall be referred to arbitration in London, each party appoint-"ing one arbitrator, who shall be a member of the association, "or a partner in a members' firm, or a director of a company "represented by a member, and such arbitrators shall have the "power if and when they disagree to appoint an umpire, who "shall be a member of the association, or a partner in a "member's firm, or a director of a company represented by "a member, whose decision is to be final."

Rule 2 deals with fees; rule 3 with a refusal by one party to appoint an arbitrator; rule 4 with the form of the award and costs; and rule 5 provides for a right of appeal. Rule 6 is an important rule; it provides: "The appeal shall be deter-"mined by a board of appeal consisting of four members of "the committee of appeal of the association in accordance with "the regulations of association for the time being of The "Incorporated Oil Seed Association, and the rules of the "executive committee for the time being in force. No member "of the committee of appeal who has an interest in the matter "in dispute or who has acted as arbitrator or umpire in the "case, and no member of the same firm or company to which "either of the arbitrators or the umpire shall belong, shall vote "on the question of the appointment of members of the board "of appeal or shall be appointed a member of the board of "appeal." I do not think that I need read the second part of that rule.

Rule 7 provides as follows: "The parties to an arbitration "or an appeal to the committee of appeal shall not be repre-"sented or appear by counsel or solicitor on the hearing of such "arbitration or appeal unless in the sole discretion of the "arbitrator, or umpire, as the case may be, or board of appeal, "the case is of special importance or questions of law are likely "to arise upon which the opinion of the High Court of Justice "may be required." By rule 8: "The board of appeal shall "confirm the award appealed from unless not less than three "members of the board of appeal decide to vary such award. ". . ." Then there are provisions as to costs and expenses.

1958

London Export Corporation Ltd. v. Jubilee Coffee Roasting Co. Ltd.

Diplock J.

Rule 9 deals with withdrawals of appeals; rule 10 with fees on appeal; rule 11 with the stating of a special case and similar matters; and rule 12 with the return of fees where an appeal is lodged by both parties. Rule 13 provides that an award shall not be invalidated because of a disqualification of the parties unless objection is made. Rule 14 deals with notices; and rule 15 with the posting of names of defaulters.

I would observe that these rules do not deal in detail with the procedure at the hearing, but it is implicit from rule 7, which I have read, that unless the parties waive the right there is to be a hearing by the board of appeal.

A dispute having arisen between the parties as to whether there was good tender of documents by the sellers under this contract, it went to arbitration. The arbitrators failed to agree; and the umpire appointed awarded against the buyers. The issue involved was primarily, I think, a question of law—namely, whether the contract as amended called for shipment by a named vessel or for shipment by a named vessel on or before a fixed date. The buyers duly appealed to the appeal board. At the hearing, their representative, a director, and the sellers' representative, the original arbitrator appointed by them, argued the respective contentions of the parties. The umpire was present at the hearing. It does not appear whether during the actual hearing he said anything, but at the close of the hearing the chairman of the appeal board asked the umpire to remain behind. The buyers' representative protested and asked to be allowed to be present to hear what was said by the umpire. Permission was refused, and he left under protest. He was later informed by the umpire that the umpire had given the appeal board his reasons for making his award. That has now been amplified by the evidence and apparently the chairman of the board asked the umpire whether the evidence and contentions put forward at the hearing before the board differed from those put before him. The umpire replied "No," and volunteered the information that he had taken the view that the contract as amended was for shipment by a named vessel. That was, of course, the issue that had been fully argued by the parties at the preceding hearing.

There is undisputed evidence that for very many years it has been a common practice in the I.O.S.A. appeal board arbitrations for the umpire to stay behind with the appeal board after the conclusion of the hearing. A similar practice is adopted with the London Oil and Tallow Trades Association. It is not quite an invariable practice, since, although the buyers' representative has in the past protested against it in vain on a number of occasions, there was one occasion when he was allowed to remain while the board asked the umpire questions.

There is no suggestion that any moral opprobrium attaches to the members of the board or to the umpire: but it is said that what occurred on this occasion (and, it would follow, on hundreds of other occasions) amounts to what in arbitration law is called "misconduct," or, to use a more appropriate term, an irregularity in procedure which entitles the buyers to have the award set aside.

The buyers put their case this way: It is misconduct, they say, for an arbitral tribunal to receive evidence or argument in the absence of the parties irrespective of whether the tribunal's award is in fact influenced by such evidence or argument; and, they add, the sellers cannot rely upon any custom for the umpire to remain with the appeal board to answer questions after the parties have retired from the hearing, because, first, such a custom is contrary to the rules of natural justice and, secondly, it is inconsistent with the terms to be implied from the written agreement submitting the dispute between the parties to arbitration. To this the sellers reply that, whatever may be the position as regards the receipt of evidence or argument in private from the parties themselves or from a stranger to the arbitration, similar considerations do not apply to its receipt from the umpire from whose award the appeal is brought: the court should therefore uphold the custom unless it is excluded by an express term of the arbitration agreement, and there is no such express term here.

I must deal with each of these contentions; but since, as has frequently been said, the use of the expression "misconduct," with its suggestion of moral values, to include the kind of alleged irregularity in procedure with which this case is concerned tends to misunderstanding, I think it helpful—at any rate to myself—to start by analysing what are the tasks of the court when asked to set aside an award on the ground that the proper procedure has not been followed in the arbitration.

The first task of the court is to construe the arbitration agreement—that is, to ascertain to what procedure the parties have agreed. At this stage of its task the court is not directly concerned with whether the agreement "violates any rules of "what is so often called natural justice," to use the phrase of Lord Goddard C.J. in Mediterranean & Eastern Export Co. Ltd. v. Fortress Fabrics (Manchester) Ltd.[1]; although, as I shall point out later, the court's views as to what procedure tends to achieve a just result will be one of the considerations which will influence it in deciding what terms as to procedure are to be implied where the written agreement is silent. Where the award has been made by the arbitrator in breach of the agreed procedure, the applicant is entitled to have it set aside, not because there has been necessarily any breach of the rules of natural justice, but simply because the parties have not agreed to be bound by an award made by the procedure in fact adopted. Contrast Spence v. Eastern Counties Railway Co.[2]

When the arbitration agreement has been construed and no

[1] [1948] 2 All E.R. 186, 189; 64 T.L.R. 337.

[2] (1839) 7 Dowl. 697.

1958

London Export Corporation Ltd. v. Jubilee Coffee Roasting Co. Ltd.

Diplock J.

breach of the agreed procedure found there may nevertheless arise a second and quite separate question: that is, whether, as a mattter of public policy, a particular award, made pursuant to that agreed procedure, ought not to be enforced and ought, therefore, to be set aside; for an arbitrator's award, unless set aside, entitles the beneficiary to call upon the executive power of the State to enforce it, and it is the function of the court to see that that executive power is not abused.

It is in relation to this second and separate question that the rules of what is so often called natural justice may arise directly. There may be a variety of grounds of public policy on which an award may be set aside. That it has sought to oust the statutory jurisdiction of the court to direct a special case to be stated is one example: see Czarnikow v. Roth, Schmidt & Co.[3] That its effect is to enforce an illegal contract is perhaps another: see David Taylor & Son Ltd. v. Barnett Trading Co.[4]; and I apprehend that an award obtained in violation of the rules of natural justice even where there was no breach of the agreed procedure would be set aside on grounds of public policy: as, for instance, where an arbitrator manifested obvious bias too late for an application for his removal to be effective before he made his award. Contrast "Catalina" (Owners) v. "Norma" (Owners).[5]

Much of the confusion is caused by the fact that the expression "misconduct of the arbitrator" is used to describe both these quite separate grounds for setting aside an award; and it is not wholly clear in some of the decided cases upon which of these two grounds a particular award has been set aside.

If my analysis is correct, it follows that where the court in a case such as this is engaged in its first task of construing the arbitration agreement it must first look to see if there is an express term authorizing the particular procedure impugned. If there is such an express term, it will not set aside the award except upon grounds of public policy, which may include violation of the rules of natural justice in the strict sense in which I have sought to use it above. But arbitration agreements seldom contain a complete code of procedure, and where there is no express written term relating to the point of procedure impugned the court has to ascertain the term to be implied, which it does from the language the parties have used in their written agreement, the provisions of the Arbitration Act, 1950, the surrounding circumstances, and—particularly in the kind of arbitration which comes before this court—any custom or trade practice which must be taken to be incorporated in their agreement. A custom or trade practice is not, however, to be incorporated in an agreement if it is unreasonable—not because the parties to a contract cannot expressly agree to something unreasonable, but because the court will not draw the inference that they have done so by silence.

[3] [1922] 2 K.B. 478; 38 T.L.R. 797.

[4] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 562; [1953] 1 All E.R. 843.

[5] (1938) 61 Ll.L.Rep. 360.

It is in this connexion that something like "the rules of natural justice" are blown in by a side wind.

In considering whether a particular customary procedure in the determination of a dispute is unreasonable, a relevant test must be whether it tends or may tend to an unjust result. It may well be that the test of what is unreasonable in this sense so as to exclude a proved custom from being incorporated in an arbitration agreement is broader than the test of what is a "violation of the rules of natural justice" which entitles the court to set aside, on grounds of public policy, an award made in accordance with the procedure expressly provided for in the arbitration agreement. It was, I think, because he regarded it as unreasonable and therefore not to be treated as incorporated in the arbitration agreement that Croom-Johnson J. in Re Fuerst Brothers & Co. Ltd. and R. S. Stephenson's Arbitration,[6] doubted the validity, as a matter of procedure, of a practice whereby, in a commercial arbitration, the umpire saw one of the parties' advocate-arbitrator in the absence of the other party's arbitrator, leaving it to the one arbitrator to keep the other informed. I doubt very much, had such a procedure been expressly provided for in a written arbitration agreement, whether the court would have set aside the award on grounds of public policy.

With those principles in mind, I turn now to see whether the arbitration agreement with which I am concerned impliedly authorizes (for it is not suggested that it does so expressly) the procedure of the appellate board which was adopted in this case. I start, naturally, with the express terms of the agreement, the most relevant of which I have already recited, upon which I make the following comments. First: Every arbitrator, umpire and member of the appeal board must be a member of the association —that is to say, commercial men of experience and special knowledge of the subject-matter of any disputes likely to arise under the contract. Secondly, it is implicit in rule 7 that on an appeal there is to be a "hearing" before the board of appeal, but save that the parties prima facie are not entitled to legal representation at the "hearing" there are no express provisions as to the procedure to be adopted at the hearing. Thirdly, it is expressly provided by rule 6 that neither the umpire nor any member of his firm or company may be a member of the board of appeal, or even vote as to its constitution.

Where an arbitration agreement is silent as to the procedure, what attitude should the court adopt in seeking to imply terms? Obviously it does not imply terms which tend or appear to tend to an unjust award; but the court, particularly in commercial arbitrations, does not now, as perhaps once courts did, start on the assumption that the parties, except as otherwise expressly agreed, intended to adopt in its full rigour the procedure which long experience, helped by natural conservatism, has commended

[6] [1951] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 429.

1958

London Export Corporation Ltd. v. Jubilee Coffee Roasting Co. Ltd.

Diplock J.

itself as most appropriate to the courts of law themselves. Rather should the courts start with the presumption that, in confiding their disputes, not to the courts of law, but to an arbitral tribunal of their own choice, the parties intended to confer upon that tribunal a discretion as to the procedure it should adopt to arrive at a just decision; and the court will not lightly assume a limitation on that discretion, unless the mode of exercising it tends, or appears to tend, to an unjust result. Thus, where it was agreed that the arbitrators should be "commercial men of experience and special knowledge of the "subject-matter," it was held a proper exercise of their discretion to use their own expertise without restricting themselves to evidence given by the parties—see the Mediterranean and Eastern Export Co. case[7] cited above—although, as appears from the judgment of Lord Goddard C.J.[8] in that case, it would have been otherwise if the arbitrator had not been an expert but, say, a lawyer.

Mr. Fisher does not dispute the general proposition that commercial arbitrators have a wide discretion as to their procedure; but he says that it does tend or appear to tend to an unjust award if the arbitral tribunal receives evidence or argument in the absence of the parties. There is ample authority, extending over 150 years, from Lord Eldon in Walker v. Frobisher,[9] decided in 1801, to Croom-Johnson J. in In re Fuerst Brothers & Co. Ltd. and R. S. Stephenson's Arbitration,[10] decided in 1951, that it is misconduct for an arbitrator to hear evidence or receive argument on behalf of one party in the absence of the other; or, as I prefer to put it, the court will not imply a term permitting him to do so; and there is also ample authority that where evidence or argument is so received it is immaterial whether it in fact affected the arbitrator's decision. The rule that an arbitrator must not receive evidence or argument in the absence of one of the parties, whether it be regarded as "misconduct" or as a term to be implied in the arbitration agreement, applies even to evidence or argument given, not on behalf of either of the parties, but by a disinterested stranger: see Royal Commission on Sugar Supply v. Kwik-Hoo-Tong.[11] The umpire, says Mr. Fisher, is at least in no better position than a disinterested stranger, for having made his award he is functus officio, and although not interested in any financial sense he is not free of the natural human interest in being shown to be right. In the absence of a proved custom or trade practice to the contrary, I should have no hesitation in acceding to this argument; but the real strength of the sellers' case lies in the "custom," for by agreeing to arbitration by arbitrators and umpires who must be members of the I.O.S.A., with an appeal to a board of appeal also members of the committee of appeal of that body, there must be taken to be

[7] [1948] 2 All E.R. 186.
[8] Ibid. 187.
[9] (1801) 6 Ves. 70.
[10] [1951] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 429.
[11] (1922) 38 T.L.R. 684.

incorporated in the arbitration agreement an agreement to accept the association's customary procedure except in so far as such procedure is unreasonable or conflicts with the written terms of the agreement.

Mr. Donaldson, on behalf of the sellers, says that there is nothing unreasonable in the umpire communicating his views in private to the appeal board: he is not in the position of a stranger, he has exercised a quasi-judicial function in relation to the dispute, and there is nothing unreasonable in a judge of first instance communicating his views privately to the Court of Appeal. Indeed, Mr. Donaldson points out that section 8 of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, and rule 15 (b) of the Criminal Appeal Rules, 1908, made thereunder provide that the opinion of a judge upon a case tried before him shall be given to the Court of Criminal Appeal and that, except by leave of the court, neither party shall be furnished with a copy. I doubt if this presents any very helpful analogy to commercial arbitrations. Leaving aside appeals against sentence, to which very special considerations obviously apply, the judge in a criminal case, where there is a right of appeal to the Court of Criminal Appeal was not the judge of fact in the court of first instance—the jury was: whereas in a commercial arbitration the umpire is the judge of fact and in quality arbitrations (which are the commonest type of arbitration under this kind of agreement), the umpire, in coming to his decision of fact, is not restricted to evidence given before him but entitled to make use of his own expertise. Furthermore, the Court of Criminal Appeal, unlike a board of appeal of the I.O.S.A., does not hear the evidence de novo.

But while I do not accept Mr. Donaldson's analogy, I would not be prepared to reject the practice of the I.O.S.A. as unreasonable if the arbitration agreement merely provided (as it did in W. Nauman v. Edward Nathan & Co. Ltd.[12]) that disputes should be settled "by arbitration by the I.O.S.A. in the usual "way." I should be very hesitant to condemn as "unreason-"able" a practice which has commended itself to commercial men versed in the trade for 50 years and, with some exceptions, apparently worked to their satisfaction. If parties or their arbitrators have selected an umpire, presumably because they have confidence in his expert knowledge and independence, I see nothing unreasonable, as opposed to unusual, in their agreeing that the tribunal to whom they appeal from his decision may consult him without the parties being present, thus in effect making him an advisory but non-voting member of the tribunal of appeal. If there is nothing unreasonable—and I think clearly there is not—in making the umpire a full member of an arbitral tribunal to which an appeal from his award may be made, there is nothing unreasonable in making him a non-voting member. And if, as I think, such practice is not so unreasonable as to [12] (1930) 37 Ll.L.Rep. 249.

1958

London Export Corporation Ltd. v. Jubilee Coffee Roasting Co. Ltd.

Diplock J.

exclude in principle its incorporation in the arbitration agreement as a custom, it follows a fortiori that its adoption affords no ground for setting aside the award on grounds of public policy as contrary to the rules of natural justice.

But while I am not prepared to say that the practice is unreasonable, there remains the question whether it is inconsistent with the terms of the written agreement; and although I have evidence that the practice has gone on for very many years and has been adopted by another well-known trade association, I have no information as to how long the arbitration rules appended to the I.O.S.A. contract forms have been in their present form or as to whether the arbitration rules of the other association are in identical form. There is no express term in the arbitration agreement forbidding the practice; and Mr. Donaldson has argued in the first instance that a proved custom can be excluded only if it is consistent with an express term. I think, however, that this is not the correct view, and that a custom or trade practice may be excluded by the express terms of the contract or by necessary implication from those express terms. This seems to me to be well established. See Hutton v. Warren[13]; L. J. Sutro & Co. v. Heilbut, Symons & Co.[14]; and Produce Brokers Co. Ltd. v. Olympia Oil & Cake Co. Ltd.,[15] to which Mr. Fisher referred.

It is here that rule 6 of the arbitration rules appended to the contract is important. The parties have made it clear, not only that the umpire is not to be a member of the board of appeal which hears the appeal from his decision, but also that he is to have no voice even in the selection of that board; and these prohibitions apply not only to the umpire himself but to any member of the firm or company to which he belongs. This at least suggests that it was the intention of the parties that the umpire, having made his award, was to have nothing to do with any appeal from it.

There are other considerations which support this conclusion. One of the commonest types of arbitration contemplated by the arbitration agreement is a quality arbitration. In such an arbitration the umpire is not merely weighing expert evidence given before him which may be repeated before the appeal board and on which they can form their own judgment, but is entitled to exercise his own expertise; and if he communicates to the appeal board the views that he has formed as a result of such exercise this is in no different category from any other expert evidence given at the hearing before the appeal board, for the appeal board re-hears evidence de novo and does not hear the evidence given before the umpire save in so far as the parties choose to re-present it before them. By rule 6 the parties have expressly confided the decision of any appeal to an appeal board appointed in the manner there set out and to no one else. They have expressly provided that the umpire and any person closely connected with him in business shall not be a member of that board or have any voice in its selection. He, together with the arbitrators, is, of all members of the committee of appeal of the association, to be a stranger to the board of appeal's decision. I think that it is a necessary implication from this that the umpire is to have no influence, direct or indirect, upon the board of appeal in reaching its decision, and that the board of appeal have no right to seek any information, whether of fact or of opinion, from him in the absence of the parties, or to allow him to attend their deliberations after the conclusion of the hearing. If they do so, that is contrary to the implied terms of the arbitration agreement, and it matters not whether the information he gives them in fact has influenced their decision, or indeed, if they allow him to attend their deliberations after the hearing, whether they in fact ask him for any information at all.

[13] (1836) 1 M. & W. 466.
[14] [1917] 2 K.B. 348; 33 T.L.R. 359.
[15] [1916] A.C. 314, 324; 32 T.L.R. 115.

For these reasons, I think that the award must be set aside. The effect of so doing, since the award was an appellate award, is to reinstate the award of the umpire from which the buyers appealed. This can only be set aside by a decision of a board of appeal of I.O.S.A.; and it is agreed by the parties that the proper order in these circumstances is that I should remit the matter to a fresh appeal board to be differently constituted.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Coward, Chance & Co.; Gaster & Turner.

J. F. L.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.
1958
Jan. 30, 31; Feb. 3.
Jenkins, Romer and Ormerod L.JJ.

In re* A DEBTOR, No. 472 of 1950. Ex parte SWIRSKY.

Bankruptcy—Inquiry as to debtor's dealings—Summons against solicitor—Proceedings under R.S.C., Ord. 52, r. 25 for an account against bankrupt's former solicitor and attorney—Failure by solicitor to furnish information concerning certain property transactions—No order made in the proceedings—Subsequent issue of summons by trustee under Bankruptcy Act, 1914*—Whether matter res judicata—Bankruptcy Act,* 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), s. 25.
Estoppel—Per rem judicatam.

A debtor commenced proceedings, which on his subsequent bankruptcy were carried on by his trustee, under R.S.C., Ord. 52,

C. A.

1958

A Debtor, No. 472 of 1950, In re. Ex parte Swirsky.

r. 25,[1] for an account against his former solicitor and attorney with the object, inter alia, of obtaining information in respect of certain dealings in property carried out by the solicitor as such attorney whilst the debtor was in prison. This information was not forthcoming, whereupon the trustee issued a summons against the solicitor under section 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914[1]:—

Held, (1) that on the facts the doctrine of res judicata did not prevent the trustee from availing himself of section 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914. There is a wide difference between proceedings under R.S.C., Ord. 52, r. 25, and proceedings under section 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914.

Greenhalgh v. Mallard [1947] 2 All E.R. 255 considered.

(2) That the section 25 proceedings did not constitute an abuse of the process of the court.

In re North Australian Territory Co. (1890) 45 Ch.D. 87; 6 T.L.R. 348 and In re Metropolitan Bank (1880) 15 Ch.D. 139 distinguished.

(3) That the proceedings were not oppressive since the solicitor by his conduct in not giving the information required had brought them upon himself.

Appeal from Mr. Registrar Bowyer.

This was an appeal by George Swirsky, a solicitor, from an order of Mr. Registrar Bowyer dated July 31, 1957, whereby he refused to set aside as oppressive, frivolous, vexatious and an abuse of the process of the court a summons issued against the appellant, under section 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, in the bankruptcy of the debtor.

The facts are fully set out in the judgment of Jenkins L.J.

Neil McKinnon Q.C. and M. O'C. Stranders for the appellant.
Muir Hunter for the Senior Official Receiver, the trustee.

The following cases, in addition to those referred to in the judgments, were cited in argument: In re Mapleback[2]; In re Gold Company[3]; In re Greys Brewery Company.[4]

[1] R.S.C., Ord. 52, r. 25: "Account by Solicitor: Where the "relationship of solicitor and client "exists, or has existed, a summons "may be issued by the client or his "representatives for the delivery of "a cash account, or the payment "of moneys, or the delivery of "securities, and the court or a judge "may from time to time order the "respondent to deliver to the appli-"cant a list of the moneys or securi-"ties which he has in his custody "or control on behalf of the appli-"cant or to bring into court the "whole, or any part of the same, "within such time as the court or "a judge may order. In the event "of the respondent alleging that he "has a claim for costs, the court or "judge may make such provision for "the taxation and the payment or "security thereof or the protection of "the respondent's lien (if any) as "the court or judge may think fit."

Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 25: "(1) "The court may, on the application "of the official receiver or trustee, at "any time after a receiving order "has been made against a debtor, "summon before it the debtor or his "wife, or any person known or sus-"pected to have in his possession any "of the estate or effects belonging to "the debtor, or supposed to be in-"debted to the debtor, or any person "whom the court may deem capable "of giving information respecting the "debtor, his dealings or property, "and the court may require any such "person to produce any documents in "his custody or power relating to the "debtor, his dealings or property."

[2] (1876) 4 Ch.D. 150, 155, 156.

[3] (1879) 12 Ch.D. 77, 87.

[4] (1883) 25 Ch.D. 400.

Jenkins L.J. This is an appeal from an order of Mr. Registrar Bowyer, dated July 31, 1957, whereby he refused to set aside as oppressive, frivolous, vexatious and an abuse of the process of the court a summons issued against the appellant, who is a solicitor, under section 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, in the bankruptcy of the debtor.

[His Lordship read section 25 (1) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, and continued:] The particular matter to which the summons was directed was the purchase of "certain land at "Denham Bucks comprised in two contracts both dated June 12, "1947, and made between Willmot Pendleton and Horace James "Hewlitt of the first part Suburban Park Estates Limited of "the second part and the bankrupt . . . of the third part." The appellant's concern in those transactions was that he in fact entered into the two contracts as attorney for the debtor.

The grounds on which the summons is said to have been vexatious, an abuse of the process of the court, oppressive and frivolous are derived from certain other proceedings which were brought by the debtor against the appellant and after the debtor's bankruptcy were continued by the Official Receiver as trustee in the bankruptcy.

It appears that the appellant during the period from March 12, 1947, to November 29, 1947, acted as attorney to and solicitor of the debtor, who had been sentenced to a term of imprisonment for some offence or offences under the Prevention of Fraud (Investments) Act, 1939. At the conclusion of his sentence the debtor revoked the power of attorney under which the appellant had been acting and he also determined his retainer of the appellant as his solicitor. Apparently the appellant, while he was attorney and solicitor of the debtor, carried out various transactions concerning land, and in particular entered into the two contracts to which I have referred. The appellant having thus ceased to act as solicitor and attorney to the debtor, the debtor conceived that he was entitled to an account against the appellant. The debtor accordingly towards the end of the year 1947 commenced proceedings against the appellant under R.S.C., Ord. 52, r. 25.

[His Lordship read rule 25 and continued:] On the application of the debtor under that provision, an order was made by Master Grundy on December 13, 1948, "that the said solicitor "do within twenty-eight days from the service of this order, "deliver to . . . the applicant the bills of costs in all causes "and matters wherein he has been concerned for the [debtor] "and at the same time deliver to the said applicant the cash "account showing all moneys received by him for or on account "of or paid on behalf of said applicant and to pay to the said "applicant the amount due from him. And it is further ordered "that the said solicitor do deliver up to the applicant all deeds "books papers and writings in his possession custody or power "belonging to the applicant"; and liberty to apply was reserved.

C. A.

1958

A Debtor, No. 472 of 1950, In re. Ex parte Swirsky.

Jenkins L.J.

On that order it appears that the appellant did deliver an account of a sort and certain bills of costs, and handed over certain documents.

It is to be observed that as early as October 20, 1949, the appellant was writing to the debtor's then solicitors in these terms: "With reference to our telephone conversation this "morning in regard to the land at Denham Green, I would "confirm that I did not receive any money in respect of this "property on behalf of your client." That indicates that from an early stage in the proceedings the debtor was claiming information as to the matter of the land at Denham Green, and the appellant was contesting his right to such information.

On September 18, 1950, a receiving order was made against the debtor and he was adjudicated bankrupt on October 24, 1950, and in due course the official receiver became his trustee in bankruptcy. On December 15, 1953, the trustee applied to be substituted for the debtor as applicant in the proceedings under R.S.C., Ord. 52, r. 25, and the order for his substitution was made on January 7, 1954. Following upon that, the trustee, on January 8, 1954, gave notice to the appellant of his intention to proceed with the application under R.S.C., Ord. 52, r. 25, and to press for compliance with the order.

On October 15, 1954, the trustee applied for a further order as to accounts and so forth. That application came before Master Baker on October 22, 1954, and the form of the order he made was this: "It is ordered that the respondent George "Swirsky having failed to comply with the order made against "him herein on December 13, 1948, he do deliver to the applicant "the trustee of the property of William Thomas Norman a "bankrupt within 21 days after service of this order a full account "of all moneys received or paid by him on behalf of the said "William Thomas Norman, such account to be verified by "affidavit and to deal with all matters placed in the hands of "the said George Swirsky by the said William Thomas Norman. "And that the costs of this application together with the costs "reserved by the order herein dated January 7, 1954, be the "applicant's in any event."

The appellant appealed from that order, and his appeal came before Slade J. in the first instance on October 29, 1954. The judge's order of that date recited the order under appeal and ordered that "the said order of Master Baker be varied by "directing that the account therein referred to, be delivered "within three calendar months of this order, such account to be "verified by affidavit." Then it was further ordered "that the "said notice of appeal after delivery of the account be referred "to Slade J. if so desired. And that the costs of this appeal "and the hearing before the master be reserved until after the "account has been delivered and that there be no order as to "costs of the order dated January 7, 1954. Liberty to restore."

Extensions of time for delivery of the account were obtained by the appellant, and the matter again came before Slade J. on June 22, 1956. On that occasion Slade J. made an order in these terms: "No order is made upon the said appeal save that "the said appellant, George Swirsky, do pay to the respondent "the trustee of William Thomas Norman, a bankrupt, the costs "of this appeal and the costs of the application to Master Baker "above-mentioned, such costs to be taxed"; and there was a certificate for counsel.

It appears that on that occasion Slade J. expressed his views as to the position with respect to the account which had been delivered. The judge apparently tested the accuracy of the account by looking at the supporting evidence in respect of various items, and it appeared to him, so far as it went, to be a compliance with the order for the delivery of an account; but he expressed himself on the position regarding the account at some length and in terms which made it quite plain that he did not consider the account as by any means final. He certainly, I think, envisaged further proceedings on the part of the trustee to verify the account and challenge any items which appeared to the trustee to be unjustified. But, the appeal having ended in no order being made, the matter was left in the air, and it was not clear to the trustee or his advisers what steps they should next take.

In fact on June 29, 1956, they took out a summons for directions. That summons came before Master Clayton. I think there were a number of hearings before him, but the effective hearing took place on April 10, 1957. On that occasion Master Clayton made no order except that costs were to be the appellant's in any event.

That description of his order requires some explanation. It appears that the trustee or his advisers considered that the proper step next to be taken was to obtain an order giving leave to cross-examine the appellant on his account and to surcharge and falsify the account if so advised. It seems that there was a long argument about this on April 10, 1957, and on the appellant's side it was urged that no such order should be made, because, for one reason, the matter had been disposed of by Slade J. and for another reason (and I think this must have been the dominant reason) that he had no jurisdiction on an application under R.S.C., Ord. 52, r. 25, to make the order sought.

Throughout the proceedings since the trustee became interested the trustee had quite clearly been pressing for information concerning the Denham transactions and the appellant had been consistently denying the trustee's right to such information. Accordingly, although the appellant knew full well what was the information which the trustee wanted, he consistently refused to give it, and in accordance with that attitude none of the accounts or purported accounts which he delivered contained any reference to the Denham property. His case was that he did not in respect of the Denham transaction receive any money of

C. A.

1958

A Debtor, No. 472 of 1950, In re. Ex parte Swirsky.

Jenkins L.J.

the debtor, and that, he said, concluded the matter. It was, of course, plain that, the appellant having delivered a series of accounts, none of them from first to last containing any reference to the Denham property, the trustee could not pursue that matter further unless he was given leave to cross-examine. The master taking the view he did and refusing such leave, the trustee was baulked of the relief which he was hoping to obtain with respect to that matter. He was in no way remiss in raising the matter of the Denham property, for, as I have said, he had been raising it from time to time ever since he had become interested in the proceedings.

It is said on the part of the appellant that the trustee could have insisted on an order for cross-examination of the appellant, and it is said that he could have done that under R.S.C., Ord. 37, r. 20. That rule includes the following provision: "any party "or witness having made an affidavit to be used or which shall "be used on any proceeding in the cause or matter shall be "bound on being served with such subpoena to attend before "such officer or person for cross-examination." I think it is clear that it is not possible to secure the attendance of a witness for cross-examination and claim to cross-examine him as of right; an order for cross-examination must first be obtained and when it has been obtained the attendance of the person concerned can be secured by subpoena. So it does not seem to me that the trustee was remiss in pursuing his claim in that he did not seek—as it was, wrongly, I think, suggested that he could have sought—the automatic attendance and cross-examination of the appellant under that rule.

Then it is suggested, as I understand it, that the trustee might have carried Master Clayton's decision to the judge on appeal. It does not seem to me that the trustee was necessarily or at all remiss in failing to do that. He may have thought that, Master Clayton having ruled, in effect, that the proceedings under R.S.C., Ord. 52, r. 25, were not appropriate proceedings in which to raise an extraneous matter such as the Denham land, he, the trustee, would accept that decision and pursue whatever other remedy might be open to him. He did in fact pursue the remedy open to him, or which he claimed to be open to him, under section 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, and the registrar ordered that a summons in the terms I have noticed should issue against the appellant. The appellant applied to set aside that summons, the registrar made the order of July 31, 1957, to which I have already referred, and the present appeal ensued from that order.

I think I have stated sufficient of the facts to enable me to deal with the issues which were argued before us.

It is said by Mr. McKinnon, for the appellant, that the issuing of the summons under section 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, was wrong, in effect, on four grounds. First, it is said that the outcome of the proceedings under R.S.C., Ord. 52, r. 25, was such as to make the matter sought to be pursued by the trustee under section 25 res judicata which the trustee should not be allowed to reopen in proceedings in the bankruptcy. Then it was said that this was an abuse of the process of the court inasmuch as the trustee, having unsuccessfully pursued the appellant under R.S.C., Ord. 52, r. 25, in proceedings which dragged on over many years, was now seeking to reopen the matter and go over all the old ground again in the proceedings under section 25. Then it was said that the trustee's recourse to section 25 was oppressive, and finally it was pointed out that this litigation, if one treats it as relating to the Denham property, concerns a transaction now some 11 years old. It is said that there has been such inordinate delay that the trustee should not be allowed to put in motion against the appellant what has been called the inquisitorial machinery provided by section 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914.

To deal with these various points, first of all as to res judicata, the parties were, I think, agreed that the statement of principle from Greenhalgh v. Mallard [1] was a sufficient statement of res judicata for the purposes of this case; but, while accepting the principle as stated, Mr. McKinnon, for the appellant, says that it concludes the present case in his favour, whereas Mr. Muir Hunter, for the trustee, says that the circumstances in this case are such that the trustee is not precluded, under the principle stated, from pursuing his proceedings under section 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914. Greenhalgh v. Mallard [1] concerned a conspiracy and was an entirely different kind of case from the present one; but there is this convenient statement of principle in the judgment of Somervell L.J. He says [2]: "That, I think, "would be enough to dispose of this case, but counsel for the "defendants put his case in two ways, and I will deal with "them. He relied, first, on res judicata, and then said that, "if there was any doubt about that, he was entitled to succeed "on the ground that it would be vexatious and an abuse of the "process of the court to allow this transaction to be brought "before the court again on the basis of the present statement "of claim. I think that on the authorities to which I will refer "it would be accurate to say that res judicata for this purpose "is not confined to the issues which the court is actually asked "to decide, but that it covers issues or facts which are so clearly "part of the subject-matter of the litigation and so clearly could "have been raised that it would be an abuse of the process of "the court to allow a new proceeding to be started in respect of "them. In Green v. Weatherill [3] Maugham J. quoted some "observations by Wigram V.-C., in Henderson v. Henderson [4]: "'I believe I state the rule of the court correctly when I say "'that, where a given matter becomes the subject of litigation "'in, and of adjudication by, a court of competent jurisdiction,

[1] [1947] 2 All E.R. 255.
[2] Ibid. 257.
[3] [1929] 2 Ch. 213, 221; 45 T.L.R. 494.
[4] (1843) 3 Hare 100, 114, 115.

C. A.

1958

A Debtor, No. 472 of 1950, In re. Ex parte Swirsky.

Jenkins L.J.

" ' the court requires the parties to that litigation to bring " ' forward their whole case, and will not (except under special " ' circumstances) permit the same parties to open the same
" ' subject of litigation in respect of matter which might have " ' been brought forward as part of the subject in contest, but " ' which was not brought forward, only because they have, from " ' negligence, inadvertence, or even accident, omitted part of " ' their case. The plea of res judicata applies, except in special " ' cases, not only to points upon which the court was actually
" ' required by the parties to form an opinion and pronounce a " ' judgment, but to every point which properly belonged to the " ' subject of litigation, and which the parties, exercising reason-
" ' able diligence, might have brought forward at the time.' "

As to the application of that principle to the present case, it is to be observed at the outset that there is a wide difference between the two forms of proceeding with which we are here concerned both as to their subject-matter and as to their effect. R.S.C., Ord. 52, r. 25, deals with cases where the relationship of solicitor and client exists or has existed and where the client seeks an account from his solicitor or former solicitor. The whole object and scope of it is directed to providing a summary means of causing solicitors to account for cash and securities in their hands and the like. Section 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, is by no means confined to persons who are accountable to the trustee through their relationship with the debtor. The section is couched in wide language and it covers cases in which it appears that the person proposed to be examined is in a position to give information which is material for the purpose of getting in the debtor's estate and winding it up. The two forms of proceeding, as I have said, are widely different, and it seems to me that it would be very difficult to hold that refusal of a claim against a solicitor for an account based on the relationship of solicitor and client which existed between a debtor and the solicitor concerned would necessarily and in all circumstances preclude the trustee from having recourse to the provisions of section 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, with respect to the same individual if the court had solid ground for the opinion that that individual was in a position to provide material information in regard to the bankrupt's affairs.

Further, I find it very difficult to see what the res is which is said to be judicata. I have referred to the course of the proceedings under R.S.C., Ord. 52, r. 25, and it seems to me very difficult to say that anything at all was decided in those proceedings, save that Master Clayton was of opinion that an order could not properly be made for cross-examination and that Slade J. was of opinion that the trustee was entitled to an account. Mr. McKinnon put the res, as I understood him, as being, in effect, the right to require information from the appellant regarding the Denham transaction. It is difficult to accept a right of that character as a res well capable of being judicata; but, accepting that definition of the res, I cannot find in the proceedings under R.S.C., Ord. 52, r. 25, anything remotely approaching a decision to the effect that the trustee had no right in any circumstances or in any proceedings to obtain information from the appellant with respect to the Denham transaction. There was nothing approaching a decision to that effect. The nearest approach to it was that Master Clayton took the view that the appellant could not properly be cross-examined in those proceedings and that, in the result, disabled the trustee from pursuing this particular matter in those proceedings; but that is the nearest one can get to the res judicata suggested by Mr. McKinnon.

Then Mr. McKinnon argued that he did not go so far as to put his case on the ground of strict res judicata or estoppel by record, because he admitted, I think, that two kinds of proceeding, the section 25 proceeding and the Order 52 proceeding, were wholly distinct in their character; but he said that the case did come within the extension of the doctrine indicated by Somervell L.J. in Greenhalgh v. Mallard,[5] where Somervell L.J. said that the doctrine of res judicata "covers issues or facts which are so "clearly part of the subject-matter of the litigation and so clearly "could have been raised that it would be an abuse of the process "of the court to allow a new proceeding to be started in respect "of them." Then I take this from the passage quoted from Henderson v. Henderson,[6] where it says: "The plea of res "judicata applies, except in special cases, not only to points "upon which the court was actually required by the parties to "form an opinion and pronounce a judgment, but to every point "which properly belonged to the subject of litigation, and which "the parties, exercising reasonable diligence, might have brought "forward at the time." It is said that the trustee might have brought forward at the time his claim for information about the Denham transaction and he has failed to do so, and he ought not to be allowed to raise that matter again in other proceedings.

But there is no question but that the trustee did his very best to raise in the proceedings under R.S.C., Ord. 52, r. 25, the matter of obtaining information about the Denham transaction. It is true that he failed of his object, but he failed of his object not because he was remiss in bringing the matter forward but because the appellant consistently denied his right to bring it forward and consistently kept the matter of the Denham transaction out of such accounts as he delivered. The matter was raised, in my view, and quite clearly raised, but it was never adjudicated. The trustee had to be content as regards the proceedings under R.S.C., Ord. 52 with such account as the appellant delivered, and that account included no information about the Denham property. He thus succeeded on part of his claim but failed to pursue the other part of his claim to a successful [5] [1947] 2 All E.R. 255, 257. [6] 3 Hare 100, 115.

C. A.

1958

A DEBTOR, No. 472 OF 1950, In re. Ex parte SWIRSKY.

Jenkins L.J.

conclusion, not because it was decided against him but because the master did not think, in effect, that it was proper to raise it in those proceedings by cross-examination of the appellant.

For the reasons which I have endeavoured to state, I cannot see that the doctrine of res judicata, on the facts and in the circumstances of this case, prevents the trustee from availing himself of section 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914.

Next, as to the proceedings under section 25 being an abuse of the process of the court, in my view there is no substance at all in that contention. Recourse to section 25 was necessitated by the appellant's consistent refusal to give any information about the Denham property in the proceedings under R.S.C., Ord. 52, r. 25. It seems to me that the trustee was, in effect, faced with the alternatives of abandoning his attempt to get information about the Denham property altogether or of applying under section 25. If the appellant dislikes the idea of facing proceedings under section 25 he has only himself to thank. It appears to me that a quite short and simple explanation in an affidavit would have completely averted the necessity.

The appellant alleges that, with respect to the land at Denham, the sale was in fact completed by conveyance to somebody else in such a way that no money became due to the debtor, and, as I understand it, no money of the debtor's was expended. He says that he furnished a completion statement to the debtor's former solicitors showing that that was so. But, even if he did, that statement is not available to the trustee, who has not been able to get a sight of it, and I see no reason why the appellant should not simply have stated his account of that matter in an affidavit. As I have said, I think that that could have been quite shortly and simply done.

In connexion with the plea of abuse of process of the court, we were referred to two cases in particular. In re North Australian Territory Co.[7] was the first of them. That was a case under what was, broadly speaking, a corresponding provision of the Companies Act, 1862, that is to say section 115 of that Act, which is broadly similar in its intention to section 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914. In that case a liquidator in a voluntary winding-up of a company brought an action with the leave of the court against another company and obtained an order for an affidavit of documents in the action, but the court refused to order the production of documents or the examination of the company's secretary on interrogatories on the ground that in the present stage of the action, no defence having been put in, the discovery was premature. The liquidator then obtained an order under section 115 of the Companies Act, 1862, for the examination of the secretary before an examiner. Then the matter came before the Court of Appeal through the secretary, in the course of his examination, refusing to answer a question. It was held

[7] (1890) 45 Ch.D. 87; 6 T.L.R. 348.

"that, as the liquidator had shown no reason for seeking the "discovery except to assist him in the action, and so to evade "the order of the judge postponing discovery in the action, the "witness was justified in refusing to answer the question."

That appears to me to be a very different case from this one, for in that case the inquisitorial procedure of the right to invoke section 115 of the Companies Act, 1862, was sought to be used for the ulterior purpose of obtaining in the action against the very person whose examination was sought an advantage in a matter of discovery which had been denied to the liquidator in the action, and I should have thought that that was a very good example of an abuse of the process of the court, the process of one court being, as it were, played off against that of another and used to defeat the order of that other court.

In re Metropolitan Bank[8] was a similar case. The headnote reads: "A voluntary liquidator who applies to the court under "the 138th section of the Companies Act, 1862, for an order "under the 115th section to examine a person in respect of the "affairs of the company is not entitled as of right to the order, "but must satisfy the court that it will be just and beneficial "for the purposes of the winding-up. Where a voluntary liqui-"dator has brought an action on behalf of the company against "an officer of the company, and has exhibited interrogatories "which have been fully answered by the defendants, he will not "be entitled to an order under the 115th section for the "examination of the defendant unless he satisfy the court that, "notwithstanding the interrogatories already exhibited, he has a "strong case for a further examination."

We were referred to a number of other authorities, and in particular to In re A Debtor (No. 3 of 1909), Ex parte Goldstein.[9] That is a case which shows that an order under section 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, should not be made unless there is reasonable ground for supposing that the person sought to be examined is in a position to give some material information.

We were also referred to In re Maundy Gregory,[10] which, so far as material to the present purpose, relates to the same point as Ex parte Goldstein,[11] that is to say that it is not legitimate to put the inquisitorial power of section 25 into operation merely upon a speculative inquiry; there must be some ground for supposing that the person sought to be examined has information.

Then there was In re Great Kruger Gold Mining Co.[12] That was cited to us for some cautionary observations by Lindley L.J. as to the exceptional character of this inquisitorial jurisdiction and the care with which it should be exercised.

Accordingly, it does not seem to me in this case that abuse of the process of the court has been made out. The appellant brought these further proceedings upon himself, and it appears

[8] (1880) 15 Ch.D. 139.
[9] [1917] 1 K.B. 558.
[10] [1935] Ch. 65.
[11] [1917] 1 K.B. 558.
[12] [1892] 3 Ch. 307; 8 T.L.R. 688.

C. A.

1958

A Debtor, No. 472 of 1950, In re. Ex parte Swirsky.

Jenkins L.J.

to me that, inasmuch as he himself, in his capacity as attorney for the debtor, signed the two contracts relating to the land at Denham, there is a prima facie case that he is in a position to give material information with respect to the affairs of the debtor. I therefore reject the objection that the summons under section 25 was an abuse of the process of the court.

Then there is the allegation of oppression. For similar reasons it seems to me that there is really no substance in that. The appellant from first to last knew what was expected of him, and, indeed, ought to have known that, as the former solicitor and attorney of the debtor, he was under a duty to give the information sought, and he chose not to give it, and so he now finds himself faced with the prospect of an examination under section 25 which, if he had carried out his plain duty, would have been averted.

Finally, there is the matter of delay. I confess that when this case was first opened I was impressed by the great lapse of time which has occurred since the events now sought to be investigated; but Mr. Muir Hunter took us through the history of the matter, and he has succeeded in satisfying me that over the whole period the delay was really caused more by the Fabian tactics of the appellant in his determination to avoid giving any information if he could help it than by any remissness on the part of the trustee. In the earlier part of the period the trustee was in the difficulty that he could not move in the matter without funds, and that accounts for a certain amount of initial delay; but when once he was fully seised of the matter and possessed of funds it does not seem to me that he can really be saddled with any great part of the responsibility for the delay which, for my part, I think was mainly due to the appellant.

Accordingly, I reject the four objections which have been advanced by the appellant to the summons under section 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914.

The matter of granting or refusing summonses under section 25 is eminently a matter for the discretion of the registrar. Having considered the facts of this case with some care, it appears to me that there is no reason whatever for holding that the registrar in this case did not exercise his discretion in a perfectly correct manner.

In conclusion, I would say that I have no fault whatever to find with the careful judgment of the registrar, and, in my opinion, this appeal fails and should be dismissed.

Romer L.J. I quite agree; and there is very little that I wish to add to the judgment of my Lord. One thing that is clear about this case above all others is that there are no merits whatever possessed by the appellant, and, indeed, Mr. McKinnon hardly contended on his behalf to the contrary. The position was that the appellant had acted as solicitor to the bankrupt, and he does not deny that he has in his possession, as Mr. Muir

Hunter pointed out to us, vital information as to transactions which he effected as solicitor and attorney to the debtor, who was in prison at the time. The appellant has for many years past adopted the attitude that he is under no obligation to give the trustee in bankruptcy this information, or, indeed, to give it to the bankruptcy court, he saying that there was a time when he gave the information to the solicitors who were then acting for Mr. Norman, though why that should constitute a reason for not giving it again now is past my comprehension.

But, notwithstanding all that, his case is that he is entitled to relief from this summons which the trustee in bankruptcy has issued under section 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, on the principles enunciated and explained in Greenhalgh v. Mallard,[13] to which my Lord has referred. It is not necessary to decide it, but it may be that, if in the Queen's Bench proceedings the Official Receiver could have got the relief which he is seeking by his summons and had failed to ask for it, then that principle, that is to say the principle of Greenhalgh's case,[13] might have applied; but that is not at all what happened. What he is trying to do by this summons, in effect, is to interrogate the appellant with regard to two particular contracts relating to some land at Denham. Both before Slade J. and before Master Clayton the Official Receiver did try to get an order for the cross-examination of the appellant on those two contracts. My Lord has described the nature of the contracts, and I need not describe them again.

So far as the relevant proceeding before Slade J. is concerned, it is stated in the affidavit of Mr. King on behalf of the Official Receiver sworn on July 19, 1957, that what was sought before Slade J. when the matter was before him on appeal was, in his words, "an order for cross-examination which was refused at that "stage because the issue before the judge was an adjourned "appeal relating to the form and completeness of the account "rendered or to be rendered by the applicant pursuant to the "orders of the court." In the same affidavit it is said that the learned judge, while saying that the account which was before him could not be said to be a failure to comply with the order under which it was made in point of form, clearly made it plain that he thought that it might well happen that, on investigation of the account and investigation of the materials relied upon in connexion with it, the matter might require to be probed further by the trustee in bankruptcy. So, having regard to those two elements in the hearing before Slade J., it appears to me to be quite impossible to say that the principle of Greenhalgh's case [14] applies by reason of the Official Receiver having failed to ask Slade J. for the relief for which he is asking by his present summons.

Then, as to the proceedings before Master Clayton, there appears this uncontradicted paragraph in the same affidavit of [13] [1947] 2 All E.R. 255. [14] Ibid.

C. A.

1958

A Debtor, No. 472 of 1950, In re. Ex parte Swirsky.

Romer L.J.

Mr. King: "It was with a view to obtaining directions and an "order for 'surcharging and falsifying' the applicant's account "and to cross-examining him in support thereof that application "was made to Master Clayton, who was eventually of the opinion "that no such order or directions could be made or given under "R.S.C., Ord. 52, r. 25." I can only read that as a categorical statement of fact that the reason why Master Clayton refused to direct this cross-examination which he was asked to do was because he took the view that he could not make such an order under the particular rule under which the application for an account had been made.

Therefore, just as before Slade J., so also before Master Clayton, an application was made for cross-examination and it was rejected in each case, by Slade J. on the ground that he could not deal with it on an adjourned appeal relating to the form of completeness of the account, and before Master Clayton because the order sought could not be made under R.S.C., Ord. 52, r. 25. It appears to me, accordingly, that it cannot be said that the position here is within any reasonably measurable distance of the principle of Greenhalgh's case.[15]

That being so, it seems to me that that objection, which was the prime objection urged by Mr. McKinnon on the appellant's behalf, fails. I would only add that the burden of proving that this principle, which is an extended branch of the general principle of res judicata, should apply, lies upon the appellant, and, in my judgment, he has certainly failed to discharge it.

The only other point about which I might say one word is the alleged delay on which the appellant relies. I think that has been quite satisfactorily explained, although, as my Lord has said, at first sight it did seem to call for some explanation. But it has to be remembered that the Official Receiver as trustee in bankruptcy is under no obligation to take any steps until he is in funds sufficient to enable him to do so, and we were told that no such funds became available for some considerable time after the receiving order and adjudication, and as soon as he was in funds the Official Receiver promptly took such steps as were open to him, and he was thwarted from taking proceedings in every possible way Mr. Swirsky could think of. I am satisfied that no legitimate criticism can be advanced on that ground.

It is further to be observed that Mr. Swirsky has from first to last never suggested that he is in any way embarrassed by the length of time that has gone by and that by reason of the passage of time he has now failed to remember what happened and is not in a position to give the information which the Official Receiver is requiring. I have no doubt that if that had been so, he would have said so; but he has not said so, and, indeed, has maintained a marked silence on that part of the case, as he has on every other aspect of the case in the affidavits which he has sworn and the letters which he has written.

[15] [1947] 2 All E.R. 255.

For the rest, I entirely agree with all my Lord has said, and I think that this appeal should be dismissed.

C. A.
1958
A Debtor, No. 472 of 1950, In re. Ex parte Swirsky.

Ormerod L.J. I agree, and there is nothing I wish to add to the reasons which have already been fully expressed by my brother Jenkins and my brother Romer. The only thing I wish to say is that I am in full agreement with the remarks that have fallen from them as to the merits of this appeal.

I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Bell & Ackroyd; Tarry, Sherlock & King.

J. A. G.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.]

* REGINA v. VACCARI.

C. C. A.
1958
Feb. 10.
Cassels, Streatfeild and Slade JJ.

Criminal Law — Gambling — Contribution to insolvency by gambling— Liability for income tax at date of receiving order—Large sums lost by gambling within two previous years—Whether offence committed —Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), s. 157 (1) (a) (b).

The appellant, a café proprietor, who owed income tax amounting to £7,000, was adjudicated bankrupt and subsequently prosecuted for contributing to his insolvency by gambling contrary to section 157 (1) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914.[1] At the trial it was not disputed that the appellant had lost some £6,000 by gambling in the two years prior to the date when the receiving order was made:—

Held, that a debt due to Inland Revenue by way of income tax by a trader or a person engaged in business was not a debt "contracted in the course and for the purposes of such trade or "business," and therefore, although the appellant had considerably diminished his estate by gambling, the case did not come within the mischief contemplated by section 157 (1), and the convictions must be quashed.

Appeal against conviction.

The appellant, Amedeo Vaccari, was indicted before the deputy-chairman of County of London Sessions for three offences

[1] Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 157 (1): "Any person who has been "adjudged bankrupt, or in respect "of whose estate a receiving order "has been made, shall be guilty of a "misdemeanour, if, having been "engaged in any trade or business, "and having outstanding at the date "of the receiving order any debts "contracted in the course and for the "purposes of such trade or business, "—(a) he has, within two years "prior to the presentation of the "bankruptcy petition, materially con- "tributed to or increased the extent "of his insolvency by gambling or "by rash and hazardous speculations, "and such gambling or speculations "are unconnected with his trade or "business; or (b) he has, between "the date of the presentation of the "petition and the date of the "receiving order, lost any part of his "estate by such gambling or rash "and hazardous speculations . . . :"

C. C. A.
1958
Regina
v.
Vaccari.

under the Bankruptcy Act, 1914. The first count of the indictment was laid under section 157 (1) (a) of the Act and alleged that he, having been adjudged bankrupt, and having been engaged in business as a café proprietor, and having outstanding at the date of a receiving order made against him certain debts contracted in the course and for the purposes of such business had, within two years prior to the presentation of the bankruptcy petition, materially contributed to or increased the extent of his insolvency by gambling, which was unconnected with his business. The second count was in similar terms but was laid under section 157 (1) (b) of the Act and charged him with losing part of his estate by gambling. The third count alleged a failure to keep proper books of account contrary to section 158 (1).

At the trial the evidence for the prosecution was that the appellant had been running a café in the East India Dock Road for many years. In January, 1956, the Inland Revenue obtained a judgment against him for over £5,000 in respect of unpaid income tax over a period of years and, as he failed to pay, they presented a bankruptcy petition against him and a receiving order was made in November, 1957. At the date of the receiving order his indebtedness to the Inland Revenue had increased by £2,000 by reason of a further assessment for 1955. He also owed £23 in respect of goods supplied to his café. It was not disputed that during the two years prior to the making of the receiving order the appellant had lost some £6,000 by gambling.

At the close of the case for the prosecution a submission was made on behalf of the appellant that an income tax liability was not a debt "contracted in the course and for the purpose of such "trade or business" as set out in section 157 (1) of the Act, but the deputy-chairman ruled that it was a debt within the section and directed the jury accordingly. The jury convicted on all three counts of the indictment, and the appellant was sentenced to six months' imprisonment on each of the first two counts, and three months' imprisonment on the third count, to run concurrently. He appealed against his convictions on the first two counts by certificate of the deputy-chairman.

Victor Durand for the appellant.
Alastair Morton and Patrick Whelon for the Crown.

The following cases were cited in argument: Strong & Co. of Romsey Ltd. v. Woodifield[2]; Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Alexander von Glehn & Co. Ltd.[3]; Smith's Potato Estates Ltd. v. Bolland[4]; Allen (H.M. Inspector of Taxes) v. Farquharson Bros. & Co.[5]

Cassels J., delivering the judgment of the court. This case comes to the court by the certificate of the deputy-chairman of

[2] [1906] A.C. 448; 22 T.L.R. 754.
[3] [1920] 2 K.B. 553; 36 T.L.R. 463.
[4] [1948] A.C. 508; 64 T.L.R. 430; [1948] 2 All E.R. 367.
[5] (1932) 17 T.C. 59.

County of London quarter sessions, before whom the appellant was convicted, and raises a question which is probably of some importance. [His Lordship stated the facts, read section 157 (1) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, and continued:] The whole case turned on the debt to the Inland Revenue, and it was decided as a question of law by the deputy-chairman that such a debt could be regarded as a debt contracted "in the course and for "the purposes of such trade or business." The deputy-chairman left to the jury the question whether the appellant had increased his insolvency by gambling, and on the first two counts of the indictment the jury did not have much difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that he had undoubtedly done so because he had not paid his tradesmen and he had not paid the Inland Revenue. But is a debt due to the Inland Revenue a debt contracted in the course and for the purposes of such trade or business?

We have listened to the argument of Mr. Durand, for the appellant, who has put everything before us which could possibly be put. He has also found some authorities on the point which were not found at the trial, and counsel for the Crown finds that he is quite unable to support the conviction on the first two counts, or to argue that a debt due to the Inland Revenue by a trader or a man in business is a debt contracted in the course and for the purposes of such trade or business. This court has been concerned to discover what is the nature of the debt due to the Inland Revenue by way of income tax. Income tax is not a debt arising in the course of the trade or business; it is the Crown's share of the profit after that has been ascertained. The authorities which have been cited to the court go to show that which was already well established, that a trader cannot deduct from his profits the cost of having to pay damages to a person who happens to have been injured by a faulty chimney on licensed premises. He cannot deduct the costs of bringing an action against the Inland Revenue on a matter concerned with income tax. He cannot deduct the cost of unsuccessfully defending an action brought against him by the Inland Revenue. In other words, income tax is not a debt arising in the course or out of the trade or business. It is a liability due directly to the Crown and is calculated on the profits or gains in the course of the business but has nothing to do with the actual business in the way of a trade debt. It is not a trade debt, but a statutory liability which has to be paid, and it therefore could not possibly be held to come within the four corners of the words of section 157 (1) (a) of the Statute, namely, a debt "contracted in the course and for "the purposes of such trade or business."

In the course of the argument before the deputy-chairman it was argued, so this court understands, that it would be strange if a taxpayer who succeeds in delaying payment of his just dues to the tax collector can enjoy himself as much as he likes by gambling, so that when he is made bankrupt his estate has been considerably diminished by gambling and yet

C. C. A.
1958
Regina
v.
Vaccari.

would not come within the mischief of section 157 (1) (a). That is not a matter for this court; it is a matter for Parliament. We have to interpret the law as we find it, and the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, is applicable, and only applicable to a man's trade or business, and a debt which is contracted in the course and for the purposes of such trade or business.

Therefore, the convictions on counts 1 and 2 must be quashed, but the conviction on count 3 for not keeping proper books remains. The appellant does not in fact appeal against that conviction or the sentence of three months' imprisonment. As he has already served it with the exception of a day or two he must remain in prison until he has completed that sentence. To the extent which I have mentioned this appeal is allowed and the convictions on counts 1 and 2 are quashed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Hardcastle, Sanders & Armitage; Director of Public Prosecutions.

E. M. W.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.
1958
Jan. 30, 31.

Parker and Sellers L.JJ.

*LES FILS DREYFUS ET CIE SOCIÉTÉ ANONYME v. CLARKE.

Practice and Procedure—Summary procedure under Order 14—Affidavit in support of application — Application to sign judgment under Ord. 14, r. 1 (a)—Plaintiff assignee of debt—Sufficiency of supporting affidavit — Whether defects curable by supplementary affidavits — Failure to verify assignment in affidavit — Whether cured by production of assignment—R.S.C., Ord. 14, rr. 1, 2.

A company, the assignees of a debt due from C., sought leave to sign final judgment against him under R.S.C., Ord. 14,[1] for the

[1] R.S.C., Ord. 14, r. 1: "(a) "Where the defendant appears to a "writ of summons specially indorsed "with or accompanied by a statement "of claim under Ord. 3, r. 6, the "plaintiff may on affidavit made by "himself or by any other person who "can swear positively to the facts, "verifying the cause of action and "the amount claimed (if any liqui-"dated sum is claimed), and stating "that in his belief there is no "defence to the action except as to "the amount of damages claimed, if "any, apply to a judge for liberty to "enter judgment for such remedy or "relief as upon the statement of "claim the plaintiff may be entitled "to. The judge thereupon, unless "the defendant shall satisfy him "that he has a good defence to the "action on the merits or shall dis-"close such facts as may be deemed "sufficient to entitle him to defend "the action generally, may make an "order empowering the plaintiff to "enter such judgment as may be just, "having regard to the nature of the "remedy or relief claimed."

R. 2: "The application by the "plaintiff for leave to enter final "judgment under r. 1 shall be made "by summons returnable not less "than four clear days after service "accompanied by a copy of the affi-"davit and exhibits referred to "therein."

debt, together with interest up to the date of payment. The application was supported by an affidavit by one of their directors in which he said that C. was indebted to the plaintiffs in the sum claimed (particulars of which claim appeared by the endorsement on the writ of summons) and that he was so indebted at the commencement of the action. The deponent further stated that it was within his knowledge that the said debt was incurred and was still due and owing.

The master gave leave to enter judgment, but on appeal to the judge, Havers J. held that the court had no jurisdiction to consider the matter because the assignment had not been verified by the plaintiffs' affidavit (or by other affidavits filed subsequently before the master); accordingly, he dismissed the plaintiffs' claim, and they appealed. At the hearing of the appeal it appeared that the original assignment had in fact been put in before the master without objection being taken:—

Held, (1) that the affidavit was a defective support to a summons under Order 14 and did not sufficiently verify the assignment, but that that defect had been cured by the production of the original.

(2) That the court had jurisdiction to allow a plaintiff to seek to cure defects in an affidavit filed in support of an Order 14 summons by supplemental affidavits, and in deciding whether there was jurisdiction to grant him leave to enter final judgment regard was to be had at the end of the day to all the affidavits that had been filed.

Begg v. Cooper (1878) 40 L.T. 29 applied.

Lagos v. Grunwaldt [1910] 1 K.B. 41; 26 T.L.R. 69 and Symon & Co. v. Palmer's Stores (1903) Ltd. [1912] 1 K.B. 259 considered.

(3) That, accordingly, in the present case the court had jurisdiction to consider the plaintiffs' claim, and as, on the facts, there did not appear to be a bona fide triable issue which would have entitled the defendant to unconditional leave to defend, the master's order should be restored.

Quaere, whether it is a condition precedent to the issue of a summons under Order 14 that the application should be supported by an affidavit, however inadequate.

Decision of Havers J. reversed.

APPEAL from Havers J.

The following statement of the facts is taken substantially from the judgment of Parker L.J.: By a specially indorsed writ dated October 24, 1957, Les Fils Dreyfus et Cie Société Anonyme (hereinafter called "the plaintiffs"), a corporation in Switzerland, alleged, first, that on or about December 5, 1956, Guinness Mahon & Co., a firm of merchant bankers in London lent to the defendant, Thomas Oliver Neville Clarke, the sum of £10,000 at a stated rate of interest, repayable not later than April 30, 1957. Secondly, they alleged that on October 10, 1957, namely, after the sum had become due, Guinness Mahon & Co. assigned the debt to the plaintiffs; and thirdly, that notice of the assignment had been given to the defendant, that he had been called on to pay, but had wrongfully failed and neglected to do so. The plaintiffs claimed in addition to the debt of £10,000, about £195 interest and future interest until payment.

The defendant appeared to the writ. On October 31, a director of the plaintiffs swore an affidavit as follows: "1. The

C. A.
1958
Les Fils Dreyfus et Cie Société Anonyme v. Clarke.

"defendant Thomas Oliver Neville Clarke is justly and truly "indebted to the above-named plaintiffs in the sum of "£10,194 19s. 5d. representing a capital sum of £10,000 owing "by the defendant to the plaintiffs together with the sum of "£194 19s. 5d. interest thereon, and was so indebted at the "commencement of this action. The particulars of the said "claim appear by the indorsement on the writ of summons in "this action. 2. I verily believe that there is no defence to this "action. 3. It is within my knowledge that the said debt was "incurred and is still due and owing. I am duly authorized by "the plaintiffs to make this affidavit."

A summons under R.S.C., Ord. 14, was issued the following day, November 1, and the matter came before Master Jacob for hearing on November 7 on that affidavit. The defendant desired to contest the summons, but had no affidavit in reply. The master gave leave to the plaintiffs to enter judgment, but stayed the drawing up of the order for four days to enable the defendant to file an affidavit and ordered that if he did so there should be liberty to restore. On November 11, the defendant did file an affidavit in reply and the summons was restored. After at least one adjournment, when further affidavits were filed by both sides, the matter was dealt with finally by the master on November 18 on all the affidavits then before him, and he gave leave to the plaintiffs to enter final judgment for the sum claimed.

The defendant appealed to Havers J. in chambers. On December 18, the judge adjourned his judgment into open court and dismissed the plaintiffs' claim, ordering them to pay the defendant's costs forthwith under Ord. 14, r. 9 (b). The plaintiffs appealed.

The contentions of the plaintiffs before Havers J. and the conclusions of the judge are summarized in the judgment of Parker L.J.

At the hearing of the appeal it appeared that the original assignment had been produced at the hearing before the master without objection being taken.

L. G. Scarman Q.C. and C. F. Dehn for the plaintiffs.

F. W. Beney Q.C., M. G. Polson and Ian Kennedy for the defendant.

In addition to the cases referred to in the judgment, the following were cited in argument: May v. Chidley[2]; Pathé Frères Cinema Ltd. v. United Electric Theatres Ltd.[3]; Powszechny Bank Zwiazkowy W. Polsce v. Paros.[4]

Parker L.J. This is an appeal from the decision of Havers J. given on December 18, 1957, allowing an appeal from the master, who, on an application under Ord. 14, had given the plaintiffs leave to sign final judgment. In allowing the appeal, the judge did not give the plaintiffs leave to appeal: he merely dismissed the application on the ground that he had no jurisdiction. He thus left it to the plaintiffs, if so advised, to bring further proceedings under Ord. 14. In those circumstances it seems to me that this is a case where the court has jurisdiction to entertain the appeal, and indeed Mr. Beney on behalf of the defendant has not argued to the contrary.

[2] [1894] 1 Q.B. 451.
[3] [1914] 3 K.B. 1253; 30 T.L.R. 670.
[4] [1932] 2 K.B. 353.

[His Lordship stated the facts set out above and continued:] Mr. Beney for the defendant raised a number of points before Havers J. He submitted, first, that the affidavit of October 31 filed by the plaintiffs was defective in two respects: first, that it did not verify the original debt to Guinness Mahon & Co. or verify that it was still due and owing at the time of the alleged assignment to the plaintiffs; and, secondly, he said it did not verify the assignment itself, either by saying that the deponent had knowledge of it or by exhibiting it. Mr. Beney then went on to submit that in those circumstances the court had no jurisdiction to inquire into the merits at all. Put shortly, he said it was a condition precedent to the issue of the summons that there should be a proper affidavit under the order and that defects in it could not be cured. In the alternative, he submitted that if he was wrong on that point, at any rate the further affidavits which were filed did not cure the defects; and finally he appealed on the merits.

The judge in a long and careful judgment upheld Mr. Beney's first contention that the affidavit was defective in those two respects; but he was against him on the second objection and held that any defect could be cured by further affidavit. He then went on to hold that the first defect complained of, namely, that the original debt to Guinness Mahon & Co. was not verified, or that the money was still due and owing at the date of the assignment, had been cured by subsequent affidavits; but he upheld Mr. Beney in his second criticism in regard to the assignment and held that at the end of the day, looking at all the facts, the assignment had not been verified. Accordingly, following the decision of the Court of Appeal in Symon & Co. v. Palmer's Stores (1903) Ltd.,[1] he held that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the matter. He, accordingly, dismissed the claim, and under rule 9 (b) of Order 14, ordered the plaintiffs to pay the defendant's costs forthwith. It would seem, therefore, that the only point on which the judge was against the plaintiffs was in regard to the failure to verify the assignment.

Before this court Mr. Scarman makes two submissions in regard to that. He says, first, that on a fair and reasonable reading of the first affidavit of October 31, the deponent did sufficiently verify the assignment. Secondly, he says that though the assignment was never formally exhibited to any affidavit, it

[1] [1912] 1 K.B. 259.

C. A.
1958
Les Fils Dreyfus et Cie Société Anonyme v. Clarke.
Parker L.J.

was in fact put in before the master. Finally, in case he is wrong on both points, he has asked and obtained the leave of this court to file and put in a further affidavit exhibiting the original assignment.

As regards his first submission, in my view this is a thoroughly bad affidavit in support of an Order 14 summons. It is the ordinary form used and properly used in the case of a simple debt, but it is wholly inadequate and defective for the purposes of dealing with a case such as this. In the notes to Order 14, r. 1, in the Annual Practice for 1958 there appears quite clearly at p. 246 the proper way to deal with this case. The note says: "Plaintiff assignee of debt.—Where the plaintiff sues as assignee "of a debt, the affidavit should be made by the assignee and "assignor, jointly, proving the assignment; and severally by the "assignor proving that the debt was owing at the time of the "assignment." As the judge held, the affidavit clearly did not define the original debt to Guinness Mahon & Co. That, however, if cure is permissible, has been cured, as Mr. Beney concedes, by the further affidavits. Mr. Scarman nevertheless maintains that, at any rate in regard to the assignment, this is a sufficient affidavit. Put shortly, I think his argument is this, that by paragraph 3 the deponent says that the said debt was incurred and is still due and owing. If one goes back to paragraph 1, one finds that the said debt is the debt owing to the plaintiffs, particulars of which have been given in the statement of claim; and it then goes one step forward and says that that is the debt arising on the assignment referred to in the statement of claim, and, accordingly, that that is a sufficient verification of the assignment.

I agree that there is, as it were, an oblique reference to the assignment in this affidavit; but I am perfectly satisfied that it is not a proper affidavit in these circumstances to verify the assignment. I am not saying that the assignment itself should have been exhibited, but either the assignor or the assignee should specifically have sworn that in his knowledge there was this assignment; and, incidentally, perhaps it is worth mentioning that if and in so far as this affidavit does verify the assignment, it does not verify an absolute assignment.

In those circumstances I cannot accept Mr. Scarman's argument on the first point; but the matter does not rest there. It is always difficult in this court to go into questions as to exactly what happened before the master, but it seems to me reasonably plain that the original of this assignment was in fact put in and handed to the master; and indeed a copy, albeit without signatures, was handed to the defendant's representative. It is also true that there was no express consent given to that course being taken by those representing the defendant. At the same time, no objection was taken and no condition was imposed that the assignment should be exhibited to an affidavit. In those circumstances, I am, for my part, satisfied that the assignment was put in, and, of course, remained in, and that the production of the original in those circumstances cures the defect in the affidavit. I should add that most unfortunately this contention apparently either was not raised or was not pressed before the judge. It seems to have been rather lost sight of; but, as I have said, I am satisfied it was put in and the omission to refer to that before the judge can be properly dealt with, I think, when it comes to a question of an order for costs.

Mr. Beney—and this is the more difficult part of the case—has sought to uphold the judge's judgment by raising again the second contention that he raised before the judge, namely, that it is a condition precedent to the issue of a summons under Order 14 that there should be a proper affidavit, and that if there is a defect in the affidavit filed, it cannot thereafter be cured. In regard to that, as long ago as 1878, in Begg v. Cooper,[2] it was held, to quote the headnote, that: "The making of an affidavit "required by r. 1 (a) of Order 14 is not a condition precedent "to the issue of the summons for leave to sign final judgment. "So that, where the plaintiff made a defective affidavit, then "obtained his summons, and afterwards swore a fresh and good "affidavit, it was held (affirming the decision of the Queen's "Bench Division, Cockburn C.J., Mellor and Field JJ.) that the "issue of the summons was good, and leave to sign final "judgment must be given."

It is true that the wording of the rule in 1878, at the time of Begg v. Cooper,[2] was in a slightly different form to that in which it is now; but I agree with the judge, who felt that there was no difference between the rules now and then which would lead to a different interpretation; and, as far as I know, Begg v. Cooper[2] has never been disapproved in any later case.

Mr. Beney then referred us to a note in the Annual Practice for 1958, at p. 246—the note headed "Plaintiff's affidavit," in which this appears: "The affidavit must be produced before "summons is issued. Begg v. Cooper,[2] which held otherwise, "has not been acted upon in practice, and was so disregarded "on this point by authority."

Thanks to the industry of junior counsel in the case, it appears —and I do not propose to go into it in detail—that down to 1888, at any rate, in Wilson's Practice, 4th ed., at p. 214, and 7th ed., at p. 167, Begg v. Cooper[3] is referred to and the statement is made, following Begg v. Cooper,[3] that the affidavit need not be filed before the issue of the summons. The Annual Practice White Book of 1886–87 took the same line at p. 199; but in the White Book for 1889–90 there is a note at p. 267 to the effect that after the decision in Begg v. Cooper[3] instructions were given that it was not to be acted upon in so far as it said that the affidavit was not a condition precedent to the issue of the summons, and reference was then made in that note to Archibald's

[2] (1878) 40 L.T. 29. [3] Ibid.

C. A.
1958
Les Fils Dreyfus et Cie Société Anonyme v. Clarke.
Parker L.J.

Practice at Judges' Chambers, 2nd ed. (1886), at p. 62, and reference to Archibald's Practice, 1st ed. (1879), at p. 36, confirms that very shortly after Begg v. Cooper,[3] and allegedly on the ground of mistake, instructions were given—exactly by whom is not clear—that Begg v. Cooper[3] was not to be acted on in that respect; and it is from that passage that that note in the White Book is now derived.

If one looks at the Yearly Practice, which is known as the Red Book, again up to 1940, and certainly in the edition of 1918, it is said in the notes at p. 128 that Begg v. Cooper[3] is not acted on in practice.

Mr. Beney says with some force that if, notwithstanding Begg v. Cooper,[3] the practice since has been that an affidavit must be produced before the issue of the summons in order to found jurisdiction, that must be a proper affidavit, because it is idle to say that any affidavit can be put in then and the defects cured by further affidavits in the course of the proceedings. It is an attractive argument and may be logically sound, but it does produce a revolutionary idea in regard to practice in chambers. To say now that an affidavit filed by the plaintiff in Order 14 proceedings cannot be, as it were, supplemented by a further affidavit by the plaintiff—of course with the leave of the court—is something which startles one, and, as far as I know, no case has ever heretofore suggested that with the leave of the court the plaintiff's affidavit cannot be supplemented. And indeed, it is to be observed that in the Symon case,[4] when the matter came before the court finally, there was one affidavit at least supplementing the original affidavit and seeking to cure, but failing in that case to cure, defects in the original affidavit, and no comment was made before the court that that was wholly improper. Begg v. Cooper[5] itself, quite apart from what it said with regard to the first point as to a condition precedent, said quite plainly that defects could thereafter be cured; and it is to be observed that in the 1918 edition of the Red Book the note dealing with Begg v. Cooper[5] says, at p. 128: "That case, however, shows that "any defects or omissions in the affidavit originally filed may be "allowed to be set right or supplied by an affidavit made "subsequently"; and then goes on to say: "See, however, "Lagos v. Grunwaldt,[6] where the Court of Appeal appears to "have held that the defect in the plaintiff's affidavit was fatal." It is true that in Lagos v. Grunwaldt[6] at the end of the day it was found that the affidavits, looked at as a whole, were still defective, and that, as in Symon's case,[7] led to the result that the court had no jurisdiction; but there—and I think there alone—is a reference in the practice notes to the fact that the affidavit can be cured. I have no reason to doubt—neither had the judge—that there always has been and is jurisdiction in the court to

[3] 40 L.T. 29.
[4] [1912] 1 K.B. 259.
[5] 40 L.T. 29.
[6] [1910] 1 K.B. 41; 26 T.L.R. 69.
[7] [1912] 1 K.B. 259.

allow the affidavit to be supplemented, and that in deciding jurisdiction one looks at the matter at the end of the day on the affidavits that have been filed.

Accordingly, in my judgment, Havers J. was wrong in dismissing the application for want of jurisdiction. The judge in those circumstances did not, of course, deal with the merits. Both parties before us have invited this court to deal with them, and I will do so very shortly. The original loan, as I have said, made in December, 1956, was a loan of £10,000. There was a written agreement providing for repayment on April 30, 1957. The defendant's defence put up in his affidavit is in effect this: True I signed that written agreement, but it does not express the real bargain. The real bargain was that I was to have this £10,000 for two years firm; and I only signed that agreement providing for repayment on April 30, 1957, because I was told, or I understood, that it would be illegal under some regulation to provide for repayment at a later date than six months. That is the defence which he puts up, and Mr. Beney maintains that that raises a triable issue which would entitle him to unconditional leave to defend. He has referred to Jacobs v. Booth's Distillery Co.,[8] which is always quoted in these cases, and I hope I am mindful that in dealing with a matter of this sort, which is a summary procedure whereby a defendant may be prevented from having his case tried before the court, the matter must be looked at very strictly; but, at the same time, I am satisfied that in the present case there is (if I may put it in this way) no bona fide triable issue. The matter does not rest on that mere statement of the defendant in his affidavit. The court has seen quite a lot of the correspondence. Every single document, as far as I can see, is consistent only with the true bargain having been that set out in the written document; and one cannot put out of one's mind the fact that this defence was put up for the first time on November 11, 1957, at a time when the matter had already been dealt with once by the master. I would allow this appeal and restore the order of the master.

SELLERS L.J. I so entirely agree with the judgment of my Lord and his reasonings that I shall not detract from the clarity of our decision by using any words of my own.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Rowe & Maw; G. F. Wallace & Co.

E. D.

[8] (1901) 85 L.T. 262.

1958
Feb. 24.

PRACTICE DIRECTION (COURT FEES AND FIXED COSTS).

Costs — Court fees and fixed costs — Alteration — Supreme Court Fees (Amendment) Order, 1958 (S.I. 1958, No. 160 (*L.*3).

COURT FEES

Attention is drawn to certain amendments to court fees pursuant to the Supreme Court Fees (Amendment) Order, 1958 (S.I. 1958, No. 160 (L.3)). This Order comes into operation on March 1, 1958, and applies only to proceedings commenced on or after that date.

Included in these amendments are the following:—

(1) The fee on issuing a writ of summons is increased from £2 to £3 where the claim is solely for a liquidated sum not exceeding £100 and to £4 in all other cases.

(2) The fee on signing a judgment in default of appearance or of defence, or pursuant to an order under Order XIV is abolished.

(3) The fee on issuing an originating summons to which no appearance is required is increased from 10s. to £2 (with an exception in certain matrimonial causes).

FIXED COSTS

As an interim measure until such time as Appendix P is amended, the following alterations will be made in proceedings to which the above Order applies, in the amounts indicated in the Scale of Fixed Costs issued by the Senior Master dated September 1, 1956, as amended on February 18, 1957:—

Four Day Costs

Where the amount claimed is £40 and over but less than £75 (one defendant):—

	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
Town Cases increased from	4	8	0	to	5	8	0
Country Cases increased from ...	4	18	0	to	5	18	0

Where the amount claimed is £75 and over but less than £300 (one defendant):—

	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
Town Cases increased from	6	10	0	to	7	10	0
Country Cases increased from ...	7	0	0	to	8	0	0

Where the amount claimed is £300 and over (one defendant):—

	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
Town Cases increased from	6	10	0	to	8	10	0
Country Cases increased from ...	7	0	0	to	9	0	0

JUDGMENT IN DEFAULT OF APPEARANCE OR OF DEFENCE

Where £300 or over is recovered:—

	£ s. d.		£ s. d.
Town Cases increased from	9 0 0	to	10 0 0
Country Cases increased from ...	10 0 0	to	11 0 0

JUDGMENT UNDER ORDER XIV

Where £300 or over is recovered:—

	£ s. d.		£ s. d.
Town Cases increased from	12 15 0	to	14 5 0
Country Cases increased from ...	13 10 0	to	15 5 0

JUDGMENT ON DISCONTINUANCE OR ON ACCEPTANCE OF MONEY PAID INTO COURT

	£ s. d.		£ s. d.
Costs on signing Judgment decreased from	1 7 0	to	0 17 0

All other amounts in the Scale of Fixed Costs remain unaltered.

R. F. BURNAND,
Senior Master of the Supreme Court.

February 24, 1958.

[NORWICH CONSISTORY COURT.]

* In re PARISH OF CAISTER-ON-SEA. NORFOLK COUNTY COUNCIL v. KNIGHTS AND OTHERS AND CAISTER-ON-SEA JOINT BURIAL COMMITTEE.

1957
Aug. 20; Sep. 27, 28; Oct. 21; Nov. 15.

Ellison Ch.

Ecclesiastical Law—Faculty—Burial ground—Disinterment followed by reinterment in communal grave—Road widening scheme. Cemetery.

A county council, as highway authority, sought a faculty to enable them to use certain consecrated land for the purposes of a road widening scheme, involving interference with a large number of graves in that land. Proposals were put forward for the exhumation and subsequent reinterment of some 400 human remains, most of which were identifiable. Such remains as could not be identified would be reinterred together in a communal grave:—

Held, that while there was no general rule or doctrine of the Church of England against exhumation and subsequent reinterment in another place, the grant of a faculty for this purpose was a

---

[Reported by M. B. KELLY, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

1957

Parish of Caister-on-Sea, In re.

matter of discretion, and on the facts of this case the faculty as prayed would be refused.

Petition for faculty.

By their petition dated February 4, 1957, the Norfolk County Council, as highway authority, sought a faculty to take a strip of land along the length of Caister-on-Sea cemetery, which was under the management and control of the Caister-on-Sea Joint Burial Committee, adjacent to Ormesby Road, in order to widen that road by about 4 feet 6 inches, and to make a footpath between the widened road and the new boundary of the cemetery. The scheme involved interference with a large number of graves and the exhumation and subsequent reinterment of some 400 human remains, about 80 of which were unidentifiable. Those that could be identified would be reinterred in separate graves and those that could not, would be reinterred in a communal grave.

The petition was opposed by 27 individual parties who, by order of the court, were formed into seven groups, each group being ordered to be represented by a "representative party "opponent."

The objections of the representative parties opponents raised (inter alia) the following issues: (i) that the number of accidents which were alleged by the petitioners, who had based their case on alleged traffic danger, was excessive; (ii) that exhumation on such a large scale was an unsuitable and unbecoming procedure; (iii) on the question of pedestrians, if certain limited improvements were made to it, many more people would use a footpath through the cemetery, and (iv) on the question of the widening of the roadway, that a proposed alternative scheme was preferable to that put forward by the petitioners. The Caister-on-Sea joint burial committee in their objections confined themselves to the third and fourth points and proposed an alternative scheme.

D. E. H. James (solicitor) for the petitioners.

R. C. Killin (solicitor) for the representative parties opponent.

The joint burial committee were represented by one of their members appointed to act on their behalf.

Cur. adv. vult.

Ellison Ch. stated the facts and referred to the pleadings, and continued: I think that this would be a convenient stage for me to make one or two general observations. The contention of the parties opponent that exhumation and reinterment is an unsuitable or unseemly procedure was developed during the evidence of some of them into the much wider contention that once land was consecrated it should never be interfered with under any circumstances, and that reinterment of unidentifiable remains in a communal grave should not be permitted. I think that this proposition needs some qualification. Consecration has, of course, a spiritual significance but the act of consecration, essentially judicial and becomes manifest when pursuant to a petition to consecrate, and after due consideration, the Ordinary pronounces a sentence dedicating and setting apart the lands from all common and profane uses. Once consecrated the land falls within the jurisdiction of the Ordinary exercised through the medium of the consistory court. Subsequently, consecration can only be rendered nugatory or its effect taken away by legislative means such as an Act of Parliament.

Although the consistory court is an ecclesiastical court it is nevertheless a court of the realm and one of the Queen's courts, and not infrequently it is called upon to do justice between the church authorities and others of the Queen's subjects. The court has long assumed a jurisdiction to permit within its discretion the user of consecrated land for purposes such as road-widening schemes, where it has been satisfied that it is necessary for public good that such user should be allowed, and many are the examples in the textbooks and reports. In my judgment, there is no doctrinal or other rule which says in effect that the dead once buried in consecrated land shall for ever after take absolute priority over the compelling needs of the living: and if I was satisfied in any case that there was a substantial need based on danger to the living, or other cogent reasons why a road should be widened at the expense of using consecrated land, it would be my duty to grant a faculty to enable that to be done. Under powers granted by the Faculty Jurisdiction Rules, 1939, this court of its own motion summoned the Archdeacon of Norwich, the Venerable Robert Meiklejohn, to assist on these and other aspects. In his evidence the Archdeacon expressed the opinion that there was no general rule or doctrine of the Church of England against exhumation and subsequent reinterment of human remains elsewhere. But he emphasized that, in his opinion, this course should only be taken when it was proved to be necessary and in other cases it should be avoided. On the question of interment in a communal grave he again knew of no doctrinal objection, and he was unable to see any other practical way of interring large numbers of unidentified remains. I accept those views entirely. In my judgment, they are sound. Although communal burial may seem distasteful to some, yet that practice has long been adopted, particularly in cases of national disaster: it followed often as a consequence after heavy bombing raids during the war, and in cases of serious aircraft accidents, and where, for one reason or another, the remains have not been identifiable, communal interment has taken place. I think that it is most unfortunate that this question of communal reinterment should ever have arisen, and it is certainly no fault of the Norfolk County Council that they have been obliged to put it forward in their proposals.

1957

PARISH OF CAISTER-ON-SEA, In re.

[The Chancellor then considered the facts, and in the exercise of his discretion concluded that the petitioners had not made out a sufficient case to warrant the grant of a faculty.]

Faculty refused.

Solicitors: D. E. H. James, Norwich; Ruddock, Middleton & Killin, Norwich.

[CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.]

C. C. C.

1957
Nov. 25.

Glyn-Jones J.

* REGINA v. SMITH AND OTHERS.

Criminal Law—Indictment—Separate indictments—One charging manslaughter, the other stealing or receiving — Common evidence — Joinder of charges in one indictment—Purpose of joinder—Voluntary bill.

Criminal Law—Evidence—Depositions—Reading at trial—Substituted voluntary bill of indictment—Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 86), s. 13 (3).

A and B were jointly indicted for manslaughter. In a separate indictment A, B, C, D and E were charged with stealing or receiving. The prosecution intended to rely in one case on almost all the evidence on which it relied in the other:—

Held, (1) that it was in the interests both of justice and of the public that all matters alleged by the prosecution should be heard and disposed of in one trial.

(2) That, since neither indictment could properly be amended, the judge should grant a voluntary bill of indictment.

(3) That the evidence of the witnesses conditionally bound over by the examining justices could properly be read at the trial proceeding upon the voluntary bill.

TRIAL ON INDICTMENT.

Henry Thomas Smith and Robert Semaine were jointly charged, in one indictment, with manslaughter. In a second indictment Smith and Semaine were charged with larceny and with receiving stolen property, Eugene Charles Edward Candler as an accessory after the fact to the charge of larceny and receiving stolen property, and Edward George Richardson and Charles William Richardson with receiving stolen property.

The witnesses to be called by the prosecution numbered about 30 in all. They were each (with the exception of certain medical witnesses) to be called on the trial of each indictment to give the same evidence on each occasion.

R. E. Seaton and E. J. P. Cussen for the Crown.
R. A. Kaye for Smith and Semaine.
Peter Rawlinson for Candler.
James Burge for Edward George Richardson.
Victor Durand for Charles William Richardson.

[Reported by DAVID CALCUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

No case was cited in argument.*

GLYN-JONES J. At the close of the hearing before the examining justices Smith and Semaine were committed to stand their trial on a charge of manslaughter. All the defendants, including Smith and Semaine, were also committed to stand their trial on charges of stealing or receiving. Separate indictments were preferred in this court, one against Smith and Semaine charging manslaughter, another against all the defendants, including Smith and Semaine, charging stealing or receiving.

If these two indictments were to be tried separately, as, being separate indictments, they would have to be, it would be necessary for the prosecution to call in one trial almost all the evidence which would have to be called in the other. It seemed to me that it would be a great waste of time and money that all that evidence should be called twice over; and I have formed the opinion that it would be desirable in the interests of justice and in the public interest that all the matters alleged against these defendants should be heard and disposed of in one trial.

A technical difficulty, however, arises. It was not, as I saw it, possible to amend the indictment for manslaughter by including the other defendants in that indictment which charges the stealing and receiving; nor had I thought it right to amend the indictment for stealing and receiving by adding the charge of manslaughter. It therefore seemed to me that the proper course was to grant a voluntary bill of indictment against all these defendants, in which there shall be included a charge of manslaughter against Smith and Semaine. That has been done, and this trial proceeds upon the voluntary bill.

A further question arises as to whether or not the provisions of section 13 (3) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1925,[1] apply so as to enable the depositions of those witnesses who were conditionally bound over to be read upon this trial. I have come to the conclusion that this is a trial of persons who have been committed for trial for the offences, in the case of Smith and Semaine

* EDITOR'S NOTE: In Rex v. Large (1939) 27 Cr.App.R. 65, Humphreys J., delivering the judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeal, said (ibid. 68): "In future we think that it "would be better that no other count "should be added to an indictment "for manslaughter. That has always "been the practice in murder cases. "It was formerly the practice in "manslaughter cases, and this court "repeats that it should be the prac-"tice in the future."

[1] Criminal Justice Act, 1925, s. 13 (3): "Where any person has "been committed for trial for any "offence, the deposition of any per-"son taken before the examining "justices may, if the conditions "hereinafter set out are satisfied, "without further proof be read as "evidence on the trial of that "person, whether for that offence or "for any other offence arising out "of the same transaction, or set of "circumstances, as that offence. The "conditions hereinbefore referred to "are . . . (a) The deposition must be "the deposition . . . of a witness "whose attendance at the trial is "stated to be unnecessary . . . "(b) It must be proved at the "trial . . . that the deposition was "taken in the presence of the "accused and that the accused or his "counsel or solicitor had full oppor-"tunity of cross-examining the wit-"ness. . . ."

C. C. C.
1957
REGINA v. SMITH.
Glyn-Jones J.

of manslaughter and of stealing or receiving, as the case may be, and in the case of the others of receiving. The trial takes place, therefore, upon the charges on which these defendants have all been committed. Each defendant has heard the evidence given by the witnesses conditionally bound over, each has had his opportunity to cross-examine, and I rule that in this case, all the defendants having been committed for trial for the offences with which they are now charged, the depositions of the witnesses conditionally bound over may be read. Any other decision, in my opinion, would cause a wholly unjustified waste of public time and money.

Solicitors: Director of Public Prosecutions; Freeman (R. G.) & Co.; Prothero & Prothero; Brian Rees & Co.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.
1958
Feb. 17.
Parker and Sellers L.JJ.

* GORFIN v. ODHAMS PRESS LTD.

[1956 G. No. 822.]

Barrister—Fees—Leading counsel—Issue of quantum of damages only —Disallowance of costs of leading counsel—Objection to taxation—Taxing master's discretion—R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 27 (41).

The plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries against the defendants, who admitted the claim, put the damages in issue and paid £350 into court. At the trial the plaintiff was represented by leading and junior counsel and the damages were assessed at £650. On the taxation of the plaintiff's costs, the taxing master disallowed the fee of leading counsel and, on appeal, Donovan J. upheld the taxing master:—

Held (1) that notwithstanding the terms of R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 27 (41),[1] in practice the court will only interfere with the exercise of the taxing master's discretion if it is clear that he has gone wrong in principle, and for that reason matters of quantum only, where no principle is involved, are rarely interfered with; but where a question of principle is involved as, for example, whether two counsel should be allowed, if it can be shown that the master has erred in principle the court would exercise its own discretion.

Ginn v. Robey [1911] W.N. 28 and In re W. T. Potts [1935] Ch. 334 considered.

(2) That while it was, in general, proper that two counsel should be employed, the fact that the costs of leading counsel were disallowed in any case did not mean that the master must have erred in principle and that, it not having been shown that the master had so erred, the court could not interfere with his decision.

Decision of Donovan J. affirmed.

[1] R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 27 (41): "Any party who may be dissatisfied "with the certificate . . . of the "taxing officer, as to any item . . . "which may have been objected to ". . . may . . . apply to a Judge at "Chambers for an order to review "the taxation as to the same item ". . . and the Judge may thereupon "make such order as the Judge may "think just. . . ."

APPEAL from Donovan J. sitting in chambers.

The plaintiff, John Gorfin, claimed against Odhams Press Ltd. damages for personal injuries sustained by him by reason of the defendants' negligence or breach of statutory duty. The defendants, admitting that they were guilty of a breach of section 25 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, disputed the quantum of damages, and they paid £350 into court. The plaintiff was represented before Byrne J., who tried the action, by leading and junior counsel. The defendants were represented by junior counsel only. The judge directed that judgment should be entered for the plaintiff for £650 and costs to be taxed. The taxing master disallowed the plaintiff's costs of leading counsel. In his answer to the plaintiff's objections he stated: "Having "heard long argument on this objection on the original taxation "and on the hearing of this objection, I am of the opinion that "the circumstances of this case did not justify the briefing of "two counsel. No question of principle is involved as to the "allowance or disallowance of two counsel. It is a matter "entirely in the master's discretion (Payne v. Schmidt [2]). I "therefore overrule this objection."

Donovan J. having affirmed the taxing master's decision, the plaintiff appealed.

The plaintiff's main ground of appeal was that the judge had misdirected himself in holding that the taxing master was not wrong in principle in disallowing the costs of two counsel. The plaintiff contended that the number of counsel was a matter of principle and that in a case such as this there was an established principle that two counsel should be allowed.

John Thompson Q.C. and J. G. Sheldon for the plaintiff.
Peter Pain for the defendants.

The following cases were referred to in argument which are not mentioned in the judgments: Wilson v. Wilson, Bobbin & Co. Ltd.[3]; Llanover v. Homfray[4]; Payne v. Schmidt[5]; Eaves v. Eaves & Powell[6]; Francis v. Francis and Dickerson[7]; Frost v. London, Brighton & South Coast Railway Co.[8]; Jacobs v. London, Brighton & South Coast Railway Co.[9]; Peel v. London & North Western Railway Co. (No. 2)[10]; Wheeler v. Fradd[11]; Friend v. Solley.[12] Reference was also made to King's Costs on The High Court Scale (1910), p. 102, Butterworth's Costs (1951), Vol. II, p. 134.

PARKER L.J. stated the facts and continued: Before the judge the plaintiff on appeal argued, as I understand it, and

[2] [1949] 2 All E.R. 741, 743.
[3] (1911) 28 R.P.C. 741.
[4] [1884] W.N. 134, 206.
[5] [1949] 2 All E.R. 741.
[6] [1956] P. 154; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 984; [1955] 3 All E.R. 849.
[7] [1956] P. 87; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 973; [1955] 3 All E.R. 836.
[8] (1870) 39 L.J.(N.S.)Ex. 54.
[9] (1870) 22 L.T. 651.
[10] [1907] 1 Ch. 611.
[11] (1898) 14 T.L.R. 440.
[12] (1847) 10 B. 329.

C. A.
1958
Gorfin v. Odhams Press Ltd.
Parker L.J.

he has argued in this court, that the master had gone wrong in principle; and it was at one time suggested that Donovan J. took the view that the question whether there should be two counsel or one counsel was not a matter of principle at all, but only of quantum, and that therefore he had no jurisdiction to go into the matter. I think it is quite clear from what Mr. Pain has said and also from the note which was made by junior counsel for the plaintiff, that all Donovan J. said was something which judges often say, namely: "If I had "been judging this matter on my own I might well have come "to a different conclusion"; the judge, however, held that this was a matter which was, prima facie, for the discretion of the master and he could not see that the master had erred in principle.

I entirely agree with the judge. Mr. Thompson, who has said everything possible for the plaintiff, admits that he has to show that the master went wrong in principle. Although the terms of R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 27 (41) are very wide, and in effect treat the matter before the judge in chambers as a re-hearing, I think it is now clear in practice and on authority that the court will only interfere with the exercise of the master's discretion if it is clear that the master has gone wrong in principle. It is for this reason that matters of quantum only, where no principle is involved, are rarely, if ever, interfered with. In other matters, as indeed the question of whether there should be two counsel allowed or one counsel, it is impossible to say that there is no principle involved; and accordingly, if it can be shown that the master has erred in principle, then the court will exercise its own discretion in the matter.

It is sufficient to refer to two cases on that; the first is Ginn v. Robey,[1] a decision in this court, in which the court (Fletcher Moulton and Buckley L.JJ.) said: "Although the "court had jurisdiction to interfere with the discretion of the "taxing master it was the rarest thing for the court to interfere "except where the taxing master had gone wrong on a matter "of principle. The question whether the fees of two counsel "should be allowed was not purely a question of quantum, but "it was a question which the taxing master was much better "qualified than a judge to decide, and prima facie the court "would not interfere in such a case."

In In re W. T. Potts,[2] Farwell J. said: "A matter of this "kind [fee of leading counsel] is prima facie one for the dis-"cretion of the taxing master, and this court is very slow indeed "to interfere with the exercise of that discretion, and, indeed, "in my judgment this court ought not to interfere, unless it "has reason to think that the taxing master, in exercising his "discretion, has acted upon some wrong principle or upon some "misunderstanding of the true position."

[1] [1911] W.N. 28.

[2] [1935] Ch. 334, 339.

What Mr. Thompson says is that now, if it has not become the rule, it is at any rate prevailing practice, that two counsel will be allowed on taxation, except in very special circumstances, and he elevates it, if I may so put it, into a principle and says that the master must therefore have gone against principle in this case, there being no special circumstances involved.

It is perfectly true, and I hope it may continue, that it is in general proper that two counsel should be employed. There are a number of dicta in the cases to that effect, and as has been pointed out, the note in the White Book to Ord. 65, r. 27 (47), says: "Two counsel usually allowed." But to say that, because counsel is disallowed in any case, the master must therefore have erred in principle is a very different matter, and I cannot say in the present case, any more than could the judge, that the master has erred in principle.

Finally, Mr. Thompson drew attention to the last paragraph of the master's answer, which is not very happily worded. That paragraph says: "No question of principle is involved as "to the allowance or disallowance of two counsel."

As a general proposition, I think that is wrong, although it may well be that, as applied to the facts of this particular case, there was no principle involved. Then the master goes on: "It is a matter entirely in the master's discretion," quoting Payne v. Schmidt.[3] There again it is perhaps not very happily worded; it is a matter which is in the master's discretion, but of course it is not entirely in his discretion, because if he errs in principle then his discretion can be set aside.

However, as I have said, I cannot see that the master erred in principle, and, accordingly, I agree with the judge that whatever one might have decided oneself, hearing the case de novo, this court cannot interfere. I would dismiss the appeal.

SELLERS L.J. I agree with my Lord. Mr. Thompson's forceful argument has indicated and perhaps established that this is a hard case and it might be described as a borderline case. The sum of £650 was recovered in the action and that is a sum which very often would justify the employment of leading counsel. The case was perhaps made more difficult for the plaintiff when it was realised that the sum of £350 had been paid into court in respect of the damages claimed. But it is clear from the answer to the objection given by the master that he had these matters present in his mind and the question for him was whether it was reasonable and prudent to have two counsel, leading counsel and a junior.

Looking at the nature of the injuries in the claim, they were of the most modest type that one finds in pleadings in this type of action. When the medical terms are interpreted, the

[3] [1949] 2 All E.R. 743.

C. A.
1958
Gorfin v. Odhams Press Ltd.
Sellers L.J.

injuries consisted of no more than cuts and bruises. Apparently there must have been some more serious consequences; something else must have developed which would justify the amount of damages.

But having regard to the issue which the master had to decide, I cannot take any different view from that of my Lord, namely, that it was within the master's discretion. If he had said, as he did not say, that in every case where damages only were in dispute two counsel would not be justified, then this court might well have interfered. That would, I think, have been erring in principle, but the master applied his mind to the problem which was for him to decide: should a second counsel be allowed in the circumstances of the particular case.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Shaen, Roscoe & Co.; C. A. Rutland.

B. A. B.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.
1958
Feb. 13.
Lord Evershed M.R., Parker and Sellers L.JJ.

* HARDIE v. FREDIANI.

Landlord and Tenant — Rent restriction — Possession application — Greater hardship—Dwelling-house reasonably required for occupation by landlord's daughter—Whether reasonable to make order—Movability of other tenants of landlord — Whether relevant consideration—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 32), s. 3 (1), Sch. I, para. (h).

A landlord of a dwelling-house within the scope of the Rent Acts sought to recover possession on the ground that he required it for occupation as a residence by his married daughter, within paragraph (h) of Schedule I to the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933.[1] The daughter was living with her father and the county court judge was satisfied that the

[1] Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, s 3: "(1) No order or judgment for "the recovery of possession of any "dwelling-house to which the prin-"cipal Acts apply or for the eject-"ment of a tenant therefrom shall "be made or given unless the court "considers it reasonable to make "such an order or give such a judg-"ment, and . . . (a) the court has "power so to do under the provisions "set out in the First Schedule to this "Act; . . ."

Sched. I, para. (h): "the dwel-"ling-house is reasonably required by "the landlord . . . for occupation as "a residence for . . . (ii) any . . . "daughter of his over 18 years of "age . . . Provided that an order or "judgment shall not be made or "given on any ground specified in "paragraph (h) of the foregoing pro-"visions of this Schedule if the court "is satisfied that having regard to all "the circumstances of the case, in-"cluding the question whether other "accommodation is available for the "landlord or the tenant, greater "hardship would be caused by grant-"ing the order or judgment than by "refusing to grant it."

landlord reasonably required possession of the house, but decided that, in all the circumstances, it was not reasonable to make the order. The judge took account of the fact that part of the landlord's house was occupied by a married couple and, as it was conceded that if they left there would be sufficient accommodation for the daughter, the judge concluded that it would be more reasonable to move them than the tenant against whom possession had been sought. The landlord appealed, contending that this was not a relevant factor in considering, as required by section 3 (1) of the Act of 1933,[1] whether it was reasonable to make the order:—

Held, that the fact that if the occupants of part of the landlord's house were turned out there would be sufficient room for his daughter, was relevant in considering whether it was reasonable to make the order, and that it could not be said that there was no evidence to support the judge's conclusion that it was not reasonable.

APPEAL from Judge Fraser Harrison, sitting at Liverpool County Court.

The plaintiff, Edmund Wallace Hardie, appealed against the refusal of the county court judge to make an order for the recovery of possession of a dwelling-house known as No. 15 Selwyn Street, Liverpool.

The dwelling-house was within the protection of the Rent Acts and was occupied by the defendant, Francis Frediani, as a statutory tenant, his contractual tenancy having been determined by a notice to quit which expired on September 2, 1957.

The house in which the landlord lived, No. 23 Church Road, Liverpool, had four bedrooms, but there were living in it, in addition to the landlord and his wife (both aged 52), his daughter, a Mrs. Garrod, aged 22, and recently married, her husband, and the landlord's son. A Mr. and Mrs. Sedgewick were also living there, occupying a living-room and a bedroom and having the exclusive use of the butler's pantry for their cooking. In addition the landlord's daughter was expecting a baby in March, 1958. The landlord submitted to the county court judge that they would be uncomfortably crowded when the baby arrived and that it was not generally for the welfare and happiness of his daughter, her husband and their baby that the present occupants, the daughter, her mother, the father and the husband, should all be in the same house. The judge took a favourable view of the landlord and his daughter and agreed with them that it was entirely reasonable for him to seek to recover possession of No. 15 Selwyn Street as a home for his daughter.

In considering the defendant tenant's position, the judge took the view that as a result of the Rent Act, 1957, the proviso to paragraph (h) of the Act of 1933 was no longer operative. But he concluded that it was not reasonable to make the order and that if anyone was going to have to move it should not be the tenant of No. 15 Selwyn Street (who had three children aged 16, 11 and 10, and an orphan aged 20 living with him and his wife),

[1] See footnote, p. 318.

C. A.
1958
Hardie
v.
Frediani.

but the Sedgewicks. The landlord's daughter had conceded that if they went there would be sufficient room for her and her family.

The landlord appealed.

Andrew Rankin for the landlord.
Gerson Newman for the tenant.

The following cases were cited in argument: Cumming v. Danson[2]; Darnell v. Millward.[3]

Lord Evershed M.R. This was an action for possession of a house, 15 Selwyn Street, in the occupation of the defendant, a wife, and three children aged 16 and under. There is no doubt that the landlord most favourably impressed the judge, who spoke of him as an excellent witness, and the encomium was also extended to his daughter, on whose behalf the landlord had brought the proceeding; for it was one based upon paragraph (h) of the First Schedule to the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933. Apart for the moment from the point of the proviso following that paragraph, it is, I think, clear enough that by the joint effect of section 3 (1) of the Act of 1933, and this paragraph, a landlord seeking possession for the purpose of the house being occupied as a residence by his daughter (as was the case here) has first to establish that he reasonably so requires it, in order to give the court jurisdiction, and second, he must succeed on the broader issue enshrined in the well-known phrase: "No order . . . shall be made . . . unless the court "considers it reasonable to make [it]." In a case, however, based on paragraph (h) there is also the question which was debated before the judge whether the proviso which follows the paragraph also applies, and that proviso states, as again is well known, that an order shall not be made under paragraph (h) if the court is satisfied that in all the circumstances, including, as there stated, greater hardship would be caused by making the order than by refusing it.

The tenant sought to rely before Judge Fraser Harrison upon the proviso. I assume that he was well aware of the established proposition that under the proviso the onus is on the tenant to show that greater hardship would be caused by granting the order than by refusing it. But the judge took the view that the proviso had ceased to be operative in these cases by virtue of the Rent Act, 1957. It has now been decided by this court,[1] in the division presided over at the time by Lord Denning, sitting with Hodson and Pearce L.JJ., that that view is not well founded, and that the provisions of the Act of 1957 have not rendered the proviso ineffective in appropriate cases.

[2] [1942] 2 All E.R. 653; 59 T.L.R. 70.

[3] [1950] W.N. 567; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 1100; sub nom. Darnell v. Millwood [1951] 1 All E.R. 88.

[1] Piper v. Harvey [1958] 2 W.L.R. 408; [1958] 1 All E.R. 454.

Mr. Newman, for the tenant, has served a notice to the effect that if the landlord succeeded he would desire to say that this question of greater hardship was wrongly excluded, and that we should give whatever directions were appropriate in those circumstances. The problem has not in fact arisen, because I have come myself to the clear view that we cannot disturb the conclusion at which the judge arrived. I need, therefore, say no more about the greater hardship point.

I return to the language of section 3 of the Act of 1933, which I have already read so far as relevant, and the two points which have to be established in a case such as this, namely, first, that it is reasonable for the landlord to want the accommodation, as he said, for his daughter, and, second, that even so, still it is reasonable for the judge to make the order.

[His Lordship stated the facts and continued:] The judge had no difficulty (particularly since he took a most favourable view of the landlord and his daughter as witnesses) in concluding that it was entirely reasonable for the landlord to seek the order in order to provide No. 15 Selwyn Street as a home for her.

But that is not, as it seems to me, the end of the matter. It was still for the judge to ask whether it was reasonable for him to make the order. That question, in the end of all, he decided adversely to the landlord, and in deciding it he certainly took into account that the defendant, after all, had three children aged 16, 11 and 10, two only of them going to school; and that if anybody had got to move, the right and proper course was for Mr. and Mrs. Sedgewick to move. On the evidence that he had before him the judge was able to conclude—and I do not see how anyone could cavil at the conclusion—that the Sedgewicks were reasonably decent people who might well, in the circumstances, go at once without any difficulty. It was suggested with force by Mr. Rankin that presumably the Sedgewicks themselves had the benefit of a controlled tenancy under the Rent Acts, and that it was not simply a question of waving a hand and saying to the Sedgewicks "Go," and their going. It might involve further proceedings. Indeed, that being so, Mr. Rankin's contention was twofold: first, that even if (contrary to his submission) the position of the Sedgewicks could properly be taken into account, when one asked and answered the question "Was it reasonable "for the landlord to seek the order he sought against tenants of "No. 15 Selwyn Street?" one had then certainly exhausted the admissibility, for all purposes of this case, of the presence of the Sedgewicks; and it was not legitimate to take their presence into consideration in determining the further question whether it was reasonable to make the order. Second, and alternatively, Mr. Rankin says that in any case there was no evidence that they were, in any sensible use of the term, movable. And where was this matter going to end? said he. The landlord appeared to own a certain number of houses, and he might go from place to place

C. A.
1958 Hardie
v.
Frediani.
Lord Evershed M.R.

seeking unsuccessfully to get orders for possession and be constantly told that it was far better to get the other man to go. And so he might eventually, after a long, expensive, and litigious journey, arrive at the position from which he started.

I cannot take quite so gloomy a view of his prospects. But in any case I am unable to agree that the question of the Sedgewicks and their movability is something not to be taken into account on this question of the reasonableness of making the order. This question is one to be determined as a matter of fact upon a consideration of all relevant circumstances. So much has clearly been established, and I see no ground upon which this particular matter could fairly and properly be excluded. It is a question of the weight one would attach to the circumstances that here are two people, Mr. and Mrs. Sedgewick, no part of the family, occupying an appreciable proportion of 23 Church Road, as to which the daughter conceded in evidence that, if they did go, then there would be room enough. How much weight is one going to give to that fact, knowing that the Sedgewicks may try to remain, may seek to raise the defences of the Acts, and so forth?

Turning to the second alternative argument, I can see no ground for supposing that the judge here acted without any basis of evidence. I think he was entitled to say: "The Sedgewicks "are decent people. It may well be that they will not make "difficulties. But, in any case, I bear in mind that they may "raise the defences of the Act, and I also consider what the "chances are likely to be. In all the circumstances, I do not "think it is reasonable to evict the Fredianis, the tenants, and "their three children, even though I do not like Mrs. Frediani "very much." On such a matter of fact, I think on well-established principles, it would not be right for us to interfere, and I see, indeed, no basis which would justify interference.

On the whole, therefore, though I do indeed share the sympathy which the judge obviously felt for the landlord and his daughter, I do not think we can or should interfere with the order made. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal.

Parker L.J. I agree.

Sellers L.J. I also agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Purchase Clark & Treadwell for Rollo & Mills-Roberts, Liverpool; T. L. Hurst, Liverpool.

E. D.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

*W. COLLIER LTD. v. FIELDING (VALUATION OFFICER).

C. A.

1958
Feb. 21.

Lord Evershed M.R., Parker and Sellers L.JJ.

Rates and Rating — Plant and machinery — Baker's oven — Provers movable parts—Whether rateable—"To such extent as any such "part is, or is in the nature of, a building or structure"—Meaning —Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 90), s. 24—Plant and Machinery (Valuation for Rating) Order, 1927 (S.R. & O., 1927, No. 480), Sch., Class 4.

A company carrying on a bakery business had two ovens over 60 feet long called "60 tray Uniflow ovens." By a conveyor belt to which 60 trays were attached, dough was passed through the ovens at such a rate that it emerged as cooked bread. They also had provers for conditioning which were also operated in similar fashion. This mechanical apparatus for moving the bread weighed some 9 tons. Both the ovens and the provers could be operated without the moving parts in an emergency, but it would not have been commercially practicable to do so. It was not disputed that the ovens and provers themselves fell within Class 4 of the Schedule to the Plant and Machinery (Valuation for Rating) Order, 1927,[1] being structures or in the nature of structures, and were accordingly rateable. It was also not disputed that the motors, which operated the moving parts, were not in the nature of structures and were not rateable. The Lands Tribunal held that the moving parts also were not rateable:—

Held, that, as the ovens and provers appeared in Class 4 of the Schedule to the Order of 1927, they were rateable "to such extent "as any such part" of the ovens and provers were or were in the nature of a building or structure; and that the moving parts were sufficiently severable and distinct to make it reasonable to conclude that if and so far as they were part of any oven or prover, or an essential part of an oven or prover as a working piece of apparatus, nevertheless they were not part of the oven or provers as a structure, and, accordingly, they were not rateable.

APPEAL from the Lands Tribunal.

The respondents, W. Collier Ltd., owned a bakery business and had at their bakery at Duva Leigh ovens and provers. The ovens, known as "60 tray Uniflow ovens," were 60 feet long, the bread being carried into and through the ovens on the 60 trays, which were attached to a conveyor belt. The dough was similarly taken in and out of the provers. The evidence established that while it would not be practicable to operate the ovens and provers without the movable apparatus, in an emergency both the ovens and provers could be operated by hand.

The local valuation court for South Lancashire held that

[1] Plant and Machinery (Valuation for Rating) Order, 1927, Sch.: "Classes of machinery and plant "deemed to be part of the here- "ditament. . . . Class 4. The following parts of a plant or a combination of plant and machinery "whenever and only to such extent "as any such part is, or is in the "nature of, a building or structure:—. . . Burners . . . Ovens "and Stoves; Chambers for:— . . . "Conditioning or Treatment; . . ."

C. A.
1958
W. Collier Ltd. v. Fielding (Valuation Officer).

the movable parts of the ovens and provers, which were described as "(a) trays, chains, sprocket wheels and shafts, driving wheels "and shaft, gears, motors, fans, etc., used in connexion with "baking ovens; (b) provers, including trays, chains, sprocket "wheels and shafts, driving wheels and shaft, gears and motors, "etc.," were rateable plant and machinery.

The company appealed from that decision to the Lands Tribunal, who found that: "the moving parts do not form an "essential feature of the oven as an oven or the prover as a "chamber for conditioning," and reversed the decision of the local valuation court.

The valuation officer appealed.

The facts found by the Lands Tribunal are sufficiently stated in the judgment of Lord Evershed M.R.

Maurice Lyell Q.C. and Patrick Browne for the valuation officer.

Michael Rowe Q.C. and R. W. Leach for the respondent company.

The following cases referred to in argument are not mentioned in the judgments: Edwards (Inspector of Taxes) v. Bairstow [2]; Burton v. Ogdens (Brighton) Ltd. [3]

Lord Evershed M.R. This case is concerned with certain apparatus, known respectively as provers and ovens, in the bakery business of the respondents.

It will suffice for the purposes of this judgment if I confine myself in what follows to the ovens. The ovens in question are made by the well-known firm of Baker Perkins Ltd. Their nature is set out carefully and fully in the decision of the Lands Tribunal, from which I cite this much: "The two ovens are "identical and are marketed as '60 tray Uniflow ovens.'" I pause there to say that the name "60 tray Uniflow ovens" may perhaps give some clue to the mechanical nature of the contrivance in that, by a system of an endless belt to which trays are attached numbering 60, loaves can pass through the oven, emerging at the end and having remained subjected to the oven's heat for a sufficient time to convert them into bread of the required consistency and other qualities. The decision goes on to give the dimensions and weight of these contrivances. The latter is 45 tons, of which about 9 tons is attributable to the moving parts. The contest before us relates to what is there described as "the moving parts."

The decision states that the ovens are put together on the site, and that they consist of steel sections which are bolted together on concrete platforms. Then occurs this paragraph: "The mechanical equipment of each oven comprises five electric

[2] [1956] A.C. 14; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 410; [1955] 3 All E.R. 48.

[3] (1952) 23 D.R.A. 246, 255.

"motors," which are then described: "a working shaft with two "sprocket wheels, an idle shaft with two sprocket wheels, four "blocks and bearings carry sprocket shafts, two lengths of chain "with slot guides connecting the working sprocket wheel to the "idle one, a main drive chain from the driving motor to the "working shaft, a tension sprocket to adjust the tension main "chain drive, 60 metal trays 8 feet long fastened to the chains, "two oil heaters which pre-heat the oil supply, a time clock and "a hand-operated winding handle."

I have to confess that I am myself not mechanically minded, so that the description does not imprint in my mind any particularly clear picture of how this contrivance works or of what its moving parts consist; but the tribunal had the one immense advantage which we have not had of visiting the premises of the respondents, inspecting these ovens and seeing them in operation.

The decision continues: "All the parts of this mechanical "equipment are removable without removing the outer covering. "The motors are easily removable and are all taken out for "cleaning about every three months. The other parts are only "removed when repairs or cleaning become necessary.

"The purpose of the moving parts of each oven is to carry "the dough in tins placed on the moving trays at such a speed "as will ensure that the time elapsing from the placing of the "tins on the trays at the feeding entrance to their removal at "the discharge exit is sufficient to ensure the correct cooking of "the dough into loaves of bread.

"The ovens apart from their moving parts could not be "removed without dismantling and they"—I understand that to mean the ovens apart from their moving parts—"are intended "to remain in their present situation until the time comes for "them to be scrapped."

The question which presented itself to the Lands Tribunal arises upon Class 4 in the Schedule to the Plant and Machinery (Valuation for Rating) Order, 1927. That order was formulated as a result of the deliberations of the committee envisaged in section 24 of the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925. Class 4 consists, after an opening sentence which is of vital significance, of a long list or catalogue of apparatus or plant, beginning with acid concentrators and ending with windmills and wireless masts.

Without referring to the actual terms of the statute, it is well to remind oneself that the general scope of the legislation quo ad industrial plant was that plant in general should not be rateable; but that general statement was made subject to the qualification that certain plant or parts of plant specified in (among other places) Class 4 of this Schedule was to be rateable, but only to the extent (and I am anticipating the language itself) that the Schedule so made it rateable.

The opening words of Class 4 are these: "The following parts "of a plant or a combination of plant and machinery whenever "and only to such extent as any such part is, or is in the nature

C. A.
1958
W. Collier Ltd. v. Fielding (Valuation Officer).
Lord Evershed M.R.

"of, a building or structure." If the eye passes down the catalogue, it will observe in the appropriate alphabetical place the word "Ovens" and it will also notice "Chambers for Condition-"ing or Treatment," a phrase which admittedly covers the provers in the present case.

The problem is found to resolve itself into one of a dual character. First, it is necessary to see whether the subject-matter sought to be rated can be identified with some item in the list. Second, one then asks the question: to what extent is the item with which we are concerned in the nature of a building or structure? It has been conceded by Mr. Lyell that those are the vital questions.

There is no doubt as regards the first part of the problem. I have already indicated that ovens appear in the list. It is the fifth item of the collection: "Burners, Forges, Furnaces, Kilns, "Ovens and Stoves." Equally, among the list of chambers is found one appropriate to provers. Therefore, the real point in the case below, and equally in the case as put to us, is represented by the question: to what extent are the ovens (and provers) with which we are concerned in the nature of a building or structure?

In order to dispose of the matter, it has been conceded by Mr. Lyell for the Crown that the motors, of which it will be recalled there are five in these ovens, are not in truth parts of the ovens at all: they are, therefore, excluded from further consideration. It is not now disputed that the motors, as such, are not possibly in the nature of structures, and it is therefore no part of the case before us that they ought to be a subject-matter of rating.

The question has been as to the moving parts, the nature and function of which has been described. On the one side it is said, and said with very great force by Mr. Lyell, that one cannot sensibly sever for any relevant purpose these moving parts from the oven as a whole. After all, the oven is described as a 60 tray Uniflow oven. Its purpose is to bake bread, and that is achieved by passing the dough in these trays through the ovens for that purpose. The mere fact that one can physically detach the trays and the apparatus to which the trays are clipped, Mr. Lyell says, is quite irrelevant. They are an essential part of the oven and therefore the oven as a whole must be regarded as one item, all of it in the nature of a structure, as it is conceded that the framework bolted to the site is a structure.

But the conclusion of the Lands Tribunal was adverse to the Crown upon this matter. I confess at once that I have felt considerable doubt and difficulty in this case and have done so largely for the reason that it is not to me entirely clear what were the points which the tribunal put to himself upon this question. It will be a fitting introduction, perhaps, to what follows if I now read the three vital paragraphs from the decision. "Upon Mr. Browne's main contention"—that is a reference to the argument presented for the Crown by Mr. Browne—"Mr.

"Rowe"—for the subject—"emphasised that under Class 4 of "the Schedule the material words were 'only to such extent as' "and contended that the moving parts of both oven and prover "were in effect nothing but conveyor belts within an oven and "were not in themselves structures or in the nature of a "structure."

I can indicate by reference to that paragraph at once the kind of difficulty which has presented itself. I think nobody will quarrel (certainly nobody in this case has quarrelled) with the validity of the first reference to Mr. Rowe's argument: "Mr. "Rowe emphasised that under Class 4 of the Schedule the "material words were 'only to such extent as.'" With that counsel before us on both sides have been firmly agreed throughout this appeal. But there is then attributed to Mr. Rowe the contention that the moving parts here were not merely nothing but conveyor belts, but were not in themselves structures, as though the view for which Mr. Rowe contended was that the test to apply to these moving parts is to ask whether they, in isolation and being detached, were themselves structures or in the nature of structures. I am quite sure that that was not Mr. Rowe's contention in the court below, as it most clearly has not been his contention here.

The question I will attempt now to restate: is it true to say that this 60 tray Uniflow oven is, as to all the mechanism of which it is comprehended, in the nature of a structure; or is it true only to say that it is as to part of it structural by nature, but as to some part of the mechanism not structural? That, as I conceive, is a different question from that attributed to Mr. Rowe in the paragraph which I have read from the decision.

The decision then goes on to make a reference to Cardiff Rating Authority v. Guest Keen Baldwin's Iron & Steel Co. Ltd.[1] and proceeds: "but it seems to me that there is a "distinction between a movable structure," which is what was subject to consideration in the Cardiff case,[1] "and movable plant "which is used in conjunction with a structure. In the present "case I am satisfied by the evidence that the oven could be "used as an oven and the prover as a prover without the moving "parts although it would not be economical so to use them since "the dough would have to be stacked in and unstacked by hand "and the whole benefit of the continuous process would be lost." There follows this pregnant sentence: "But the moving parts do "not form an essential feature of the oven as an oven or the "prover as a chamber for conditioning, they are provided merely "to ensure a continuous flow." I will pause there again to observe, with the utmost respect to the Lands Tribunal, that he appears to me to have misstated the essential point. The question is not so much whether the moving parts form an essential feature of the oven as an oven, but whether they form

[1] [1949] 1 K.B. 385; 65 T.L.R. 159; [1949] 1 All E.R. 27.

C. A.
1958
W. Collier Ltd. v. Fielding (Valuation Officer).
Lord Evershed M.R.

an essential feature of the oven as a structure. If the matter had rested where I have stopped in my reading, I should feel, to say the least, very doubtful whether the tribunal had posed to himself the proper question for his answering, but the tribunal continues as follows: "and are, as Mr. Rowe put it, the furni-"ture, and not integrated in the structure and become part "of it."

Those last words seem to me essentially to be saying what I venture to suggest should have been said before. They appear to be a finding that these moving parts, being but furniture, are not part of the oven as a structure. I so interpret, and feel bound to interpret, the phrase "and not integrated in the structure." By that route, therefore, the conclusion is reached by the tribunal which is stated in these terms: "I have, therefore, come to the "decision that the moving parts of both ovens and provers are "not rateable under the order, since the moving parts do not "themselves appear to me to form part of the structure of either "oven or prover." Again, in that last sentence I sought to emphasize the vital words "form part of the structure."

If I have earlier correctly posed the problem which in these cases the Order of 1927 presents, it will, I apprehend, be, prima facie at any rate, a question of degree and of fact whether in any given case one can properly say that the identified item of plant or part of plant is, as to the whole of it or as to some part less than the whole, in the nature of a structure. If it be a question of fact and if, in determining it, the tribunal has in no way misdirected itself, then the finding of fact will not be capable of challenge in this court.

In the end of all in this case, though I have felt the doubts which the language already read has put into my mind, and the force of Mr. Lyell's argument, I have come to the conclusion that the tribunal did find as a fact that these moving parts, though parts of the oven and for any practicable commercial purposes an essential part, were none the less not part of the structure of the oven and that, in so far as he so found, he did not misdirect himself, nor did he apply his mind to the wrong question.

In concluding, as I do on the whole, that we could not disturb this finding, I have been somewhat influenced by considering what else this court ought to do or might do. I stated earlier that the tribunal had the great advantage of seeing this oven in operation. Perhaps I might be allowed to say here that I hope what I have said about the oven can fairly be applied to the case of the prover. My citations from the decision have been those relating to the oven or substantially such, but I think that no distinction for present purposes arises between the two apparatus, nor indeed has Mr. Lyell sought to say that as to one apparatus rather than the other the decision should be impeached.

I repeat that the tribunal saw the apparatus. The description of the moving parts of it I have already read and the reading of it will perhaps at least indicate this to a mechanically untutored mind. There might be a distinction between the moving trays 8 ft. long which are clipped in some way to the conveyor, on the one hand, and some of these shafts, which no doubt are part of the working attachment, on the other. It might well be that a tribunal of fact in this case, or in another similar case, considering what I have tried to emphasize as being the essential question, might come to a conclusion of fact different from that which the tribunal reached on this occasion. But I should myself feel the very gravest difficulty, if I had been persuaded by Mr. Lyell that this decision was based on erroneous premises implicit in the language which I have read and on which I have commented, in concluding in a contrary sense that these moving parts or some of them were in truth part of the oven regarded as a structure.

It would therefore seem that, if we were persuaded of the vice in this decision which Mr. Lyell has sought to demonstrate, we should have then to refer it back to the tribunal, directing him to reconsider the matter in the light of the questions which we think are the right questions and which I have attempted to formulate. I think that would perhaps make a great pother of this particular case. In future cases it may be (and I hope I am not in this respect assuming more to myself than I ought) that the formulation of the proper questions to be asked which we now make will assist in answering similar problems.

Reading this decision, and being well aware of the great care the tribunal takes in deciding these cases, I cannot believe that, if we sent the matter back, the tribunal would, when applying his mind to the questions formulated by us, be likely to come to a different or substantially different conclusion in the end from that which he has reached and expressed in this case. I hope that I am justified in that supposition. If I am, it comforts me in the conclusion which I have reached.

Before I leave the case, there is one other point which was taken on which I think it right that I should say a word or two. It was said that there was really no evidence to support the view that the moving parts could be regarded as something in any commercial or sensible use of the term distinct from the oven as a whole. I will confine myself to reading one or two questions and answers from the cross-examination of Mr. John Ackland Hinks. In cross-examination Mr. Browne said: "(Q.) Do you "seriously suggest you could use these sixty tray Uniflow ovens "in any way which is practical, if they had not these moving "parts in them? (A.) One would not just do it, but it could be "done; that is the answer."

A little later there is this passage: "(Q.) Speaking as a "practical commercial matter dealing with these machines, would "these provers work if they did not have the moving parts in "them? (A.) They would not work except that the conveyor "belt . . . (Q.) If you took the conveyor belt away, it would

C. A.
1958
W. Collier Ltd. v. Fielding (Valuation Officer).
Lord Evershed M.R.

"cease to be a prover? (A.) You would put the things in by "hand, leave them there a period and take them out. (Q.) You "said that the oven as a matter of practical politics would not "do it commercially? (A.) I do not think so. (Q.) With the "prover you equally would not work it except with the moving "parts in it? (A.) I think so, except in an emergency."

I agree that the evidence shows that, as a practical commercial matter, these moving parts were essentially a part of the mechanism of the oven and you would not find an oven described as a 60 tray Uniflow oven without having this belt and these trays attached to it, to justify that description and make it work in the way it was intended to work.

Although one may criticize certain sentences in the decision on the basis that it may have done less than justice to what Mr. Hinks said, I think the true view, none the less, is not whether these things formed part of the oven as an oven, but whether they formed part of the oven as a structure. I find nothing in this evidence which is sufficient to disable the conclusion which I think was in the end the deliberate conclusion of the tribunal that these moving parts were sufficiently severable and distinct to make it sensible to conclude as a fact that, if and so far as they were part of the oven and, if you will, an essential part of the oven as a working piece of apparatus, nevertheless they were not part of it as a structure. On the whole, therefore, and for the reasons which I have tried to state, I would dismiss this appeal.

Parker L.J. I have not found this at all an easy case, involving as it does the interpretation and application of the words "only to such extent as," which appear in Class 4 of the Order.

I think it is clear that it is not sufficient, in order to make the whole of a piece of plant set out in that class rateable, that a part of it should be, or be in the nature of, a building or structure. It is clear from the words "only to such extent as" that it is possible that there will be cases where part of the plant in question will not be rateable, though the rest of the plant will.

Accordingly, it seems to me that the approach in any case must be along these lines. First, is the entity in question one of the specified pieces of plant and machinery in the order? If the answer is yes, looked at generally can it be said that it is, or is in the nature of, a building or structure? Finally, on a second look, is it clear that the whole of it is of that nature? Put in another way, is there any extent to which it is not?

Quite clearly, that does not involve looking at each component part of the plant in question in isolation. If one, as it were, dismembered the plant into its components and looked at each component, no part of it would be a structure at all. It clearly does not mean that. It seems to me, however, that, if you find an accessory, a piece of equipment, a component, which is not itself a structure and which is not built into that part of the plant which is undoubtedly a structure, then there would be grounds for excluding it under these words and that part would not be rateable.

Looked at in that way, it seems clear from the findings of the tribunal that the moving parts in this structure would not be rateable. In one paragraph the tribunal said that the moving parts are "the furniture, and not integrated in the structure "and become part of it," and in another paragraph that they do not appear to form part of the structure. On the face of it, therefore, that finding, which is clearly a finding of fact, is one with which we could not interfere.

Mr. Lyell has stressed very forcibly that that conclusion is arrived at following a finding that these moving parts were not an essential part of the oven, and he points out that, on the evidence, that is clearly wrong: in any commercial sense they are essentially part of the oven.

Nevertheless, for the reasons given by my Lord, I do not think that any useful purpose would be served in this case by remitting the case back to the tribunal. I think that there is a clear finding that no part of these moving parts formed part of the structure, and accordingly I would dismiss the appeal.

SELLERS L.J. I have come to the same conclusion, and I do not think that I can add anything affirmatively to assist in the reasoning given by both my Lords.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Solicitor of Inland Revenue; Godden, Holme & Co.

B. A. B.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* SHELL-MEX AND B.P. LTD. v. HOLYOAK (VALUATION OFFICER).

C. A.
1958
Feb. 19, 20, 21.
Lord Evershed M.R., Parker and Sellers L.JJ.

Rating — Plant and machinery — Petrol station — Underground petrol storage tank — Whether "a building or structure" — Whether a "tank"—Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 90), s. 24—Plant and Machinery (Valuation for Rating) Order, 1927 (S.R. & O., 1927, No. 480), Sch., Class 4.

In accordance with licences issued by the local authority pursuant to the Petroleum (Consolidation) Act, 1928, a company constructed an underground petrol container beneath the pumps of a petrol station. The container consisted of a concrete base with brick walls 9 inches thick having a cement rendering. Concrete cradles rested on the base on which was placed a metal cylinder 13 feet 6 inches long by 7 feet in diameter capable of containing 3,000 gallons of petrol. The space round the outside of the cylinder was packed with dry sand and the whole was covered with slabs of reinforced concrete except for the manhole through which the cylinder was filled. The Lands Tribunal held that the brick and concrete structure was liable to be rated, but that the metal cylinder was not in the nature of "a building or structure," within Class 4 of the Schedule to the Plant and Machinery (Valuation for Rating) Order, 1927,[1] being a movable piece of apparatus and, accordingly, was not liable to be rated as a "tank":—

C. A.

1958

Shell-Mex and B.P. Ltd. v. Holyoak (Valuation Officer).

Held, that the installation on the hereditament was in its entirety, including the metal cylinder, a "tank" for the purposes of the Order of 1927, and, since the whole of it was in the nature of a structure, it was rateable as to its entirety.

Cardiff Rating Authority v. Guest, Keen Baldwins Iron & Steel Co. Ltd. [1949] 1 K.B. 385; 65 T.L.R. 159; [1949] 1 All E.R. 27 considered.

Appeal from the Lands Tribunal.

The Local Valuation Court for Warwickshire included in the assessment of Shell-Mex and B.P. Ltd. in respect of their Oakland Filling Station at Birmingham Road Budbrooke certain underground storage tanks. The company appealed against that assessment to the Lands Tribunal, on the ground that the storage tanks were plant or machinery which were not liable to rating by virtue of the provisions of the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, s. 24 (1).

The metal petrol storage tanks in question were contained in a brick underground chamber or compartment the construction of which is fully described in the judgment of Lord Evershed M.R. The Lands Tribunal allowed the company's appeal stating his conclusion as follows: "But it seems to me that the compartment in which the tank is housed does not form a functional entity with the tank any more than any other building in which a piece of plant or machinery is housed. That compartment appears to me to form an integral part of the hereditament like any other building thereon, but the metal tank which is admittedly not a building or structure or in the nature of a building or structure looked at by itself should not under section 24 and the order be deemed to be a part of the hereditament."

The valuation officer appealed.

Maurice Lyell Q.C. and Patrick Browne for the valuation officer.

Michael Rowe Q.C. and William Roots for Shell-Mex and B.P. Ltd.

The cases cited in argument are referred to in the judgments.

[1] Plant and Machinery (Valuation for Rating) Order, 1927, Sch.: "Classes of machinery and plant deemed to be part of the hereditament . . . Class 4. The following parts of a plant or a combination of plant and machinery whenever and only to such extent as any such part is, or is in the nature of, a building or structure:— . . . Tanks."

LORD EVERSHED M.R. The question raised in this appeal relates to the liability for rating of an underground petrol container (to use for the moment a neutral phrase) which underlies the petrol pumps of a petrol station.

Parliament, by the Petroleum (Consolidation) Act, 1928, has in some degree sought to regulate the keeping in bulk of petroleum spirit. The requirements applicable to the respondents to the appeal are those provided in licences issued by the relevant local authority. The conditions at the back of the licence are numerous and involve the construction of elaborate means designed to protect persons and property in the immediate neighbourhood from the risks of leakage and explosion. Thus, to take one or two illustrations. No. 1 in the schedule of conditions reads: "The "petroleum spirit tank together with the connections, pipes and "fittings shall be so constructed and maintained as to prevent "any leakage of petroleum spirit." No. 4 provides: "The filling "and dipping pipes shall be carried down to within two inches of "the bottom of the tank."

It is more helpful in the present case to consider the actual construction with which we are concerned; for the question is whether that which now exists underground at the respondents' petrol station is or is not, as to the whole or any part, liable to be rated. That construction is well illustrated by a plan which is described as "Details of petrol storage tanks," the details so illustrated being those in fact required by the local authority at or near Birmingham.

There is first made in the ground at the required depth a concrete base of an indicated thickness. There are side walls of 9-inch brickwork from the base to the surface, the brickwork has a three-quarter inch cement rendering to line it. On the base are concrete rests or cradles, and on those rests is placed the actual metal cylinder which contains 3,000 gallons, or is capable of containing 3,000 gallons, of petroleum spirit. The dimensions of that container are 13 ft. 6 ins. in length by 7 ft. in diameter.

The space round the outside of the cylinder and between it and the walls is filled, again in accordance with requirements, by what is described as being "well consolidated sweet dry sand." In the plan the space which has been created by the base and walls is called a chamber. The cylinder has at its top a means whereby it is filled with petroleum and from which, on the other hand, petroleum can be extracted for supply to customers. This is provided on the surface of the earth by a manhole, but save for that manhole there is placed above the cylinder and between it and the surface of the earth slabs of reinforced concrete to a considerable thickness.

From the description I have given it will be appreciated that the 3,000 gallon cylinder, is in the end of all, encased in a construction of concrete, brick and sand, etc., tightly encased and embedded in the ground, the whole thing being designed for the protection of persons and property, so that, if there should be

C. A.
1958
Shell-Mex and B.P. Ltd. v. Holyoak (Valuation Officer).
Lord Evershed M.R.

leaks or explosions, the effect will be taken by the earth and the surround and will not do damage outside.

That being the construction in accordance with the local authority requirements, the question then is: How much of it, if any, should be rated? Mr. Rowe, for the respondents, conceded, as I understand, that the cradle, the walls and the base would be buildings on or in the hereditament and liable as such to be rated without any reference to the Plant and Machinery (Valuation for Rating) Order, 1927, which we discussed in W. Collier Ltd. v. Fielding.[1]

But that is not the end of the matter; for it has been the claim of the Crown to rate the whole of the structure as a single unit and as constituting a "tank," a word which hitherto I have been careful to avoid.

The opening words of Class 4 of the Schedule, which is the relevant part of the Order of 1927 provide: "The following parts "of a plant or a combination of plant and machinery whenever "and only to such extent as any such part is, or is in the nature "of, a building or structure." In the catalogue which follows appears the word "tanks," and it has not been in doubt that that is the only item in the catalogue with which, on any view, this construction or the cylinder inside it can be identified. There has been no attempt to say that the construction as a whole can be identified with some other item in the list, for example, as one of the chambers for any of the purposes there described. We are concerned with the item tank in the list and with the question accordingly: what constitutes for present purposes "the tank"? And, when that question has been answered, is it as to the whole, or to the extent of any part of it, in the nature of a structure?

It was the view of the Lands Tribunal that the tank was limited to the cylindrical object which is inside the concrete, brick and sand structure which I have described. Further, it was said that that tank was not in itself in the nature of a structure: it was a movable piece of apparatus, large no doubt, but not so large as to be other than an ordinary piece of movable plant.

On the other side, for the Crown it was said that that is not a correct way to look at this contrivance. The real truth of the matter, Mr. Lyell said, is that the respondents are storing petrol in a tank which consists of base, walls and side packing, and of which the metal cylinder is merely the containing lining or skin. The Crown submit that, on such a view of the matter, the whole thing, cylinder and all, is not only a tank, but is in the nature of a structure.

To simply the matter, I may say at once that, if that view is right, then, as I have understood the argument, it is not in doubt that the whole thing is rateable. It has not been suggested that, treating the whole construction as a tank, it is a structure or in the nature of a structure as to less than 100 per cent. of it.

[1] Ante, p. 323.

It is not suggested, for example, that the metal cylinder could be treated as a detachable part and therefore not itself part of the tank as a structure. That is perhaps natural enough, because when the whole job is done, it is perfectly plain that it would be quite impossible to extract the tank by any means whatever other than by demolition of the whole thing, walls, sand, concrete and everything.

In the course of my judgment in the Collier case [1] I made the point that, when the question arises, as to some identifiable piece of apparatus, is it and to what extent is it in the nature of a structure, then that question is prima facie a matter of degree and of fact. So also, prima facie, it will be, I apprehend, a matter of fact to say what in any given case constitutes the thing you identify with the item in the catalogue.

If, therefore, the matter was simply that the tribunal had said, after examining the material and perhaps examining the site, "I conclude that the tank here is no more than the "cylinder," that might well have been the end of it. But the tribunal has not so confined himself. Finding this case difficult, as I found the last, I have come to the conclusion that the tribunal here materially misdirected himself and therefore, I think on the whole, that the decision ought not to stand.

The tribunal, having described the way in which this underground containing apparatus is put together, referred to Cardiff Rating Authority v. Guest, Keen Baldwins Iron & Steel Co. Ltd.,[2] and to the formula which there was used by Jenkins J., a "functional entity." The tribunal then went on as follows: "I have come to the conclusion that the only part of the "installation which can properly be described as a 'tank' for the "purposes of the order is the metal cylinder."

As I have just indicated, if the tribunal had stopped there, it might well have been the end of the matter. But he went on as follows: "It seems to be clear that the licence deals solely "with this cylinder as a 'tank' in which the petroleum spirit is "to be stored."

I must pause again to explain what I understand that to mean. I read two of the conditions, and it might well be that those two conditions and others like them when they spoke of the tank were referring to the metal cylinder or the lining; for example, when condition No. 4 spoke of the dipping pipes going to within two inches of the bottom, that must have referred to the bottom of the cylinder, the lining. Further, the drawings mark and show the tank by that name, as distinct from the walls, elsewhere called a chamber; though I do also observe that the whole thing (lining, base, cradle and everything) is described in the title to the drawing as "Details of petrol storage tanks."

Returning to the decision: "The licence requires this tank to "be below ground and requires a plan of the layout of the

[1] Ante, p. 323.

[2] [1949] 1 K.B. 385; 65 T.L.R. 159; [1949] 1 All E.R. 27.

C. A.
1958
Shell-Mex and B.P. Ltd. v. Holyoak (Valuation Officer).
Lord Evershed M.R.

"premises to be deposited and adhered to in order to ensure "that the tank is so placed as to reduce to a minimum the risk of "fire or explosion. But it seems to me that the compartment in "which the tank is housed does not form a functional entity with "the tank any more than any other building in which a piece of "plant or machinery is housed. That compartment appears to "me to form an integral part of the hereditament like any other "building thereon, but the metal tank which is admittedly not a "building or structure or in the nature of a building or structure "looked at by itself should not under section 24 and the order be "deemed to be a part of the hereditament."

I emphasized in reading the two words "functional entity," which are no doubt extracted from the judgment of Jenkins J. in the Cardiff case.[2] I cannot help thinking, with all respect, that the tribunal may have been somewhat diverted by that phrase. It depends on what function you have in mind; but I should, for my part, very much doubt whether you could say that, in this case, the compartment with the concrete and the sand filling was not "a functional entity with the container," since the whole object of the apparatus and of the installation was that the petrol should be so contained as to minimize to the greatest possible extent the risks and consequences of fire and explosion.

It seems to me with all respect that the fallacy lies in this sentence: "But it seems to me that the compartment in which "the tank is housed does not form a functional entity with the "tank any more than any other building in which a piece of "plant or machinery is housed." I have been unable to escape from the conclusion that the tribunal came in the end to the view that what he called "the compartment," the installation other than the cylinder, was no more relevant to the question of the rating of the cylinder in this case than would be an ordinary above-ground edifice in which there happened to be found, resting on a cradle, a cylinder, a tank. In my judgment, quite manifestly that is not so.

If you wished to translate this installation to an above-ground equivalent, you would not simply place the metal cylinder on a cradle in a building. You would have to create, as I follow it, a structure with outer walls, concrete, sand filling, and all the rest of it, of which the cylinder in truth would be nothing more than the convenient lining. The thing which you would require to produce would be a much more solid piece of apparatus, designed and required to protect the outside world in the form of human beings and material from the risk of leakage and explosion.

The conclusion, therefore, that the tank for the purposes of the order is confined to the metal cylinder rests on the ground stated; namely, that in the view of the tribunal the housing, what the tribunal calls "the compartment," is no more relevant to the cylinder than would be the surrounding building in the ordinary case of a cylinder found upon cradles in such a building above ground. I think that that reasoning disables the conclusion, and I would, therefore, in this case allow the appeal, and say that the tank, which you find in the hereditament of the respondents, is the installation in its entirety. If that view is right, there is no question that it is not as to the whole of it of the nature of a structure.

[2] [1949] 1 K.B. 385.

PARKER L.J. I agree, and I would only add this. The question, as it seems to me, is what in relation to the hereditament is the nature of the underground structure, using that word in a neutral sense. It is perfectly true that, in relation to the licence and the local authority plans, the only part which is called, and described as, a tank is the metal container and that the surrounding walls are treated as a chamber.

The question is what, not in relation to the licence but in relation to the hereditament, is properly described as "the "tank." It seems to me that, looking at the primary facts found in this case by the Lands Tribunal, the only reasonable conclusion is that the whole structure, walls and metal lining, itself forms the tank. After all, the purpose is the storage of petrol. The brick and concrete structure without the lining performs no function at all. Equally, the lining without the walls and concrete performs no sensible function, quite apart from any question of legality. I say "no sensible function," because it seems to me that this is not merely a case of some added safety precaution, but a question of storing a highly dangerous and inflammable liquid which cannot in any sensible sense, quite apart from legality, be stored without very careful precautions. In other words, it seems to me that this is a long way away from a piece of machinery or plant put into a building for convenience. It is a case where the so-called chamber is a housing which forms part of the plant itself.

For these reasons and those given by my Lord I would allow this appeal.

SELLERS L.J. I think the significant matter is that these tanks are for the storage of petrol, as my Lord has just indicated. The matter has to be so viewed. The mere cylinder would be quite insufficient for that purpose having regard to the liabilities of the occupiers, who are the respondents. It would not be sufficient to have the petrol simply in the cylinder. It has to be dealt with in some manner similar to that in which it is dealt with here for the purposes of safety and proper user. The manner of protecting it or lagging it or securing it has turned what was simply a cylinder into a structure or building. I cannot think that in law or in fact it would be sensible or realistic to split the two things up. What has been called the structure or building and the cylinder form one tank for the purpose of storage of petrol, and it should be so regarded. There is, in my view, an

C. A.
1958
SHELL-MEX AND B.P. LTD. v. HOLYOAK (VALUATION OFFICER).

error of law in the conclusion at which the Lands Tribunal arrived. (See Edwards v. Bairstow and Harrison.[3])

I agree that this appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed.
Leave to appeal to House of Lords.

Solicitors: Solicitor of Inland Revenue; Sydney Morse & Co.

B. A. B.

[3] [1956] A.C. 14; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 410; [1955] 3 All E.R. 48.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.
1958
March 3.
Hodson, Morris and Pearce L.JJ.

* MEDCALF v. MEDCALF.

Husband and Wife — Practice (in matrimonial causes) — Appeal — Time bar—Refusal of decree—Notice of appeal served within six weeks of order—Appeal not set down within six weeks of order—Appeal against refusal of decree not governed by rule applicable to appeals against a decree nisi—Proper practice—R.S.C., Ord. 58, rr. 4, 5, 15.

An appeal from the refusal to grant a decree nisi of divorce is not an appeal "against a decree nisi" within rule 15 of R.S.C., Ord. 58 [1] (which requires that the notice of appeal and the setting down of the appeal must be effected within six weeks of the making of the order), but is an appeal within rule 5 [1] of the same Order, such that if the notice of appeal is served within the six-week period provided by rule 4 of Order 58, the appeal may be set down within seven days after service or within such further time as may be allowed by the proper officer.

Where, therefore, a petitioner served notice of appeal against the refusal of a decree within six weeks of the commissioner's order, but did not set down the appeal within that period:—

Held, that the proper course was to apply to the registrar as the "proper officer" under rule 5 of Order 58 for leave to extend the time for setting down the appeal, since an appeal against the refusal of a decree nisi was not governed by rule 15.

[1] R.S.C., Ord. 58, r. 4: "Time for appealing.—(1) Subject to the provisions of this Rule, every notice of appeal shall be served . . . within the following period (calculated from the date on which the judgment or order of the Court below was signed, entered or otherwise perfected), that is to say:—. . . (c) in any other case, six weeks."

R. 5: "Setting Down.—(1) The appellant shall, within seven days after service of the notice of appeal or within such further time as may be allowed by the proper officer, apply in accordance with this Rule to set down the appeal. . . ."

R. 15: "Appeal against decree nisi.—(1) The following provisions of this Rule shall apply to any appeal to the Court of Appeal in a matrimonial cause against a decree nisi of divorce or nullity of marriage. (2) The period of six weeks specified in Rule 4 of this Order shall be calculated from the date on which the decree was pronounced, and Rule 14 of this Order shall not apply in relation to that period. . . . (6) In this Rule 'the appropriate Registrar' means, in relation to a cause . . . proceeding in a District Registry the Registrar of that Registry."

MOTION for leave to extend time for appeal.

A wife petitioner for divorce on the ground of her husband's adultery asked the court to exercise its discretion in her favour in respect of her own adultery. The suit was undefended. On December 16, 1957, Judge Rawlins, sitting as special commissioner in divorce at Reading, gave his considered judgment, finding the alleged adultery proved, but refusing to exercise his discretion in the petitioner's favour; and he refused to grant her a decree nisi.

The wife sought to appeal from that refusal. Her notice of appeal was served in time, on January 27, 1958, that is, on the last day of the six-week period from the date of the judgment. Her solicitors sought to set down the appeal on the same day, but the documents were not in order. On the following day, that is, one day after the six-week period had elapsed, the petitioner's solicitors were informed by the district registrar (1) that the documents were not in order, and (2) that in any event the petitioner was out of time for setting down the appeal, since this was not an ordinary appeal to which the provisions of R.S.C., Ord. 58, r. 5 (1) [1] as to setting down applied, but was an appeal within rule 15 of Order 58 [1] which applies to "any appeal to the "Court of Appeal in a matrimonial cause against a decree nisi "of divorce or nullity of marriage," and requires that both service of notice of appeal and setting down of appeal must be effected within six weeks.

Having received that information from the registrar, the solicitors did not put the documents in order and did not apply to the registrar as the "proper officer" for extension of time to set down the appeal under Order 58, rule 5, but moved in the Court of Appeal for leave to extend time for setting down the appeal.

Frank J. White for the petitioner. The notice of appeal was served in time under either rule 5 or rule 15 of R.S.C., Ord. 58. If, as the registrar stated, this appeal falls within rule 15 as an appeal "against a decree nisi" not only must service be effected within six weeks, but the appeal must also be set down within that period. It is submitted that on the strict reading of rule 15 this is not such an appeal, but is an appeal which is governed by the provisions of rules 4 and 5 of Order 58, and therefore the petitioner could have applied to set down her appeal within seven days of service of the notice, or within such further time as might be allowed by the proper officer. There is some confusion on the scope of the application of rule 15: see Latey on Divorce, 14th ed., pp. 364, 949–950, which cites that rule as applying to appeals from "the grant or refusal of decrees nisi."

The respondent husband was not represented and did not appear.

[1] For footnote 1 see p. 338.

C. A.
1958
Medcalf v. Medcalf.

Hodson L.J. The notice in this case was given in time, and this is not an appeal which is governed by R.S.C., Ord. 58, r. 15. It is not an appeal against a decree nisi. Accordingly, the right course to take in future cases is for the matter to be dealt with in the ordinary way through the proper officer. The court ought not to issue a direction to the proper officer on how he is to act, but if this rule is drawn to his attention, and if he has no special reason for refusing to extend the time, he will do so, because Order 58, rule 5 provides that the proper officer can extend the time for setting down "within such further time" of the service of the notice "as may be allowed" by him. We are of opinion that the matter should be dealt with in that way.

Motion referred to registrar.

Solicitors: Lovegrove & Durant.

M. M. H.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

1958
Jan. 15, 16, 31.
Lord Merriman P. and Collingwood J.

* COX v. COX.

Husband and Wife—Desertion—Just cause—Adultery, reasonable belief in—Evidence—Whether evidence of opportunity necessary.

A husband separated himself from a wife for whom he admittedly had no love, on the ground of his alleged reasonable belief in her adultery. His belief was founded solely upon two conversations between the wife and a third party, as to incidents at her place of work, which he had overheard, and a further conversation in which the husband taxed the wife with regard to the incidents.

The justices dismissed the wife's complaint of desertion and wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance. On the hearing of her appeal the Divisional Court found that, assuming the conversations to provide evidence of inclination, the circumstances surrounding the incidents precluded the commission of adultery then and there and there was no other evidence of opportunity:—

Held, that the test of reasonableness of belief was objective, and since the necessary element of opportunity could not be left to be inferred in the absence of any evidence to support it, the husband's belief was not reasonable but had arisen from his tendency to put the worst construction on anything she said or did, and the husband was, therefore, in desertion.

Glenister v. Glenister [1945] P. 30; [1945] 1 All E.R. 513 considered.

Haswell v. Haswell and Sanderson (1859) 1 Sw. & Tr. 502 distinguished.

Appeal by a wife from the dismissal by the Tisbury justice of her complaints on the grounds of desertion and wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance.

The parties were married on February 27, 1954. There was one child, Stephen, born on June 6, 1956. After the marriage the parties lived with the husband's parents for a few weeks, after which they obtained a house at Zeals in Wiltshire. The wife was in employment at the time of the marriage, and continued to work after it. The husband was employed as a lorry driver.

It was common ground according to the evidence given before the justice that the marriage was an unhappy one from shortly after its beginning. The wife complained that her husband consistently neglected her, adopted a domineering attitude towards her, continually complained of her deficiencies as a housewife, though giving her little or no assistance, frequently abused and threatened her, and on occasions assaulted her.

The husband agreed that he did complain, and said that he had good cause for so doing, alleging that she did not look after the house, but allowed it to get into a filthy condition; did not look after him, as regards his meals or mending; and neglected the child in regard to his feeding, care and general supervision. He said in evidence that she was no good as a wife or a mother, and admitted having struck her twice, and further that he had told her many times that he had no love for her, and that she got on his nerves.

Shortly after the birth of the child, in June, 1956, the husband's sister, Mrs. Oliver, came to live with the parties, bringing with her two children of her own, and a coloured boy to whom she was acting as foster-parent with a view to adopting him. Mrs. Oliver remained with them until July 19, 1957, and while she was there she did the bulk of the housework, and looked after the child Stephen while the wife was away at work, which was from about 6.30 a.m. to 6.30 p.m., during the week.

In May, 1957, the husband ceased to have intercourse with his wife, moving into a separate room. He did so, he said, because of certain statements which he overheard his wife make to Mrs. Oliver.

There were two conversations involved, the first taking place in December, 1956, when he said he heard his wife speak of a fellow-employee, one Hall, saying that he was very handsome, and that he had said that he wished that he and she (the wife) could spend more time alone, and that he was in love with her. The wife added that she thought he really meant it. The husband said he did not think much about this conversation, though later, in cross-examination, he said he was "suspicious." But he said it was the second conversation which made him cease to sleep with his wife. This occurred in May, 1957, when he heard her tell his sister that her workmates, waiting in the queue for the truck, used to convey them from the works where she and Hall were employed, had said to her: "Come on Joyce, "we've got homes to go to, even if you haven't." She added that she had been kissing and cuddling Hall in the adjoining canteen, and had made Hall "conscious of himself," and that

1958

Cox
v.
Cox.

the other drivers had said to Hall "put a coat over it, Stan," a remark which she had subsequently repeated (she said) as a joke.

Mrs. Oliver did not discriminate between the two conversations: her version was that the wife told her that she and Stan Hall had got to the stage of kissing and cuddling in the canteen or shed; that Hall loved her; that he used to hang back (that is, delay his departure) so that she could kiss him; and that she had made him conscious that he was a man, and that his mates had told him to put a coat over himself.

The wife in cross-examination agreed that she had mentioned Hall to Mrs. Oliver, but denied having said that Hall loved her, or that she had been kissing and cuddling in the canteen.

Some two days after hearing this conversation the husband spoke to the wife about it, and he said that her reply was that Hall was just a driver at the works—there was nothing in it—they were all as bad as one another, and it was not true. He stated that she then added "a slice off a cut loaf is never "missed," a remark which the wife agreed she had made, but said it was made at another time, and not in connexion with Hall.

The husband then said to his wife "You have been having "dealings with this man Hall," to which she replied that Hall was a decent man and devoted to his wife and daughter.

The husband consulted a solicitor, and thereafter he acted upon the solicitor's advice. He moved, as already stated, into a separate room, ceasing to have sexual intercourse with the wife, and shortly thereafter withdrew from any form of common matrimonial life.

On October 7, 1957, the justices for the Petty Sessional Division of Tisbury and Mere sitting at Tisbury dismissed the wife's complaints that the husband had deserted her, had wilfully neglected to provide reasonable maintenance for her and had been guilty of persistent cruelty. They found that the husband had a reasonable and bona fide belief that the wife had committed adultery and had withdrawn from cohabitation because of that belief. From the dismissal of the first two charges the wife appealed on the ground that the findings were against the weight of the evidence.

J. F. E. Stephenson for the wife.

Dimitry Tolstoy for the husband.

The following cases were cited in argument in addition to those referred to in the judgment: Marjoram v. Marjoram [1]; Fisk v. Fisk [2]; Beer v. Beer (Neilson cited) [3]; Jones v. Jones [4];

[1] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 520; [1955] 2 All E.R. 1.

[2] (1920) 36 T.L.R. 248.

[3] [1948] P. 10; 63 T.L.R. 606; [1947] 2 All E.R. 711.

[4] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 867; [1953] 2 All E.R. 345.

Williams v. Williams[5]; Greene v. Greene[6]; Lewis v. Lewis[7]; Price v. Price[8]; Chilton v. Chilton[9]; Jones v. Jones[10]; Ousey v. Ousey and Atkinson.[11]

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 31. COLLINGWOOD J., reading the judgment of the court, referred to the facts substantially as set out above and continued: As to the desertion, the wife alleged that the husband had withdrawn from cohabitation, though the parties remained under the same roof, and the case was conducted before the justices, and before this court, upon the assumption that the circumstances in which the parties were living as from June 22, 1957, amounted to desertion by the husband, unless he could satisfy the court that he had a bona fide and reasonable belief, induced by her conduct, that his wife had committed adultery.

It is unfortunate that no notice of the nature of the case against the wife was given prior to the hearing before the justices. That such notice should be given has been pointed out in a number of cases, including Sullivan v. Sullivan.[1] The first intimation of the line of defence appeared in the cross-examination of the wife, and while it is true that the case was not completed on the first day (October 3, 1957), but adjourned part-heard until October 7, 1957, so that the element of surprise was to that extent diminished, nevertheless the case was not opened or presented on the wife's behalf as it would have been had such notice been given, and one of the grounds of appeal as originally drawn arose out of this, though the matter was not pressed before this court.

The principle invoked by the husband in this case is that laid down in Glenister v. Glenister,[2] in which Lord Merriman P. said[3]: "... if the wife has so conducted herself as to lead "any reasonable person to believe, until she gives some ex-"planation, that she has committed adultery, the husband, "becoming aware of the facts, and honestly drawing that "inference, and leaving his wife on that ground, ought not "to be held to have left her without reasonable cause."

That decision has been followed frequently in this court and has been approved by the Court of Appeal in Allen v. Allen[4] and West v. West.[5]

The first question which arises is: Does the evidence support the justices' finding of fact that the husband withdrew from

[5] [1943] 2 All E.R. 746.
[6] [1916] P. 188; 32 T.L.R. 520.
[7] [1956] P. 205n.; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 862n.; [1955] 3 All E.R. 598.
[8] [1951] P. 413; [1951] 2 All E.R. 580n.
[9] [1952] P. 196; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1316; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1322.
[10] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1474; [1954] 3 All E.R. 476n.
[11] (1874) L.R. 3 P. & D. 223.
[1] [1956] 1 W.L.R. 277n.; [1956] 1 All E.R. 611n.
[2] [1945] P. 30; [1945] 1 All E.R. 513.
[3] [1945] P. 30, 38.
[4] [1951] 1 All E.R. 724.
[5] [1954] P. 444; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 163; [1954] 2 All E.R. 505.

1958

Cox
v.
Cox.

cohabitation because he honestly believed his wife had committed adultery?

The husband said in evidence "I thought she was having "intercourse with Hall," and that he ceased to have intercourse with his wife because of the conversation which he overheard in May, 1957, and the justices accepted his evidence. It was urged on behalf of the appellant wife that, on his own admission, the husband had lost all interest in and affection for his wife long before May, 1957; that he regarded her as no good as a wife or a mother, and that what he did was to seize with avidity on an excuse to be rid of her. Be that as it may, we do not think we can say there was no evidence to justify the finding of the justices upon this point. The circumstances referred to, however, as to the husband's state of mind, are not without relevance to the second question, viz.: Was his belief that of a reasonable man, and was it based upon reasonable grounds?

His belief was founded, and founded solely, upon what he had heard his wife say to his sister, together with his wife's subsequent conversation with him.

The wife's statement to her sister-in-law amounts to the fact that the man Hall had evinced an affection for her; that she was gratified by his attentions, and had indulged in kissing and embracing with him, to an extent which had avowedly produced sexual excitement. This had taken place in the daytime, in the canteen at the works where both were employed, at a time when, with others, they were waiting for the truck, and in circumstances in which their conduct was obvious to a number of fellow-employees, who had been moved to ribald jests. There was no evidence of any association between the two at any other time or place. In our opinion the circumstances above described preclude the commission of adultery there and then. But we were invited to hold that the wife's behaviour, as disclosed in her conversation with her sister-in-law, showed that she had an inclination to commit adultery, and that her hours of absence from home of necessity afforded an opportunity of indulging that inclination. But assuming, as we are prepared to assume, that what the wife said did amount to evidence of inclination to commit adultery, as distinct from a mere willingness to indulge in amorous dalliance falling short of adultery, we do not think that the necessary element of opportunity to indulge the inclination can be left to be inferred in the absence of any evidence to support it.

In our opinion the evidence in the husband's possession as to his wife's conduct was not such as to afford reasonable grounds for believing that she had committed adultery. He was disposed to put the worst construction on anything she said or did—but the test of reasonableness is an objective one.

We were invited by counsel for the respondent husband to say that if the evidence did not disclose reasonable grounds for believing that the wife had committed adultery then nevertheless her conduct was, in itself, such a grave and weighty matter as to justify the husband in leaving her, and in support of this contention we were referred to Haswell v. Haswell and Sanderson.[6]

That was a petition by a husband by reason of his wife's adultery. The marriage had taken place without the knowledge of the parents of either party, and the wife continued to live with her mother, where the husband visited her from time to time. On one such visit he discovered his wife in a room upstairs with a man who had his arm round her and his hand on her breast. After consideration he decided to have nothing more to do with his wife and never again visited her mother's house.

Subsequently the wife cohabited with another man, and there was no doubt as to her adultery with him. But the decision turned on the construction of the proviso to section 31 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857.[7] The court held[8] that the petitioner, having found his wife submitting to indecent liberties, had, on that ground, never returned to her mother's house where she resided. The Judge Ordinary continued[9]: "It is not "necessary for the court to say whether this would have justi- "fied him in turning her out of his house; that it would have "enabled him to resist an action of debt for necessaries supplied "her, or would have been a sufficient answer in a suit for "restitution of conjugal rights. But the question is, whether "we are in a position to exercise a discretionary power. The "adultery has been fully proved, and we cannot say that the "petitioner comes within the description of a person 'wilfully "'separating himself without reasonable excuse.' The discre- "tionary power therefore does not exist. The petitioner is "entitled to a decree."

With regard to that decision it is to be noted that the Judge Ordinary expressly refrained from deciding whether the wife's conduct was such as to justify the husband in turning her out, or would have afforded an answer to a suit for restitution. Further, the circumstances differ considerably from those in the present case. In Haswell v. Haswell and Sanderson[10] the wife was found in the home indulging in an act of sexual familiarity.

However that may be, we are not considering whether the facts in Haswell's case[11] would, or would not, bring the case within the principle laid down in Glenister v. Glenister.[12] But

[6] (1859) 1 Sw. & Tr. 502.

[7] Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, s. 31: ". . . Provided always, that "the Court shall not be bound to "pronounce such decree . . . if the "petitioner shall, in the opinion of "the Court, have been guilty of . . . "having deserted or wilfully sepa- "rated himself or herself from the "other party before the adultery "complained of, and without any "reasonable excuse, . . ."

[8] 1 Sw. & Tr. 502, 504.

[9] Ibid. 505.

[10] 1 Sw. & Tr. 502.

[11] Ibid.

[12] [1945] P. 30.

1958

Cox
v.
Cox.

we think that, because of the nature of the offence of adultery, the principle of that case should not be extended beyond its proper scope. For example, it would be going further than is warranted by the reasoning upon which the decision in Glenister v. Glenister [13] is based to hold that a husband would be justified in leaving his wife upon the belief that she had been cruel to him; or that she had given him some other ground for complaint which he reasonably believed would afford him the right to leave her. It is sufficient to say that we do not think it would be right in this case, despite the wide terms of Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957, r. 73 (7), to decide the case upon an entirely new issue which was never adumbrated in the court below, and which involves a finding of fact as to which no evidence was given. The husband's case from first to last was that he left his wife because he believed she had committed adultery. In our opinion that was not a reasonable belief, and we do not think we ought now to enter into a consideration of the further question whether he would have been justified in leaving her, without his having drawn the unjustifiable inference to which he himself ascribes the separation.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Butt & Bowyer for Rutter & Rutter, Wincanton; Markham Thorp & Co. for Farnfield & Nicholls, Gillingham (Dorset).

E. J.

[13] [1945] P. 30.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1958
Jan. 16, 17;
Feb. 13.

Lord Evershed M.R., Sellers L.J. and Harman J.

* O'CONNOR v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION.

[Plaint No. 458 A.]

Railway—Negligence—Child—Killed by falling from corridor guard's van in express train — Internal handle to door — Duty of care to three-year-old child—Whether danger reasonably foreseeable—Whether commission entitled to assume supervision of young child by responsible person—Whether insurers of safety.

Negligence—Child—Injury to—Railway—Child killed by fall from corridor guard's van—Internal handle to door—Whether danger reasonably foreseeable.

A child aged three years and ten months, travelling with his mother on the Irish mail train from Holyhead to London, fell out of a corridor-type guard's van and was killed. The guard's van was between the passenger coaches and the restaurant car and the child had been waiting there with his mother until tea was ready to be served in the restaurant car. In proceedings brought by the child's father against the commission the mother said that she had told the child not to go near the door because she realized that it was a danger. The judge found that her attention had been diverted and that, despite her injunction, the child had wandered to the door and had opened it. The door handle was on the inside and was not defective, but the evidence showed that it could be opened by a small child:—

Held, that the standard of care owed by the defendants as carriers for reward, though high, fell short of insuring the safety of their passengers, and that although they were under a duty to take due care, they were entitled to assume that a child of this age would be accompanied by a responsible person who would look after it.

Dicta of Montague Smith J. in Readhead v. Midland Railway Co. (1868–69) L.R. 4 Q.B. 379, 393, and of Lord Shaw in Glasgow Corporation v. Taylor [1922] 1 A.C. 44, 61; 38 T.L.R. 102 applied.

(2) That it was not reasonably foreseeable that a mother who was, admittedly, aware of the danger would have let her child wander across the carriage.

Appeal from Judge Bensley Wells, sitting at Marylebone County Court.

On July 24, 1953, at about 4 p.m., John Gerald O'Connor, aged three years ten months, fell out of a door on the Irish mail train whilst it was travelling from Holyhead to London and was killed.

The following statement of the facts is taken from the judgment of Sellers L.J. The child was travelling with its mother, and at Holyhead they had taken their seats in the second coach from the front of the train. During the journey they had left their seats and gone down the train (in a rearwards direction) to have tea in the restaurant car. The train was full and people were obstructing the corridors. As she was required to wait some ten minutes or so for tea the mother, with the child, came up the train again to a guard's van through which she had just passed on her way to the car. Another mother with a baby 18 months old was travelling in the van, and Mrs. O'Connor decided to wait there rather than push her way back along the corridors to her compartment. Mrs. O'Connor's account of what happened after she entered the guard's van was accepted by the judge, and was this: "I was not holding the child by the hand when we came "into the guard's van. The child walked away from me towards "the guard's door. I called him back, and he came. I told him "not to go near the door. I then asked a lady passenger for a "light for my cigarette. She was standing in front of the letter "rack on the left-hand side of the van. While she was standing "there with her lighter I had my back to the door in question. "At that moment I looked round and saw the child with his "right hand on the window strap of the door behind me, and he "seemed to be going out of the door. He went out head first. "The last I saw of him was his feet." Then she was cross-examined, and she stated: "I agree that you always have to "keep an eye on a child of that age. It was the first time he had "ever been in a train. I called him back from the door, because "I realized that the door was a danger. He came back. I was

C. A.
1958
O'Connor v. British Transport Commission.

"standing just in front of the letter rack on the left of the com-"municating door when I called the boy back. The whole thing "happened in a flash." The judge found as follows: "On the "evidence before me I have no doubt at all that this little boy "unfortunately opened that door himself; that is why this door "opened, because the child interfered with it." There was evidence that a child of this age might be able to pull down the handle sufficiently to open the door. The judge rejected other suggestions as to the possible cause of the accident, as, for example, that the door might have been flung open accidentally by someone, presumably the child, being thrust against it.

On these findings by the judge it was submitted on behalf of the plaintiff, the child's father, that the commission were at fault and were responsible for the accident in having on the lock of the door of the guard's compartment the particular type of handle, that is, a metal vertical handle, two feet from the ground to the bottom of the handle, or in having an internal handle at all. The lock was of the safety type which, if opened slightly, or if not properly pulled to, rested securely on a latch and would not be released so as to open fully until the handle was lowered to the right between 95 degrees and 100 degrees.

The judge dismissed the plaintiff's claim and he appealed. At the hearing of the appeal attention was drawn to evidence given before the judge and notes by him. First, the guard of the train gave evidence to the effect that the coach from which the child fell was a passenger-carrying coach and that the guard's compartment was serving as a luggage van. He himself was in a similar van towards the end of the train with two other passenger-carrying coaches behind it. Secondly, evidence was given before the judge by a Mr. Roe who, as carriage and wagon inspector at Crewe when the accident occurred, had inspected the train from which the child fell when it arrived at Crewe. Mr. Roe said that the coach in question was built in 1938 and had been overhauled and returned to service only a month before the accident happened. Internal handles, he said, other than the "squeeze" type, were not used in passenger-carrying coaches for safety reasons, and brake vans with this type of handle were not normally used in passenger trains or at any rate not in such a position that passengers might have to pass through them. He added, however, that that might have to be done if the train was going to be split in the course of its journey, for then a brake van of this type would be put in the middle of the train and when the train was split it would be split before that coach. Until the split occurred the middle brake van would be used as a corridor. Normally speaking a luggage van through which passengers might have to pass had no internal handle. The witness further said that the type of handle had been introduced in guard's vans in 1930 for the avowed purpose of assisting the guard in the performance of his duties because the handle was easier to open from the inside than the "squeeze" type. Since 1946 the rolling stock was of a different design, but there were still more than 20 vans of the old type in use in main line trains at the time when the accident occurred. This evidence was not relied upon in argument, apparently, and the judge made no finding on it.

H. I. Nelson Q.C. and P. J. H. Benenson for the plaintiff.

A. P. Marshall Q.C. and C. W. R. Pickthorn for the commission.

In addition to the cases referred to in the judgments, the following were cited in argument: Easson v. London and North Eastern Railway Co.[1]; Haseldine v. C. A. Daw & Son Ltd.[2]; Wilkinson v. Rea Ltd.[3]; Paris v. Stepney Borough Council[4]; R. Addie & Sons (Collieries) v. Dumbreck[5]; Woods v. Duncan[6]; Christie v. Griggs.[7]

Cur. adv. vult.

February 13. Lord Evershed M.R. I will ask Sellers L.J. to deliver the first judgment.

Sellers L.J. [having stated the facts as set out above and referred to the evidence given by Roe on behalf of the commission:] I do not feel it would be right to hold that the commission knew or had any suspicion that the type of handle in the guard's van was in any way unsafe or that the van in question was old and unsuitable for use on a main line train where it would be used as a thoroughfare by persons who had occasion to move along the corridors to the restaurant car and to a lavatory. The type of handle had been brought into use to assist the guard in his duties, but as passengers were entitled, and expected, to pass through this compartment it was necessary that the construction of the handle should have regard to their safety. If it was of such a nature that accidental pressure against it might open it, then it was to be condemned, but after careful inquiry the judge rejected this, and rightly so. There was nothing defective in the handle or the lock and there was no evidence or even suggestion that any such accident had occurred or had been contemplated as possible by anyone before.

In these somewhat formidable circumstances Mr. Nelson submitted that the judge had misdirected himself in law in failing to impose a sufficiently high standard of duty on the commission as carriers for reward and had, in effect at least, associated or identified the child with the mother. The judge said: "If a mother is taking her child along the corridor of a "train she must exercise such control over it that she does not

[1] [1944] K.B. 421; 60 T.L.R. 280; [1944] 2 All E.R. 425.
[2] [1941] 2 K.B. 343; 58 T.L.R. 1; [1941] 3 All E.R. 156.
[3] [1941] 1 K.B. 688; [1941] 2 All E.R. 50.
[4] [1951] A.C. 367; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 25; [1951] 1 All E.R. 42.
[5] [1929] A.C. 358; 45 T.L.R. 267.
[6] [1946] A.C. 401; 62 T.L.R. 283; [1946] 1 All E.R. 420n., H.L.
[7] (1809) 2 Camp. 79.

C. A.
1958
O'CONNOR v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION.
Sellers L.J.

"allow it to open doors." I do not read that as identifying the child with its mother's want of care in the sense of treating her negligence as its negligence, but it is an important factor in considering the duty and the alleged breach of duty of the defendants.

Mr. Nelson, in the course of his argument, took this passage from Erle C.J.'s summing-up in Ford v. London and South Western Railway Co.[1]: "The railway company is bound to take "reasonable care; to use the best precautions in known practical "use, for securing the safety and convenience of their passengers." Applying that to this case, counsel urged that as modern passenger-carrying coaches had no internal handles at all the commission failed to comply with modern standards and were, therefore, in breach of their duty. He also referred to Barkway v. South Wales Transport Co. Ltd.,[2] a case of a passenger in an omnibus which overturned, and submitted that even if the commission had complied with the recognized and general practice, that was not necessarily sufficient. It may often prove unreliable or misleading to extract a sentence from a judgment, still more perhaps from a summing-up to a jury, and to treat it as a complete statement of the law. Erle C.J. was addressing a jury in 1862, and in the course of the summing-up he added[3]: "You "are to consider what is reasonable care, and whether they have "used the proper precautions. They are entrusted with most "important interests, with human lives, and a jury may reason- "ably require an amount of care proportioned to those interests. "At the same time a jury would not be entitled to expect the "utmost care that could possibly be conceived, or the highest "possible degree of skill. It is to be borne in mind that railways "themselves are of recent introduction, and that their manage- "ment is a matter of experience and of practical knowledge "which increases day by day. It is not to be expected that the "directors shall at once have in use every invention or discovery "of science. It is sufficient if they use every precaution in "known practical use, for the safety and convenience of the "passengers." The allegations against the defendants in that case, which concerned a train which had run off the line, were, amongst others, that the tyre of one of the wheels of the tender was in an improper state and that the gauge between the two lines varied somewhat in places.

In Barkway's case[4] the complaint was that the omnibus ran off the road because of a defective tyre. In vehicles of either nature, on rail or on road, it is obvious that defective or unsuitable wheels are potentially dangerous and may lead to accidents, likewise, in the case of railways, a defective or inadequate railroad. These are plainly matters for those in charge of vehicles or railways to guard against and demand high standards of care, and

[1] (1862) 2 F. & F. 730, 732.
[2] [1950] A.C. 185; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 597; [1950] 1 All E.R. 392.
[3] 2 F. & F. 730, 733.
[4] [1950] A.C. 185.

established practices are cogent evidence. Erle C.J. pointed out that railways were then in their infancy and one can comment that they had not perhaps reached a very high standard of reliability. His words must be read, I think, in relation to the circumstances then existing, for I do not understand it to be universal law that every railway or omnibus or taxicab or passenger aircraft undertaking which trades for reward must have the latest standard of design in the way submitted by counsel. Economically and practically it would be impossible and would involve carriers who were on one day apparently fulfilling their obligations, becoming, by some improvement, automatically in breach of duty to their customers on the next or at least within such reasonable time as the improvement could have been known and adopted. If the passage relied on by counsel is to be examined more closely, it puts passengers' convenience in the same category as that of their safety, and read literally would seem to require all passenger compartments to have the same facilities. I think the emphasis in the address to the jury was in regard to precautions against dangers, and the real questions in such cases are whether there was a danger and whether reasonable care and foresight should have foreseen it and avoided it.

The duty imposed on railway companies is, I think, correctly and conveniently summarized from the cases cited in support of the summary in Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd ed., vol. 4, pp. 174, 175: "Carriers of passengers are not insurers of the "safety of the persons whom they carry, neither do they warrant "the soundness or sufficiency of their vehicles. Their under-"taking is to take all due care, and to carry safety as far as "reasonable care and forethought can attain that end. . . . "Carriers of passengers are answerable for the soundness and "sufficiency of their vehicles, and are liable for any defect which "careful and reasonable examination would reveal." Soundness and sufficiency of vehicles includes suitability of design in relation to safety.

To those statements I would add some observations from the judgment of Montague Smith J. in Readhead v. Midland Railway Co.[5] This is a leading case on this topic. He delivered the judgment of the six judges sitting in the Exchequer Chamber. He said[6]: "We do not attempt to define, nor is it necessary to "do so, all the liabilities which the obligation to take due care "imposes on the carriers of passengers. Nor is it necessary, "inasmuch as the case negatives any fault on the part of the "manufacturer, to determine to what extent and under what "circumstances they may be liable for the want of care on the "part of those they employ to construct works, or to make or "furnish the carriages and other things they use. See on this "point Grote v. Chester and Holyhead Railway Co.[7] 'Due [5] (1868–69) L.R. 4 Q.B. 379.

[6] Ibid. 393.
[7] (1848) 2 Ex. 251.

C. A.
1958
O'Connor v. British Transport Commission.
Sellers L.J.

"'care' however undoubtedly means, having reference to the "nature of the contract to carry, a high degree of care, and casts "on carriers the duty of exercising all vigilance to see that "whatever is required for the safe conveyance of their passengers "is in fit and proper order." This is familiar law with regard to the duty of those carrying passengers for reward, and I can see no indication that the county court judge applied any lower or different standard in arriving at the conclusion that the defendants were not in breach of duty.

The defendants as carriers of passengers could not in my view be held (apart from special agreement) to expect to carry a child under four years of age (or even considerably older) unaccompanied by a responsible person to look after it. If that were within their contemplation and experience, it seems that the commission's junior counsel used the right term when he said they would have to make the coaches and the journeys "baby-"proof." A train normally swerves, rocks or jolts at some stage of its journey, and a young child could, if unattended, be knocked over or against the framework of the train with considerable risk of injury. In this case the mother said that the child was frightened as they crossed to get between the coaches and clung to her for safety. A train stops at stations, doors are opened, and perhaps not closed until the train is due to leave. An unattended child would be confronted with many dangers, and indeed would not know when it had reached its intended destination.

I think the commission were required to make provision for the safety of children of tender years on the basis that they would be accompanied by someone capable of looking after them. Ought, then, the commission to have foreseen that an accident of this kind might occur to a young child accompanied by its mother, that in the course of the journey this handle might be opened by a very young child? The trial judge thought not, and I agree with him. It is, of course, dangerous to open a carriage door when a train is in motion and highly dangerous to do so when it is travelling at any speed. It is so surprising and shocking to find that a child under four had ever got into the position that it was able to do so that it makes one wonder whether the true cause of the accident has been established. But no other explanation is forthcoming. The door could have been locked, no doubt, and that would have shut passengers in, but an emergency might have arisen when passengers might wish to get out quickly and a locked door would have prevented it and might well have been the subject of complaint. The absence of an internal handle may have its difficulties if an urgent exit is necessary on train or omnibus.

The case reveals a most regrettable accident, but I agree with the judge in holding that it would be putting too high a duty on the commission to find them responsible here. It would in substance be making them insurers of the child's safety and they are not so in law.

I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal.

Harman J. Mr. Nelson, in opening this appeal, was content to rest his case upon one point, a point of law. His submission was that the county court judge had misdirected himself on the degree of liability of a common carrier. He would have us hold that his duty is in a category higher than that of an invitor towards his invitee, and that it lay in a territory between that and the duty of an insurer—lower than the latter admittedly, but higher, he submitted, than the former. The judge based himself upon Phipps v. Rochester Corporation,[8] a case of an invitee or licensee, and therefore rejected the submission that the fact that there was a contract of carriage for reward sufficed to heighten the degree of obligation. He himself observed, after giving judgment, that he based himself on the law, the facts being, as he thought, "so obvious."

There were then in the county court no disputed facts. The real bone of contention was whether in putting a coach of this sort in a position between dining car and passenger coaches the commission had fallen below the standard required of them, and what that standard was.

In this court there emerged a point which so far as appears was never agitated in the county court at all, and which, therefore, could not have been an element operating on the judge's mind. The point is this. The evidence showed that it is unusual to put a coach of this type in this position. [His Lordship referred to the evidence of Mr. Roe summarized above, and continued:] Further, the evidence shows that in passenger corridors internal handles have been altogether abolished, and that for safety reasons. If then it could be established that the commission do not ordinarily put this type of coach anywhere except at the end of a train because it was realized that this handle constitutes a danger to passengers, there would, I think, be a strong case to be made against them. This was the point which caused the court some anxiety, but it was, as I have said, never canvassed in the court below. The commission's witnesses were never questioned on the point. Their evidence is consistent with the view that these coaches are not usually in the middle of a train, not because they are considered unsafe, or because of the unsuitability of this particular form of door handle, but because this is a generally unsuitable form of coach in a position where it must be used as a corridor. In my judgment there is nothing to justify this court in taking, in effect, a different view of the facts from that taken below: we should be inventing a point never considered and on which neither the plaintiff nor the judge relied.

[8] [1955] 1 Q.B. 450; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 23; [1955] 1 All E.R. 129.

C. A.
1958
O'Connor v. British Transport Commission.
Harman J.

The true question for us is that presented by Mr. Nelson: did the judge take too lenient a view of the commission's obligations and thus misdirect himself? On that I am content to say that I agree with the observations of Sellers L.J. This was not, after all, a part of the train where passengers were invited or even authorized to linger.

The type of door handle was well suited to the proper use of the coach—that is to say, as a guard's or luggage van—and it is not suggested that it was in any way defective, nor was it proved that the door could be opened by pressure or by anything short of turning the handle through an angle of more than 90 degrees. It seems to me that the concluding words of the passage cited by the judge from Phipps v. Rochester Corporation[9] may properly be used to decide the present case. Both the parent and the commission must act reasonably. "'That duty,'" said Devlin J. [citing from Lord Shaw's speech in Glasgow Corporation v. Taylor[10]], "'rests upon both and each: but each is entitled to "'assume it of the other.'" This was a tragic case, but, in my judgment, it was not reasonable to leave a child of under four, who had never been in a train before, the liberty to wander across the carriage when the mother was aware of the temptation and the danger of the door. This is what she did: the commission, in my judgment, were entitled to assume that she would not act in this way, and, therefore, are not liable for the lamentable result.

Lord Evershed M.R. I am in full agreement with the judgments which my brethren have delivered upon the question of the principle of law to be applied. I agree with them that there is no special formula which imposes upon the commission as a common carrier of passengers a standard of liability towards them falling somewhere between that of an insurer and that of an invitor. The standards of reasonableness and foreseeability are, I think, applicable here as they are applicable to the invitor. But the practical result is to be judged in the light of the circumstances attendant upon the carriage of passengers by rail. The commission offer to carry large numbers of persons of both sexes and of all ages and dispositions in trains which are frequently crowded and which are apt to be travelling at high speeds. To fall from a fast travelling train means, almost certainly, death. So it is truly said that there is required a high standard of care to see that the trains and their component parts are free from defects. Doors in the compartments or corridors which are liable to fly open upon a touch, or during the jolting of the train, would inevitably and properly involve the commission in liability for the consequences of their doing so.

But there is here, upon the judge's finding, no question of any defect; nor was the door handle in question of such a kind that it could be accidentally opened by some impact from a passenger. It was the first point preferred by Mr. Nelson in this court, and appears to have been the main argument in the court below, that the commission were liable on the ground that it must be a breach of their duty of care to have in any part of the train, to which passengers had access in the ordinary course, doors capable of being opened (though in all other respects of proper design and construction) by a small child of three or four years of age. I agree with the county court judge and my brethren that this proposition ought not to be sustained; for I agree with them that the commission is entitled to assume that a child of three or four years old, travelling with its mother, will be properly looked after by her.

[9] [1955] 1 Q.B. 450.

[10] [1922] 1 A.C. 44, 61; 38 T.L.R. 102, 107.

If, therefore, there were no more in the case, I should be content to express my agreement with my brethren. But what has troubled me so much—and more, I think, than it has troubled them—is a certain passage in the evidence given on the commission's behalf.

[His Lordship referred to the evidence of Mr. Roe summarized above, and continued:] If the judge's note correctly records the witness's evidence, and if I am free to draw such deductions from that evidence as its language in its context seems fairly to justify, then it would appear to me that Mr. Roe could be taken as stating: (1) that the use of internal handles (other, at any rate, than "squeeze" handles) in any compartments used in the ordinary course by travelling passengers had, at the relevant date, come to be regarded by the commission as involving avoidable risk—that is, through being opened by careless or mischievous persons: and had for that reason been, at the relevant date, wholly discontinued in such compartments; (2) that such handles continued, however, to be used in guards' vans because they could be quickly and easily opened by the guards; and (3) that guards' vans were normally at the rear end of trains, and, therefore, not liable to be used by passengers in moving up and down the trains (for example, for going to and from the restaurant cars); though sometimes where a single train had later to be split, a guard's van would be placed at the appropriate place in the middle of the train. Ought Mr. Roe further to be taken as having said: (4) that the use of a coach having an internal handle of the kind in question—a coach which, be it observed, was not a guard's van properly so-called, but consisted of a number of ordinary passenger compartments with a corridor having the brake van at its end so that it constituted or contained part of the corridor—was not in accordance with normal practice?

If all this is what Mr. Roe said, and (more particularly) if (4) above is justified, then it seems to me that it further could be fairly inferred that the placing of the coach here in question in the position in which it was constituted a departure from the practice which for safety purposes was commonly adopted. In other words, the use of this coach (with an internal handle

C. A.
1958
O'Connor v. British Transport Commission.
Lord Evershed M.R.

designed specially for easy opening by a guard) as part of the corridor accommodation of the passengers was a use which was abnormal because it was regarded as involving exposure of the passengers to a foreseeable (and avoidable) risk: and no explanation or justification was given for the departure from normally accepted practice.

Mr. Nelson much relied upon the passage from the direction given to the jury by Erle C.J. in Ford v. London and South Western Railway Co.,[11] which has been cited by my brother Sellers but which, because of its importance, I also cite here: "The railway company is bound to take reasonable care; to use "the best precautions in known practical use, for securing the "safety and convenience of their passengers . . . They are "entrusted with most important interests, with human lives, and "a jury may reasonably require an amount of care proportionated "to those interests . . . not . . . the highest possible degree of "skill . . . their management is a matter of experience and of "practical knowledge which increases day by day. It is not to "be expected that the directors shall at once have in use every "invention or discovery of science. It is sufficient if they use "every precaution in known practical use for the safety and "convenience of passengers."

The case cited was one concerning a defect in the railway apparatus. The language is, however, of general authority. On the other hand, it is, in my judgment, clear (and implicit indeed in Erle C.J.'s language) that a decision to abandon a particular design of coach in favour of a newer model by reason of a risk of danger in the former appreciated or apprehended does not of itself demand the immediate and total withdrawal of the first class of vehicle. The actual operation of the railway services must, to some extent, be subject to the exigencies of ordinary and prudent management. But here, as I have said, no explanation or justification was given in evidence of what (if Mr. Roe's evidence may fairly be interpreted in the full sense set out above) was regarded at the time as normal (and safe) practice.

If, therefore, the matter rested with me, and if it were permissible to give to Mr. Roe's evidence the full significance above suggested with all the inferences to be drawn therefrom, I think I should be disposed to come to a conclusion in the plaintiff's favour. But it is pointed out by my brethren that this view of the facts does not appear to have been put to the judge. There is no hint of it in his judgment and no findings of fact comparable to those which I have adumbrated; nor was this aspect of the case put to us by Mr. Nelson in his opening. It is, therefore, the view of my brethren that to draw the conclusions which, I have suggested, might be derived from Mr. Roe's evidence is to invent a case; to assume, without any warrant in the judgment of the judge who heard the witnesses, what the evidence really was. In all the circumstances, though I have thought it right to express the serious doubts which I have felt and the reasons for them, I do not on the whole desire to dissent from my brothers' conclusion in favour of dismissing the appeal.

[11] 2 F. & F. 720.

Appeal dismissed.

C. A.
1958
O'Connor v. British Transport Commission.

Solicitors: Claude Barker & Partners; M. H. B. Gilmour.

E. D.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

*FATSTOCK MARKETING CORPORATION LTD. v. MORGAN (VALUATION OFFICER).

C. A.
1958
Feb. 17, 18, 19.
Lord Evershed M.R., Parker and Sellers L.JJ.

Rates and Rating—Industrial hereditament—Slaughterhouse—"Adapting for sale of any article"—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22), s. 149—Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 44), s. 3.
Factory—Definition.

The appellants owned a slaughterhouse where, after the initial operation of killing, the normal good slaughterhouse procedure was followed and the offals, intestines and so forth were separated from the main carcase, which was then cooled to get it into a fit state for human consumption and divided for ease of handling. The intestines were further processed. The Lands Tribunal held that the slaughterhouse was not a factory or workshop within the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901,[1] and, accordingly, was not entitled to be entered on the valuation list as an "industrial "hereditament" within section 3 of the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928[2]:—

Held, (1) that the code of legislation controlling slaughterhouses was directed to a distinct and quite different purpose from that contemplated by the Factory Acts, the slaughterhouse legislation being directed to the securing of cleanliness for the benefit of the public and to the elimination, so far as practicable, of cruelty to animals when slaughtered; the Factory Acts, on the other hand, were designed to give protection to persons working in factories; the purposes of the two, however, were not mutually exclusive and the Factory Acts were capable of applying to slaughterhouses.

[1] Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, s. 149 (1): ". . . the following expressions have in this Act the meanings hereby assigned to them; that is to say: . . . The expression 'non-textile factory' means—. . . (c) any premises wherein . . . any manual labour is exercised by way of trade . . . in or incidental to any of the following purposes, namely— . . . (iii) the adapting for sale of any article, . . . The expression 'workshop' means— . . . (b) any premises, . . . not being a factory, in which . . . any manual labour is exercised by way of trade . . . in . . . (iii) the adapting for sale of any article."

[2] Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928, s. 3: "(1) In this Act the expression 'industrial 'hereditament' means a hereditament . . . occupied and used as a . . . factory or workshop. (2) . . . the expressions 'factory' and 'workshop' have respectively the same meanings as in the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1901 to 1920."

C. A.

1958

Fatstock Marketing Corporation Ltd. v. Morgan (Valuation Officer).

(2) That whether the whole series of operations which went on in a slaughterhouse, including the killing, amounted to an adaptation of an article for sale, was a matter of degree and of fact and the Lands Tribunal having come to the conclusion that the primary use of the premises was to produce meat for human consumption and that the killing was subsidiary to that main purpose, the operations of the slaughterhouse did amount, within the meaning of the Factory Act legislation, to an adapting of an article for sale and, accordingly, the slaughterhouse was a factory or workshop within the provisions of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, and an industrial hereditament within section 3 (1) of the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928.

Surrey Revenue Officer v. Clarkson; Rotherham Revenue Officer v. Rotherham Co-operative Society [1931] 2 English Derating Appeals 53; Woolwich Revenue Officer v. Royal Arsenal Co-operative Society Ltd. [1931] 2 English Derating Appeals 282 and Inland Revenue Officer v. Assessor for Edinburgh, 1930 S.C. 429 applied.

Appeal from the Lands Tribunal.

The appellants, the Fatstock Marketing Corporation Ltd., appealed from a decision of the Local Valuation Court for North Glamorgan rejecting the appellant's proposal that hereditaments described as a slaughterhouse at Ynys Road, Aberdare, owned and occupied by the appellants, should be transferred to Part II of the valuation list for the Aberdare Urban District Rating Area as an industrial hereditament within section 3 of the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928.

The following statement of facts is taken from the decision of the Lands Tribunal:—

"The premises comprise a stock yard for the reception of "livestock, lairages for cattle, sheep and pigs where the live-"stock is pined before killing, three slaughter bays, one for "cattle, one for sheep and calves, and one for pigs, two hanging "rooms adjoining these bays, a condemned meat room, a gut "room, a skin room, mess room, offices and stores.

"Upon the premises the appellants employ a manager, two "salesmen, a cashier and clerk, all engaged upon administrative "work, a checkweigher, a stockman and caretaker, a lorry driver "and six slaughtermen all of whom are licensed slaughterers "under the Slaughter of Animals Act, 1933, and who work "together as a team. In the case of cattle, the animals, after "pining, are taken to the appropriate slaughter bay where they "are stunned with a humane killer and a cane is inserted "through the hole made by the captive bolt to ensure complete "unconsciousness, the neck veins are then severed and the blood "drains away. This bleeding serves the double purpose of "killing the animal and preventing putrefaction of the tissues. "While the carcase is still warm and before rigor mortis sets "in, the horns, if any, head and feet are removed, the hide or "skin is removed, the body cavity opened and the loose fat "surrounding the stomach, the white offal, i.e., stomach and "intestines, the glands, the red offal, i.e., lungs, liver, heart "and windpipe, are removed and a certain amount of trimming "of the carcase takes place. All those operations, together "with frequent washing, wiping and cleaning take place in the "slaughter bay, the body being slung on a hoist by the hind "legs at appropriate heights for the carrying out of the different "operations. The carcase is then suspended from an overhead "rail and pushed into the hanging room. In the case of cattle, "the carcase is here split into two sides by a mechanically "operated saw, but no such division of the carcase takes place "in the case of sheep or calves. The carcases are then finally "cleaned and washed and together with the red offal and the "white offal after further treatment would remain in the hanging "room till sale, and while there are inspected by the food "inspector of the local authority and graded by an authorized "officer of the Ministry of Agriculture under the Fatstock "Guarantee Scheme. Any meat condemned by the inspector is "removed to the condemned meat room where it is further "examined, unfit meat removed and sound meat brought out for "sale. While in the hanging room the meat cools to atmos-"pheric temperature and sets due to rigor mortis, and this "cooling and setting is necessary to get the meat into proper "condition for human consumption. Prior to sale, which usually "takes place the day following slaughter, the sides of beef are "weighed and further subdivided into quarters for ease of "handling.

"The red offal is normally sold to the butcher buying the "side of beef, together with the head and tongue. If there is no "demand for heads, they are boned out on the hereditament, "the meat being sold to butchers or sausage makers and the "bones to a bone crusher.

"The edible fats are sold, after cooling in the hanging room, "to a fat melter, who converts them into dripping.

"The stomach, which is full of undigested and partially "digested food, is taken outside the building, emptied and swilled "out, and after the fat and trimmings have been removed is then "hung up in the hanging room until sold to a tripe dresser.

"The intestines while still warm are taken to the gut room "where the fat is separated from the intestines which are "then stripped of their contents and prepared for further "processing either on or off the premises for beef casings.

"The horns, hoof and inedible fats are then placed in the "yard for sale to technical fat processors for glues, fertilizers "and tallow, while the hides are similarly placed and sold to hide "merchants.

"Certain of the glands are placed in a freezing cabinet in the "hanging room and are subsequently sold for medical purposes.

"The processes in the case of sheep and calves are generally "the same save that the carcases are not divided.

"The procedure in the case of pigs is very similar save that "after killing the carcases are put into scalding tubs and then

C. A.
1958
Fatstock Marketing Corporation Ltd. v. Morgan (Valuation Officer).

"scraped by hand to remove hair. The intestines are further "cleaned and scraped in the skin room so as to convert them "into sausage skins, which are sold to butchers or sausage "makers.

"A certain amount of pig blood is collected for sale for the "manufacture of black puddings, etc.

"It was agreed by the expert witnesses called on behalf of "both appellants and respondents that the whole of the pro-"cesses carried out on the premises constituted the normal good "slaughterhouse procedure.

"It was further agreed by these witnesses that if a beast was "merely killed and the further processes carried out on the "premises did not immediately follow, the flesh would be unfit "for human consumption. The carcase of a cattle beast would "only realize from £5 to £6 as the price of a dead beast to a "knacker, whereas an estimated total of £67 10s. would be "obtained for the carcase, meat, hide, red offal and white offals "after the processes had been carried out on the hereditaments "by sales to the various purchasers already enumerated."

The Lands Tribunal stated its conclusion thus: "We have "come to the decision upon the evidence before us that the "primary purpose of the occupation and use of the premises is "to produce meat for human consumption and by-products for "sale, and that the actual killing is subsidiary to this main "purpose. It is clear that if nothing was done but killing, the "resultant carcases would be of little value; it is only because "the carcases are dressed in the way we have described that "they satisfy the requirements of the Fatstock Guarantee "Scheme and are saleable as meat for human consumption, and "that the by-products are rendered fit for sale."

The tribunal further stated that: "In the present case it is "also clear that we cannot hold that the whole process carried "on is an adaptation of an article for sale since the live beast "which goes in is not an 'article,' and it is, we think, only by "some straining of the language that we can describe the opera-"tion as an adaptation of the dead beast or the dead beast as an "'article' . . . In these circumstances we do not think that "it is possible to hold that the legislature contemplated such "premises as these in the definition of a 'factory or workshop' "in the Act of 1901."

The company appealed.

Michael Rowe Q.C. and W. L. Roots for the appellants.

G. D. Squibb Q.C. and C. E. Scholefield for the valuation officer.

The following case referred to in argument was not mentioned in the judgments: Thomas v. British Thomson-Houston Co. Ltd.[3]

[3] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 67; [1953] 1 All E.R. 29.

LORD EVERSHED M.R. The question in this appeal is thus presented by the case stated: Whether upon the findings of fact we came to a correct decision in law in holding that the hereditament (that is the appellants' slaughterhouse) is not a factory or workshop within the provisions of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901.

That is a correct posing of the true problem in the case. But this is a rating appeal and the question in the first instance is strictly whether under the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928, the hereditament is an "industrial hereditament," an expression which by section 3 (1) of that Act is defined to mean a hereditament occupied and used as a factory or workshop. Certain exceptions follow in the subsection, including, in paragraph (f), that where the hereditament is primarily occupied and used for "any other purposes, whether or not similar to any of the "foregoing, which are not those of a factory or workshop." By subsection (2) of section 3 it is provided, putting it shortly, that, subject as there stated, the words "factory" and "workshop" have respectively the same meanings as they have in the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1901 to 1920. So the matter comes back to the application of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, and it is a proper formulation, in the end of all, of the problem before us to ask whether this hereditament is a factory or workshop within the provisions of the Act of 1901.

By section 149 of that Act elaborate definitions are provided. So far as relevant, it suffices to say that the expressions "factory" and "workshop" mean premises wherein any manual labour is exercised by way of trade or for purposes of gain in or incidental to any of the following purposes, including "the adapting for sale of any article." It was pointed out to us in argument that in the case of a factory there has to be the added condition stated in paragraph (c), relating to the use of power, but that condition does not apply in the case of a workshop. In the end the question is whether it can be said that the operations in the appellants' slaughterhouse are conducted for the purpose of adapting articles for sale.

Before leaving the Act of 1901 it will be convenient to point out that earlier in section 149 reference is made to a list of factories and workshops contained in Parts I and II of the Sixth Schedule. The list enumerates many familiar instances, such as print works and earthenware works and such like, but it is clear, and would not be disputed, that that list is by no means exhaustive. It is pointed out by way of example that there is included no instance of chemical works in the list, well known though those must have been at the time; nor is there comprehended any reference to a brewery or a distillery.

I return to the problem whether the operations of the slaughterhouse can be described as those of adapting for sale any article. At first sight, to an ordinary reader of our language, it would not easily appear so; it might not be natural to regard the

C. A.
1958
FATSTOCK MARKETING CORPORATION LTD. v. MORGAN (VALUATION OFFICER).
Lord Evershed M.R.

live animal or the dead carcase as an "article." Against that, however, it has to be remembered that the slaughtering of beasts, like many other things, is no doubt much more mechanized in the second half of the twentieth century than it was 100 years ago, and, in so far as that is so, it may fairly be said that the purposes for which the Factory Acts were passed, namely, the safety and protection of workers, would not be unnaturally extended to cover the operations in a slaughterhouse. In any event, there have been certain cases before the courts which, though not binding upon us, seem to show plainly enough that this first impression (if I may so describe it) of the language is not one which has been adopted during the last generation.

I will make short reference only to the cases. Three of them were decided in 1931. They are Surrey Revenue Officer v. Clarkson; Rotherham Revenue Officer v. Rotherham Co-operative Society Ltd.[1] and Woolwich Revenue Officer v. Royal Arsenal Co-operative Society Ltd.[2] In the first two of those cases the Divisional Court held that there was no case made out for disturbing the conclusion of fact of the quarter sessions or recorder to the effect that the slaughterhouses there concerned were within the comprehension of the Factory Act legislation. I will read a short passage from the judgment of Lord Hewart C.J. in both cases.[3] "In the second case the learned recorder has come to "the conclusion that the hereditament should remain in the "Special List, and he has said: 'I am not satisfied that the "'slaughtering business is more important than the food factory "'business carried on in the said hereditament in that mere "'proof of floor space does not determine the primary purpose.' "Again, I think upon the facts of that case he was entitled to "arrive at the conclusion which we know." The Lord Chief Justice then referred to a Scottish case, and he concludes: "No "doubt these two cases are not quite the same, no two cases are, "but I think they are the same in this vital respect: That the "question was really a question of fact, and there were materials "to support the conclusion at which in each case the Court of "Quarter Sessions arrived."

The third case serves at least to emphasize the significance of the sentence which I have last read, for there the court of quarter sessions had arrived at an opposite conclusion. I refer to Woolwich Revenue Officer v. Royal Arsenal Co-operative Society Ltd.[4] The judgment in that case of Avory J. (who had participated in the earlier cases) indicated his own doubt as to the soundness of the conclusion of fact, but he none the less felt no hesitation in agreeing that it was a conclusion of fact based on some evidence which the Divisional Court ought not to disturb. The not entirely satisfactory impression is left that cases which

[1] [1931] 2 English Derating Appeals 53.
[2] Ibid. 282.
[3] Ibid. 61.
[4] Ibid. 282.

were apparently very alike resulted in opposite conclusions; but, treating these cases as matters of fact, that may perhaps be an inevitable result.

One passage from the judgment of MacKinnon J. in this last case was used in the course of argument and may illustrate some of that argument. The judge said [5]: "Premises in which sheep "and oxen become mutton and beef, in other words, premises in "which they are killed, are not an industrial hereditament. "Premises in which beef and mutton are turned into joints, "chops, and cutlets are an industrial hereditament. Premises "where both those processes go on may or may not be an "industrial hereditament. It depends whether the first or second "is the primary purpose for which the whole premises are "occupied and used." It has been part of a strenuous argument put forward by the valuation officer that, on the facts in the present case, it is clear enough that these are not premises in which beef and mutton are turned into joints, chops and cutlets, but rather is a hereditament in which sheep and oxen become mutton and beef.

I come now to the Scottish case which was decided in the Inner House of the Court of Session on appeal from the Lands Valuation Court. The case is Inland Revenue Officer v. Assessor for Edinburgh,[6] in which the question before the court was whether the slaughterhouse, conducted by the Corporation of the City of Edinburgh, was or was not within the ambit of the factory legislation. The court had found in favour of the City of Edinburgh, and that view was sustained in the Inner House. Lord Hunter said [7]: "The main argument presented by the appellant "was that the primary use and occupation of the premises was "to provide statutory facilities for slaughtering animals, and that "they were therefore not entitled to be treated as industrial "subjects. . . . I think this argument was fallacious, and that, "as the subjects were being mainly, if not entirely, used for "purposes which were admittedly"—I emphasize the word "admittedly" in deference to Mr. Squibb's argument—"proper "factory purposes, the committee were right in treating the "subjects as industrial."

Lord Sands was of the same opinion, although he concluded by expressing some doubt [8] "as to whether the relief here given "in any way subserves the economic purpose of the legislation."

Lord Fleming, at the end of his judgment, used language which has been much quoted [9]: "The slaughter of animals, the "dividing up of the carcases, and the treatment of the by-products "and residuals appear to me to be a process of altering or "adapting for sale, and I therefore think that the committee "were right in holding that the subjects were industrial lands "and heritages."

[5] [1931] 2 English Derating Appeals 282, 286.
[6] 1930 S.C. 429.
[7] Ibid. 432.
[8] Ibid. 433.
[9] Ibid.

C. A.
1958
Fatstock Marketing Corporation Ltd. v. Morgan (Valuation Officer).
Lord Evershed M.R.

I have referred to the admission mentioned by Lord Hunter because Mr. Squibb made the point that in the Scottish case, as in the Divisional Court cases, there were special features which he relied on as showing that they could none of them be taken as in all respects in pari materia with the present case. I also draw attention to the fact that none of the cases are in strictness binding on this court. But they have stood apparently unchallenged for more than a quarter of a century. It seems, therefore, to me that two conclusions may be drawn from the cases for our guidance: first, that it is now too late to be shocked, so to speak, by the application to the processes with which we are here concerned of the phrase "adapting an article for sale"; and, second, that these questions should be treated, as they have been treated, prima facie at any rate as questions of degree and therefore of fact.

I turn now to the decision of the tribunal which sets out very fully the facts in the present case. I content myself with one or two references. Thus, after describing the initial operations, including the killing and the separation from the main carcase of the offal, intestines and so forth, the tribunal states: "While in "the hanging room the meat"—and that refers to the main carcase—"cools to atmospheric temperature and sets due to rigor "mortis and this cooling and setting is necessary to get the meat "into proper condition for human consumption. Prior to sale, "which usually takes place the day following slaughter, the sides "of beef are weighed and further sub-divided into quarters for "ease of handling." The decision then passes to a discussion of what happens to the component parts. This again I quote by way only of illustration: "The intestines, while still warm, are "taken to the gut room where the fat is separated from the "intestines which are then stripped of their contents and prepared "for further processing, either on or off the premises, for beef "casings." Finally, the tribunal says: "It was agreed by the "expert witnesses called on behalf of both appellants and the "respondent that the whole of the processes carried out on the "premises constituted the normal good slaughterhouse procedure. "It was further agreed by these witnesses that if a beast was "merely killed and the further processes carried out on the "premises did not immediately follow, the flesh would be unfit "for human consumption." That no doubt may be so; but I add that it does not seem to me to follow that the other operations are not processes nevertheless.

If I may venture to say so, I think that Mr. Scholefield's attractive presentation of the case is perhaps an over-simplification of it; for he says, founding himself on certain of the passages which I have read, that all that occurs at this slaughterhouse is a particular kind of killing. You may have the killing of the knacker's yard, where the result is not intended for human consumption, or you may have the killing in a slaughterhouse, which is a killing for butcher's meat; and in either case all you are really doing is a particular kind of killing; and, he says, killing of any kind is not an adaptation of an article for sale.

I am not satisfied that that is a sufficient or adequate analysis. Killing is, after all, an incident, albeit one essential to the whole process which follows and which indeed initiates all that does follow; but it is an incident none the less, a part only of all that goes on in the slaughterhouse. In other words, the question whether the whole series of operations, including the killing, amounts to an adaptation of an article for sale is (as I have said, guided by the cases that I have quoted) a matter of degree and of fact. So, as I think, the tribunal treated it, and rightly treated it; they said: "We have come to the decision upon "the evidence before us that the primary purpose of the occupa-"tion and use of the premises is to produce meat for human "consumption and by-products for sale and that the actual killing "is subsidiary to this main purpose."

At this point I should like to say (not with any desire to be critical) a word about the use in the sentence I have read of the word "primary." Immediately before that sentence, the question had been posed thus: "The question therefore which "we have to consider is what is the primary purpose of this "hereditament?" Now the word "primary" does not occur at all in section 149 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901. There the language poses the question: Is the hereditament used for any of the following purposes, including the adaptation for sale of any article? The first question, in strictness, therefore, is for the tribunal to ask and answer the question: Looking at the whole of the process carried on, can it fairly and properly be said that the hereditament is being used for the purpose of adapting for sale an article?

The word "primary" owes its significance and presence in these cases to the terms of section 3 of the Rating and Valuation Act, 1928. It is there provided that, notwithstanding that the hereditament may at first have qualified as an industrial hereditament by being a factory within section 149 of the Act of 1901, nevertheless, for the purposes of the Rating Act, it may after all be excluded if its "primary purpose" was a purpose which was not that of a factory or workshop. Other examples of exclusion include that where the primary purpose is that of a retail shop; and in that case no apparent conflict arises. Where the only question as to user is that of adaptation or not, it may no doubt come to much the same thing; but the real point here is not, as I think, the question of what the primary purpose was (which would be directly appropriate to the question of exclusion under the Act of 1928) but rather the more general question whether the purposes for which this hereditament was used were within the terms of the Act of 1901 and particularly the phrase "the "adapting for sale of any article."

But that possible criticism of the way in which the decision

C. A.

1958

Fatstock Marketing Corporation Ltd. v. Morgan (Valuation Officer).

Lord Evershed M.R.

has been formulated does not affect what I take to be the conclusion, so far, of the tribunal, namely, that on the facts the operations conducted in this slaughterhouse, set out earlier in the decision, did qualify the hereditament as a factory or workshop within the meaning of section 149 of the Act of 1901. So far, then, the tribunal's decision was not adverse to the contention of the appellants. But the tribunal went on to say that, although you might properly hold that the purpose for which the hereditament was used was an adaptation for sale of an article (strained though the use of the language might thereby be), still, the truth was that this slaughterhouse, and, indeed, any slaughterhouse, was an entity not comprehended in Parliamentary intention within the Factory Act code at all, but rather that slaughterhouses should be treated as governed, and for this purpose exclusively governed, by what might be called the slaughterhouse special code of legislation. I have already referred to the point that slaughterhouses are not mentioned in the Sixth Schedule, though it is conceded on all hands that that of itself is not by any means conclusive.

The point is stated by the tribunal as follows: "Twenty "years before the first Factory Act of 1867"—I think that perhaps the word "first" might be omitted—"slaughterhouses "had been the subject of legislation in the Towns Improvement "Clauses Act, 1847, and it is clear from the provisions of the "Markets and Fairs Act of the same year that a slaughterhouse "was the only place in which not only might cattle be "slaughtered but also the carcase dressed for sale for human "food. The legislation in regard to slaughterhouses deals "specifically with them in a manner similar to that in which "factories are regulated by the Factories Act, and it seems "to us that Parliament, in passing the Factories Act, 1901, "deliberately omitted slaughterhouses from the list of non-textile "factories as being already regulated by other legislation."

It is no doubt true that the circumstance that the process being conducted on a particular hereditament may be fairly and properly described (whether the language be strained or not) as an adaptation of an article for sale is not necessarily conclusive of the question whether the hereditament is a factory or workshop, particularly if it appears that the general provisions of the Factories Act, 1901, as a whole clearly are inapplicable to the circumstances under consideration. That was the effect of both Nash v. Hollinshead[10] and Wood v. London County Council,[11] referred to earlier in the decision. In the former case an agricultural operation, carried on as part of normal farm work, and in the second case a kitchen, providing for meals of operatives, were held to be outside the scope of the Factories Act legislation, because neither a farm nor the kitchen could be fitted at all into the general compass and expressed purpose of the Factories Act.

[10] [1901] 1 K.B. 700; 17 T.L.R. 352.

[11] [1941] 2 K.B. 232; 57 T.L.R. 499; [1941] 2 All E.R. 230.

But I am not satisfied that the same can by any means be said of this case. Even if 90 years ago—that is to say, in 1867—slaughterhouses did not so easily fit into the general scope and application of the Factories Act legislation of that year, it does not follow, as Mr. Rowe pointed out in his reply, that the same is true of a much more mechanized age, or that the workers in a modern slaughterhouse may not naturally be the subject of Factory Act protection. Indeed, during the course of the argument my brother Sellers referred to Gledhill v. Liverpool Abattoir Utility Co. Ltd.,[12] which showed that in Liverpool, when that case was decided, it was readily admitted that an abattoir was within the Factories Act, so as to give to the workers therein the protection of that legislation.

I would therefore answer this point in this way: I would say that the slaughterhouse legislation, the code which I have mentioned, is really directed to a distinct and quite different purpose from that contemplated by the Factories Acts. It is directed to the securing of cleanliness for the benefit of the public, who will eat the meat eventually produced, and also to the diminution or elimination, so far as it is practicable, of cruelty to the animals which are slaughtered. The Factory Acts, on the other hand, are designed for a quite different purpose, namely, to give protection in cases where protection is properly required to persons working in what are called factories or workshops. Once that difference in aim is stated, it follows that there is no logical ground for saying that the purposes of one are exclusive of the purposes of the others.

As regards factory legislation, we were referred to the first of the Acts, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 103, known as the Shaftesbury Act, and the Acts which followed in 1840, 1850, 1853 and 1856. It is quite true that the legislation which comprehends the factory legislation prior to 1867 might be said to be largely concerned with the employment in factories of women and children, and it was said by Mr. Squibb that really it could have no sensible application to slaughterhouses in those days. I am unable to accept that. There is no material in fact before us, but it would not appear to me to be self-evident that provisions against the employment of women and young children were necessarily wholly inapposite in the case of slaughterhouses in the first half of the nineteenth century. The significance, I should state, of the date 1867 and the Factory Act of that year, is that it was in the legislation of that year that the phrase "adapting for sale "of any article" first came into the legislative code.

Thereafter the two streams of legislation go on. Prior to 1867 there had been, under the head of slaughterhouse legislation, the Markets and Fairs Act, 1847, and the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, mentioned in the decision and directed, as I have said, to cleanliness and the absence of cruelty. Thereafter, equally, in 1933, 1938 and 1954 there were Acts for similar [12] [1957] 1 W.L.R. 1028; [1957] 3 All E.R. 117.

C. A.
1958
Fatstock Marketing Corporation Ltd. v. Morgan (Valuation Officer).
Lord Evershed M.R.

purposes relating to slaughterhouses. On the other side, as regards the other stream, so to speak, there came the Factory and Workship Act, 1901, followed by the Act of 1920.

For the reasons I have stated, I am therefore unable to agree with the conclusion of the Lands Tribunal that the continuing stream of slaughterhouse legislation from 1847 to 1954, forming, if you please, something of a code in itself, has the effect of excluding from the scope of the Factory Act legislation slaughterhouses. I do not find any good reason for saying that slaughterhouses were thereby not intended by Parliament to be covered by the latter legislation. I think that the Factory Act is clearly capable of applying to slaughterhouses, certainly where the use of modern machinery makes it sensible that those working in them should have the protection of those Acts. If that is so, then the case is thrown back upon the first question, namely, the question of fact whether the operations of this slaughterhouse did amount, within the meaning of the Factory Act legislation, to an adapting of an article for sale. On that matter of fact the tribunal found in favour of the appellants and I see no ground for disturbing their conclusion.

The result must be, in my view, that this appeal must be allowed, and that the tribunal should have found the appellants' hereditament entitled to the derating privilege which they sought.

Parker L.J. I have come to the same conclusion. The first question is whether manual labour was employed in the appellants' premises for a factory purpose within section 149 (1) of the Factory Act, 1901, the relevant purpose being the adapting for sale of an article.

The whole process carried out in the premises is undoubtedly the preparation of food for human consumption, but the question is whether any part of that process amounts to the adapting for sale of an article. Clearly, the actual killing is not, since a live animal is not, I think, an article. At the other end of the scale, there may be premises (not these premises) where the meat is in the end made, for instance, into sausages or pies, in which case there is clearly an adapting for sale of an article, if not the manufacture of an article. In between there are, as in the present case, a number of steps taken in the preparation of the food, some to preserve the food, some to carve up the carcase, and some to separate the products for sale to different purchasers.

I confess that, on a first consideration of the matter, it seemed to me a strain of language to say that any of these steps amounted to an adapting for sale, but, having regard to the opinions expressed in the cases to which we have been referred—decisions which have stood for a long time—I am not prepared to differ. Indeed, I think it can be put in this way. Most, if not all, of the steps taken after the actual killing amount to the dressing of the carcase for sale, a matter which, on the facts of any particular case, may be said to amount to an adapting for sale. The tribunal have clearly so found, and there was evidence on which they could arrive at that conclusion.

The next question is whether, there being an activity here, namely, the actual killing, which was not a factory purpose, it can be said that these premises were primarily used for a factory purpose. As regards that, it must in every case be a matter of degree and, accordingly, a question of fact. The tribunal, as I read their decision, have clearly found that the primary purpose here was a factory purpose. That being so, prima facie the premises in question amounted to an industrial hereditament within section 3 of the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928.

The tribunal, nevertheless, held that a consideration of the activities carried on in the premises led to the conclusion that the Factory Act legislation was not applicable and reference was made to Nash v. Hollinshead[13] and Wood v. London County Council,[14] to which my Lord has referred. This contention was supported before us by Mr. Squibb by reference to the legislation dealing with factories and that dealing with slaughterhouses. He contended that at the time when the words "adapting for "sale" were first introduced into the Factory Acts, namely, in 1867, those Acts contained no provisions apt to apply to slaughterhouses, other than provisions dealing with what one may call sanitary arrangements which already appeared in the slaughterhouse legislation: for example, section 128 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847.

I am unable to accept this contention. It may well be, for instance, that boys under 18 or women were being employed at that time in slaughterhouses, in which case the Factory Acts then were certainly apt to cover slaughterhouses. But, at any rate, looked at today, when mechanical saws, hoists and other machinery are used in slaughterhouses, I cannot think that the factory legislation is in any way inapplicable.

The tribunal also referred to the fact that these premises were not registered under the Factory Act, and that slaughterhouses were omitted from the list of non-textile factories in the Act of 1901. Those considerations certainly are not conclusive and, to my mind, carry little weight.

For those reasons, and the reasons given by my Lord, I would allow this appeal.

SELLERS L.J. I take the same view. This case takes one back to the legal battlefields of over a quarter of a century ago when, after the Act of 1928, known as the Derating Act (although the actual benefit of derating was not, I think, given until a year later, 1929), there were many contests giving rise to questions such as those which have been brought before us in this case, and in 1930 a large number of cases were assembled for

[13] [1901] 1 K.B. 700.
[14] [1941] 2 K.B. 232.

C. A.
1958
Fatstock Marketing Corporation Ltd. v. Morgan (Valuation Officer).
Sellers L.J.

the consideration of this court. I quote from Bailey R. O. v. Potteries Electrical Traction Co.[15]

I propose to read two brief extracts from the judgment of Scrutton L.J.[16]: "It must be borne in mind that if you exclude "a hereditament from derating because there is no manufac- "turing process carried on in it, you are depriving the workmen "of the protection of the Factory Acts, as well as the employer "of the benefit of derating. It must also be borne in mind that "in construing the Factory Acts, the courts have given a wide "meaning to the words. When in Law v. Graham[17] the courts "thought that mechanical bottle washing did not make a place "a factory, the legislature the same year put bottle washing into "Part II of the Sixth Schedule, making it a factory, if power "were used. Putting chocolates into a decorated box, in "Fullers' case,[18] and arranging flowers on a metal cross or circle "to make a wreath, in Hoare v. Robert Green Ltd.,[19] have been "treated as 'adapting for sale' to protect the workpeople "employed in that occupation."

I quote that passage, because, as my Lord has pointed out, in Gledhill v. Liverpool Abattoir Utility Co. Ltd.,[20] the Liverpool Corporation, who are the occupiers of an abattoir in Liverpool, had accepted the obligations of the Factory Acts, accepting that those premises were within the Acts. The Court of Appeal, as appears from the judgment of Morris L.J., were informed that the application of the Factory Acts to the premises was not in dispute and the court proceeded to apply the regulations applicable to a factory. That, of course, is not conclusive, because the issue was not fought out and decided whether the premises were or were not within the Factory Acts. That case is not, I think, the first occasion when that very abattoir has been accepted in the courts as a factory, and it is unlikely that an admission that the premises were subject to the onerous obligations of the Factory Acts would have been made unless a well-informed local authority had been satisfied that that was the case. It may be that the facts and circumstances existing at that abattoir are not precisely the same as those in the case before us, but I think the probabilities are that there, also, they carry out what has been referred to in this case as normal good slaughterhouse procedure but on a very much larger scale.

The only other passage to which I would refer in the judgment of Scrutton L.J. deals with this question of adaptation for sale. I do not propose to read it all, although it is all applicable to the issues we have had to try in the present case. The Lord Justice said[21]: "But in view of the fact that 'adapting for sale' "is a separate head from altering, I see no reason for requiring "alteration of substance to make 'adapting for sale.' If this

[15] [1931] 1 K.B. 385; 46 T.L.R. 601.
[16] [1931] 1 K.B. 385, 493.
[17] [1901] 2 K.B. 327; 17 T.L.R. 474.
[18] [1901] 2 K.B. 209.
[19] [1907] 2 K.B. 315; 23 T.L.R. 483.
[20] [1957] 1 W.L.R. 1028.
[21] [1931] 1 K.B. 385, 495.

"were necessary, there would be no need to insert 'adapting for "'sale.' Where the process of separation or sorting is com- "plicated and substantial, again I think there is adapting for "sale. In many cases, it is a question of degree, which is, in "my view fact and not law, and not properly the subject of a "Special Case."

On the facts which have been revealed here and, as I understand it, on the finding of the Lands Tribunal, the processes carried on in this slaughterhouse amount to an adapting for sale and would, prima facie, make these premises a factory and subject to the Factory Acts. But Mr. Scholefield in particular, developing an argument advanced by his leader, stressed that that was a wrong view to take of the facts. He said that what happened after the killing was normal good slaughterhouse procedure and was to be treated as part of the slaughtering. That argument does not appeal to me. Once the killing is done that is final. The dead animal could, of course, be taken away; it could be burned or buried or, I suppose, it could be placed in a deep-freeze container and in that way preserved without decomposition setting in. So far, I would agree that that would be slaughtering and handling incidental thereto. But what takes place on the premises here, after the killing, is done for the purposes of preservation and adaptation for food of the carcase of the beast which has just been killed. The acts done are in no way to complete the slaughter, but to make use of the beast after slaughter, and if what is done amounts to an adaptation for sale that particular requirement within the definition of "factory" is, as I see it, fulfilled. I think it has been so found.

The only remaining question is one on which I entirely agree with my Lords for the reasons they have given. I can see no reason why the special legislation dealing with slaughterhouses cannot run concurrently with the legislation with regard to factories. I do not think that the slaughterhouses legislation is or has been in any way exclusive of the other. They deal with different matters. The slaughterhouse legislation deals with the animals and the products, and the factory legislation deals with the workmen carrying out the work and the processes involved in such an occupation. From another aspect, the slaughterhouse legislation deals with cleanliness and the prevention of cruelty, and in the case of the Factory Act legislation it deals with the safety and health of the workpeople. There may be matters in which there is some overlapping, such as ventilation, because good ventilation serves the purposes of both types of legislation. I think the appeal should succeed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Richards, Butler & Co.; Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

B. A. B.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1958
Mar. 7.

Lord Goddard C.J., Streatfeild and Slade JJ.

* In re HASTINGS.

Criminal Law—Sentence—Concurrent sentences—Form—Indictment containing several counts—Sentence of "four years' corrective "training"—Conviction on first count quashed—Whether concurrent sentences—Whether particular form of words necessary—Clear intention to pass concurrent sentences—Whether sentence on other counts in existence.

The applicant was tried on an indictment containing five counts, the first of which charged him with larceny as a bailee, the next three with false pretences, and the last with fraudulent conversion. He was convicted on each count. The trial judge passing sentence, said: ". . . you have been convicted . . . of deliberate, calculated "and systematic frauds. Those frauds have not only affected "companies . . . but have . . . brought . . . financial burdens on "little men. . . . You will go to prison for four years' corrective "training." The only sentence endorsed on the indictment, entered in the court calendar, and stated in the prison governor's commital warrant, was "four years' corrective training." On an appeal against conviction, the Court of Criminal Appeal quashed the conviction on the first count and dismissed the appeal in relation to the other counts. On an application for a writ of habeas corpus on the ground that as the conviction on the first count had been quashed there was no lawful sentence in existence on the applicant:—

Held, that where an indictment contained a number of counts a court passing concurrent sentences should make it clear that it was in fact passing sentence on each count on which there was a finding of guilt, but that, provided that the meaning was made clear in the passing of the sentence, no particular form of words was necessary; that the words used by the judge showed a clear intention to impose concurrent sentences of four years' corrective training in respect of each of the offences; and that, therefore, the sentence of four years' corrective training was applicable to each of the counts and the applicant was lawfully detained.

Rex v. Grubb (1945) 30 Cr.App.R. 148; 61 T.L.R. 288 and O'Connell v. The Queen (1844) 11 Cl. & Fin. 155 considered.

Per Lord Goddard C.J. When passing concurrent sentences it is desirable that some such words as "on each count" or "concurrent" should be used.

Application for writ of habeas corpus.

On July 25, 1957, the applicant, Edward Thomas Hastings, was convicted at Liverpool Crown Court on each count of an indictment containing five counts to which he had pleaded Not Guilty. The first count charged him with felony, larceny as a bailee, while the four remaining counts were in respect of misdemeanours; counts two, three and four charging false pretences and count five fraudulent conversion. Separate verdicts were returned in respect of each count.

The recorder, passing sentence, said: ". . . you have been "convicted on the plainest evidence of deliberate, calculated and "systematic frauds. Those frauds have not only affected com-"panies well able to sustain loss, but have cruelly brought grave

"financial burdens on little men which it will be difficult for "them to bear. This is by no means the first time you have "been convicted of dishonesty. You are a menace to the "integrity and health of the commercial community. You will "go to prison for four years' corrective training." There was endorsed on the indictment "four years' corrective training," and that was the sentence entered on the calendar for the session of the court; the warrant of commitment sent to the Governor of Walton Prison, Liverpool, where the applicant was detained, stated: "Whereas . . . Edward Thomas Hastings is "and stands convicted of larceny, false pretences and fraudulent "conversion. It is therefore ordered and adjudged by this court "that [he] be sent for corrective training for four years."

The applicant applied for leave to appeal against the convictions and leave was given in respect of the first and two of the other counts. On December 18, 1957, his appeal was heard by the Court of Criminal Appeal, when the conviction on the first count was quashed and the appeal in relation to the two other counts was dismissed. Pearson J., giving the judgment of the court, stated that the applicant had been "sentenced on each "count concurrently," that, although leave to appeal against sentence had not been asked for, the sentence was in the view of the court reasonable, and "The conviction on the first count is "quashed . . . and there will be no alteration of sentence."

The applicant applied for a writ of habeas corpus directed to the governor of Walton Prison and to the Home Secretary on the ground, inter alia, that only one sentence had been passed on him and that, since the conviction on the first count had been quashed, there was no lawful sentence upon him in existence.

A. P. Marshall Q.C. and Neil Butter for the applicant.
Rodger Winn and G. J. Bean for the respondents.

The following cases were cited in argument: Rex v. Grubb,[1] O'Connell v. The Queen[2] and Reg. v. Kelsall.[3]

LORD GODDARD C.J. Mr. Marshall moves in this matter for a writ of habeas corpus to bring up the body of one Edward Thomas Hastings, at present detained in Liverpool Gaol where he is serving a sentence of four years' corrective training, with a view to his being discharged on the ground that his detention is illegal. The main ground put forward is that no sentence of the court was ever passed upon him. [His Lordship stated the facts and continued:] The point made here is that the sentence of four years' corrective training was duly endorsed on the indictment but that the endorsement did not show four years' corrective training on each of the counts, nor did the recorder use the words

[1] (1945) 30 Cr.App.R. 148; 61 T.L.R. 288.

[2] (1844) 11 Cl. & F. 155; 5 St.Tr. (N.S.) 1.

[3] March 4, 1957 (unreported).

1958

Hastings, In re.

Lord Goddard C.J.

"concurrent on each count." Accordingly, Mr. Marshall in the course of a learned and clear argument has submitted that as the sentence was passed on an indictment containing five counts, conviction on one of which has been quashed, there is nothing to show to which count the sentence is applicable. He contends that no sentence was passed on the count at all, therefore there has been no legal sentence passed and there is no authority for holding the applicant in gaol.

In my opinion, the question is simply one of construction. Mr. Marshall agrees that if the word "concurrent" had been used, or if the recorder had said "on each count," he would have no ground on which he could sustain the motion. It seems to me that it is obvious that the recorder meant to pass a sentence of four years on each count of the indictment. It is to be noticed that each count of this indictment was for quite a separate and distinct offence. They were not alternative offences; they were offences each of which would support a sentence of four years' corrective training, as they would have sustained a sentence of four years' imprisonment; the recorder was dealing with a course of fraud and was saying that he was sentencing the applicant for systematic frauds. Every one of these cases was a case of fraud. It is true that the first case was a felony and the others misdemeanors, but there is no point in that, because the four convictions which stood were all convictions for fraud, and of course the first crime, larceny as a bailee, depends on the fraudulent conversion of the property entrusted to the bailee. If there was a bailment, then by statute the offence of larceny as a bailee can be sustained. I am clearly of opinion that the intention of the recorder was to pass a concurrent sentence, although he did not use the word "concurrent." It is not a question of the exact words that are used, but of what the court considers to be the intention of the recorder when passing the sentence, and one can see that the recorder meant that on each of these counts a sentence of four years' corrective training was to be passed. That was the view which the Court of Criminal Appeal took when this matter was brought before them, for the point had been raised in the notice of appeal, but the court in quashing the conviction on count 1 expressly said that they were not making any difference in the sentence because of the gravity of the crimes committed by the applicant which formed the subject of the other counts. It would follow that if the point Mr. Marshall has strenuously urged on us is right, it applies equally to the judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeal. Pearson J., who gave the judgment of that court, started his judgment by saying: "In this case the "appellant was convicted on five counts involving fraud in the "Liverpool Crown Court, and he was sentenced on each count "concurrently to a term of imprisonment. Leave to appeal was "given with regard to three counts only, and leave to appeal "was given only in respect of conviction. That, in fact, was all "that was asked for, but in any case the actual sentence given "was in our view a reasonable sentence and there would be no "reason for interfering with it on any view." Then at the end of his judgment: "The conviction on the first count is quashed, "in other respects the appeal fails, and there will be no alteration "of sentence." In my judgment, the real question which we have to decide is: What was the true effect of the words used by the recorder? I think that it is abundantly clear that their effect is that he intended this to be a sentence concurrent on each count. For that reason, therefore, this application fails.

I need only say one or two more words with regard to the authorities which have been cited to us. Reference was made to O'Connell v. The Queen,[1] a case in the House of Lords in 1844 on a writ of error. In that case there were 11 counts, and five counts turned out in the opinion of the House to be defective and were quashed as bad counts. I do not know that there would be any difference whether they were quashed as bad counts or if the verdict on those counts had been Not Guilty. In those days the way of challenging a criminal conviction was by way of writ of error, and when the writ of error was brought before the House of Lords it appeared that the judgment recorded was that "for the offences aforesaid" the sentences should be given. The majority of their Lordships, contrary to the opinions which the judges who had been called on to assist the House had given, came to the conclusion that there had not been a judgment on all the counts. It is obvious from reading the opinions of Lord Denman[2] and Lord Cottenham[3] that they were very much impressed by the inconveniences which they thought could arise in those days, but things are very different now, because there is a Court of Criminal Appeal and such a matter could be easily brought before that court. In those days a general sentence became defective if it was given on a number of counts some of which were afterwards quashed, but if a case comes before the Court of Criminal Appeal in which there has been a sentence of this sort pronounced, which the court thinks means concurrent sentences, or if, for instance, two or three counts in an indictment containing a large number of counts are quashed, it is always open to that court, whether there has been an appeal against sentence or not, to say: "Having quashed the convictions on "certain counts, that makes such a difference that we shall "reduce the sentence." That is a question of the court exercising its discretion, but there was nothing said in O'Connell v. The Queen[4] in the House of Lords to the effect that a general sentence cannot be given. I do not propose to go at length into the history of the abolition of writs of error which are no longer available to a prisoner. His privileges are now given to him by the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, and I see nothing here to force us to say that the recorder in passing the sentence he did was

[1] (1844) 11 Cl. & F. 155.
[2] Ibid. 351.
[3] Ibid. 388.
[4] Ibid. 155.

1958

Hastings, In re.

Lord Goddard C.J.

not passing a sentence on each count of the indictment. Therefore, in my opinion, the sentence of four years' corrective training is applicable to counts 2, 3, 4 and 5, and accordingly this motion fails.

There are two things which I wish to add. Everybody knows that it is the commonest thing in the world, whether at assizes or at quarter sessions, for a sentence to be pronounced in this manner, but since 1844 no appeal has ever been brought before the court on that ground, although if the mere fact that the judge had omitted to use the word "concurrent" made a difference, it is to be supposed that many prisoners would have escaped.

The other matter is that this case has perhaps shown that it is always desirable for the court to use words such as "on each "count" or "concurrent." Although in this case we have no difficulty in holding that that was the recorder's intention, and we can see that from the use of the word "frauds" in the plural, it would be desirable to use some such words to prevent this kind of question arising hereafter. In this case, however, we cannot say that no proper sentence was passed merely because one set of words was used rather than another.

Streatfeild J. I am of the same opinion and I want to make it clear that I would certainly uphold the principle which Mr. Marshall has insisted on, that a court should make it clear that it is in fact passing a sentence in respect of each count on which the accused person has been found guilty or has pleaded guilty; in that respect the judgment of Humphreys J. in Rex v. Grubb [5] is very much in point. At the same time, I do not think that any particular form of words is necessary, provided that it is made clear that a sentence which is passed is in fact applicable to each count of an indictment on which there has been a finding of guilt. It may be convenient that some phrase such as "upon each count" or "counts numbers" so and so "the sentence shall be" such and such a term should be used. It may be that the use of the word "concurrently" would put the matter beyond all doubt, but provided that the meaning is clear in the passing of the sentence, and is made clear to the defendant, no particular form of words is necessary.

In my view this case narrows down to the one question as to what is the proper interpretation of the words used by the recorder in passing sentence, not merely what he meant, but what he actually said. I agree with my Lord that the words of the recorder's sentence are really perfectly clear. He is referring to an indictment which contained five counts, one of which was for larceny as a bailee and the others for frauds, three of them being false pretences and the other one fraudulent conversion. He refers throughout to those frauds in the plural. He then puts the matter beyond all argument by going on to categorize the people who have been victimized by those frauds, and he ends by saying "You will go to prison for four years' corrective train-"ing." It is to my mind obvious that he was applying his mind to each one of those frauds. Indeed, it would actually seem that the word "fraud" was more applicable to the last four counts of the indictment than to the first one for larceny, but, having regard to the use of the plural in that way, it is clear that the recorder made up his mind, perfectly correctly, that, having regard to the record of the applicant, each count merited a sentence of corrective training, and that when he proceeded to pass the sentence of corrective training it clearly must refer to each and all of those frauds to which he has alluded. In my judgment, therefore, although he has not used the words "upon "each count" separately, nor the word "concurrently," it is almost too clear for argument that the totality of the words used by him amounts to a sentence of four years' corrective training in respect of each and every one of the five counts of the indictment.

[5] (1945) 30 Cr.App.R. 148; 61 T.L.R. 288.

In those circumstances, the remainder of Mr. Marshall's argument does not really arise, but it would seem likely, without expressing any further opinion on the matter, that section 5 of the Crown Cases Act, 1848, was passed with the express purpose of getting rid of the difficulties which arose in O'Connell's case.[6] Nowadays it would seem that those difficulties can equally well be dealt with by the Court of Criminal Appeal under either sections 4 or 5 of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907. However, having come to the conclusion which I have come to as to the proper interpretation of the judge's sentence, those latter matters do not arise and I found my judgment on what I believe to be the interpretation of the sentence, as I have already indicated. In my view it was the perfectly clear intention that these were in fact concurrent sentences on each one of the counts. For those reasons, therefore, I agree with the judgment of my Lord.

SLADE J. I agree. From the language used by the recorder, I think the conclusion is almost irresistible that he intended his sentence of four years' corrective training to relate to each of the five counts of the indictment. I am fortified in this view by asking myself the question, if that is not its true interpretation, to which one or more of the five counts did he intend his sentence to relate? It has been suggested that the sentence was intended to relate only to count 1 because that is a felony while counts 2 to 5 are misdemeanors, but I cannot help thinking that that suggestion was made solely because the felony was the only count quashed by the Court of Criminal Appeal. The word "frauds" in the plural which the recorder used before passing sentence is more appropriate to the four counts of misdemeanor than to the count of larceny, though it is true that in this particular case the same word in the singular would also be appropriate to count 1 because that count was in respect of larceny by a bailee and the words "fraudulently converts" appear in section 1 (1) of the Larceny

[6] 11 Cl. & F. 155.

1958

Hastings, In re.

Slade J.

Act, 1916. I am satisfied that the only reasonable construction of the words used by the recorder is that he intended to pass a sentence of four years' corrective training on each of the five counts of the indictment.

Application dismissed.

Solicitors: Field, Roscoe & Co. for Keith Moore, Chester; Treasury Solicitor.

J. F. L.

[MANCHESTER ASSIZES.]

1957 Dec. 16, 17.

Lynskey J.

* BLAKELEY v. C. & H. CLOTHING CO. (A Firm) and Another.

[1952 B. No. 7294.]

Factory—Lift—Gates—Duty to prevent person coming into contact with moving part—Person inserting hand through gates—Injury to hand by movement of lift—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 22 (3).

The plaintiff was employed by a firm who occupied two floors of a three-storey building in which there was a lift which was under the control of the owners of the building and supplied by them for the use of the employers' workmen. The plaintiff, having in the course of his employment left the lift and shut the gates, thought that the inner gate was not properly shut and inserted his hand through the outer gate to close the inner gate properly. As he did so the lift moved and the plaintiff's hand was injured. In an action against the employers and the owners of the building:—

Held, that section 22 (3) of the Factories Act, 1937,[1] imposed an absolute obligation to provide the lift with gates of a character which, when shut, would prevent people from coming into contact with the lift when moving, and, accordingly, the owners of the building were in breach of their statutory duty.

Action.

The plaintiff, Derek Blakeley, was employed by the first defendants, a firm of clothing manufacturers, who occupied the first and second floors of a building owned by the second defendants, J. G. Needham Ltd. The second defendants were in control of a lift in the building, which they maintained and

---

[Reported by E. Somerset Jones, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

[1] Factories Act, 1937, s. 22 (3): "Every hoistway or liftway shall be "efficiently protected by a substantial "enclosure fitted with gates, being "such an enclosure as to prevent, "when the gates are shut, any person "falling down the way or coming "into contact with any moving part "of the hoist or lift."

supplied for use by, inter alia, the employees of the first defendants.

On August 23, 1951, the plaintiff, who was then about 15 years old and had just left school, used the lift in the course of his employment to go up to the top floor of the premises. He stepped out of the lift and closed both gates behind him. Having done so, he saw, as he thought, that the inner gate was open and, with the intention of closing the inner gate properly, inserted his hand through the outer gate and onto the inner gate to push it to. As he did so, the lift started to move and caught his hand, causing him severe injuries. His hand was subsequently amputated. The plaintiff, who at the time of the accident had been in the first defendants' employment for some three days and had received some instruction in the use of the lift, brought this action by his mother and next friend against the first defendants on the ground that they were in breach of their common law duty towards him as his employers, and against the second defendants on the ground that they were in breach of the statutory duty imposed by section 22 (3) of the Factories Act, 1937.

Lynskey J., exonerating the first defendants, found that the danger inherent in the plaintiff's action, owing to the possible risk of the lift moving by someone pressing the button on a lower floor, was an obvious danger which did not require warning even to a boy of 15 or 16 years of age.

Alexander Karmel Q.C. and A. Logan Petch for the plaintiff.

Fenton Atkinson Q.C. and W. G. Morris for the first defendants.

J. D. Cantley Q.C. and W. D. T. Hodgson for the second defendants.

The case cited in argument is referred to in the judgment.

LYNSKEY J., after stating the facts which are substantially summarized above and holding that the first defendants were not in breach of their common law duty to take reasonable care for the safety of the plaintiff, continued: The next question is in relation to the second defendants. It is agreed that the statutory duty imposed by section 22 of the Factories Act, 1937, in relation to hoists and lifts is on the second defendants alone. The plaintiff relies on section 22 (3). [His Lordship read the subsection and continued:] It was submitted on behalf of the second defendants, first of all, that the subsection is dealing primarily with hoistways or liftways, and not with gates at all, and that I ought to construe it on the basis that what has to be provided is some form of construction holding the lift which, of itself plus the gates, would prevent people falling down or coming into contact with moving machinery. My difficulty in doing that is because of the wording of the subsection itself: " . . . being such an " enclosure as to prevent, when the gates are shut, any person

1957

Blakeley v. C. & H. Clothing Co. (a Firm).

Lynskey J.

"falling down the way or coming into contact with any moving "part of the hoist or lift." That seems to me to mean that these hoists or lifts must be provided with gates of a character which will prevent people from coming into contact with the lift when moving, or with any moving part of the lift including the inner gates which move up and down with the lift. The obligation imposed by section 22 (3) is an absolute one. The hoist, in conjunction with the gate, must be of such a character as to prevent anyone coming into contact with any moving part of the hoist or lift. That, on the face of it, seems to me to be the ordinary meaning of the words and there is nothing to qualify it. That is the meaning of the subsection and there is an absolute obligation on persons responsible for complying with that statutory duty in relation to lifts.

It was then said on behalf of the second defendants that, in construing an absolute obligation, one ought to have regard to what has been said in relation to other sections of the Act where the obligation is to make secure or securely fence, and matters of that sort. In Walker v. Bletchley Flettons Ltd.[1] du Parcq J. said[2]: "A part of machinery is dangerous if it is a possible "cause of injury to anybody acting in a way in which a human "being may be reasonably expected to act in circumstances which "may be reasonably expected to occur." Without deciding if that is the proper test to be applied in the construction of section 22 (3), but adopting it for the purpose of this case and applying that principle to the facts, it seems to me clear that what the plaintiff did in this case is something which could have been reasonably anticipated or reasonably expected to occur. Here, a boy came out of the lift and knew that both gates must be closed; he thought he had closed them both, found that one was not properly closed, and put his hand inside the gates to try and push the inner gate to, to close it properly. I do not say it was a wise or good thing to do. It was obviously one of those things which any person, thinking about the matter, might say that people might be reasonably expected to do, and that people sometimes fail to take care of themselves.

Whether one adopts the strict interpretation or the more lenient interpretation of foreseeability, I am satisfied that there has in either event been a breach by the second defendants of their statutory duty. This type of lift is a type which is generally adopted and still in use in many business premises. We are dealing, not with the common law duty, but with the statutory liability and, that being what it is, there has been a breach of statutory duty despite regular inspection and the adoption by other people of similar types of lifts. Accordingly, the plaintiff is entitled to recover against the second defendants.

[His Lordship assessed the damages at £5,001 and, apportioning the blame for the accident as to two-thirds to the second defendants and as to one-third to the plaintiff, gave judgment for the plaintiff for £3,334, with costs against the second defendants.]

[1] [1937] 1 All E.R. 170. [2] Ibid. 175.

1957

BLAKELEY v. C. & H. CLOTHING CO. (A FIRM).

Judgment for the plaintiff against the second defendants.
Judgment for the first defendants against the plaintiff.

Solicitors: Leslie M. Lever & Co., Manchester; John Whittle, Robinson & Bailey, Manchester; A. W. Mawer & Co., Manchester.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

* In re GRIMTHORPE, DECD.

1958
March 4.

Danckwerts J.

[1956 G. 709.]

Costs — Trustee — Indemnity as to costs — Counsel's fees — Hearings adjourned and curtailed—Payment of full fees demanded—Whether trustees entitled to indemnity.
Barrister—Fees—Brief fee—Hearings frequently adjourned—Trustee's right to indemnity.

The intention of the Practice Direction dated October 27, 1953,[1] is to secure the result that trustees are entitled to be indemnified against all costs and expenses properly incurred by them in the course of their duties as trustees.

Where, therefore, trustees have paid in good faith to counsel fees, which, having regard to the particular circumstances, the complexity of the matter, and the standing of counsel in question, are not improper, the taxing master is not entitled to tax down those fees merely because he thinks counsel might have been paid a smaller sum having regard to the curtailment of the hearings of the matter in question.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

By this originating summons, the applicants, the trustees of the will and codicils of Lord Grimthorpe, deceased, asked for an order that their objections to the taxation of costs in the action under an order of Wynn-Parry J. dated May 13, 1957, might be allowed and that the matter might be referred back to the taxing master to vary his certificate accordingly.

On April 23, 1956, the trustees as applicants took out an originating summons to obtain directions enabling them to widen the range of investments of the trust moneys. The Attorney-General representing the charity beneficially interested under the will, was the only respondent.

The matter came first before Roxburgh J. in chambers, on June 4, 1956; after an hour's hearing the judge stood the summons over. On October 27, 1953, the matter came in chambers before Vaisey J. who was inclined to take an adverse view. On that occasion the matter only took some 12 minutes. Counsel's opinion was obtained in November, 1956. On May 13, 1957, the matter was heard in chambers before Wynn-Parry J. and an order was obtained in which a direction for taxation of the trustees' costs was given in the form of the Practice Direction, dated October 27, 1953.[1] The result of the taxation before the taxing master was that the fee which the trustees had paid to counsel in respect of the first hearing, before Roxburgh J. of £16 5s., was taxed down to £11; the fee of £11 which had been paid to counsel on the second hearing before Vaisey J. was taxed down to £5 10s.; the fee paid for the opinion of counsel was taxed down from £11 to £5 10s., and the fee paid at the final hearing before Wynn-Parry J. (which was to different counsel as the other counsel had taken silk more than a year before) of £16 5s. was taxed down to £5 10s.

1958

Grimthorpe, decd., In re.

Objections were taken on behalf of the trustees, which were as follows: "(i) The order of the Honourable Mr. Justice Wynn-"Parry dated May 13, 1957, provided for the costs and expenses "of the applicants of and incident to their application to be "taxed by the taxing master. (ii) Having regard to the pro-"visions of section 30 (2) of the Trustee Act, 1925, and to the "Practice Direction of October 27, 1953, and the observations "made thereon by the Honourable Mr. Justice Vaisey on "November 3, 1953,[2] this form of order requires the taxing "master to allow to the applicants all the expenses properly "incurred by them in relation to these proceedings and no item "should be disallowed except on the basis of a finding that it was "improperly incurred. (iii) None of the items disallowed was "improperly incurred."

The taxing master in reply to that referred to the Practice Direction laying down a new standard for the taxation of the costs of trustees, and continued: "It provides a more generous "taxation than as between solicitor and client payable out of a "common fund, giving the trustee all the costs which he is "entitled to recover from the trust fund, and as stated by "[Vaisey J.] in the final paragraph [of the Practice Note] this "means 'almost the same as costs on an indemnity basis.' The "word 'almost' presumably means that a trustee or his solicitor "should not have an entirely free hand to incur expenses out of [1] Practice Direction dated October 27, 1953 [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1365; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1159: "In cases "in which trustees are parties in "their capacity as such, and in which "it is appropriate that they should "be indemnified as to their proper "costs and expenses of the proceed-"ings, the order as to the costs of "the trustees should direct taxation "of their 'costs and expenses of and "'incident to this action [application] "'[matter]' without the addition of "the words 'as between solicitor and "'client.' On such a direction all "costs and expenses properly incurred "by the trustees will be allowed by "the taxing master. Compare Trus-"tee Act, 1925, s. 60. The costs of "other parties to the proceedings will, "as hitherto, be ordered either (a) "'to be taxed' (i.e., as between "party and party) or (b) 'to be "'taxed as between solicitor and "'client.'"

[2] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1452; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1408.

" the trust fund, nor should the discretion of the taxing officer as " to allowance or disallowance of items, or as to the quantum " of costs incurred, be fettered. The basis upon which all costs " are to be allowed by the taxing master is set out in [R.S.C.] " Ord. 65, r. 27 (29) as being what shall appear to him to have " been necessary and proper, and no costs shall be allowed, save " as against the party who incurred the same, which appear to " the taxing master to have been incurred or increased (inter " alia) ' by payment of special fees to counsel.' Although the " case was on a somewhat different point, the words ' special " ' fees ' were interpreted by Buckley J. in Cavendish v. Strutt,[3] " as meaning ' unusual or extraordinary or generous fees.' The " order under which the plaintiff's costs have been taxed related " to an application by trustees of a charity fund (inter alia) to " vary the investment clause of the trust. It was decided at an " early stage not to proceed under paragraphs 2 and 3 of the " originating summons, and the matter came before the judge " in chambers on June 4, 1956, when after one hour's argument " it was adjourned sine die in view of the Trustee Investment " Bill which was then before Parliament. This Bill was subse- " quently withdrawn and the case restored and further heard by " the judge in chambers on October 29, 1956. After twelve " minutes' argument the judge raised a question of jurisdiction " and adjourned the case into court for further argument. The " further hearing took place in chambers (by arrangement not in " court) on May 13, 1957, and the judge after reading a decision " in a similar case made his order. This hearing lasted ten " minutes. The total time covered by all three hearings was " one hour twenty-two minutes and but for the fact that the " hearings took place in different terms no further fees in addition " to the original brief fee would be allowed. I have, however, " taken into consideration the basis upon which these costs should " be taxed as mentioned above in the two opening paragraphs of " this answer, and in view of all the facts have allowed a fee of " ten guineas on the brief and further fees of five and ten guineas " respectively on the further hearings making a total of twenty- " five guineas. Another factor I have taken into account is the " change of counsel during the course of the proceedings. I am " of the opinion that it would be wrong to allow higher fees than " those I have allowed to be paid out on this trust fund, and " that those allowed by me are fair and reasonable in all the " circumstances, and that the total fees of forty guineas charged " are excessive and are not therefore properly incurred. They " should, under R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 27 (29) only be paid, if at all, " by the party who has incurred them, namely the trustees per- " sonally and not out of the trust fund.

" It is significant, although not a matter which has finally " influenced me in coming to the above decisions that the

[3] [1904] 1 Ch. 524, 531.

1958

Grimthorpe, decd., In re.

"[Attorney-General's] counsel . . . charged one fee of 10 "guineas to cover all three attendances."

The applicants now sought an order that their objections be allowed.

John Pennycuick Q.C. and John Arnold for the applicants.
Denys Buckley for the Attorney-General.

Danckwerts J. This is a matter which has arisen on the taxation of trustees' costs under a Practice Direction, issued in 1953 [1] which provides: "In cases in which trustees are parties in "their capacity as such, and in which it is appropriate that they "should be indemnified as to their proper costs and expenses of "the proceedings, the order as to the costs of the trustees should "direct taxation of their 'costs and expenses of and incident to "'this action [application] [matter]' without the addition of "the words 'as between solicitor and client.' On such a direct-"tion all costs and expenses properly incurred by the trustees "will be allowed by the taxing master. Compare Trustees Act, "1925, s. 60. The costs of other parties to the proceedings will, "as hitherto, be ordered either (a) 'to be taxed' (i.e., as between "party and party) or (b) 'to be taxed as between solicitor and "'client.'" The reason for a direction of that kind was that it had been realized that a taxation on the basis of solicitor and client was merely on a slightly more generous scale than taxation on the basis of party and party, and that it did not restore to the person whose costs were being taxed amounts which in many cases had been paid out quite properly by the person in question and in the ordinary course of the duties of a trustee.

A long series of cases had established the position in regard to a taxation between solicitor and client, and it is not necessary for me to go through them. This direction was explained subsequently by Vaisey J. in a Practice Note that is headed "Practice "Note (Trustees' Costs)," [2] and it reads as follows: "At the "sitting of the court on November 3, 1953, Vaisey J. made "a reference to the Practice Direction with regard to trustees' "costs.[3] In the course of his observations his Lordship said:— "'For years, ever since I can remember, it has been the practice "'on a summons by trustees, for such a purpose as the con-"'struction of a will, to direct that the costs of all parties "'should be taxed as between solicitor and client. That has "'continued, as I say, ever since I can remember, and has been "'the normal practice. It has recently been realized that, under "'a solicitor and client taxation, the trustees may not get the "'whole of what they are entitled to. A solicitor and client "'taxation is on a lower basis, not a higher basis, than the basis "'which is appropriate when trustees' costs are being dealt with.

[1] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1365; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1159.

[2] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1452; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1408.

[3] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1365.

" 'The matter arose, in a very plain form in the case of In re " ' Robertson, decd.,[4] where the Public Trustee, who had his " ' costs taxed as between solicitor and client, was disallowed the " ' sum of £2 1s. in respect of a payment made for taking a " ' shorthand note and for a copy of the transcript. That case " ' came before me, and in point of fact I felt able to vary the " ' taxing master's certificate and to allow that sum of £2 1s. " ' One thing is perfectly plain, and it is important that the pro- " ' fession should understand it. If a trustee submits to having " ' his costs taxed as between solicitor and client, he is entitled " ' to his costs as so taxed and nothing more. He is not entitled " ' to take the taxing master through his bill and then, when the " ' taxing master disallows certain items, to go away and say: " ' " That does not matter. I know I have wasted the taxing " ' " master's time, but I do not care about that. I do not care " ' " what he taxes off. I will help myself to whatever he has " ' " disallowed." That is wrong, and, hoping that I could help " ' resolve that difficulty in which trustees have found them- " ' selves, I, with the assistance of the chief registrar and the " ' chief taxing master and with the approval of all the judges of " ' the Chancery Division, came to the conclusion that a form of " ' words should be used which would give trustees more than " ' solicitor and client costs, that is to say, give them all the " ' costs to which they are entitled. The form of words which " ' was adopted for that purpose is taken from section 60 of the " ' Trustee Act, 1925, which relates to orders appointing new " ' trustees and is in these words [he read it and continued:] " ' It is, I think, plain that those words " the costs and expenses " ' " of and incident to any application " are intended to cover " ' the whole of the costs that the trustees were entitled to, and " ' mean almost the same as costs on an indemnity basis, or costs " ' as between solicitor and own client. It seemed appropriate " ' to use the words of the statute. Any suggestion that trustees " ' are being deprived of costs, and that this would be a more " ' hostile taxation than there has been under the old solicitor " ' and client taxation is absolutely wrong; the whole point of " ' making this change was to give the trustees more, to give " ' them a wider range and to make sure that all costs and " ' expenses which had been properly incurred would be allowed " ' on the taxation. It is an attempt to get the taxation on a " ' better, juster and higher basis than the old taxation, which, " ' in the judgment of myself and my brother judges, did not " always give the trustees that to which they were entitled.' " There is, of course, the word " almost " used there, which may be of some importance and with which I shall deal presently. In In re Dargie[5] Vaisey J. held that where Wynn-Parry J. had ordered that the trustees should get their costs on a solicitor and client basis on taxation, they were not entitled to pay themselves

[4] [1949] W.N. 225; [1949] 1 All E.R. 1042.

[5] [1954] Ch. 16; [1953] 1 W.L.R. 991; [1953] 2 All E.R. 577.

1958

Grimthorpe, Decd., In re.

Danckwerts J.

other expenses out of the trust funds, because there the costs they were to receive had been delineated by the judge in that way.

[His Lordship then stated the facts of the present case, and, having read the objections taken by the applicants and the taxing master's answer said:] The last observations of the taxing master seem to me to show a very strange appreciation of the position of a trustee. The taxing master's reference to the fee charged by counsel for the Attorney-General appears to me to be irrelevant.

It is commonplace that persons, who take the onerous and sometimes dangerous duty of being trustees, are not expected to do any of the work on their own expense; they are entitled to be indemnified against the costs and expenses which they incur in the course of their office; of course, that necessarily means that such costs and expenses are properly incurred and not improperly incurred. The general rule is quite plain; they are entitled to be paid back all that they have had to pay out. It seems to me that the whole intention of the practice as laid down in the Practice Direction to which I have referred is to secure that result; the only doubt arises perhaps upon the word "almost," used by Vaisey J. in his explanation of the Practice Direction, in which he refers to its being "almost the same as "costs on an indemnity basis, or costs as between solicitor and "own client."

Mr. Pennycuick has contended, and I think he is right, that the distinction between that of a person instructing his own counsel and solicitor is that in that case he might pay whatever he likes; but in the case of a trustee, he must use his judgment to try and save the estate money which should not be unnecessarily paid out. It seems to me quite wrong to look at the event afterwards, and counsel's fees having been incurred, and having been demanded by counsel's clerk on the basis that that fee was asked for, having regard to the complexity of the matter and the standing of counsel in question, to say that counsel has been paid too much. It would undo the whole effect which was intended by the Practice Direction if the master were entitled to tax fees to counsel, or other expenses that had been paid in good faith by the trustees, on the basis that they were payable by them. The trustees could not get out of paying them merely because the master thought that counsel might have been paid a somewhat smaller sum. It seems to me to be a wrong adoption of the standard laid down by R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 27 (29), which does not really apply in this case at all; it is not a case of undue generosity —the standard is whether it is proper or improper. It seems to me that the remarks about "generous fees" and so on have really no application to the trustees, who have had to pay the fees to counsel as being the proper fees payable to them. In those circumstances, therefore, it seems to me quite plain that in the present case the taxing master went wrong in principle, and that his order must be set aside.

The taxation must be set aside in respect of these items, and the items actually paid by the trustees in good faith must be allowed.

Objections allowed.

1958

GRIMTHORPE, DECD., In re.

Solicitors: Lee, Bolton & Lee; Treasury Solicitor.

P. P.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1958 Jan. 27.

Lord Goddard C.J., Hilbery and Salmon JJ.

* In re SAGE.

Mental Deficiency—Detention order—Validity—Order on conviction—Conviction of larceny—Order under section 8 (1) (b) of the Mental Deficiency Act, 1913—Medical evidence that defendant "a feeble-"minded person within the meaning of the Mental Deficiency "Acts"—Whether evidence sufficient—Whether consent of parent or guardian required—Mental Deficiency Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 28), ss. 1 (1) (2), 6 (3), 8 (1) (as amended by Mental Deficiency Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 33)).

Criminal Law—Mental deficiency—Detention order.

In October, 1952, the applicant, then aged 19, on pleading guilty to larceny, was placed on probation for one year. In January, 1953, he pleaded guilty to a breach of the terms of the probation and was remanded in custody for a medical report. On February 2, 1953, evidence was given before the justices by the prison doctor who had examined the applicant that he was of the opinion that the applicant was a feeble-minded person within the meaning of the Mental Deficiency Acts requiring care and treatment. The justices made a detention order under section 8 (1) of the Mental Deficiency Act, 1913, in respect of the applicant, "being satisfied on medical "evidence that the [applicant] is a defective within the mean-"ing of the Mental Deficiency Acts, 1913 to 1938, . . . being "a feeble-minded person." The applicant sought a writ of habeas corpus, alleging that the detention order was made without jurisdiction and was a nullity on the grounds (1) that since there was no evidence that he had suffered from a condition of arrested or incomplete development of mind before the age of 18, or that it was desirable in his interests that an order should be made, there was no evidence before the justices that he was a feeble-minded person or a defective within the meaning of section 1 (1) and (2) of the Act of 1913; and (2) that the provision of section 6 (3) of that Act requiring that the consent of a parent or guardian be obtained before a detention order was made applied to an order made under section 8 (1) (b), but that his parent or guardian had not given his consent:—

Held, (1) that there was evidence which entitled the justices to make the detention order—the statement made by the prison doctor was merely a compendious way of saying that he had examined the applicant and had come to the conclusion that the provisions of the Mental Deficiency Acts applied to him—and that, and on their own observation, the justices were justified in coming to their conclusion that the applicant was a feeble-minded person within the meaning of the Acts.

[Reported by RICHARD HARTLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

1958

Sage, In re.

(2) That the requirement in section 6 (3) of the Act of 1913 that the consent of the parent or guardian be obtained before an order might be made was applied to a case where a petition was presented to the judicial authority under section 6 (2), and had no application to a case where an order was made under section 8 in respect of a breach of the criminal law. The applicant, therefore, was lawfully detained and there were no grounds for issuing a writ of habeas corpus.

Application for a writ of habeas corpus.

On October 15, 1952, the applicant, Cyril Montague Sage, then aged 19, pleaded guilty before Bearsted justices to stealing two and a half pints of milk and was placed on probation for one year. On January 13, 1953, he was brought before the Cranbrook justices for breach of the probation order (failing to notify the probation officer of change of address) and was remanded in custody until February 2, 1953, for a medical report. It appeared from the affidavits that at the resumed hearing on February 2 no written reports were before the justices but that a prison doctor who had examined the applicant gave oral evidence to the same effect as that contained in a letter which he had written to the justices' clerk; in that letter the doctor said inter alia, "His backwardness is not the result of insanity, but is clearly the result of mental defectiveness and his reasoning and judgment are grossly impaired. I am of the opinion that he is a feeble-minded person within the meaning of the Mental Deficiency Acts and that he requires institutional care and treatment." The justices, "being satisfied on medical evidence that the [applicant] is a defective within the meaning of the Mental Deficiency Acts, 1913 to 1938" as amended "being a feeble-minded person" made a detention order under section 8 (1) of the Act of 1913 committing him to an institution for mental defectives.

The applicant alleging that he was unlawfully detained now sought a writ of habeas corpus directed to the Board of Control and to the superintendent of Moss Side Hospital, Maghull (whence he had been transferred by order of the Board of Control). The grounds of the application were, inter alia, that the justices had made the detention order unlawfully and without jurisdiction and that it was a nullity because, (1) section 1 (1) of the Act of 1913 [1] provided that feeble-minded persons, that was, persons

[1] Mental Deficiency Act, 1913 (as amended) s. 1: "(1) The following classes of persons who are mentally defective shall be deemed to be defectives within the meaning of this Act:—. . . (c) Feeble-minded persons, that is to say, persons in whose case there exists mental defectiveness which, though not amounting to imbecility, is yet so pronounced that they require care, supervision and control for their own protection or for the protection of others. "(2) For the purposes of this section, 'mental defectiveness' means a condition of arrested or incomplete development of mind existing before the age of eighteen years, whether arising from inherent causes or induced by disease or injury."

S. 6 (3): "If the judicial authority is satisfied that the person to whom the petition relates is a defective and is also satisfied that he is subject to be dealt with under this Act, the judicial authority may, in whose case there existed mental defectiveness which was so pronounced that they required care, supervision and control for their own protection or for the protection of others, should be deemed to be defectives within the meaning of the Act, and that under section 1 (2) of the Act of 1913 (as amended) mental defectiveness for the purpose of section 1 meant a condition of arrested or incomplete development of mind existing before the age of eighteen years and that, at the time when the order was made, there was no evidence before the justices that he had suffered from such a condition of mind existing before the age of eighteen years or that it was desirable in his interests that an order should be made ordering him to be sent to an institution; and (2), that section 8 (1) (b) of the Act of 1913 gave the justices power to make any order which, if a petition had been duly presented under the Act the judicial authority might have made but that under section 6 (3) if the petition was not presented by a parent or guardian an order should not be made by the judicial authority without the consent of the parent or guardian unless it was proved that such consent was unreasonably withheld, and there was no evidence before the justices that the applicant's father had consented to the order or had unreasonably withheld his consent.

Peter Pain for the applicant.
Rodger Winn for the respondents.

No cases were cited in argument.

LORD GODDARD C.J. In this case Mr. Pain applies for a writ of habeas corpus to bring up and discharge the applicant, Cyril Montague Sage, who, on February 2, 1953, was committed by the Cranbrook justices to an institution for mental defectives acting under section 8 of the Mental Deficiency Act, 1913. The circumstances were that on a previous occasion before another court the applicant had pleaded guilty to a charge of larceny and had been put on probation; he had not fulfilled the terms of his

"if he thinks it desirable to do so in "the interests of such person, make "an order either ordering him to be "sent to an institution . . . , or "appointing a suitable person to be "his guardian, and the order shall "state the class of defectives to "which he belongs, and the circum-"stances which render him subject "to be dealt with under this Act: "Provided that—(a) where the peti-"tion is not presented by the parent "or guardian, the order shall not be "made without the consent in writing "of the parent or guardian, unless it "is proved to the satisfaction of the "judicial authority that such consent "is unreasonably withheld, or that "the parent or guardian cannot be "found, but consent shall not be "deemed to be unreasonably withheld "if withheld with the bona fide in-"tention of benefiting the defective."

S. 8: "(1) On the conviction by "a court of competent jurisdiction of "any person of any criminal offence "punishable in the case of an adult "with penal servitude or imprison-"ment . . . the court, if satisfied on "medical evidence that he is a defec-"tive within the meaning of this "Act, may . . . (b) in lieu of passing "sentence . . . itself make any order "which if a petition had been duly "presented under this Act the judicial "authority might have made, which "order shall have the like effect as "if it had been made by a judicial "authority on a petition under this "Act."

1958

Sage, In re.

Lord Goddard C.J.

probation, and he was therefore brought by the probation officer before the court. The justices, hearing that the applicant was living in a hut on a farm—whether in wretched circumstances I do not know, but at any rate living in a hut on a farm—and that he was then only just 20, wishing to know whether he was a mental defective or not remanded him for a medical report. It is to be observed that the justices had an opportunity of seeing the applicant in court and hearing about him, and then they remanded him for the report. He was remanded to Canterbury jail where he was examined by the prison doctor, a man well acquainted with the Mental Deficiency Act who has the medical experience necessary to enable him to give evidence on these matters; and the prison doctor came before the justices and said that the applicant was a feeble-minded person within the Act. Assuming that that is exactly what he said—and we are invited to say that is all he said—that is only a compendious way of saying that the doctor had examined the applicant and had come to the conclusion that the provisions of the Mental Deficiency Acts applied to him, and that he was a person who could properly be dealt with by the court under those Acts.

We are asked to say that there was no evidence which would justify the justices in making the order. We take a contrary view. We think that on the evidence of the doctor and on their own observations it was open to the justices to make that order. On an application for habeas corpus we have to see whether the detention is lawful. The detention is lawful here because an order which Parliament has authorized to be made under section 8 of the Mental Deficiency Act was made; if it could have been shown that the justices had made the order without evidence, we could have gone behind the order and interfered, but it is clear in this case that there was evidence on which the justices could make the order.

The last point put by Mr. Pain was really, if I may say so, raised as a matter of despair. If a petition is presented for the detention of a person under the Mental Deficiency Acts, that is to say, if a person is not alleged to be guilty of any offence, but the justices are simply being asked to make an order that he should be sent to an institution for mental defectives, then, under section 6 (3) of the Act of 1913 the consent of the parent or guardian must be obtained or it must be shown that the parent could not be found or that the parent was unreasonably withholding his consent. Of course that does not apply when the justices have to decide what is the proper order to make in respect of a person who has committed a breach of the criminal law. The court is not bound to consult the parent whether he likes or wishes a particular sentence to be passed. What section 8 (1) (b) says is that in such a case the court itself may make any order which if a petition had been presented the judicial authority might have made. Before the judicial authority may make an order under section 6 (2) a petition has to be presented; the justices may make the same order which could be made if the judicial authority had a petition duly presented to them but it is not for them, in making up their minds whether a defendant ought to be dealt with as a mental defective, to consider whether or not a petition has been duly presented or what would have happened if it had been. They are entitled to make the same order as if a petition had been duly presented, but it is not necessary for them to ask anything of the parent or guardian.

In the opinion of this court, there is no ground for granting a writ of habeas corpus in this case. In our opinion the applicant is lawfully detained under the Act, and this application fails and is dismissed.

HILBERY J. I agree.

SALMON J. I agree.

Application dismissed.

Solicitors: Walter Stein and Grover; Solicitor, Ministry of Health.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

* In re S. (AN INFANT).

1958
Feb. 28.
Roxburgh J.

Infant—Custody—Appeal from justices—Order directing change of custody—Stay pending appeal often necessary—Guardianship of Infants Acts, 1886–1951.

Infant—Custody—Chancery Division—Hearing in open court—Question raised of great public importance.

S., an infant under the age of five years, had always lived with his mother. The parents were married, and S. was born on October 16, 1953. The mother left the father at Easter, 1956, but S. continued to live with her; the father saw S. at fortnightly intervals for about a year thereafter. On the application of the father to the justices on February 24, 1958, an order was made giving custody of S. to the father with limited access to the mother. The justices gave no reason for their decision, and counsel for the mother at once applied for a stay of the order pending an appeal. The justices refused the application and again gave no reasons. The father made an attempt to take S. from the mother, but she refused to part with him; a disturbance and a scuffle ensued with the result that the mother took S. away with her and retained custody of him:—

Held, that the infant should remain in the custody of the mother until the hearing of the appeal.

Per curiam. As it was not a good thing for a child of tender years to be bandied about between contending and conflicting parents, where there was no urgency for the transfer of custody of an infant, it was not normally in the interests of the infant to

---

[Reported by M. B. KELLY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

1958

S.
(An Infant),
In re.

refuse a reasonable stay pending appeal, provided that the justices were satisfied that there was a genuine intention to appeal.

Further, if the justices thought that they ought to refuse a stay, then, unless there was an even greater sense of urgency, they ought not to make the order to take effect instanter as distinct from, say, seven days thereafter, so as to enable the aggrieved party to apply to the Chancery judge to grant a stay.

Motion.

The mother of S., an infant under 5 years, applied for an order that the custody of the infant should remain with her pending the hearing of her appeal against an order of the Bedford justices dated February 24, 1958, that she deliver up custody to the father.

By their order, the Bedford justices, on the application of the father had granted him legal custody of the infant with a limited right of access by the mother. On February 25, 1958, the mother served notice of appeal against the justices' order, and on February 26, 1958, on the application of the mother, ex parte, an order was made, in chambers in the Chancery Division, that the infant should remain in the custody of the mother until February 28, 1958, or until further order, the mother being granted liberty to serve notice of motion for that day.

By order of Roxburgh J. the hearing of the motion was in open court.

The facts are fully stated in the judgment.

T. A. C. Burgess for the mother.
W. A. B. Forbes for the father.

No cases were referred to in argument.

Roxburgh J. I am hearing this case in open court because it raises a matter of, as I see it, great public importance and one which causes me a good deal of embarrassment very often when I hear—as I often do because I am the assigned judge—appeals from magistrates about the custody of infants. It is common knowledge that it is not a good thing for a child of tender years to be bandied about between contending and conflicting parents; at any rate, that is my view, and, accordingly, I often feel when I hear appeals that one reason why I ought not to vary an order is that, the order having been carried out by the transfer of the care and control of the infant, if I reverse the order that means handing back the child to the former care and control, and that is exactly the process that I think everybody concerned with the welfare of infants deprecates. Therefore, I often say to counsel who appear before me, because these cases are generally heard in camera: "Why did you not ask for a stay from the magistrates? "It would have been much easier for you to have succeeded on "this appeal if you had, because there would not then have been "this bandying about of the infant," and some counsel have indicated that it is not very easy to get a stay. If this case is at all typical, that indication from counsel must be overwhelmingly true and, as I think the lamentable events which did, in fact, follow the refusal of the magistrates to grant the stay must really be attributed to that refusal which in my judgment, was not justified, this is a very good occasion on which to point out why it is desirable that magistrates should grant a stay when their order involves a change of custody, if they are satisfied that there is a genuine intention to appeal. Of course, there are cases where even a day's delay, or even a week's delay, might prejudice the welfare of the infant. This, quite obviously, is not in that category or anywhere near it, as the facts to which I am going to refer make plain; but I want to make it clear that I do recognize that there are cases in which it would be quite right to refuse a stay even though there is a change of custody, and even though there is a genuine intention to appeal. As I say, there might be such cases. I know that magistrates do not order a stay pending an appeal when they think that the emergency is too great. I can hardly believe that this case was in that category, but if it seemed to them to be in that category they could at least have said that the order should not take effect for four days; that is to say, they could have made the transfer of care and control take effect four days after the decision. Again, there might be a case of extreme urgency in which that might be the wrong thing to do, but normally that would not be the wrong thing to do, and then the unseemly events which have happened in this case would not have happened. It is for those reasons, not with any desire to make a public display of what has happened in this case, that I have dealt with this in public.

The facts of this case are these: The father and mother are married. The child was born on October 16, 1953 (it was a boy), and is, therefore, under five. The mother left the father at Easter, 1956, with the child, and the child has always been under her care and control down to today, and is still under her care and control and will, for some time at any rate, continue so to be. On February 24, 1958, the Bedford justices heard a complaint by the father that he and the mother were separated and living apart, and alleging that he was better fitted to have the legal custody of the child. The order which they drew up—and I put it in that way because I have before me an affidavit by a solicitor that the order contained something which the written order certainly did not contain, and which, therefore, cannot in any way have effect as an order—is an order giving custody of the infant to the father with access to the mother between 2 p.m. and 5 p.m. on Sundays. On the making of that order the justices gave no reason for their decision. Counsel on behalf of the mother at once applied for a stay of the order pending an appeal, but the justices refused the application and gave no reason. I will come back to that presently. For my own part, I cannot think of any reason for refusing the stay, and the justices even

1958

S.
(An Infant),
In re.

Roxburgh J.

now—and I am not blaming them, because they had no obligation to do so—have not given me their reasons for refusing a stay. But I will go on with the story in order that it may be abundantly clear what lamentable consequences ensued from this sort of position, namely, an order for the immediate transfer of a small child of under five from the custody of the mother (which had been existing ever since the child was born) to the father, a person with whom the child had not lived. I believe the father had some access, but the child had never lived with the father since Easter, 1956. There was this order to operate immediately and the stay of execution was refused.

Of course, it is no part of my duty to decide whether anybody ought to be summoned for assault, that can be dealt with in Bedford together with the other matters with which I am not concerned; but the story must be told as an indication of the consequences of that sort of action. In his affidavit the solicitor for the mother stated: "After the hearing the father made an "attempt forcibly to take the infant from the mother, but she "refused to part with the infant and there was, in my presence, "some disturbance among the persons present when, in my view, "the father assaulted the mother's sister. I am informed by "the mother and verily believe that when the father attempted "to take the infant away from the mother the infant clung to "her and commenced screaming and said 'Don't let him take "'me. Take me home mummy.' I am also informed by the "mother and verily believe that when the father and his sister "and the mother and her sister together with the infant were in "the waiting room before the hearing of the summons the infant "inquired 'who that man was,' indicating the father. The "mother further informed me and I verily believe that before "the hearing the infant was living with her at an address in "Bedford."

That is one side of the story of the scuffle, but I think I ought to read the other side of the story in case it should be thought that I am necessarily accepting one view rather than the other. I do not mind who was responsible for the scuffle; my point is that it was a most unseemly and improper event and, as I see it, almost the natural consequence of the refusal of a stay in this particular case.

The other side of the story is told by a woman police officer. She says she was on duty on this occasion and I think she quite clearly confirms the account which I have given of what took place so far as the magistrates are concerned. She says in her affidavit: " . . . The magistrates returned at about 12.55 and the "chairman announced that an order for custody of the child "would be made in favour of the father, the mother to have "certain rights of access." Then comes this, and it is very important: "A legal argument then took place respecting an "appeal and a stay of the order. Whilst this was going on, I "went and stood near the mother. I heard the chairman say "that the order would take effect at once. The court then rose "and I opened the door to allow the mother to leave. The "mother's sister was standing outside the door with the child. "The mother then went out of the door, picked up the child "and carried it hurriedly along the landing towards the stairs. "The mother's sister followed her. When the mother got to the "stairs, she started to run down them still carrying the child. "Her sister followed at the same speed. I ran after them, as I "thought the mother was taking the child away in breach of the "order of the court. I tried to overtake the mother's sister but "was prevented from doing so as she had her hand on the "banisters. She may have been trying to stop me, but I "cannot be sure. When we reached the bottom of the stairs, "I said to the mother 'You can't take the child away,' and she "said 'You try and stop me.' She was still holding the child. "I then asked her to go into the waiting room at the foot of the "stairs, which she and her sister did, taking the child with them. "The father and his sister had followed me downstairs and were "behind me when the mother said 'You are not going to take "'him.' She then tried to leave the waiting room and the "father and I restrained her. There was then a lot of shouting "and the child began to scream and appeared to be very "frightened. At this stage I telephoned Horne Lane police "station for assistance. When I returned, I saw the mother's "sister give the father a violent push in the chest and he then "hit her on the arm with his hand. She did not fall but backed "into the table which slid across the room. At this time the "father's solicitor had arrived and come into the waiting room, "which was then rather crowded. The mother then hit the "solicitor quite a spiteful blow with her hand on the left of his "face. The solicitor then came out of the waiting room and did "not retaliate. A general melée then took place between all "concerned. . . ."

That is the description of what happened in the precincts of the local court. As I say, I am not concerned to choose between those two stories. I give them with complete impartiality, and if there are summonses for assault, I have said nothing in favour of anybody or against anybody, except that it was a most unseemly procedure.

That was not all the father and his adviser did. His solicitor knew full well that the mother had instructed her solicitor to appeal. This is the solicitor's own affidavit: "On the following "morning I telephoned the mother's solicitors and inquired if "the mother was then willing to deliver the said infant to the "father, but was unable to obtain any information except that the "said solicitors had instructions to proceed with an appeal to this "honourable court." That is why I say, and it is his own admission, that he knew perfectly well that they had instructions to proceed with the appeal. "I informed the solicitors that if I "could not be assured that custody would be given, a complaint

1958

S.
(An Infant),
In re.

Roxburgh J.

"would be made to the justices in accordance with the advice of "counsel to that effect. No such assurance was given to me." Then—and he seems to think it rather a point against the mother, but I do not—he said he could not readily find her, but she was still in Bedford. Then he goes on: "Having regard to the "matters referred to in paragraph 15 of this affidavit"—that is the passage to which I have just referred—"I laid a complaint on "behalf of the father before the justices and requested the clerk "of the court to expedite the issue of service and hearing of the "relevant proceedings. I informed the clerk of the court that "I had seen the mother and the said infant in a certain shop. "I then wrote a letter in the name of my firm to the mother's "solicitors, which was delivered to the office of the said solicitors "at or about 1 p.m."

I will read that letter: "We enclose herewith copy order "made yesterday by the court on the hearing of the summons "for custody. We understand that your client persists in her "refusal to comply with the terms of the order. Furthermore, "we have ascertained that she has not today sent her child to the "nursery school to which she referred in her evidence before the "court, but that, on the contrary, she has him with her at the "shop in which she works. This, of course, is totally unsatis-"factory and entirely contrary to the interests of the child. We "are therefore arranging for the immediate issue of a summons "for the committal of your client pending compliance with the "order," and I point out that they knew she had instructed her solicitors to appeal. The summons was issued, but the mother applied to me ex parte bringing her notice of motion, but no affidavit, and I was so astonished that the magistrate had not allowed even sufficient time for the mother to apply to me for a stay of execution before insisting on the change of custody that I took what is a most unusual step—and I want to point out that it is most unusual, but I am very glad that I took it—and I granted an ex parte order without any affidavit that the infant do remain in the custody of the mother until after today, and I gave leave to serve notice of motion.

As I have already said, there can be, and I dare say there quite often are, cases in which it is quite right to refuse any stay of an order transfering the custody of a child from one parent to the other, and I am going to look in a minute to see whether this is, by any possible criterion, such a case; but I do wish to say that where there is no urgency for the transfer—and I do underline those words "where there is no urgency for the transfer"—it is not normally in the interests of an infant to refuse a reasonable stay pending appeal if the magistrates are satisfied that there is a genuine intention to appeal. Further, if they think that they ought to refuse a stay, then, unless there is an even greater sense of urgency, they ought not to make the order to take effect instanter as distinct from, say, seven days thereafter, so as to enable the aggrieved party (that is to say, the party aggrieved by their refusal to grant a stay) to apply, as that party is quite entitled to apply, to this court to ask for a stay so that there should not be fights over the child and the handing back of the child to one or other of the contending parties.

Therefore I propose now to look and see whether there was any conceivable justification in this case for refusing a stay. I must be careful to remember that I am not hearing the appeal. I must be particularly careful about that because the reasons which the magistrates did not give are now before me in fact. I do not know whether I ought to have looked at them, but counsel for the father was anxious that I should, and I have looked at them, and I take no objection to them. I only want to say this: The prima facie rule (which is now quite clearly settled) is that, other things being equal, children of this tender age should be with their mother, and where a court gives the custody of a child of this tender age to the father it is incumbent upon it to make sure that there really are sufficient reasons to exclude the prima facie rule. I am not going further than that. I am not going to say, because it would be wrong for me at this moment to say, whether, in my judgment, there are sufficient reasons in this case for excluding the prima facie rule; but I propose to say two things which are, I think, inescapable: One is that if there are sufficient reasons, they are much weaker than would be the position in a normal case in which care and control is given to the father of a child of such tender years as this child. Secondly, there can be nobody in this land who could deny that the appellant has a reasonable chance of success on this appeal. In those circumstances, I am sure that one must look for some ground of urgency to justify an immediate order for the transfer of possession of the child to the father. The child has never suffered any injury from being with the mother—there was no suggestion of that, anyway—and there is no suggestion that I can see that it will suffer any injury. I cannot believe that a matter of a few weeks would make the slightest difference one way or the other to the welfare of the child. I have studied the reasons they have given for their decision to find in them any inkling of urgency, and I can find absolutely none. I therefore order that the infant do remain in the custody of the mother until the hearing of the appeal.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Waterhouse & Co. for Burgess & Chesher, Bedford; J. D. Langton & Passmore for Mellows & Sons, Bedford.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1958
Feb. 26, 27.

Diplock J.

* MARGULIES BROTHERS LTD. v. DAFNIS THOMAIDES & CO. (U.K.) LTD.

Arbitration—Award—Form—Implied term that award capable of enforcement as judgment—Jurisdiction to remit—Uncertainty—Arbitration Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 27), s. 26.

Contract—Implied term.

By three contracts the applicants agreed to sell 100 tons of cocoa, 3 per cent. more or less, to the respondents, and by another three contracts the applicants agreed to buy the same quantities of cocoa from the respondents. Differences having arisen, the contracts were submitted to arbitration and thence to the Board of Appeal of the Cocoa Association, who decided that the second three contracts should be applied against the first three, and the resultant differences should be paid to the applicants. On a motion by the applicants to remit the award on the ground that, by a decision of the Court of Appeal it had been held, in its present form, the award was not enforceable as a judgment:—

Held, (1) that the court was not limited as to the grounds on which it would, in the exercise of its discretion, remit an award, but in the present case the award should be remitted on the well-recognized ground that it was bad on its face as it did not define the quantity of cocoa within 3 per cent. which was to be taken into account for the purpose of calculation of the sums payable to the applicants (although the parties were in fact agreed as to the method of calculation).

Dictum of Fletcher Moulton L.J. in In re Baxters and Midland Railway Co. (1906) 95 L.T. 20, 23; 22 T.L.R. 616 applied.

(2) Alternatively, that it was an implied term of an arbitration agreement that an award for the payment of money should be in a form which was capable of being enforced in the same manner as a judgment; that as the board of appeal had failed to comply with this implied term they were guilty of misconduct and, therefore, the court had jurisdiction to remit on this ground also.

(3) That the fact that the respondents might have a counterclaim against the applicants was not a good reason for refusing to remit the award.

Action to remit an award by the Board of Appeal of the Cocoa Association of London Ltd.

By contracts dated November 8, 18, and December 12, 1957, the applicants, Margulies Brothers Ltd., agreed to sell to the respondents, Dafnis Thomaides & Co. (U.K.) Ltd., 50 tons, 25 tons and 25 tons of Ghana cocoa, 3 per cent. more or less c.i.f. Hamburg at a certain price, and by contracts dated September 19, November 4 and 6, 1957, the applicants agreed to purchase from the respondents the same quantities of cocoa at lower prices. Each of the contracts contained a provision that any dispute arising out of any contract should be settled by arbitration in London as provided for by the rules of the Cocoa Association of London Ltd. A dispute having arisen on the contracts, it was referred to arbitration and an award was made on December 30, 1957, providing that the applicants were not entitled to immediate settlement of the differences arising out of the contracts. On appeal by the applicants to the board of appeal, the board made an award that the second three contracts should be applied against the first three contracts, and the resultant differences plus interest should be paid by the respondents to the applicants.

In an affidavit by the applicants it was stated that the amount payable under that award was £4,075, but on February 24, 1958, the Court of Appeal, on appeal from an order of Havers J., held that an award in this form would not be enforced in the same manner as a judgment under section 26 of the Arbitration Act, 1950. The applicants now applied under section 22 of the Act of 1950 to remit the award to the board of appeal in order that the actual sum payable by the respondents to the applicants should be calculated.

R. H. Bernstein for the applicants.

C. P. Harvey Q.C. and J. F. Donaldson for the respondents.

It was not argued whether it was an implied term of the submission to arbitration that the award should be in a form which was capable of being enforced like a judgment under section 26 of the Arbitration Act, 1950.

The following cases, in addition to those referred to in the judgment, were cited in argument: In re Becker Shillan & Co. and Barry Brothers [1]; Crane v. Hegeman-Harris Co. Inc. [2]; In re Walker and Beckenham, Kent, Local Board [3]; In re Boks & Co. and Peters, Rushton & Co. [4]; Kiril Mischeff Ltd. v. Constant Smith & Co. [5]

DIPLOCK J. This is a motion to remit, under section 22 of the Arbitration Act, 1950, to the Board of Appeal of the Cocoa Association of London Ltd. an award made by them on January 24, 1958, the scope of the remission being limited to the calculation of the sum of money payable by the respondents to the appellants under the award.

The award (so far as is relevant) is in the following terms: "The board of appeal elected to hear the appeal presented by "Messrs. Margulies Brothers Ltd." [the applicants] "against "the award of Mr. F. C. Bevis dated December 30, 1957, in "respect of six parcels of 50 tons, 25 tons, 25 tons, 50 tons, 25 "tons and 25 tons respectively of G.F. Ghana cocoa sold under "contracts dated September 19, November 4, 6, 8 and 18, "and December 12, 1957, having considered the case do hereby "decide that the original award be varied and that contracts

[1] [1921] 1 K.B. 391; sub nom. Becker, Shillan & Co. v. Barry Brothers, 37 T.L.R. 101.

[2] [1939] 4 All E.R. 68.

[3] (1884) 50 L.T. 207.

[4] [1919] 1 K.B. 491.

[5] [1950] 2 K.B. 616; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 742; [1950] 1 All E.R. 890.

1958

Margulies Brothers Ltd. v. Dafnis Thomaides & Co. (U.K.) Ltd.

Diplock J.

"Nos. 2101, 2168, 2174 shall be applied against contracts Nos. "2184, 2207 and 2265 respectively, and the resultant differences "plus interest at 8 per cent. per annum from December 14, 1957, "to date of payment shall be paid by [the respondents to "the applicants] within seven days, and we further award that "the fees and expenses of the original arbitration be paid by [the "respondents]."

This award does not purport to be a mere declaratory award; but, although it is one for the payment of money, it does not specify the actual sum to be paid but sets out the manner in which the sum ordered to be paid is to be calculated.

It was determined by the Court of Appeal on February 24, 1958, that an award in this form cannot be enforced in the same manner as a judgment under section 26 of the Arbitration Act, 1950; and the purpose of the present application is to get the award amended to a form in which it can be so enforced. The application is resisted on two grounds: first, that the award is complete and valid on its face and the circumstances disclosed give me no jurisdiction to remit it, or, perhaps, more accurately, the authorities show that it would be an unjudicial exercise of my discretion if I were to do so; secondly, that in the particular circumstances of this case I ought not to exercise my jurisdiction to remit the award, since the applicants' proper remedy, even if the award were amended, would be to bring an action on the award, and this they can do with the award in its present form.

Mr. Harvey argues, on behalf of the respondents, that the jurisdiction of the court to remit an award is limited to four grounds: (1) that the award is bad on the face of it; (2) that there has been misconduct on the part of the arbitrator; (3) that there has been an admitted mistake and the arbitrator asks that the matter be remitted; and (4) where additional evidence has been discovered after the making of the award. He cites as authority for that proposition Montgomery Jones & Co. v. Liebenthal & Co.[1] The statement on which he relies is a submission which was made by counsel in the argument in that case. It was approved by A. L. Smith L.J. and Chitty L.J. expressed approval, but found it unnecessary to decide whether the list was exhaustive. The approval of A. L. Smith L.J., as well as that of Chitty L.J., was obiter, since the only question was whether an award could be set aside for a mistake of law not apparent on its face when the arbitrator did not request remission. Furthermore, although A. L. Smith L.J. treats the law as having been so laid down in In re Keighley, Maxsted & Co. and Durant & Co.,[2] the statement which he approved in fact extends the law as laid down in that case, which referred not to "mis-"conduct" of the arbitrator in general as a good ground for remission, but only to fraud, corruption and excess of jurisdiction. To the opposite effect of the dicta to which I have referred is the dictum of Fletcher Moulton L.J. in In re Baxters and Midland Railway Co.,[3] which is in the following terms: "Counsel for the "railway company seemed to me to treat the authorities they "relied upon as though they cut down the jurisdiction of the "court. The jurisdiction of the court is statutory, and cannot be "increased or cut down in that way. The reported decisions of "the court only show the principles which have guided the court "from time to time in exercising its jurisdiction, and, though "they may afford a valuable guidance they do not restrict either "the jurisdiction of the court in deciding other cases or the duty "of the court to look at the facts in each particular case. When "the facts of any particular case before the court are the same "as the facts in the cases cited no doubt the court will follow "those cases. But it must not be supposed that reported "decisions prevent the court from deciding whether in the "interests of justice it ought to send the matter back to the "arbitrator."

[1] (1898) 78 L.T. 406.

[2] [1893] 1 Q.B. 405; 9 T.L.R. 107.

I do not think that I am limited by authority to the four grounds for remitting awards approved in the Montgomery Jones case,[4] although I should naturally hesitate before exercising my discretion to remit in a case which does not come within any one of the four categories there approved. Of those categories, the first is the only relevant one: Is the award good on the face of it? Looked at by itself, it is not merely uncertain, but unintelligible. The respondents submit that I am entitled to look at the documents referred to in the appeal award—that is to say, the original award appealed against and the contracts. If I do so, I find that the contracts are three contracts of sale of Ghana cocoa c.i.f. Hamburg, January/February/March shipment by the respondents to the applicants at certain prices, and three corresponding contracts of sale of the same quantities of cocoa c.i.f. Hamburg, January/February/March shipment by the applicants to the respondents at higher prices. It then becomes apparent that the resultant differences from applying one contract against another are the differences in the purchase price of each of the corresponding pairs of contracts of purchase and sale. The amount awarded, say the respondents, is therefore a matter of mere arithmetic from the award, and the documents referred to in it, and the award is sufficiently certain on the maxim id certum est quod certum reddi potest. In support of that proposition Mr. Harvey relied upon two ancient cases: Wohlenberg v. Lageman[5] and Higgins v. Willes.[6]

If I were to shut my eyes to evidence extraneous to the award and the documents referred to in it, which asserts that none of these contracts was a genuine contract of sale of goods, but that they were all in combination mere gambling in differences, I should have considerable doubt whether the award was certain;

[3] (1906) 95 L.T. 20, 22; 22 T.L.R. 616.
[4] 78 L.T. 406.
[5] (1815) 6 Taunt. 251.
[6] (1828) 3 M. & R.K.B. 382.

1958

Margulies Brothers Ltd. v. Dafnis Thomaides & Co. (U.K.) Ltd.

Diplock J.

and since the time for the performance of none of the six contracts had expired, any breach by the respondents must have been anticipatory. The contracts are not for fixed quantities of cocoa but for "about" the specified quantities—"(3 per cent. "more or less)"—and could have been performed with least loss to the respondents so far as their sales were concerned by delivery of 3 per cent. less than the specified quantities. The award (and the documents referred to in it) does not, I think, in the absence of extraneous evidence, define what quantity of cocoa within 3 per cent. each way is to be taken into account for the purposes of the calculation. On its face, therefore, I think that there is a good deal to be said for the view that it is uncertain.

But Mr. Harvey argues that, even if there were uncertainty on the face of the award and the documents referred to in it, the parties are agreed as to the method of calculation. The applicants have stated their views as to the method of calculation in an affidavit, and Mr. Harvey, on behalf of the respondents, agrees with it. This is a matter (he says) like the shares in the ship in Wohlenberg v. Lageman,[7] which is not in dispute between the parties. It is quite true that the point that the award was uncertain was first raised by me and not by Mr. Bernstein on behalf of the applicants. Indeed, the whole basis of his unsuccessful application to enforce the award in the same manner as a judgment which went to the Court of Appeal must, I think, have been that it was certain. But Mr. Bernstein is naturally not unwilling to avail himself of the point, even at the eleventh hour, if he can; and I see nothing to estop him from doing so if he wants to. I think that this award on its face is uncertain and comes within the first category approved in the Montgomery Jones case,[8] in which awards can be remitted to the arbitrator.

But even if I am wrong in thinking that the award is uncertain on its face, I still think I have jurisdiction to set it aside. It is, in my view, an implied term of an arbitration agreement made since 1889 (when the provision for enforcing an award in the same manner as a judgment was first introduced) that an award for the payment of money—as contrasted with a mere declaratory award—shall be in a form which is capable of being enforced in the same manner as a judgment. That this remedy should be available is one of the main purposes of an arbitration agreement, and I have no hesitation in holding that I have jurisdiction to remit an award for the payment of money so that it may be amended to put it in a form in which it will be so enforceable. If this extends the categories in which cases can be remitted to the arbitrator which was approved in the Montgomery Jones case,[8] I will cheerfully, encouraged by Fletcher Moulton L.J. in Baxter's case,[9] so extend them: but if I be right in my recent decision in London Export Corporation Ltd. v. Jubilee Coffee

[7] 6 Taunt. 251.
[8] 78 L.T. 406.
[9] 95 L.T. 20.

Roasting Co. Ltd.[10] that in arbitration law "misconduct" of an arbitrator includes any failure by the arbitrator to comply with the terms, express or implied, of the arbitration agreement, the case falls within the second category approved in the Montgomery Jones case,[11] namely, that there has been misconduct on the part of the arbitrators in failing to comply with the implied term that the award for the payment of money shall be in a form which is capable of being enforced in the same manner as a judgment. I hold, therefore, that I have jurisdiction to remit the case to the board of appeal to calculate the sum of money due to the applicants, and that it would not be an unjudicial exercise of my discretion if I were to do so.

I have, however, still to deal with Mr. Harvey's second submission, that in the particular circumstances of the case I ought not to remit the award since the proper remedy of the applicants is to bring an action on the award.

If I am right in thinking that the award is uncertain, the dispute has not been settled and decided by arbitration, and, accordingly, by rule 10 of the Market Rules of the Association, which are incorporated in the contracts, no action can be brought. The applicants would therefore be left without any remedy unless the award were remitted. But if I am wrong as to this, and the award is enforceable in its present form by action, why should I refuse to the applicants the right to put themselves in a position to enforce it directly in the same manner as a judgment?

What Mr. Harvey is really saying is that, even if the award were in a form in which it could be enforced as a judgment, the court, in the exercise of its discretion under section 26 of the Arbitration Act, 1950, ought to refuse leave so to enforce it. and leave the applicants to their remedy by an action on the award. The grounds on which he says so did not commend themselves to Havers J.; they do not commend themselves to me; but it is probably some consolation to him that, even if my order in this case is upheld by the Court of Appeal, he will have a third chance before yet another judge when the applicants apply to enforce the amended award.

In those circumstances I can give my reasons for rejecting the second submission briefly. An affidavit has been put in on behalf of the respondents alleging, first, that these were not intended to be genuine contracts of sale but were gambling transactions in differences, sales being married against purchases of similar quantities; secondly, that an oral agreement was made on November 8, 1957, that in consideration of the respondents continuing to deal in cocoa with the applicants for December, 1957/February, 1958, January, 1958/March, 1958, and February, 1958/April, 1958, deliveries, the applicants would make no request to the respondents to put up the margin; thirdly, that the applicants broke the oral agreement by refusing to accept orders

[10] [1958] 1 W.L.R. 271; [1958] 1 All E.R. 494.

[11] 78 L.T. 406.

1958

Margulies Brothers Ltd. v. Dafnis Thomaides & Co. (U.K.) Ltd.

Diplock J.

given in December, 1957, by the respondents for cocoa for delivery in January/March, 1958, and February/April, 1958; fourthly, that the respondents, as they were entitled to, accepted such breach as a wrongful repudiation of the oral agreement; and, fifthly, that they have a large counterclaim for damages for such repudiation which will reduce their total indebtedness to the applicants to between £1,850 and £3,350.

It is not suggested in the affidavit that there is any claim for rectification of the agreements which are the subject-matter of the award; but all that the affidavit amounts to is that the respondents allege that they have a counterclaim arising out of transactions closely connected with those which are the subject-matter of the award. No authority has been cited to me in which the existence of a counterclaim has been held to be a good reason for refusing to allow an award to be enforced as a judgment. I do not think that the existence of a counterclaim is a good reason. I think that it would be contrary to the purpose of section 26 of the Arbitration Act, 1950, if, in a case where the validity of the award and the right to proceed upon it is beyond doubt, it should be given less effect than a judgment. I think that the cases in which an award will not be enforced as a judgment are correctly set out in Russell on Arbitration, 16th ed., at pp. 269 to 271, and that the existence of a prima facie counterclaim is not one of them. Even, therefore, if I thought that a prima facie counterclaim were established, I should not regard it as good ground for refusing to allow the applicants to enforce the award in the same manner as a judgment, and, a fortiori, as good ground for refusing to remit the award to the board of appeal so that it may be amended to a form in which the applicants can apply to some other judge for leave to enforce it in that manner.

As the respondents have already issued a writ in respect of their counterclaim it is desirable that I should not appear to prejudge it. There may be evidence to support it additional to that which appears in the affidavit and exhibits before me. But I have to exercise my discretion on the only evidence which is before me, and limiting myself to that evidence it is right to say—for it is a further reason for the exercise of my discretion—that I think the alleged counterclaim implausible.

The applicants are, accordingly, entitled to an order remitting the award to the appeal board for the purposes indicated.

Award remitted.

Solicitors: Dubovie, Freeman & Co.; E. F. Turner & Sons.

J. D. P.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* In re GREEN (A BANKRUPT), ex parte THE TRUSTEE.

C. A.

1958
Mar. 18.

Jenkins, Romer and Ormerod L.JJ.

[No. 183 of 1956.]

Court of Appeal—Hearing in camera—Bankruptcy—Application for private examination of witness—Interests of justice—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), s. 25.
Bankruptcy—Hearing in camera—Court of Appeal.

When the interests of justice require it, the Court of Appeal will hear in camera an application under section 25 (1) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914,* for the private examination of a person said to have had dealings with the debtor.

APPLICATION ex parte.

The trustee in bankruptcy of one Green, in view of certain matters which had come to his knowledge, desired to have a private examination of one M., who (it was said) had had dealings with the debtor in the past. An ex parte application pursuant to section 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, having been refused by the registrar, the trustee renewed the application before the Court of Appeal.

Muir Hunter for the trustee. The trustee desires that this application may be heard in camera. It was first before the court on March 10, and was adjourned. As a result of the publicity which it received on that occasion, annoyance was caused to the debtor and the proposed witness, who was also made aware of the trustee's desire to have him examined. Moreover, the interests of justice require that the application shall not be heard in public.

[JENKINS L.J. You have to satisfy us as to our jurisdiction to hear applications in camera. You will have to satisfy us that it is a proper course for the court to take.]

The trustee's report prepared pursuant to rule 72 in support of the application is highly confidential; it is not disclosed to anyone, is not placed on the file, and is not used in any other proceedings. There is no precedent for the appearance of counsel for interested parties on such an application.[1] To read in open

* Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 25: "(1) The court may, on the application of the official receiver or trustee, at any time after a receiving order has been made against a debtor, summon before it the debtor or his wife, or any person known or suspected to have in his possession any of the estate or effects belonging to the debtor, or supposed to be indebted to the debtor, or any person whom the court may deem capable of giving information respecting the debtor, his dealings or property . . . (3) The court may examine on oath . . . any person so brought before it concerning the debtor, his dealings, or property."

S. 167: " . . . 'The court' means the court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy under this Act; . . ."

[1] Certain counsel representing interested parties were present at the opening of the application, but were informed by the court that they had no locus standi.

C. A.
1958
Green (A Bankrupt), In re. Ex parte The Trustee.

court the matters on which the trustee relies would be to disclose the applicant's brief to the proposed witness, and might go far to destroy the purpose of the examination which was sought.

The jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court may in general be exercised in chambers, except for certain specified matters of which this is not one; see section 101. This is not an appeal but the renewal of an application, and for this purpose the Court of Appeal is exercising the original jurisdiction of the registrar and bankruptcy judge, and is "the court" as defined by section 167.

The Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to hear matters in camera when justice so demands; see the notes to R.S.C., Ord. 36, r. 1, and Ord. 58, r. 9, in the Annual Practice. This is the result of certain decisions; there is no specific rule to that effect: see In re Agricultural Industries Ltd.[2] That case dealt with litigation inter partes. This is an a fortiori case, as it has been frequently stated that proceedings under section 25 are a matter between the trustee and the bankruptcy court and involve no lis. Even in litigation there are exceptions to the rule that the Court of Appeal should not sit in camera: see Scott v. Scott.[3]

Jenkins L.J. (after the court had conferred): We think that in the interests of justice this application is one which is proper to be heard in camera. We therefore direct that the court should be cleared of everyone except the party and the solicitor.

Solicitors: Tringhams.

F. R. D.

[2] [1952] W.N. 209; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1188.

[3] [1913] A.C. 417; 29 T.L.R. 520.

[chancery division.]

1958
Feb. 14, 17, 25; Mar. 7.
Vaisey J.

* WESTMINSTER BANK LTD. v. BARFORD (INSPECTOR OF TAXES.

Revenue—Income tax—Discontinuance of trade or profession—Company—Director—Periodical payments under agreement for special services—Payable to director or "his executors administrators or "assigns"—Liability to tax after his death—Schedule D, Case III—Income Tax Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 10), s. 123.

Under an agreement dated December 9, 1938, a company agreed to pay its managing director in respect of special services rendered by him to the company the sum of £3,000 and certain annual payments of varying amounts, payable to him, his "executors adminis-"trators or assigns." He died in 1941. The payments were to cease in any event on October 4, 1958, and had continued to be paid to his executors or trustees throughout the years since his death. A claim for income tax was made on the present trustees of his will under Case III of Schedule D on these periodical payments for the four years 1950–1951 to 1954–1955 inclusive.

It was contended on behalf of the trustee that these payments were in respect of services rendered by the director to the company and liable to tax under Schedule E and not Schedule D:—

Held, that the sums now in question were annual payments arising under a contract—the agreement of December 9, 1938—and it was to that agreement, rather than to the services of the deceased, that those payments were attributable; the consideration for the contract was those services, and the consideration for the payments was the contract, which itself by its independent vitality "generated "income." Even if they had been taxable under Schedule E during the testator's lifetime that could not affect the liability to tax of the actual recipients of them after his death; accordingly the claim to tax under Case III of Schedule D succeeded.

Stainer's Executors v. Purchase [1952] A.C. 280; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 1112; [1951] 2 All E.R. 1071 distinguished.

APPEAL from the Commissioners for the Special Purposes of the Income Tax Acts.

The case stated by the commissioners so far as material provided.

At a meeting of the commissioners held on March 28, 1957, Westminster Bank, Ltd., in its capacity of trustee of the will of the Right Hon. C. A. McCurdy, deceased, appealed against income tax assessments under Case III of Schedule D [1] in respect of annual payments as follows:—

1950–1951	£372
1951–1952	£368
1952–1953	£101
1954–1955	£ 14

The question for their determination was whether these assessments under Schedule D were correctly made in respect of certain sums arising to the testator, his executors, administrators or assigns by virtue of an agreement dated December 9, 1938, between Trust of Insurance Shares Ltd., thereinafter called "the "company" and himself.

2. No oral evidence was given before them. The following facts were admitted:—(a) that the testator was chairman of the company's board of directors at all relevant times until his death; (b) that the company entered into the said agreement with him dated December 9, 1938; (c) that he died on November 10, 1941. It was common ground that the essentials of the matter were contained in the said agreement, and, in particular clause 2 thereof, and in article 72 of the articles of association of the company.

3. Article 72 so far as relevant, after providing for ordinary directors' salaries read as follows:—" . . . If by arrangement with

[1] Income Tax Act, 1952, s. 123: "(1) Tax under Schedule D shall be "charged under the following Cases ". . . Case III—tax in respect of— "(a) any interest of money, whether "yearly or otherwise, or any annuity, "or other annual payment, . . . either "as a charge on any property of the "person paying the same by virtue "of any deed or will or otherwise, "or as a reservation out of it, or as "a personal debt or obligation by "virtue of any contract, or whether "the same is received and payable "half-yearly or at any shorter or more "distant periods. . . ."

1958

West-minster Bank Ltd. v. Barford (Inspector of Taxes).

"the other directors any director shall perform or render any "special duties or services outside his ordinary duties as a "director, the directors may pay him special remuneration, in "addition to his ordinary remuneration, and such special "remuneration may be by way of salary, commission, participa-"tion in profits or otherwise as may be arranged."

In the agreement made on December 9, 1938, between Trust of Insurance Shares Ltd. (thereinafter called "the company") of the one part and the testator of the other part it was recited that:

(i) The company was manager of (inter alia) a unit trust entitled The Cornhill Trust of Bank and Insurance Shares and British Government Stocks (thereinafter called "the unit trust").

(ii) The unit trust was constituted by a trust deed dated October 15, 1937.

(iii) By the trust deed debenture units and deferred units were authorized to be created and to be issued upon such terms and subject to such conditions as in the trust deed were set forth.

(iv) By the trust deed the company was authorized to sell deferred units at a price calculated in the manner therein set forth, which price included an initial service charge ascertained as therein mentioned.

(v) The trust deed further provided that the trustees should on the last day of each distribution period (as therein defined) until the determination of the trust raise out of the trust fund thereby constituted and pay to the company (after any necessary deductions) a sum equal to one quarter of 1 per cent. of the mean market value of the trust fund as on such last day as aforesaid and that the company should be entitled to retain such payments (thereinafter called "management remuneration") for its own use and benefit in addition to the service charge in the last preceding recital referred to.

(vi) The trust deed further provided that subject to the conditions therein set out and after the date therein specified the company should have power to form a company (thereinafter called "the new company") with limited liability for the purpose of taking over the trust fund, in which event the company should thereafter receive such remuneration as might be agreed between the company and the new company.

(vii) The testator was chairman of the board of directors of the company and had by arrangement with the other directors rendered special and valuable services to the company in relation to the unit trust, and in particular he devised the scheme embodied in the trust deed, settled the trust deed, prepared prospectuses of and advertisements for sale of units, negotiated the sale of units exceeding in number 1,000,000 and underwrote a large number of such units upon a public issue thereof.

(viii) The management of the unit trust had resulted in substantial profit to the company and it was anticipated that in the future further profits would be earned from the sale of units and also from the continued receipt of management remuneration.

(ix) The company recognized that the said services rendered to the company by the testator were special services outside his ordinary duties as director within the meaning of and as contemplated by article 72 of the company's articles, and the directors of the company had pursuant to that article agreed to pay him by way of special remuneration such amounts as were thereinafter mentioned, as follows:

"(1) The company shall forthwith pay to Mr. McCurdy an "amount equal to the service charge included in the purchase "price of the deferred units purchased by him less the standard "rate of commission allowed to Mr. McCurdy upon the purchase "of such units the amount so payable being agreed at £3,000.

"(2) After there has been deducted from the management "remuneration a percentage of 20 per cent. thereof as an agreed "contribution towards the cost of the management of the unit "trust for the distribution period for which such remuneration "is payable there shall be paid by the company to Mr. McCurdy "his executors administrators or assigns so much of the balance "as bears to the whole of the balance the same proportion as "158,904 bears to the total number of deferred units in issue at "the end of the last day of each distribution period. In the "case of management remuneration now already received the "due proportion shall be paid to Mr. McCurdy forthwith. In "the case of management remuneration hereafter to be received "the due proportion shall be paid to Mr. McCurdy his executors "administrators or assigns within 14 days of the receipt of the "remuneration by the company."

(3) If the new company should take over the trust fund in manner thereinbefore recited, then the testator should be entitled to receive a proportion equivalent to that provided for by clause 2 thereof of the remuneration of three-eighths per cent. per annum or such less remuneration as aforesaid (calculated as aforesaid) thenceforth paid to the company after there had been deducted from such remuneration the said percentage of 20 per cent.

. . . . . .

"(5) Sums from time to time payable to Mr. McCurdy under "... this agreement shall be and be deemed to be moneys had "and received by the company for and on behalf of Mr. McCurdy "his executors administrators or assigns."

4. It was an agreed fact that the trust created under the trust deed (mentioned in the recital to the agreement) which provided that the trust thereby created unless previously determined under the provisions therein contained should determine on October 4, 1958, had continued throughout all years since the testator's death. It was further agreed that the executors and trustees of his will had received payments from the company under the provisions of clause 2 of the said agreement every year and that the amounts so received for the years under appeal coincided with the amounts of the income tax assessments under Case III of Schedule D, subject to the statutory basis of computation on the income of the year preceding the year of assessment.

1958

West-minster Bank Ltd. v. Barford (Inspector of Taxes).

It was also agreed that in each of the relevant years in which the company made the payments under the provisions of clause 2 of the said agreement:

(i) The company made the payments in full without any deduction for income tax;

(ii) the company had deducted the said payments as a business expense in computing its profits for income tax purposes;

(iii) the company had been assessed to income tax on its profits on the footing that the said payments were allowable expenses; and

(iv) the said payments were less than the amount of the company's profits assessed to income tax.

5. It was contended on behalf of the bank:

(i) That the payments were remuneration for the testator's services as a director of the company;

(ii) that the remuneration so paid could not be assessed under Case III of Schedule D by reason of the decision in Stainer's Executors v. Purchase.[2]

6. It was contended on behalf of the inspector of taxes:

(i) That the payments in question made by the company under the agreement of December 9, 1938, were annual payments assessable under Schedule D on the trustee of the testator's will;

(ii) that the proper construction of the said agreement was that it provided for a series of payments to the testator during his lifetime and to his representatives after his death for the period of the existence of the trust, such payments being irrespective of the employment of the testator by the company or the holding by him of office as a director of the company;

(iii) that Stainer's Executors v. Purchase [2] had no application to the present case.

7. The commissioners gave the following determination in writing on April 23, 1957: Their first consideration was the character, from the point of view of taxation, of the payments arising to the testator, his executors, administrators, or assigns under clause 2 of the agreement of December 9, 1938, at the time that they first arose. They appeared to bear, as between the company and him, the character of remuneration for past services. But it did not follow that they were necessarily taxable under Schedule E upon the recipient. The payments bore also the characteristics of annual payments "... by virtue of "any contract," chargeable under Case III of Schedule D, since they possessed the necessary qualities of periodicity, and were "pure income receipts": see Earl Howe v. Inland Revenue

[2] [1952] A.C. 280; sub nom. Gospel v. Purchase [1951] 2 T.L.R. 1112; Purchase v. Gospel [1951] 2 All E.R. 1071; sub nom. Purchase v. Stainer's Executors, 32 T.C. 367.

Commissioners.[3] The contention that they were not pure income receipts, because expenses could be charged against them under rule 9 of Schedule E, appeared to postulate that they were chargeable under Schedule E, and therefore to beg the question. If they were annual payments, were they properly chargeable under Case III as such? In view of the charging words of Schedule D, section 122 (1) (b), they could not be charged under Case III of Schedule D if they were chargeable under Schedule E as remuneration. They were of opinion, however, that they were not properly chargeable under Schedule E. Under rule 1 of the Rules of Schedule E in the Ninth Schedule, tax was to be annually charged in respect of all "salaries, fees, wages, etc., "for the year of assessment," and it appeared to them difficult, if not impossible, to discover for what years of assessment the sums arising under the agreement were to be paid. Were the said sums remuneration voted, long after, for the years in which the services were performed: see Dracup v. Radcliffe[4]? Or, was the sum that was immediately payable under the agreement remuneration for 1938–39 and the sums that were payable in the future remuneration for the years in which they were to be paid over by the company, bearing in mind the important circumstance that they would continue to be payable notwithstanding the testator's death or resignation, and to any person to whom he might assign his rights? Or, was the proper view that he received as remuneration for the year in which the agreement was entered into, first, the sum of £3,000 under clause 1, secondly, a sum in respect of management remuneration already received, and, thirdly, the capitalized value of the right to receive sums in respect of management remuneration thereafter to be received? There were great difficulties in accepting any of these solutions to the question and it appeared to them that in view of such difficulties the payments were, from their inception, not assessable under Schedule E and were therefore assessable under Schedule D, Case III, as annual payments. If so, they would continue to be so assessable after his death. They had naturally been pressed with the similarity of the payments in Stainer's Executors v. Purchase.[5] But in that case the payments to be made did not have the quality of being "pure income payments," since they were admittedly to be included among the gross receipts of a profession, the profits of which could only be ascertained after deduction of expenses. There was therefore no question of a choice in that case of assessing either under Case II of Schedule D, or under Case III as annual payments. In the present case, however, it seemed to them that the sums to be received under the agreement did not flow from the testator's office as a director and they could be isolated from any director's remuneration assessable under Schedule E. The said sums sprang entirely from certain special services rendered before the

[3] [1919] 2 K.B. 336; 35 T.L.R. 461; 7 T.C. 289.

[4] (1946) 27 T.C. 188.

[5] [1952] A.C. 280.

1958

West-minster Bank Ltd. v. Barford (Inspector of Taxes).

date of the agreement and expressed to be outside his ordinary duties as a director. It was true that the testator was a director at the date the agreement was made, but neither the quality nor the quantity of the said sums was in any way affected by his continuance in office or the carrying on of any sort of employment with the company after the moment when the agreement was signed.

[The findings of the commissioners on a second contention were not pursued on appeal and are not here set out.]

They confirmed the assessments.

Charles Beattie for the Westminster Bank Ltd.

Cyril Harvey Q.C. and Alan Orr for the Crown.

The following cases, not cited in the judgment, were referred to in argument: Lockhart v. Moldacot Pocket Sewing Machine Co. (Ltd.) [6]; Mudd v. Collins [7]; Shipway v. Skidmore [8]; Heasman v. Jordan [9]; Parkins v. Warwick [10]; Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Bew Estates Ltd. [11]; Cowan v. Seymour [12]; Bennett v. Ogston [13]; Carson v. Cheyney's Executor, [14] and Allen v. Trehearne. [15]

Cur. adv. vult.

March 7. Vaisey J., having stated the facts, read the following judgment: The consideration for the contract of December 9, 1938, was the performance by the testator of certain special services to the company, rendered by him in his office of chairman of its board of directors.

It seems to me that he was taxable under Schedule E in respect of the £3,000, and under Schedule D (or perhaps Schedule E) in respect of the annual payments which fell due during his lifetime. It was suggested that he could, and perhaps should, have been charged under Schedule E on the value of the total benefits accruing to him under the said agreement estimated, presumably, as at the date of the agreement. This did not happen, and it seems to me most unlikely, for surely it could not be suggested that such an assessment would free him, and also his executors, administrators and assigns, from all further claims for income tax in respect of the annual payments. Stainer's Executors v. Purchase [1] is, in my opinion, a very different case.

[6] (1889) 5 T.L.R. 307.

[7] (1925) 41 T.L.R. 358; 9 T.C. 297.

[8] (1932) 16 T.C. 748.

[9] [1954] Ch. 744; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 432; [1954] 3 All E.R. 101; 35 T.C. 518.

[10] (1943) 25 T.C. 419.

[11] [1956] Ch. 407; [1956] 3 W.L.R. 139; [1956] 2 All E.R. 210; 36 T.C. 476.

[12] [1920] 1 K.B. 500; 36 T.L.R. 155.

[13] (1930) 15 T.C. 374.

[14] [1957] 3 W.L.R. 768; [1957] 3 All E.R. 391.

[15] [1938] 2 K.B. 464; 54 T.L.R. 826; [1938] 2 All E.R. 698; 22 T.C. 15.

[1] [1952] A.C. 280; sub nom. Gospel v. Purchase [1951] 2 T.L.R. 1112; [1951] 2 All E.R. 1071; sub nom. Purchase v. Stainer's Executors, 32 T.C. 367.

1958

WEST-MINSTER BANK LTD. v. BARFORD (INSPECTOR OF TAXES).

Vaisey J.

As I view the position, the company gave to the testator a contract under which the annual sums in question were payable to his executors, administrators or assigns subject to tax under Schedule D. In other words, the benefit which he received from the company was a contract for the payment of periodical sums of indeterminate amounts which were always subject to and never free from tax. Even if the annual sums payable during his life were in strictness, as they came to his hands, taxable under Schedule E, I cannot see how that could affect the liability to tax of the actual recipients of the same sums after his death. His sequels in title, whether testamentary (executors) or statutory (administrators) or arising from an act inter vivos (assigns) are, in my judgment, liable to tax under Schedule D, and it makes no difference that historically the sums originated from services rendered by him in his office of director. The four sums now in question are annual payments arising under a contract—that is, under the agreement of December 9, 1938—and it was to that agreement, rather than to his services as director, that those payments were attributable. In other words, the consideration for the contract was the services of the testator, and the consideration for the payments was the contract, which itself by its independent vitality "generated income": compare Stainer's Executors v. Purchase.[2]

In my judgment, the assessments were properly made, and this appeal fails.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Rhys Roberts & Co.; Solicitor, Inland Revenue.

I. G. R. M.

[2] [1952] A.C. 280, 291.

[CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.]

* REGINA v. BASTIAN.

1958
Jan. 29.

Donovan J.

Criminal Law—Murder—Diminished responsibility—Right of prosecution to prove insanity—Onus of proof—Homicide Act, 1957 (5 & 6 Eliz. 2, c. 11), s. 2.

Criminal Law—Insanity—Diminished responsibility—Right of prosecution to prove insanity on plea of diminished responsibility.

Where, on a charge of murder, the defence put forward a plea of diminished responsibility within section 2 of the Homicide Act, 1957, it is the duty of the prosecution, if they have evidence tending to prove insanity, to cross-examine on that basis and to call evidence to prove insanity.

TRIAL ON INDICTMENT.

Cerbert Bastian was charged on an indictment containing two counts charging him with the murder of his two sons on

1958

Regina
v.
Bastian.

December 18, 1957. On arraignment he pleaded guilty but, after some discussion, that plea was withdrawn and a plea of not guilty entered. At the close of the case for the prosecution counsel for the defence stated that he had no instructions from his client to put forward a plea of insanity, but that he proposed to call medical evidence to show that the defendant was suffering from diminished responsibility within section 2 (1) of the Homicide Act, 1957. Counsel for the prosecution contended that if such evidence was called he would be entitled to cross-examine to show that the degree of abnormality was such as to amount to insanity and to call evidence to that effect.

Christmas Humphreys and Griffiths-Jones for the Crown.
F. H. Lawton Q.C. and Roger Frisby for the accused person.

The following case was referred to in argument: Rex v. Dashwood.[1]

Donovan J. The view I take is that if the defence put in issue the state of a man's mind to show that he was suffering from such an abnormality of mind as produced diminished responsibility, the prosecution are under a duty, if they have evidence to support it, to cross-examine the witnesses for the defence to show that the accused was insane at the time when he committed the offence, and to call evidence to that effect.

Counsel for the defence then called two medical witnesses in support of a plea of diminished responsibility and asked for a verdict of manslaughter. Counsel for the Crown called one medical witness in rebuttal and asked for a verdict of guilty but insane.

Donovan J. directed the jury that, the prosecution having proved that the accused killed his two children, the issue was what his mental state was at the time, namely, whether he was guilty of the act, but insane at the time he did it or whether his mind was so affected by some disturbance that his responsibility was diminished and that, therefore, the proper verdict was one of manslaughter. His Lordship continued: If he raises this plea of diminished responsibility it is for him to prove that he was suffering from such abnormality as was described in section 2 of the Homicide Act, 1957. He does not have to prove it with the same certainty that the prosecution have to prove guilt, the balance of probabilities will do, but he has to prove it. The onus is on him. [His Lordship reviewed the medical evidence and continued:] I think that is the full extent of the assistance that I can give you upon this matter, except to say that I will not ask you to try and bear in mind the wording of the section which defines diminished responsibility, but I will give you the section itself so that you can take it out when you retire to consider your verdict, which I will ask you now to do.

[1] [1943] 1 K.B. 1; [1942] 2 All E.R. 586.

1958

REGINA v. BASTIAN.

Donovan J.

The jury returned a verdict of manslaughter on both counts and the accused was sentenced to imprisonment for life.

After the accused had left the dock:

DONOVAN J. It occurred to me after I had summed up to the jury that if the prosecution say, in effect: "This is not merely "a case of diminished responsibility, it is insanity," then the proper direction to the jury would be: "It would be for the "prosecution to satisfy you that the state of the accused person's "mind went beyond what the defence are alleging, and that at "the time of the offence he was insane within the legal meaning "of that term." That should be borne in mind when the matter next arises. It has not arisen in the present case.

Solicitors: Director of Public Prosecutions; W. Timothy Donovan.

J. D. P.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* RUTHERFORD v. R. E. GLANVILLE & SONS (BOVEY TRACEY) LTD.

C. A.

1958 Feb. 10.

Lord Goddard C.J., Morris L.J., and McNair J.

Factory—Dangerous machinery (fencing)—Injury from fence—Carborundum wheel—Disintegration—Fence shifted—Injury—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), ss. 14, 16.

The plaintiff was employed in the defendants' factory on a cutting machine which incorporated an abrasive carborundum wheel. The wheel, which revolved at a high speed and which was apt to disintegrate, was guarded by a fence in the shape of a hood. While the plaintiff was working on the machine, the wheel disintegrated and lifted the guard in such a way that it struck and injured the plaintiff.

The trial judge dismissed an action founded on a breach of statutory duty under sections 14 and 16 of the Factories Act, 1937,[1] and on negligence at common law. On appeal, on the sole ground of breach of statutory duty:—

[Reported by DAVID CALCUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

[1] Factories Act, 1937, s. 14 (1): "Every dangerous part of any "machinery . . . shall be securely "fenced . . . Provided that in so far "as the safety of a dangerous part of "any machinery cannot by reason of "the nature of the operation be secured "by means of a fixed guard, the re-"quirements of this subsection shall "be deemed to have been complied "with if a device is provided which "automatically prevents the operator "from coming into contact with that "part."

S. 16: "All fencing or other "safeguards provided in pursuance of "the foregoing provisions of this Part "of this Act shall be of substantial "construction, and constantly main-"tained and kept in position while "the parts required to be fenced or "safeguarded are in motion or in "motion or in use. . . ."

C. A.

1958

Rutherford v. R. E. Glanville & Sons (Bovey Tracey) Ltd.

Held, that the carborundum wheel was a dangerous part of machinery and had not been securely fenced; that the fence had not been securely maintained or kept in position, and the defendants were, therefore, in breach of their statutory duty under section 14 of the Factories Act, 1937, and the injury which the plaintiff had sustained was the direct result of the defendants' breach.

Nicholls v. F. Austin (Leyton) Ltd. [1946] A.C. 493; 62 T.L.R. 320; [1946] 2 All E.R. 92 distinguished.

Appeal from Streatfeild J., sitting at Devonshire Summer Assizes.

The defendants were the owners and occupiers of a small engineering works at Bovey Tracey where they employed a few men. Among the machines in their works was one called an abrasive wheel cut-off machine. This consisted of an abrasive carborundum wheel which was driven at about 4,000 revolutions per minute. The machine, which was controlled by a switch and a handle, had a guard on it. The carborundum wheel was very apt to disintegrate because of the high speed at which it was working, and had commonly to be replaced. Therefore the guard, which was in the shape of a hood, was designed to protect the workmen if the wheel should disintegrate in the course of the working of the machine. On April 2, 1952, the plaintiff, who was employed in the defendants' factory, was working the machine when the carborundum wheel disintegrated and lifted the guard, which turned towards the plaintiff and cut his wrist. The plaintiff brought an action for breach of statutory duty under sections 14 and 16 of the Factories Act, 1937, and at common law to recover damages for the injuries which he had sustained.

Streatfeild J. gave judgment for the defendants. The plaintiff appealed.

John Thompson Q.C. and E. H. Laughton-Scott for the plaintiff.

Montague Berryman Q.C. and D. P. Croom-Johnson for the defendants.

Apart from the case referred to in the judgment, the following cases were referred to in argument: Dickson v. Flack [2]; Smith v. Morris Motors Ltd. and Harris [3]; Carroll v. Andrew Barclay & Sons Ltd. [4]; Kilgollan v. William Cooke & Co. Ltd. [5]

Lord Goddard C.J. stated the facts and continued: We have not been asked to decide this case on the basis of the common law liability of the defendants. The judge rejected the common law liability and I am going to assume for the purpose of my judgment that his judgment was right.

We have, however, been asked to reverse his finding on the

[2] [1953] 2 Q.B. 464; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 571; [1953] 2 All E.R. 840.

[3] [1950] 1 K.B. 194; 65 T.L.R. 642; [1949] 2 All E.R. 715.

[4] [1948] A.C. 477; 64 T.L.R. 384; [1948] 2 All E.R. 386.

[5] [1956] 1 W.L.R. 527; [1956] 2 All E.R. 294.

liability which is alleged to exist by reason of a breach of sections 14 and 16 of the Factories Act, 1937. Section 14 provides that all dangerous parts of machinery must be fenced when they are working and section 16 provides for the proper maintenance of the fences which must be provided under section 14.

This machine had to be fenced because there was a risk of the carborundum wheel, which it protects, disintegrating and thereby causing injury. The wheel did disintegrate and there can be no doubt whatever that the disintegration by some means or other caused this guard to shift and to cut the plaintiff's wrist.

It is said, following on the decisions of the House of Lords (which I need not go through at any length because they are very well known decisions), that the object of the fence is not to prevent things flying out; it is to prevent the human body coming into contact with the dangerous part of the machine. From that it is argued that unless the human body comes into contact with the dangerous part of the machine, no liability is incurred under the provisions of the Act. But there has never been a case on all fours with the present case. It seems to me that, if one states the plain facts of the case, it would be a very curious and narrow reading if one could say in this case that no liability was incurred under the Factories Act, 1937. The Act requires the dangerous part of the machine, which, in this case, is the carborundum wheel, to be fenced; one of the reasons why this carborundum wheel is dangerous is because of the risk of disintegration. Therefore a guard is provided to guard against the risk of disintegration, because if there is disintegration personal injury will probably result. There was disintegration and personal injury did result; and it resulted because the disintegration affected the guard in some way. It was the guard which caused the injury but only because the disintegration of the wheel caused it to shift. I cannot see that it would be otherwise than a very unfortunate and remarkable result that if the wheel disintegrated with such force that it caused a fracture in the guard and a piece of the carborundum wheel struck the plaintiff, the plaintiff would be able to recover, whereas if it did not cause a fracture but the force of the disintegration bent or turned the guard onto the plaintiff's hand, the plaintiff could not recover. Again it would be a remarkable result that if the explosion fractured the guard and a piece of the carborundum wheel flew out of the guard and hit the plaintiff, he would be able to recover, but if, as the result of the fracture, a splinter of the guard flew up and injured the plaintiff, he would not be able to recover.

In my opinion this machine cannot be said to be securely fenced if it does not protect the workman when the very thing happens against which the fence is required to protect him. I look upon it as a case in which the machine has to be fenced because of the risk of disintegration and, if there is disintegration, personal injury will probably result. There was disintegration and personal injury did result; and the personal injury resulted because the guard did not effectively prevent that personal injury happening when there was disintegration.

C. A.
1958
Rutherford v. R. E. Glanville & Sons (Bovey Tracey) Ltd.

In my opinion, therefore, this machine was not securely fenced and, accordingly, I would allow this appeal.

Morris L.J. I am of the same opinion. Mr. Thompson has not invited us to deal with the case on the common law basis but has invited us to deal with the position under the Factories Act, 1937. It seems to me that there are two main questions. First, was there a breach of the obligations under section 14? Secondly, if there was such a breach, did the injury which the plaintiff suffered result from the breach of section 14?

It is really common ground that the abrasive wheel was a dangerous part of the machinery. My Lord has described the machine and has referred to the dangerous features of the abrasive wheel when in use. There was the danger that the hand of somebody operating the machine might come into contact with the wheel revolving at 4,000 revolutions a minute. But another danger, and possibly the chief danger, was the danger that the abrasive wheel after being in use for some time might break up and split into a number of fragments, which fragments would be ejected with the centrifugal force resulting from revolutions at the rate of 4,000 a minute. That was clearly a considerable danger. It is, therefore, I think, not in dispute that the wheel was a dangerous part of the machinery.

Section 14 (1) provides: "Every dangerous part of "any machinery, other than prime movers and transmission "machinery, shall be securely fenced . . ." There are certain exceptions which need not be mentioned. If section 16 is to be regarded as defining or explaining the extent of the obligations under section 14, then from section 16 it is seen that fencing and other safeguards which have to be provided in pursuance of section 14 must be "of substantial construction, and constantly "maintained and kept in position while the parts required to be "fenced or safeguarded are in motion or in use."

In the present case it appears that the guard or fence was, by the action of the disintegrating parts of the wheel, caused to be thrust up so as to rise apparently in a vertical direction. Following on that the plaintiff suffered his injury. It seems to me impossible to hold, on those facts, that the fence that was provided was secure or that it was of substantial construction and constantly maintained and kept in position while the wheel was in motion or in use. The obligation under section 14 is an absolute obligation, and it seems to me that the admitted facts of this case lead inevitably to the conclusion that there was a dangerous part of this machine which was not securely fenced: the fence was not kept in position. I cannot appreciate the notion which is advanced that there was secure fencing, albeit by a fence that was admittedly insecure, inasmuch as it left its position.

On the first question I am of the opinion that there was a dangerous part which had to be securely fenced and which, on the facts of this case, was not securely fenced. There was, therefore, a breach of the obligation under section 14.

The next question, as it seems to me, is whether it is shown that the plaintiff's injury was caused by that breach of section 14. [His Lordship then read the proviso to section 14 (1).] The concluding part of section 14 is as follows: "The Secretary of "State may, as respects any machine or any process in which a "machine is used, make regulations requiring the fencing of "materials or articles which are dangerous while in motion in "the machine." Cases have arisen in which the question has been raised whether damages under section 14 can be recovered where materials being worked in a machine are ejected so as to cause injury. A point which has been taken by the defendants both on appeal and in the court below was thus expressed by the trial judge in his judgment. He said: "It is conceded by "Mr. Croom-Johnson that section 14 does apply not only to pro-"tecting workmen from coming into contact with the dangerous "part but also to protect them against dangerous portions of the "machine from flying out. It is also said by Mr. Croom-Johnson "that a dangerous part of this machine was not the thing which "did the damage but the guard, which was there to prevent the "damage." Mr. Croom-Johnson following Mr. Berryman in his submissions in this court has said that before the plaintiff could recover on the facts of this case it would have to be shown that the guard itself was a dangerous part of the machine. I cannot agree with that submission, and it seems to me that it would lead to a very artificial result.

Reliance was placed in support of that submission upon some passages in the speeches of their Lordships in the House of Lords in Nicholls v. F. Austin (Leyton) Ltd.[1] In that case the plaintiff, while operating a circular saw belonging to her employers, was injured through a piece of wood flying out of the machine, which was fenced so as to comply with the requirements of the Woodworking Machinery Regulations, 1922, which by section 159 (1) of the Act were to be deemed to have been made under that Act.

We were referred to the language of Lord Thankerton where he said[2]: "My Lords, on consideration of the terms of section "14, I am of opinion that there is a simple answer to the "contention of the appellant, namely, that the obligation to "fence imposed by subsection (1) is an obligation to provide a "guard against contact with any dangerous part of a machine, "and that it does not impose any obligation to guard against "dangerous materials or articles ejected from the machine in

[1] [1946] A.C. 493; 62 T.L.R. 320; [1946] 2 All E.R. 92.

[2] [1946] A.C. 493, 499.

C. A.
1958
Rutherford v. R. E. Glanville & Sons (Bovey Tracey) Ltd.
Morris L.J.

"motion, that matter depending solely on the making of regulations by the Secretary of State under the discretionary power conferred on him by the last paragraph of the section," which is the section to which I referred. Lord Macmillan also referred to the point that was under consideration in that case. He said [3]: "The question of importance in the case is whether the statutory duty imposed by section 14 of the Act of 1937 to fence securely every dangerous part of any machinery is fulfilled when the dangerous part is so fenced as to prevent the operator from coming into contact with it; or whether the duty also extends to fencing the dangerous part so as to prevent any part of the material on which the machine is working from flying off and striking the operator." We were, of course, referred to passages in the other speeches and notably to passages from the speech of Lord Simonds.[4]

But it does not seem to me that their Lordships in that case were dealing with the rather unusual situation that occurred in the present case. If a piece of the wheel that disintegrated had by the force of the disintegration gone straight through the guard and struck somebody working in the factory, then Mr. Croom-Johnson, for the purposes of the present case, concedes that there would be liability; but he says that if it was not a part of the wheel itself which struck the plaintiff but a piece of the guard that was projected outwards by the piece of the wheel, then there would be no liability. That seems to me to be so artificial a distinction that it could not be right and it does not appear to me to be rational. Here was an obligation to fence a dangerous part. The obligation was imposed by that Part of the Act that dealt with safety. There was an obligation to prevent the dangers that would result from this dangerous part of this machine. The dangers to which the plaintiff was exposed included the liability to encounter the forces of disintegration. It was those very forces which came into being and which projected the guard itself so as to cause it to be the actual immediate instrument of the physical injury to the plaintiff.

It seems to me that on those facts the only reasonable conclusion is that there was causation of the injury by the breach. I do not think that it was the intention of their Lordships in Nicholls v. F. Austin (Leyton) Ltd.[5] to say anything, in the passages to which I have referred, leading to a different result. It is quite clear that if, in the present case, there had been a fence which was secure, or a fence which was kept in position, or a fence which was an adequate fence for its purpose of containing anything that was the result of disintegration, then there would have been no accident. But whether it is enough to put it in that way or not, it seems to me that this injury was, on a common-sense analysis, caused by the fact that there occurred the very danger that was contemplated, the danger against which

[3] [1946] A.C. 493, 501.
[4] Ibid. 504, 505.
[5] [1946] A.C. 493.

there should have been protection, the danger against which there should have been fencing, and by the fact that there was no fencing which guarded against the consequences of the danger. In this case the fencing was insecure, inadequate and not kept in position. It was fencing which failed to do what it was there to do. It failed to prevent the very danger which was realized to be a danger and which might result in injury to somebody working in close proximity to that danger.

It seems to me, therefore, on the second question which I propounded, that it is shown here that the injury to the plaintiff was caused by the breach of section 14 of the Factories Act, 1937. I therefore think that the plaintiff was entitled to recover as on a breach of statutory duty.

McNAIR J. I agree that this appeal should be allowed; but in deference to the judge, from whose views we are differing, I should like to add a few words of my own, which do not substantially differ from what has been stated by my Lords.

The two questions, quite clearly, are, first, has the plaintiff established that there has been a breach of section 14 of the Factories Act, 1937, as extended or explained by section 16 of that Act? And, secondly, has he established that his injuries were the direct result of that breach? The judge in his judgment described this machine and in particular described the characteristics of the carborundum wheel. He said: "As is pretty well "known, and indeed requires little imagination, carborundum "wheels of this nature are very liable to break. If the slighest "excessive pressure is put upon the handle it may well be that it "will cause the disc wheel to disintegrate, and it is for that reason "it is of the utmost importance, obviously, that the abrasive "wheel shall be securely guarded, not only to prevent a man "from inadvertently catching his hand against the wheel but "also to prevent the scattering of fragments when a wheel "happens to break, which was a common experience occurring "almost daily." It seems to me, and it is in line with what the judge has said, that this wheel was a dangerous part of the machinery within the meaning of section 14 of the Factories Act, 1937, because the wheel revolving at 4,000 revolutions per minute had this potentiality of disintegration, as the result of which forces would be set up and one of the forces would be the flying of the pieces of fragmentation. Section 14 (1) requires such a dangerous part of the machinery to be securely fenced and section 16 adds to that the requirements that the fencing or other safeguards shall be of substantial construction and constantly maintained and kept in position. The first question is: Was this hood, which admittedly came unseated through the operation of these forces of disintegration, such that it securely fenced the dangerous part? In my judgment you cannot say that a hood provided as a guard for this type of machinery is a secure fence unless the forces of disintegration which are known to be likely

C. A.
1958
Rutherford v. R. E. Glanville & Sons (Bovey Tracey) Ltd.
McNair J.

to be set up in the normal working of the machine, including the flying of fragments of the wheel in all directions, are really taken care of and taken up by the hood. Accordingly, in my judgment, it is quite clear that this hood or guard did not form a secure fence for this machine.

The second question is whether it has been established that injury was directly caused by that breach. I bear in mind that these sections do not entitle an injured person to recover if the injury can properly be said to be the indirect result of the breach, as was observed by Lord Simonds in Nicholls v. F. Austin (Leyton) Ltd.[6] But here if the facts are, as I apprehend them to be, that no independent cause came into operation between the disintegration of the wheel and the impact of the guard upon the man's wrist, it seems to me that the disintegration of the wheel which resulted in fragments of the wheel itself being thrown against the guard so that the guard struck the man's wrist means that the flying of those fragments against the guard was the direct cause of the guard striking the man's wrist, or, putting it the other way round, that the injuries flowing from the striking of the man's wrist were the direct result of the flying fragments of the wheel coming into contact with the guard.

In those circumstances the plaintiff has in my judgment established the two points which it is necessary for him to establish and, in my opinion, this appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Arnold Carter & Co., agents for Hamlyn Taylor & Neck, Paignton; Pullan, Davies & Co., Leeds.

[6] [1946] A.C. 493, 504.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1958
Feb. 26.
Roxburgh J.

* WILSON and Another v. THOMAS.

[1957 W. No. 318.]

Vendor and Purchaser—Specific performance—Proof of title—Action for —Plaintiffs' title derived from will containing latent ambiguity—Whether extrinsic evidence admissible in specific performance action.

By an agreement at an auction sale, subject to certain printed conditions, the plaintiffs agreed to sell and the defendants agreed to buy the plaintiffs' reversionary shares of and interests in certain trust funds, the title to which depended on a will which contained a latent ambiguity requiring extrinsic evidence to resolve it. The defendant refused to complete on the ground that the plaintiffs had failed to make a good title. In an action for specific performance of the agreement, the plaintiffs sought to adduce extrinsic evidence which they contended would resolve the latent ambiguity and clear their title.

One of the conditions of sale provided: "A purchaser shall "assume as is the case that the persons who executed a [certain] "deed of family arrangement are the same persons as the benefi- "ciaries under the will. . . ." The purchaser objected that this was misleading, as a perusal of the documents showed the assumption to be untrue in fact:—

Held, (1) that the purchaser was entitled to take the objection, as on its true construction the condition meant that as some of the names in the will were slightly different from those in the deed, the purchaser was to assume these to be identical.

(2) That it would not be right to admit extrinsic evidence to resolve the latent ambiguity in the will in an action for specific performance, and that the proper course was for the plaintiffs to take out an originating summons to have the will construed.

Dictum of Lord Cozens-Hardy M.R. in In re Nichols' and Von Joel's Contract [1910] 1 Ch. 43, 46 applied.

Smith v. Colbourne [1914] 2 Ch. 533, and Johnson v. Clarke [1928] Ch. 847 considered.

ACTION.

The plaintiffs, Henry Talbot Wilson and Albert Wellesley Wilson, claimed (1) specific performance of an agreement made on September 26, 1956, between them and the defendant, Benjamin Alfred Allden Thomas, whereby the defendant agreed to purchase from the plaintiffs the plaintiffs' reversionary shares of 66/1041 each of certain trust funds being lot 6 in an auction sale held on September 26, 1956, by Messrs. Foster and Cranfield in London; (2) damages for breach of contract in lieu of or in addition to specific performance.

The following facts are taken from paragraphs 1 to 9 of the statement of claim, and were admitted by the defendant.

By an oral agreement dated September 26, 1956, and made between Messrs. Foster and Cranfield, a firm of auctioneers who were at all material times the agents of the plaintiffs, and the defendant, the plaintiffs agreed to sell and the defendant agreed to purchase for the sum of £5,425 the plaintiffs' reversionary shares and interests of 66/1041 parts each of certain trust funds, being a will fund and a settlement fund described as lot 6, subject to the reservations and the general and special conditions in the particulars of sale. It was further provided by the agreement that £542 10s. should be paid by the defendant by way of deposit to Messrs. Foster and Cranfield as stakeholders, and the deposit was duly paid on September 26, 1956, and a memorandum of the sale was duly endorsed on the particulars of sale and signed by the defendant. The special conditions of sale provided by clause 3 that the sale should be completed on October 29, 1956. The special conditions of sale provided by clause 6 that the position as to death duties as stated in the particulars of sale, that no claim for estate duty would arise on the death of the life tenant in respect of the settlement fund, but a possible claim might arise on the death of the lady aged 75 should she survive the life tenant was based on replies given by the Estate Duty Office in reply to queries put to them by the plaintiffs' solicitors on June 27, 1956, but the plaintiffs accepted no responsibility as to what duties should in fact become payable, and no compensation should be paid or allowed in respect of such duties, and the reversions were sold subject to all death duties which might be payable on the death of the life tenant or otherwise.

1958

Wilson v. Thomas.

Clause 7 of the special conditions of sale provided that the purchaser should assume "as is the case that the persons who "executed a deed of family arrangement dated November 28, "1936, are the same persons as the beneficiaries under the will "of the testator," and the purchaser should not be entitled to raise any requisition or objection in respect thereof nor to require the vendors to supply any proof thereof.

The general conditions of sale provided that should the completion of the purchase be delayed from any cause whatever other than the wilful default or neglect of the vendors beyond the date fixed for completion, the purchaser should pay interest on the balance of the purchase money from the day fixed for completion until the completion of the purchase at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum. The general conditions further provided that if through any mistake the lot should be improperly described, or if there should be any error, omission or misstatement in the particulars, such error, omission or misstatement should not vitiate the sale, but the vendors or purchaser should pay or allow a proportionate value according to the average of the whole purchase money as a compensation either way. The general conditions further provided that should the purchaser neglect or fail to comply with any of the conditions of sale, the deposit money should be forfeited and the vendors should be at liberty to resell the property sold and to recover from the purchaser by way of liquidated damages the deficiency (if any) arising by such second sale, together with all charges attending the same. On October 11, 1956, the defendant delivered certain requisitions on the plaintiffs' title, and on November 1, 1956, the plaintiffs delivered their replies. The defendant refused to complete and asked for the return of his deposit. The plaintiffs alleged that they were willing to fulfil all their obligations under the agreement of which they now claimed specific performance.

Roy Woolley for the plaintiffs.
F. G. King for the defendant.

The cases cited in argument are referred to in the judgment.

Roxburgh J. read the statement of claim and continued: By his defence, the defendant, having admitted paragraphs 1 to 9 of the statement of claim, his refusal to complete the agreement, and his request for the return of the deposit continued: "For "the reasons hereinafter given the defendant contends that the "plaintiffs have failed to show a good title in accordance with "their contract to the interest agreed to be sold or alternatively "that the title in the circumstances is not one which the defen- "dant ought to be compelled to accept." Pausing there, it is indubitably the normal course to leave questions of title to a master, but as in this case it is plain that there is no issue between the parties except as to title, I agreed to try those questions, and for that purpose the defendant opened his objections to the title, which fall into two divisions. The first group of objections relates to estate duty, and it is alleged that special condition 6 is misleading in that regard. In the view which I take of this case it is unnecessary to determine that question.

I come now to the point which I have to decide which is raised by paragraph 4 of the defence: "The defendant further "contends that special condition 7 is misleading since on reading "it he was entitled to assume that the deed herein referred to "was executed by all persons beneficially interested in the "property the devolution whereof the deed purported to regulate. "This is not the case since the shares of certain of the persons "beneficially interested were settled on protective trusts with "remainders in favour of persons who were not parties to the "deed." That is plainly true, namely, that the shares of certain persons beneficially interested were by the will settled on protective trusts with remainders in favour of persons who are not parties to the deed. That is the kernel of this case. The defence continues: "The defendant will contend that the administration "of either the will fund or the settlement fund as in the par- "ticulars mentioned in accordance with such deed would con- "stitute a breach of trust of which the defendant as successor in "title to the plaintiffs would be stopped from complaining and "for which the defendant's shares might be in part impounded "to make good the breach or otherwise diminished by the costs "of litigation." The defendant on both grounds which I have specified claimed a declaration that he was entitled to rescind the agreement and to repayment of the deposit.

By the defence to counter-claim the plaintiffs contended: "Special condition 7 states that the purchaser shall assume that "the persons who executed the deed of family arrangement dated "November 28, 1936, are the same persons as the beneficiaries "under the will. . . ." It does not. It says that he shall "assume, as is the case; that makes all the difference. The defence to counterclaim continues: ". . . and in fact "the said deed was executed by all the beneficiaries then "in being." In fact that is not true either because technically there was a beneficiary in being who did not and could not execute the deed owing to extreme infancy but fortunately the case does not turn on that. The defence to counterclaim continues: "In any event the said deed of family "arrangement does not purport to vary the trusts of the shares "of the beneficiaries under the will but to place on record that "by the words 'Allan Hewitt' contained in the will the testator

1958

Wilson
v.
Thomas.

Roxburgh J.

"was referring to the two persons mentioned in the said deed. "It is contended that there is no such one person as 'Allan "'Hewitt' and the said deed of family arrangement does not in "any way affect the proper construction of the said will having "regard to the admissible evidence of the surrounding circum-"stances that the words 'Allan Hewitt' mean the said two "persons referred to by the testator by their respective popular "Christian names. Alternatively if the defendant was misled "by special condition 7 (which is not admitted) then the plaintiffs "contend by reason of what is hereinbefore set out . . . the same "has not in any way whatsoever affected the reversions as afore-"said which the defendant has agreed to purchase. It is further "contended that on the footing that 'Allan Hewitt' are two "persons then the shares of the plaintiffs are 66/1041 each and "these shares are in fact the shares contracted to be sold. If on "the other hand 'Allan Hewitt' is one person (which is denied) "then the shares of the plaintiffs are even greater but in that "event only the shares contracted to be sold will be assigned. "In further alternative it is admitted that in the unlikely event of "a court of construction deciding that each of the two persons "mentioned in the said deed is not entitled and that one person "only 'Allan Hewitt' is entitled and further in the event of the "Trustees having paid these two persons their respective shares a "claim under section 62 of the Trustees Act, 1925, could arise but "the plaintiffs contend that such a contingency is not real but "remote and shadowy and in response to a request therefor "made by the defendant with a view to him proceeding with the "sale and affirming the contract the plaintiffs are and have "always been ready and willing as indicated to the defendant "long before the commencement of this action to indemnify the "defendant against any effect (if any) upon the shares contracted "to be sold by any such impounding or diminishing thereof by "costs of litigation or otherwise."

Now the point upon which I am going to decide this case is a short one which is not, I think, covered by direct authority.

The first question I have to decide, although it is not the main point of the case, is what is the true construction of the opening words of special condition 7: "The purchaser shall "assume as is the case that the persons who executed a deed "of family arrangement dated November 28, 1936, are the same "persons as the beneficiaries under the will of the testator . . . "and the purchaser shall not be entitled to raise any requisition "or objection in respect thereof nor to require the vendors to "supply any proof thereof." I think all that really was intended to mean was that, as some of the names in the deed are slightly different from those in the will, the defendant was to assume identity as between the persons named in the will and the persons named in the deed.

In so far as it meant to say that, there is nothing wrong with the document. But it does not touch the point in the case because, if I take that to be the true meaning, then it follows that it does not preclude the defendant from taking the objection, which is a true objection in fact, that many beneficiaries under the will, one in existence and many who were liable to come into existence within the permitted period, were not in any way bound by the deed. Thus, whichever way I construe it, it comes to the same thing. The main deed is not effective to alter the devolution of the estate, and so there is nothing in special condition 7 which precludes the objection which has been taken by the defendant. That is the first point.

The testator names a very large number of relations; and it is a fact, I think, that although not always correctly he names them all, with the possible exception of Allan Hewitt, with two Christian names. I think that nobody looking at the will uninstructed, and that is the important point for the moment, would doubt that the testator had a nephew whose name was Allan Hewitt. The plaintiffs admit that a lot of people who could be beneficially interested in the estate were not parties to the deed, and therefore it cannot alter the devolution of the estate, but they say that if I were to try the question of construction of the will, admitting such extrinsic evidence as would be admitted in a will case, I should come to the same conclusion about the construction of the will as the parties to the deed did; and the question is whether I ought to allow them in this action to call evidence for that purpose. It is quite clear that such a course has never yet been taken in any reported case.

Before I come to the law I propose to read the deed of family arrangement, dated November 28, 1936. The deed is made between a number of beneficiaries under the will, thereinafter called "the beneficiaries," and the trustees of the other part; and it is stated to be supplemental to the will. Then it continues as follows: " . . . each of the beneficiaries being satisfied that the "testator so intended hereby authorizes and directs the trustees "to read and construe the principal will so that the same shall "take effect as if the words 'Frederick Allan Wilson and Henry "'Hewitt Wilson' were substituted for the words 'Allan Hewitt' "where they appear in clause 5 of the principal will and each "of the beneficiaries [and that includes the two vendors in "this case] hereby covenants and agrees with each of the other "of them that the principal will will take effect accordingly, and "so not only in respect of the property now subject to the trusts "of the principal will and the property from time to time repre-"senting the same but in respect of any other property which "may accrue or be added thereto by virtue of any dis-"position hereinafter made and the property from time to time "representing the same."

From that I cannot see why the parties entered into this deed of compromise. They may or may not have reached their conclusions on matters entirely outside the evidence which any court is entitled to regard. I cannot tell. There is no statement in 1958

Wilson
v.
Thomas.

Roxburgh J.

the recitals that there is no such person as Allan Hewitt. That was the smallest precaution which should have been taken in that deed, if it was intended to be used for any purpose other than as a deed of reciprocal covenant. This, therefore, is quite plain, and this is what is important: If I look at the will as a document for the purpose of construing it without regard to extrinsic evidence I could not possibly arrive at the conclusion that Allan Hewitt was two persons. On the other hand, it might well be that, in a summons taken out to construe the will, evidence could be adduced which would enable the court to construe the will in the manner in which it was construed by the deed. In those circumstances, what ought I to do?

There are three cases on this matter. Two of them were in the Court of Appeal. It is bad fortune for me that the first case in the Court of Appeal was not cited to the Court of Appeal which decided the second case. That situation is apt to embarrass puisne judges. There is also a relevant passage in a decision of Maugham J. which, in my view, is obiter dictum. Where I have two cases in the Court of Appeal, not altogether in harmony, my proper course is to try to see where the two decisions come together to make a reconcilable whole, and that is what I propose to do.

The first case in the Court of Appeal which is very near the present case is In re Nichols' and Von Joel's Contract.[1] In that case the title depended upon the construction of an obscure will. This case depends upon what admissible extrinsic evidence can be deduced. What happened was this, as appears from the headnote[2]: " . . . The purchaser having objected to the title, the " vendors took out a vendor and purchaser summons for the " purpose of getting the question of construction determined. " Neville J. offered to adjourn the case to enable the vendors to " take out an originating summons, and, on the refusal of this " offer, held that the title was too doubtful to force upon the " purchaser. The vendors appealed, and on the appeal the " Court " [of Appeal] " made the same offer, which was " accepted. Upon the originating summons the question of con- " struction was decided in favour of the vendors, and on the " adjourned hearing of the appeal it was declared that the vendors " had shewn a good title, and the order of Neville J. was dis- " charged on the subsequent matter:—Held, that the vendors " ought to pay the costs of the appeal and in the court below."

In the course of his judgment Lord Cozens-Hardy M.R. said this[3]: " I should be very sorry to have it supposed that it is " my view that upon a vendor and purchaser summons it is not " the habit and duty of the court in ordinary cases to construe " a will or document forming part of the title, but I also think " it is quite plain that when there is real difficulty or doubt in " construing a will, and when there is, according to the rules of

[1] [1910] 1 Ch. 43.
[2] Ibid.
[3] Ibid. 46.

"the court, a very easy mode in which that construction can be "determined in such a manner as to bind everybody, it is not "right for the court to force a title upon a purchaser which "merely may mean that he is buying a lawsuit. . . . Here the "vendors said they had a good title; the purchaser objected that "they had not. The vendors might have obtained a decision "upon the construction of the will which would have bound "everybody, but they preferred to take out a vendor and pur-"chaser summons, the result of which would be to get the will "construed at the expense of the purchaser." I stress that passage. "Neville J. took the view that this was not a matter "which ought to be decided simply as between vendor and pur-"chaser. He said, 'There is a real point of difficulty and I will "'not decide it one way or the other. I offer you an opportunity "'of taking out a construction summons.' That offer was "refused."

I am entitled to adhere to the view expressed by Lord Cozens-Hardy M.R. in spite of the cases to which I am about to refer. What he said was not considered in Smith v. Colbourne,[4] but nobody with authority to criticize him has ever done so. Therefore I am going to make bold to adopt his very words; I should be very sorry to have it supposed that it is my view that on a vendor and purchaser summons it is not the habit and duty of the court in ordinary cases to construe a will or document forming part of the title, but I also think it is quite plain that when there is real difficulty or doubt in construing a will, and when there is, according to the rules of the court, a very easy mode in which that construction can be determined in such a manner as to bind everybody, it is not right for the court to force a title upon a purchaser which merely may mean that he is buying a lawsuit.

When I come to Smith v. Colbourne,[5] in which the Court of Appeal were not referred to the case which I have just read, I want to make it plain that I am not suggesting there is any discrepancy between what was decided in the two courts. The discrepancy, if any, is in the way in which the propositions were stated, but the court does in the later cases require perhaps a greater degree of difficulty than would be postulated by the words which I have just read. I think that is as far as it goes. Indeed, I am inclined to think that today, if there was a mere question of construction not requiring extrinsic evidence and not involving any particular difficulty, the court probably would not take the course which Neville J. took. I am not in any position to judge how difficult was the question of construction in In re Nichols' and Von Joel's Contract,[6] though it is certainly treated by the Court of Appeal as one of what they call "real difficulty." That is quite a different matter from what I am concerned with here.

[4] [1914] 2 Ch. 533.
[5] Ibid.
[6] [1910] 1 Ch. 43.

1958

Wilson v. Thomas.

Roxburgh J.

In Smith v. Colbourne[7] it became necessary to construe a number of written documents. I need not state what they were. The point is that it was not necessary or even desirable to call any oral evidence about any of the matters with which the court was there concerned. They were, strictly speaking, questions of the construction of documents. Therefore nobody would doubt that the conclusion which the Court of Appeal reached in that case was entirely consistent with the conclusion which that court reached in the earlier case. The only question is whether the language does not go further. Swinfen Eady L.J. said this[8]: "It was then urged by the defendant that the position of a "purchaser with regard to these windows would be one of some "doubt, and that the title ought not to be forced upon him, but "the rule of the court is that enunciated by James L.J. when "delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Alexander "v. Mills,[9] 'As a general and almost universal rule, the Court "'is bound as much between vendor and purchaser, as in every "'other case, to ascertain and determine as it best may what "'the law is, and to take that to be the law which it has so "'ascertained and determined.' In my opinion the position of "the purchaser after completion with regard to these five new "windows will not be one of any doubt." If by "law" is meant law in the narrow sense, that is to say, a question of law including a question of mere construction as distinct from a question of fact or a question of mixed law and fact, there would I think be no discrepancy between that proposition and the proposition in the other case. But if the word "law" includes questions of mixed law and fact, then I think it does go much further. Indeed, that proposition is not reconcilable with what was said in the earlier case, and I would prefer what was said in that earlier case.

The position here is this. In the ordinary way this kind of question is raised by an originating summons, and anybody wishing to say that Allan Hewitt was two persons would be bound to file evidence; otherwise he could not hope to succeed because, prima facie, Allan Hewitt is not two persons. Therefore the first thing that he would have to show is that there was no such person as Allan Hewitt. That no doubt would open up an inquiry which might end in the result which was reached by the parties to the deed of family arrangement. But it would always be open to persons interested in contending the contrary —obviously there might be such persons in this case because several of them have been born since—to bring in evidence tending to show that the testator probably did not mean the two persons who have been selected. Then the court would have to adjudicate upon the matter by balancing the evidence. In such a case each side would have an opportunity of tendering what evidence they possess, and the court would do the best it could on that evidence. But what would anyone think of a judge who, on an originating summons involving such a question, said: "I "have read the plaintiff's evidence that the testator meant "two persons, but I am not going to allow anybody to file any "evidence to the contrary." He would hold up his hands in horror. I have merely said that because this is not a technical question, and in that way this case is entirely differentiated from the case before Maugham J. to which I shall refer presently. It is not merely a question whether or not the many persons interested in remainder will be bound by this arrangement, because obviously they will not be, but it is this: the purchaser is not to be assumed to know anything whatever about the relationship of the testator to various members of his family. If I were to allow this matter to be litigated before me, in these proceedings, it would throw on the purchaser the burden of seeking for evidence amongst a large number of persons, all of whom are strangers to him. How can that be fair on the purchaser? The duty of the plaintiffs is to make a good title. The deed of family arrangement shows that the matter was regarded as doubtful. There is the covenant which might involve the vendors and their interest in this fund in liability, if the court decided another way. Why should the vendors be entitled to have the title cleared, a step which they significantly failed to take when the deed of family arrangement was entered into, because it could have been done with the sanction of the court? They did not do it. They entered into the document which binds nobody except the parties to it, and they failed to clear the title. They make this cryptic reference in special condition 7 to the deed of family arrangement which I have read, and I have given the draftsman the benefit of the doubt about it. Though not intended to mislead, it certainly was bound to mislead a purchaser. Why should the matter be litigated at the expense of the purchaser, not only at his expense but to his great disadvantage in seeking to clear the title in this way? The plaintiffs have got the benefit of knowing all the members of the family, and the defendant presumably knows few, if any, of them.

[7] [1914] 2 Ch. 533.
[8] Ibid. 544.
[9] (1870) L.R. 6 Ch. 124, 131.

In my view this case is stronger than Nichols' case.[10] There the only difficulty was one of construction in the narrow sense of the word. Here the difficulty is one of evidence and of obtaining evidence. Taking the words of James L.J. in Alexander v. Mills,[11] as quoted in Smith v. Colbourne,[12] "'As a general and "'almost universal rule, the court is bound as much between "'vendor and purchaser, as in every other case, to ascertain and "'determine as it best may what the law is . . . ,'" even if I give it (which I am not disposed to do) the wide meaning as including a mixed question of law and fact, I should say that, even if the rule is almost universal, this is a case in which it would be contrary to natural justice to apply it.

[10] [1910] 1 Ch. 43.
[11] L.R. 6 Ch. 124, 131.
[12] [1914] 2 Ch. 533, 545.

1958

Wilson
v.
Thomas.

Roxburgh J.

I must refer to the decision of Maugham J. in Johnson v. Clarke.[13] That case is important in the present context because (although not a will case) it is the only case in which any question involving evidence of the position as between the vendor and a third party has been found in the reports. It is a singular case, and I derive some satisfaction from some of the things which Maugham J. said although the decision was the other way. In that case there was a document which was believed by the vendors to be merely a tenancy from year to year, but the tenant put up a claim to a much more extensive tenancy, and that was taken as an objection to the vendors' title. In that case the tenant did in fact give evidence. Apparently no question was raised about it at that stage, and therefore the judge had before him not only the document but every fact which the tenant could have put before the court if he had been a party. Let us consider the difference between that case and this where there is not before the court, as far as I know, any single person who wishes to contest the propriety of the deed of family arrangement. The report contains a number of misprints. Having heard the tenant, Maugham J. said[14]: "Now, I should like to say at the "outset for myself that I have a great deal of sympathy with "the view that it is hard upon a purchaser that he should be "bound on occasion to accept a title which is open to a doubt "arising from the circumstance that the decision of the court "in a specific performance action does not technically bind—[I "stress those words which were truly applicable in Johnson v. "Clarke,[15] but not I think in every case]—the person who may "be thought to have a claim adverse to the title sold, and "accordingly that in fact there is a title being forced upon a "purchaser which may involve a law suit." Then he cites Smith v. Colbourne[16] and also Alexander v. Mills,[17] and continues[18]: "Now, I do not think that the previous decision of the "Court of Appeal in the case of In re Nichols' and Von Joel's "Contract[19] in any way conflicts with that decision. In re "Nichols'[20] was a case where the title depended upon a question "of construction arising under a will involving real difficulty, and "what was held was this—that inasmuch as there is according "to modern practice a very easy mode in which the construction "of a will can be determined in such a manner as to bind all "the persons interested under that will it is not right in that "case for the Court to force a title upon the purchaser which "may mean that he is buying a law suit. If then there were in "this case [I stress these words] some easy method of ascer-"taining whether Mr. Richards has got the rights which he no "doubt claims under the document of March 20, 1915, I am "not at all sure that it would not be right for me to refuse the

[13] [1928] Ch. 847.
[14] Ibid. 854, 855.
[15] Ibid. 847.
[16] [1914] 2 Ch. 533.
[17] L.R. 6 Ch. 124.
[18] [1928] Ch. 847, 855, 856.
[19] [1910] 1 Ch. 43.
[20] Ibid.

"present order and to say that [the vendor]"—there is a misprint there—"should clear his title; but I do not myself see "that there is any easy method of determining that question." Then follows a passage which must I think again contain some misprint. I will read it as it appears to me that it must be intended to be read. I think it should continue thus [21]: "I think, "therefore, that although there is, as I have said, the exception "of a case where an originating summons would clear up the diffi-"culty, to suggest [such a summons] or something of that sort, "here, would still leave the court in the position that the question "would have to be determined in the absence of Mr. Richards; "and upon the authorities I am unable to hold that the right "thing to do is to compel the vendor to commence an action "against Mr. Richards to determine in some way whether a "document which they say is not binding has any validity or "not. Accordingly, unless there is going to emerge from the "circumstances that I am going to mention some very great or "serious difficulty"—pausing there, I wholeheartedly adopt the word "serious"; I am not sure whether it need be very great, but I am of opinion that if it has to be very great it is very great in this case—"with regard to the document in question, I think "it is the duty of the court to ascertain as best it can to use, "I think, the phrase of James L.J.,[22] whether Mr. Richards has "any enforceable right against the estate of the testator other "than that which arises from his having paid rent for a number "of years and being a tenant from year to year. I have to "consider that in the light of the evidence before me."

At that stage I thought that I was going to get the answer to my problem, but I do not because in this case both the parties were called, the writer of the letter and Richards, the alleged tenant. As they had been called, there was no further evidence which could possibly be of assistance. As I have already said, I prefer to base myself upon the proposition as stated in the first of these three cases, In re Nichols' and Van Joel's Contract,[23] but I should be prepared to say that this case is outside the scope of any of the three previous cases and is a much stronger case than any of them because it would not be fair to expect the purchaser to look for and obtain extrinsic evidence on a matter of this kind, namely, extrinsic evidence to destroy a latent ambiguity in the will. When one reads the will, there does not seem to be any ambiguity at all. If there be any, it is by the introduction of the fact that there was no person named Allan Hewitt; therefore it is plainly latent. It could hardly ever be right to adjudicate upon the question of a latent ambiguity without having either all the beneficiaries before the court or at any rate a sufficient number of them to induce the court to make a representation order. It has not been suggested in the present case that there is any difficulty in having this matter adjudicated

[21] [1928] Ch. 847, 856.
[22] L.R. 6 Ch. 124, 131.
[23] [1910] 1 Ch. 43.

1958

Wilson v. Thomas.

Roxburgh J.

upon by an originating summons, in the matter of the will trusts, and I know of none. There is nothing to prevent the trustee asking a court to determine the question; he may well be indemnified for the purpose by the vendors. Once it had been determined in proceedings of that sort, that would be the end of that point.

In my judgment it would be altogether wrong for me to allow this specific performance action to become a medium to construe the will in the absence of a large number of persons beneficially interested and when the evidence which they might be able to give to the court might have a vital bearing upon the result. Accordingly, as my offer of an adjournment was declined, on terms which I said I should have to consider, my decision is the same as was the decision of Neville J. in the comparable case which I have cited.

Judgment for the defendant.

Solicitors: Ridsdale & Son for Rex Taylor & Co., West Kirby; Edward Montague Lazarus & Son.

P. P.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1958 Feb. 25, 26, 27.

Lord Evershed M.R., Parker and Sellers L.JJ.

* DAVIES v. PRICE and Others.

Agriculture—Agricultural holding—Notice to quit—Interests of efficient farming—Duty of tribunal to compare existing régime with that proposed by landlord—Jurisdiction of tribunal—Appeal—Certiorari or case stated—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 63), s. 25 (1) (a), (5)—Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1954 (2 & 3 Eliz. 2, c. 39), s. 6 (1).

Crown Practice—Certiorari—Error of law on face of record—Agricultural land tribunal—Whether statement of case part of record—Wrong exercise of jurisdiction—Whether case stated or certiorari appropriate remedy.

By section 25 (1) (a) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, one of the grounds on which a Minister may consent to the operation of a notice to quit served by a landlord on the tenant of an agricultural holding is that "the carrying out of the purpose for which "the landlord proposes to terminate the tenancy is desirable in the "interests of efficient farming, whether as respects good estate "management or good husbandry or otherwise."

The tenant of an agricultural holding applied for an order of certiorari to quash the decision of an agricultural land tribunal who confirmed the consent of the Minister (given through the local agricultural executive committee) to the operation of a notice to quit. The tenant submitted that there was an error on the face of the record of the proceedings in that the order made by the tribunal showed that they had not answered the question which was before them for decision in applying section 25 (1) (a). The tribunal in giving their decision stated: "The landlords have satisfied the "tribunal that it is in the interests of efficient farming of the land "in question to terminate the tenancy of the appellant." Secondly, it was submitted that the tribunal had acted in excess of jurisdiction in confirming or giving consent on a ground which was not one of those stated in the section, namely that the landlords wished to sell with vacant possession. The tenant alleged that a statement of the case and grounds prepared by the secretary of the local agricultural executive committee, which the committee were required to prepare for the tribunal on a reference being made and which set out the arguments put and the facts proved before the tribunal, formed part of the record:—

Held, (1) that the proper application of section 25 (1) (a) required the tribunal to compare the relative merits of the régime under the existing tenant with those of the proposed régime if the tenancy were to be terminated; consequently the mere fact that the tenant was a bad farmer and that the tribunal had so found would not be a sufficient ground for giving consent.

Reg. v. Agricultural Land Tribunal for Eastern Province of England, ex parte Grant [1956] 1 W.L.R. 1240; [1956] 3 All E.R. 321 applied.

(2) That the tenant had not proved that the tribunal had erred in not considering the right question, and that in considering what was advanced and argued before the tribunal the statement of case prepared by the local agricultural executive committee was not of assistance because the hearing before them was a hearing de novo at which it was open to the parties to adduce new facts and new arguments.

(3) That even if it had been proved, which was not the case, that the tribunal had misconstrued the statute or had acted on no evidence, the proper course was to appeal against the decision under section 6 of the Agricultural (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1954,[1] for that submission went not to want of jurisdiction but to the wrong exercise of a jurisdiction which the tribunal undoubtedly had, whether to give or to withhold consent to the operation of a notice.

Rex v. Nat Bell Liquors Ltd. [1922] 2 A.C. 128; 38 T.L.R. 541 applied.

MOTION for orders of certiorari and mandamus.

On November 26, 1956, Madeline Lloyd Price and Helen Lloyd Price (hereinafter called "the landlords") served on Owen Lewis Davies (hereinafter called "the tenant") a notice to quit the agricultural holding known as Springhill Farm, Holywell, in the County of Flint, to expire as to the land on November 30, 1957, and as to the house buildings and boozy pastures on May 1, 1958. On December 11, 1956, the tenant served a counter-notice requiring that section 24 (1) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948,[2] should apply and on January 7, 1957, the landlords applied

[1] Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1954, s. 6: "(1) Any question of law arising in the course of proceedings before an Agricultural Land Tribunal may, at the request of any party to the proceedings, be referred by the Tribunal to the High Court for decision, whether before or after the Tribunal have given their decision in the proceedings."

[2] Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, s. 24: "(1) Where notice to quit an agricultural holding or part of an agricultural holding is given to the tenant thereof, and not later than one month from the giving of the notice to quit the tenant serves on the landlord a counter-notice in writing requiring that this subsection shall apply to the notice to quit, then, subject to the provisions of the next following subsection, the notice to quit shall not have effect unless the Minister consents to the operation thereof."

S. 25: "(1) Without prejudice to the discretion of the Minister in a case falling within paragraphs (a) to (e) of this subsection, the Minister shall withhold his consent under the last foregoing section to the

C. A.
1958
Davies
v.
Price.

in the prescribed form for the Minister's consent to the operation of the notice to quit. On February 25, 1957, the application was heard by the Agricultural Executive Committee of the County of Flint and on March 4, 1957, they gave their consent in writing to the operation of the notice. The tenant appealed to the Agricultural Land Tribunal for Wales, but they dismissed the appeal on October 14, 1957, in the following terms: "The tribunal "established in pursuance of the Agriculture Act, 1947, to consider the appeal of Owen Lewis Davies, of Springhill Farm, "Holywell, in the County of Flint, against the decision of the "Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to grant consent "to the operation of a notice to quit in respect of the holding "known as Springhill Farm in the Parish of Holywell Urban in "the said County of Flint, containing 68·555 acres or thereabouts, in the occupation of the said Owen Lewis Davies as "tenant thereof, sat at the Court Room, Holywell aforesaid, on "August 30, 1957, and October 12, 1957. Having heard the "evidence of all parties concerned and made an inspection of the "land, the tribunal hereby determines as follows:—the landlords "have satisfied the tribunal that it is in the interests of efficient "farming of the land in question to terminate the tenancy of "the appellant. The appellant has been employed as a full-"time shift worker at a factory in Flint since 1954; the standard "of production is and has been for some time unsatisfactory; and "the holding has been inefficiently farmed in many important "respects. The tribunal finds no ground upon which to exercise "its discretion in favour of the appellant, and the appeal is "accordingly dismissed." The tribunal then went on to extend the time for the operation of the notice to quit.

The tenant applied ex parte to the Divisional Court of the Queen's Bench Division for leave to apply for an order of certiorari to quash the tribunal's decision and for an order of mandamus directing them to hear and determine the reference to them of the decision of the Minister by way of appeal and to withhold consent to the operation of the notice to quit. The grounds for the application as set out in a statement filed pursuant to R.S.C., Ord. 59, r. 3 (2), were first, that the tribunal had erred in law in failing to ensure that the requirements of section 25 (1) (a) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948,[2] had been satisfied and second, that they had failed to satisfy themselves, as required by that provision, that the carrying out of the purpose for which the landlords proposed to terminate the tenancy was desirable in the interests of efficient farming, etc. The tribunal had purported, it was said, to be satisfied that it was in the interests of efficient farming to terminate the tenancy without reference to the purposes for which the landlords proposed to terminate the tenancy. Finally, it was said that at the hearing before the tribunal it had been stated on behalf of the landlords that the purpose for which they wished to terminate the tenancy was to sell the farm with vacant possession and that the tribunal could not have been satisfied that the carrying out of the stated purpose was desirable in the interests of efficient farming.

"operation of a notice to quit an "agricultural holding or part of an "agricultural holding unless he is "satisfied—(a) that the carrying out "of the purpose for which the land-"lord proposes to terminate the "tenancy is desirable in the interests "of efficient farming, whether as "respects good estate management or "good husbandry or otherwise. . . . "(4) If the landlord or the tenant is "dissatisfied with the Minister's "decision to withhold or to give his "consent as aforesaid, the landlord "or tenant may within the prescribed "time and in the prescribed manner "require that the matter shall be re-"ferred to the Agricultural Land Tri-"bunal. . . . (5) Where the Minister or "the Agricultural Land Tribunal con-"sent under the last foregoing section "to the operation of a notice to quit, "the Minister or the Tribunal may "impose such conditions as appear to "the Minister or the Tribunal requi-"site for securing that the land to "which the notice relates will be used "for the purpose for which the land-"lord proposes to terminate the "tenancy." [The functions of the Minister in regard to the granting or withholding of consent have been delegated by him to the local agricultural executive committees.]

The Divisional Court refused the leave sought and the tenant applied for leave to the Court of Appeal. They granted leave to issue notice of motion. Accordingly, the tenant moved for the orders, on the following grounds additional to any set out in the application. First, that there was an error on the face of the record of the proceedings before the Agricultural Land Tribunal in that by their order the tribunal had stated that they were satisfied that it was in the interests of efficient farming of the holding to terminate the tenancy whereas the question before them for decision was whether they were satisfied that the carrying out of the purpose for which the landlords proposed to terminate the said tenancy was desirable in the interests of efficient farming whether as respects good estate management or good husbandry or otherwise as was provided by section 25 (1) (a) of the Act of 1948. Second, that the tribunal had acted in excess of jurisdiction in supporting the consent to the operation of the notice to quit on grounds not authorized by the statute, namely on the ground that the landlords wished to sell with vacant possession.

E. P. Wallis-Jones for the tenant.

Ronald Waterhouse for the landlords.

The Agricultural Land Tribunal for Wales were not represented.

In addition to the case referred to in the judgments, the following were cited in argument: Reg. v. Medical Appeal Tribunal, ex parte Gilmore[3]; Martin-Smith v. Smale[4]; Reg. v. Income Tax Special Purposes Commissioners.[5]

LORD EVERSHED M.R. I will ask Parker L.J. to deliver the first judgment.

[3] [1957] 1 Q.B. 574; [1957] 2 W.L.R. 498; sub nom. In re Gilmore's Application [1957] 1 All E.R. 796.

[4] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 247; [1954] 1 All E.R. 237.

[5] (1888) 21 Q.B.D. 313; 4 T.L.R. 636.

C. A.
1958
Davies
v.
Price.

Parker L.J. In this case Mr. Wallis-Jones moves on behalf of Owen Lewis Davies, a tenant of a farm known as Springhill Farm, Holywell, in the County of Flint, for an order of certiorari to bring up and quash a decision of the Agricultural Land Tribunal for Wales, dated October 14, 1957, upholding the Minister's consent to the termination of the applicant's tenancy of that farm. Mr. Wallis-Jones also asks for an order of mandamus directed to the tribunal to hear and determine the matter according to law. That, of course, only arises if and when this court grants an order quashing the decision.

The order of certiorari is asked for on two grounds: (1) that there is an error of law on the face of the record, and (2) that the tribunal acted in excess of jurisdiction. Each of those grounds, if proved, would entitle the applicant to an order of certiorari.

The Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, substantially interfered with the ordinary law of landlord and tenant in regard to agricultural holdings, and in particular imposed restrictions in regard to the operation of notices to quit.

[His Lordship read sections 24 (1), 25 (1) and (5), commenting that the functions of the Minister with regard to the granting or withholding of consent had been delegated by him to the local agricultural executive committees, and that that was the first stage of the procedure. His Lordship then read subsection (4) and continued:] While considering the Act, it is, I think, convenient to refer to certain other provisions whereby the landlord can get possession of an agricultural holding. Thus by section 27 procedure is provided for the landlord applying to the Minister for a certificate that the tenant is not fulfilling his responsibilities to farm in accordance with the rules of good husbandry. If the Minister does so certify, then, going back to section 24 (2) (c), if the landlord within six months of that certificate serves notice to quit which, on its face, refers to the certificate, he is enabled to get possession without applying for any consent at all.

Accordingly, there are broadly speaking two ways by which a landlord can get possession: first, by showing that the tenant is a thoroughly bad farmer and getting a certificate of bad husbandry, in which case, as I have said, the consent of the Minister is not required, or he can proceed by serving a notice to quit and obtaining consent, always assuming a counter-notice has been served by the tenant, under one of the heads set out in section 25 (1).

[His Lordship referred to the facts and read the decision of the Agricultural Lands Tribunal, a certified copy of which was produced, as provided by article 17 of the Agriculture (Procedure of Agricultural Land Tribunals) Order, 1954 (S.I. 1954, No. 1138).]

It will be observed at once that the opening sentence of that decision does not follow the wording of section 25 (1) (a), which is the only relevant head under which consent could be granted.

It makes no reference at all to the purpose for which the landlords proposed to terminate the tenancy, and does not on its face consider whether user as proposed by the landlords is more desirable in the interests of efficient farming than continued user by the tenant. The only reason expressed in the decision is that the tenant is a thoroughly bad farmer. This, says Mr. Wallis-Jones, discloses an error of law since, as he contends, that of itself is not a sufficient ground for giving consent under this section. If that could be said to be the only ground for the decision, then I think that the tribunal might well be said to have erred in law. As I have said, section 25 is not dealing with the case where the landlord seeks permission on the ground alone that the tenant is a bad farmer. In such a case, as I have pointed out, there is a remedy under section 27 and section 24 of the Act. This provision in section 25, as it seems to me, involves a comparison between what I may call the present régime under the existing tenant and the proposed régime which will appertain in future if the tenancy is terminated. For myself, I think that subsection (5), to which I have referred, supports that view because, under that subsection, the tribunal may impose such conditions as appear to it to be requisite for securing that the land to which the notice relates will be used for the purpose for which the landlord proposed to terminate the tenancy. No doubt the less efficiently the land is being farmed by the existing tenant, the easier it will be for the landlord to say that the proposed user, if the tenancy is terminated, will be more efficient. But it seems to me that a landlord must give some evidence of the proposed user and the tribunal can then and must proceed to make a comparison.

Indeed, I think support for that view is to be found in the decision of this court in Reg. v. Agricultural Land Tribunal for Eastern Province of England, ex parte Grant.[1] I need only refer to a short passage in the judgment of Singleton L.J.[2] where, in granting an order of certiorari, he said: "They," that is the tribunal, "will be entitled to bear in mind the quality of the "farming of the landlord. They will ask themselves whether they "are satisfied that it is desirable that consent should be given "in the interests of efficient farming, and they will be entitled "to bear in mind the position of the landlord's present holding "and farm buildings in relation to this land, which must, I think, "have a bearing on the efficient farming of this piece of land. "If they come to the conclusion that they are satisfied that the "requirements of paragraph (a) of subsection (1)"—that is of section 25—"are fulfilled, they will ask themselves whether or "not, in their discretion, they should give their consent to the "notice." It seems to me that he is there saying what I have sought to say, that there must be a comparison between the existing régime and the proposed régime.

[1] [1956] 1 W.L.R. 1240; [1956] 3 All E.R. 321.

[2] [1956] 1 W.L.R. 1240, 1249.

C. A.
1958
Davies
v.
Price.
Parker L.J.

So much I think is clear in regard to the construction of that provision in section 25, but the question remains whether on the face of this decision it can be said that the tribunal have erred in not making that comparison. In regard to that, the onus is, of course, upon the applicant to satisfy this court that such an error is manifest on the face of the record. For myself, I do not think that such an error is established. The tribunal, though bound to give a written decision, are not bound to state their reasons, or indeed any reasons. In the present case they do not say that the reason given is their only reason. Indeed, if they had said: "Having regard to the declared purpose of the landlords, we are "satisfied," etc., there would be no question of there being any challenge of their decision. I do not think that we can infer that they did not consider any declared purpose of the landlord, and indeed, as it seems to me, the very wording of that first sentence supports their view because the tribunal say that they are satisfied that it is in the interests of the efficient farming of the land in question to terminate the tenancy of the appellant, and those very words, as it seems to me, involve that they are comparing the position before the operation of the notice to quit with what it is if the notice to quit operates. Accordingly, if one looks at the decision alone, I am not satisfied that any error of law is manifest on its face.

But the matter does not rest there because Mr. Wallis-Jones has invited us to look at another document, a document headed: "Statement of case and general grounds for the Minister's "decision" as being a part of the record. This document is apparently a document prepared by the secretary of the agricultural executive committee pursuant to article 4 of the regulations, to which I have already referred, which is required to be sent to the tribunal once the landlord or the tenant have referred the matter to that tribunal and copies are sent to the interested parties. That document sets out the details of the holding and thereafter refers to the rival contentions of the landlord and the tenant and ends with the decision of the committee. From that document it appears that before the committee the contention of the landlords was that if they got possession of the holding they had not decided whether to sell or relet. There is no other statement than that in regard to what was proposed to be the user of the land if the tenancy was terminated. Such a declared intention, so runs the argument, would be insufficient to enable any comparison to be made between what I have referred to as the existing régime and the new régime, and accordingly supports the view that the tribunal gave their consent merely on the basis that this tenant was a thoroughly bad farmer.

I very much doubt whether this document can be said to form part of the record. In Rex v. Northumberland Compensation Appeal Tribunal, ex parte Shaw,[3] Denning L.J. at p. 351 and continuing on p, 352, dealt with the question of what documents could be said to form part of the record. He says this [4]: "It appears that the Court of King's Bench always insisted that "the record should contain, or recite, the document or informa- "tion which initiated the proceedings and thus gave the tribunal "its jurisdiction; and also the document which contained their "adjudication," and he also says there that pleadings would form part of the record. So far as the present document is concerned, it is not in the nature of a pleading; it does not initiate proceedings because it only comes into existence once a reference has been made to the tribunal, and indeed it does not emanate from the landlord and could not well be said to be in any way binding upon him. It is for these reasons that I doubt, for my part, whether it does form part of the record, but in the present case I find it quite unnecessary to come to a concluded decision in the matter, and for this reason. As I have said, the document only sets out the arguments and facts proved before the committee. The reference to the Agricultural Land Tribunal is not strictly an appeal; it is a hearing de novo, and it is open to the parties to adduce new facts and to adduce new arguments. Accordingly, if one does look at this further document, it does not in the least help as to what was advanced and argued before the Agricultural Land Tribunal.

[3] [1952] 1 K.B. 338; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 161; [1952] 1 All E.R. 122.

Finally, Mr. Wallis-Jones, as I have said, took the point that the tribunal in this case had exceeded its jurisdiction, and for that purpose he invited us to look at certain affidavits referring to what took place before the tribunal in order, as I understand, to show either that there was no evidence upon which they were entitled to give consent, or to show that they must have misconstrued section 25 (1) (a) or, as he put it, that they were advancing a further ground for granting consent beyond those enumerated in section 25. But even if on looking at those affidavits there was such evidence, this does not, as it seems to me, mean that the tribunal had acted in excess of jurisdiction. The matter was properly referred to them; they clearly had jurisdiction to decide whether to give or withhold consent, and if they misconstrued the statute or acted on no evidence, they merely erred in law, and unless that error is manifest on the face of the award, the decision cannot be challenged on proceedings for an order of certiorari.

That principle is I think well known and it is enough to refer to a short passage in Lord Sumner's well-known judgment in Rex v. Nat Bell Liquors Ltd.[5] He said this [6]: "It has been said that "the matter may be regarded as a question of jurisdiction, and "that a justice who convicts without evidence is acting without "jurisdiction to do so. Accordingly, want of essential evidence, "if ascertained somehow, is on the same footing as want of quali- "fication in the magistrate, and goes to the question of his right

[4] [1952] 1 K.B. 338, 352.
[5] [1922] 2 A.C. 128; 38 T.L.R. 541.
[6] [1922] 2 A.C. 128, 151.

C. A.
1958
Davies v. Price.
Parker L.J.

"to enter on the case at all. Want of evidence on which to convict is the same as want of jurisdiction to take evidence at all." That was the argument, and Lord Sumner goes on: "This, clearly, is erroneous. A justice who convicts without evidence is doing something that he ought not to do, but he is doing it as a judge, and if his jurisdiction to entertain the charge is not open to impeachment, his subsequent error, however grave, is a wrong exercise of a jurisdiction which he has, and not a usurpation of a jurisdiction which he has not." That principle applies whether it is a question of lack of evidence or, as it seems to me, of misconstruing a statute.

Accordingly, I myself would not look at those affidavits. If, as I have said, they disclose that there was no evidence on which the tribunal could have granted consent or showed that they must have misconstrued the statute, that is not a question of want of jurisdiction and there being no error of law on the face of the record, the only remedy is by appeal, if appeal is given by statute. It is to be observed that in 1954 in the Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act of that year, section 6, specific provision was made for the first time for an appeal by way of case stated from Agricultural Land Tribunals to this court, and, as it seems to me, if the tribunal in this case had acted as it is said they acted, the proper remedy would be one by way of appeal under that section.

Accordingly, I would dismiss this application.

Sellers L.J. I am in full agreement with my Lord's judgment. I would only add that having listened to the argument, widened as it has been by the allegation of excess of jurisdiction, I have not felt satisfied that the tribunal did in fact arrive at its decision in accordance with law, but, on the other hand, I am not satisfied that any error is sufficiently revealed on the face of its decision to justify this court interfering by an order of certiorari.

Lord Evershed M.R. I also am of the same opinion and I only add a very few words of my own upon two points in the case because it is one of some significance and also out of respect to the very careful arguments by which Mr. Wallis-Jones and Mr. Waterhouse have instructed and assisted the court.

Upon the matter of construction, I wish to express my full concurrence with what has fallen from my brother Parker. As I read section 25 (1) (a), the part of the statute which has been most debated before us, it seems to me that if the Minister gives his consent to a notice to quit, then he must have been satisfied of what I will call the agricultural future of the land, the subject of the notice to quit. He must have been satisfied that the efficient farming of that land will be better served by the agricultural use of it which will be consequent upon the departure of the tenant than by the use to which the land will be put if the tenant remains. And if that is right, then the same considerations must govern the conclusion of the Agricultural Land Tribunal when its jurisdiction is invoked.

When I look, therefore, at the decision in the present case I observe that its first sentence reads: "The landlords have satisfied the tribunal that it is in the interests of efficient farming of the land in question to terminate the tenancy of the appellant." The phrase "efficient farming of the land in question" may be said to reflect the words of Singleton L.J. in Reg. v. Agricultural Land Tribunal for Eastern Province of England, ex parte Grant[7]: "I am of opinion, that the words 'in 'the interests of efficient farming' should be read as meaning 'the efficient farming of the land in respect of which the notice 'is given.'" So far, therefore, as the decision has said that it is in the interests of the efficient farming of this land that this tenant should go, it seems to me impossible for the applicant here successfully to assert that the tribunal have failed to consider what will be the alternative agricultural uses to which the particular land will be put whether the tenant stays, on the one hand, or goes, on the other.

The other point upon which I would like to say a word or two, though it is of careful reservation, is as regards the document called: "Statement of case and general grounds for the Minister's decision." The question has been whether that document should be regarded as part of the record. It owes its existence to the circumstance that such a statement is one of the documents which by the First Schedule to the Agriculture (Procedure of Agricultural Land Tribunals) Order of 1954, S.I. 1954, No. 1138, must be put before the Agricultural Land Tribunal in such a case as the present. As Parker L.J. has observed, however, the Agricultural Land Tribunal is dealing with this case de novo; it is a re-hearing in every sense of that term. What is more, the document "statement of case" etc., is not a document prepared by either party or the solicitors to either party. It would, therefore, seem to me somewhat strange if either party were to be held bound by the contentions therein attributed to him or her. But I agree with Parker L.J. that even if it were legitimate to treat this document as part of the record and, therefore, to look at it for the purpose of deciding whether or not there was on the face of the record an error in law, the document does not assist to such conclusion one way or the other.

In those circumstances I prefer for my part to express no opinion one way or the other whether a document of this kind in a case of this kind falls within the scope of the language of Denning L.J.'s observations in Rex v. Northumberland Compensation Appeal Tribunal, ex parte Shaw,[8] to which my brother referred: "I think the record must contain at least the document which initiates the proceedings; the pleadings, if any; and the adjudication; but not the evidence, nor the reasons, unless the tribunal chooses to incorporate them." I prefer to express no view at all whether I think this document is covered by the

[7] [1956] 1 W.L.R. 1240, 1245.

[8] [1952] 1 K.B. 338, 352.

C. A.
1958
Davies v. Price.

formula Denning L.J. uses (assuming, as I have, for the present purpose, though, again, not saying—for it is unnecessary for me to do so) that Denning L.J.'s formula is correct.

For the reasons which Parker L.J. has given and with which I concur and for those which I have myself added, I also think that this application fails and should be refused.

Motion refused. Notice to quit to operate.

Solicitors: Rider, Heaton, Meredith & Mills for Clement Jones & Co. Holywell, Flintshire; Lightbounds, Jones & Co. for H. A. Cope & Roberts, Holywell, Flintshire.

E. D.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.
1958
Feb. 28; Mar. 3, 4.
Lord Evershed M.R., Parker and Sellers L.JJ.

* RUTTER v. SHERIDAN-YOUNG.

[1957 R. No. 1543.]

Solicitor—Costs—Lump or gross sum charge—Non-contentious business—Agreement for lump sum payment for costs—Whether client entitled to itemized bill—Solicitors Act, 1957 (5 & 6 Eliz. 2, c. 27), s. 57 (1).

A solicitor who acted for a client on the grant of a lease and in connexion with a proposed mortgage agreed with the client for a lump sum charge of 150 guineas for so acting. In writing to the client, when negotiating this agreement, the solicitor stated that his charges would, under Schedule II of the Solicitors' Remuneration Order, 1883 to 1953, be based on work actually done, and not a scale charge under Schedule I. It was conceded that the solicitor, not having complied with paragraph 6 of the order of 1883 as amended by the order of 1953, was not in fact entitled to make a higher charge under that schedule on the basis of work actually done. The client paid the solicitor £150 in respect of his costs, which he, by mistake, repaid to the client. In this action the solicitor claimed by specially endorsed writ to recover the sum of £150. The client sought to defend the action on the ground that he was entitled, notwithstanding the agreement, under section 57 (1) of the Solicitors Act, 1957,[1] to an itemized bill in respect of the transaction:—

[1] Solicitors Act, 1957, s. 57: "(1) Whether or not any order is in "force under the last foregoing "section, a solicitor and his client "may, either before or after or in the "course of the transaction of any "non-contentious business by the "solicitor, make an agreement as to "the remuneration of the solicitor in "respect thereof. . . . (4) The agreement may be sued and recovered "on or set aside in the like manner "and on the like grounds as an "agreement not relating to the "remuneration of a solicitor: Provided that if on any taxation of "costs the agreement is relied on by "the solicitor and objected to by the "client as unfair or unreasonable, the "taxing officer may enquire into the "facts and certify them to the court, "and if on that certificate it appears "just to the court that the agreement should be cancelled, or the "amount payable thereunder reduced, "the court may order the agreement "to be cancelled, or the amount payable thereunder to be reduced, and "may give such consequential directions as they think fit."

Held, (1) that on the true construction of section 57 (1) of the Solicitors Act, 1957, a client, who had made an agreement with his solicitor for the payment of a lump sum for non-contentious business, had not an unqualified right to ask for an itemized bill but that his right to require a bill was limited to cases where he could show, on the facts of the particular case to the satisfaction of the court, that there was something which as a matter of general principle or private right, or both, ought to be looked into;

(2) that having regard to the error in stating to the client that the solicitor was entitled to charge on the higher scale of Schedule II to the Solicitors' Remuneration Orders, 1883 to 1953, when he was not so entitled, and having regard to the fact that a solicitor's charges should not only be right but manifestly be shown to be right, an order for delivery of a bill should be made.

In re Palmer (1890) 45 Ch.D. 291; 6 T.L.R. 377; In re Frape [1893] 2 Ch. 284; Ray v. Newton [1913] 1 K.B. 249 applied.

Decision of Havers J. affirmed.

APPEAL from Havers J.

In this action Sydney Rutter, a solicitor, sought to recover the sum of £150 from a former client, Peter Dumaresq Sheridan-Young, being the balance of a lump sum for costs for non-contentious business which the defendant by an agreement of January 30, 1957, had agreed to pay. The defendant claimed that he was entitled by virtue of the provision of section 57 (1) of the Solicitors Act, 1957, to an itemized bill of costs. Havers J. held that he was so entitled.

The plaintiff appealed.

The facts are fully stated in the judgment of Lord Evershed M.R.

Maurice Lyell Q.C. and Lewis Hawser for the plaintiff.

M. E. Holdsworth for the defendant.

The following cases were referred to in argument which are not mentioned in the judgments: In re Baylis [2]; Clare v. Joseph [3]; In re Simmons & Politzer [4]; In re Inderwick [5]; Duffett v. McEvoy [6]; In re West, King & Adams, ex parte Clough. [7]

LORD EVERSHED M.R. This is an appeal from an order made by Havers J. in an action brought by a solicitor for recovery of a sum of £150. The events leading up to the action are a little complicated, but it will suffice if I say that the solicitor concerned, practising as Messrs. S. Rutter & Co., had acted for the defendant in two distinct matters: first, in an action brought by the defendant against his former wife, in an attempt to recover from her certain sums of money which he said she owed him; and, second, in respect of the acquisition by the defendant of a lease of certain premises in London, in Brunswick Gardens. During

[2] [1896] 2 Ch. 107; 12 T.L.R. 339.
[3] [1907] 2 K.B. 369; 23 T.L.R. 498.
[4] [1954] 2 Q.B. 296; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 423; [1954] 2 All E.R. 811.
[5] (1883) 25 Ch.D. 279.
[6] (1885) 10 App.Cas. 300.
[7] [1892] 2 Q.B. 102.

C. A.
1958
Rutter
v.
Sheridan-Young.
Lord Evershed M.R.

the period when the plaintiff solicitor was acting for the defendant he received on his account the proceeds of sale of a number of securities belonging to the defendant. In due course the plaintiff delivered an account to the defendant of the receipt by him of the proceeds of sale and also of the sum recovered by way of a settlement of the action against the defendant's ex-wife. It is unnecessary for present purposes to go at all into the details, but the present cause of action arose from the circumstance that, in delivering those accounts, the plaintiff omitted (as he says and I do not think it is in dispute) to give to himself credit for a sum of £150 which the defendant had, in two sums or possibly three sums, paid to the plaintiff in the month of March, 1956. The plaintiff, having received the £150, put it into his account in the name of his client, the defendant, although, as now appears with tolerable certainty, the sums were paid to the plaintiff in respect of costs, which the defendant was owing or would become liable to pay to the plaintiff, and although it was the clear intention that those sums amounting to £150 should be taken out of the client's account and put into the firm's account accordingly.

But the solicitor omitted to do that: the £150 remained, and was treated by him in the two accounts which he delivered as though it was part of the funds belonging to the client which the solicitor had received on his behalf; and so, in effect, he paid over to the defendant, as he said, £150 too much. The form of the claim in the action is (as a result of amendment) stated as being a claim to recover this £150 as money paid by the plaintiff to the defendant under a mistake of fact, full particulars being then delivered.

The case before us has been somewhat over-embellished with affidavits and exhibits; but the two accounts which are material show in each case credits to the defendant; and the sums for which thereby the solicitor acknowledged himself indebted to the defendant were paid over by the plaintiff to the defendant, in the one case the sum of £11,198, being the balance of the stock exchange sales, and in the other case a sum, considerably less, £477, being the balance of the figure received on settlement of the action of some £750. In making up these accounts there were included and debited against the defendant sums in respect of costs due, as was said, by the defendant to his solicitor, the plaintiff. One sum of costs was in respect of the litigation, the action by the defendant against his former wife, which was settled. The figure of £500, which was deducted for those costs, was deducted against the stock exchange proceeds.

There has been a certain amount of feeling (indeed that understates it) between the plaintiff and the defendant. The defendant has made charges against the plaintiff which, so far as the material before me enables me to judge, seem to me to be entirely without foundation. For example, as regards these costs for the contentious business, he has said that the plaintiff made some sort of threat that he would not proceed with the negotiations unless the defendant agreed his costs at this figure. The costs were, however, in fact agreed at that figure, but, so far as those costs are concerned, it is not now in dispute, having regard to the form of the present legislation, that it is open to the defendant to go back upon his agreement and require delivery of an itemized bill for the costs of that contentious matter. I say, therefore, nothing further about that matter, save that the order appealed from does include a direction that the plaintiff should deliver a bill for this contentious matter which will be referred to taxation.

The relevance of these claims on the defendant's part (to have itemized bills delivered) to the cause of action is of course that should the defendant get a reduction in the costs which the plaintiff was entitled to charge him, and which had been agreed, then that reduction will serve by way of relief of what he owes the plaintiff for this overpayment of £150. But I need say no more about the contentious matter.

The non-contentious matter, the work done by the solicitor in regard to Brunswick Gardens, resulted in another agreement as to costs which was made in January of 1957. The deduction in respect of these costs was made from the amount eventually recovered as the result of the compromise by the defendant of his action against his former wife. When in January, 1957, that sum by way of settlement was received, the plaintiff solicitor proceeded to deduct from it, as well as a certain number of other deductions, an amount of 150 guineas which was described as: "Re profit charges, 54, Brunswick Gardens, W.8." That formula "profit charges" of course excludes out of pocket disbursements which amount to another £12 and as to which there is no question. The plaintiff then paid a balance figure, which was £477 odd, to the defendant and the receipt of that amount was acknowledged: thereby in effect the plaintiff received payment out of this money for his profit charges of 150 guineas for 54, Brunswick Gardens. But the defendant says that he is equally unbound by that agreement as regards the non-contentious business and that (in the same way as with regard to the contentious business) the plaintiff must deliver him an itemized bill and that bill ought to be taxed.

When the matter was before Master Clayton he concluded adversely to the defendant and he, therefore, made an order giving to the plaintiff leave to sign judgment for £150. That decision was reversed by Havers J., who gave unconditional leave to defend and also directed delivery of bills, both in respect of the contentious and of the non-contentious business, with directions as to taxation accordingly. No question now arises as regards the contentious business: Mr. Lyell concedes that he is unable to resist the order which the judge made and I now confine myself to the matter of the non-contentious business.

The right of a solicitor to charge by way of lump sum in non-contentious business is one which has been conferred upon him by statute for a considerable period of time. The first occasion

C. A.
1958
Rutter v. Sheridan-Young.
Lord Evershed M.R.

upon which such a right to make lump sum charges was conferred was the Attorneys and Solicitors Act, 1870. That provision was amended and replaced by the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, and now is to be found, after appearing in the Solicitors Act, 1932, in the recent Solicitors Act, 1957. Having regard to the dates in the present case, it is pointed out that possibly the relevant statutory provisions applicable to this case are those in the Act of 1932 rather than those in the Act of 1957. But it is also conceded that the relevant language in the sections is the same and I shall, therefore, for convenience now and henceforth refer to the Act of 1957. For a period of 100 years and more the right of solicitors to charge for their services has been thought by Parliament to require a certain degree of regulation by statute and by rules made under the statute.

In the Act of 1957 the subject of the remuneration of solicitors is found in Part III, which in turn is divided into separate sections or sub-headings: the first is sections 56 to 58 inclusive, the provisions relating to non-contentious business: sections 59 to 65 inclusive relate to contentious business and are not relevant for the present appeal; and finally, sections 66 to 74 inclusive relate to general matters and are entitled: "General provisions as to remuneration." It is to be noted (and this reflects the earlier law including the Solicitors Act of 1843) that by section 67 it is provided: "The jurisdiction of the High Court to make "orders for the delivery by a solicitor of a bill of costs and for "the delivery up of, or otherwise in relation to, any deeds, docu-"ments or papers in his possession, custody or power, is hereby "declared to extend to cases in which no business has been done "by him in the High Court." Mr. Holdsworth in the course of his argument also referred to section 68, which begins: "Subject "to the provisions of this Act, no action shall be brought to "recover any costs due to a solicitor until one month after a bill "thereof has been delivered." It was contended by him for the defendant that those general provisions disable the plaintiff from bringing any action to recover costs save after the delivery of a bill. For my part I think there is more than one answer to that contention. One is that this is not in form an action to recover costs at all. In the second place, notwithstanding Mr. Holdsworth's ingenuity, I feel no doubt that the words "subject to the provisions of this Act" at any rate cover the terms of section 57 of the same Act.

I return accordingly to that section, which is the section relating to agreements for lump sum bills, among other forms of bill, in the case of non-contentious business. Subsection (1) provides: "A solicitor and his client may, either before or after or "in the course of the transaction of any non-contentious business "by the solicitor, make an agreement as to the remuneration "of the solicitor in respect thereof." Subsection (2) states that the agreement may be either by way of a lump sum or percentage or in other forms. Subsection (3) states: "The agreement shall "be in writing and signed by the person to be bound thereby or "his agent in that behalf." Then comes subsection (4), upon which the greater part of the argument in this case has turned: "The agreement may be sued and recovered on or set aside in "the like manner and on the like grounds as an agreement not "relating to the remuneration of a solicitor: Provided that if on "any taxation of costs the agreement is relied on by the solicitor "and objected to by the client as unfair or unreasonable, the "taxing officer may enquire into the facts and certify them to the "court, and if on that certificate it appears just to the "court that the agreement should be cancelled, or the amount "payable thereunder reduced, the court may order the agree-"ment to be cancelled, or the amount payable thereunder "to be reduced, and may give such consequential direc-"tions as they think fit." That form of words, which became crystallized in 1932, has an ancestry certainly as remote as the Attorneys and Solicitors Act, 1870. Both in that Act and in the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, there were provisions enabling solicitors to make lump sum charges. More particularly in the latter of those Acts, in the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, there was a provision closely resembling that now enshrined in the Act of 1957 for enabling a solicitor to make a lump sum charge by agreement in non-contentious business. As in the present Act, it was provided that such an agreement might be "sued and recovered on in the like manner and on the like "grounds as an agreement not relating to the remuneration of "a solicitor." But those words were followed, not by something expressed as a proviso but by something added by the conjunction "and"—"and if, under any order for taxation of costs, such agreement being relied upon by the solicitor shall be "objected to" etc., etc.

I have made that much reference to the earlier legislation because of the cases which have been cited. My reading of the Act of 1957, and therefore of the Act of 1932 and also of the Act of 1881, shows that the subsection presents, at any rate, this obvious problem to the reader: Is the proviso in the modern legislation, or the added provision of the subsection in the earlier legislation, intended to be a qualification upon the rights of a solicitor to sue on a lump sum agreement and, therefore, to give to the court some jurisdiction only to be evoked when a solicitor does so sue, or is it in some sense and, if so, what, an independent provision? The problem necessarily emerges because it will be observed in the first place that the subsection confers apparently upon the solicitor an unqualified right to sue on his agreement for a lump sum bill, as upon any other valid agreement, and yet goes on to say that such an agreement may be looked into if "on "any taxation it appears," etc. Ex concessis, if you treat the business comprehended by the lump sum payment as the only business between these two people, there can be no taxation, until there has first been a bill, which the earlier part of the subsection

C. A.
1958
Rutter v. Sheridan-Young.
Lord Evershed M.R.

appears to be designed to say is not necessary at all. On the face of it, therefore, the two parts of the subsection appear only to be strictly consistent and coherent in the case where the lump sum bill is put forward not as the sole matter of accounting between solicitor and client but as part of a bill covering many other transactions, where there is found a certain section of the bill which the solicitor says is business covered by an agreement; and the bill as a whole being subjected to taxation it would then on the strict language of the subsection give rise to the particular problem which the proviso (as it now is) poses. But authorities, and authorities which I feel no doubt are binding on this court, have, as I think, qualified or put a gloss upon the reading of the subsection.

Mr. Holdsworth has argued strenuously and with great care (and obviously it is a matter to which he directed a great deal of attention) that these authorities do not really cover the present case or do not bind this court, having been, in effect, pronounced per incuriam. I must say at once that I feel no doubt whatever that though Mr. Holdsworth, had he been arguing in the year 1890, might perhaps have prevailed upon the court to come to a different conclusion from that at which it did then arrive, he cannot now ask us to say that what Cotton L.J. laid down in 1890 and which this court has twice expressly followed since, is not now applicable to such a case as the present.

The case in 1890, the first of the three cases, is that of In re Palmer.[1] Since the year was 1890 the relevant Act was the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, to section 8 of which I have made the necessary reference. The question in that case was whether a certain journeyman butcher, one Slater, could go behind an agreement which he had made, in form and in other respects properly in accordance with the section, to pay a lump sum of £20 to his solicitor for the work the solicitor had done in finding for Slater a mortgagee to lend him money on the security of his interest under an uncle's will. The Court of Appeal came to the conclusion, agreeing with North J. (though not quite on the same ground) that in the circumstances Slater was not entitled to impugn or go behind this agreement, and was not entitled to require the solicitor to deliver him an itemized bill and have it taxed. The argument for Slater in the Court of Appeal was presented by counsel with great experience, Mr. Cozens-Hardy and Mr. Farwell. The argument was that an agreement for a lump sum bill can be no bar to the right of a person to have a solicitor's bill of costs taxed, unless the agreement is one authorized by the Act, and then they went on to say that the particular agreement about this mortgage was not strictly within section 8 of the Act of 1881. On this ground, therefore, Mr. Holdsworth impugned all these cases; he said they never really put the proper point. The real point was that section 8 of the Act of 1881 and all the subsequent legislation is not directed to preventing a client's ordinary right, either under the Act of 1843 or the common law, to have a bill presented as a matter of course. But it is, I think, clear that, even if the report of the argument puts the case somewhat narrowly for Slater, this court itself dealt with it on a broader ground, which would have covered such an argument as Mr. Holdsworth says Mr. Cozens-Hardy should have put forward; for this is Cotton L.J.'s language. I read it in full. The judgment is short but as it is expressly adopted in the later cases, I think it important that it should be read in full: "Then it is said that, having regard to the "fourth subsection of the eighth section, this agreement ought to "be referred to the taxing master. But the appellant has not "brought forward any evidence showing that this charge is unfair "or unreasonable; and although the fourth subsection does, in "my opinion, give the court power, where an agreement is so "impeached, to refer it to the taxing master to consider whether "the charge is fair and reasonable, no foundation for such an "order has been made. Mr. Farwell has argued that this is a "very unreasonable charge; but I do not think that he says it is "unfair. I consider, however, that the court ought not, merely "upon such an argument by counsel, unsupported by affidavit or "facts which will lead to that conclusion, to refer such an agree-"ment to the taxing master to exercise the power given by the "fourth sub-division of the eighth section." Bowen L.J. and Fry L.J. agreed with the judgment of Cotton L.J.

[1] (1890) 45 Ch.D. 291; 6 T.L.R. 377.

It will be observed that Cotton L.J. appears to put the case thus. He construed section 8 (4) of the Act of 1881, read no doubt against the background of the general law, as conferring a general power on the court, notwithstanding an agreement for a lump sum payment, to order that a bill be delivered and that bill be taxed. But, the Lord Justice said, such a power in the court will not be exercised merely because the client asks for it or because his counsel thinks of some argument for suggesting it would be a good thing to do, but only when the court considers that upon evidence there is shown to be a ground why the court ought to look into the matter to see whether upon investigation it was in truth a reasonable and fair charge. That I take to be the clear basis of this court's decision in 1890.

Having dealt with that case a little fully, I can deal more shortly with the two later cases. The first is In re Frape, ex parte Perrett,[2] three years after the Palmer case.[3] The facts of that case were, so far as is relevant, simply these, that an agreement had been made which in other respects complied with the requirements of the Act of 1881 for the payment of £80 as a lump sum payment by a client to a solicitor. There was challenge made, among other things, on the ground that on the face of it and on the facts presented £80 might not turn out to have been,

[2] [1893] 2 Ch. 284.

[3] 45 Ch.D. 291.

C. A.
1958
Rutter v. Sheridan-Young.
Lord Evershed M.R.

to put it no higher, a reasonable and fair charge, and in the end the court so concluded. But the first thing that I wish to draw attention to in the case is that in his leading judgment Lindley L.J. cited in full and adopted as correct the passage from the judgment of Cotton L.J. which I have read. He made that citation after having said [4]: "so long as the solicitor has a proper "opportunity of resisting taxation, it cannot matter whether the "application to tax is by writ or by a special petition"—that was dealing with an argument as to the form of the proceedings. "The client may say, 'I want an order to tax notwithstanding "'the agreement.' The agreement can be no answer to that, "if he can show reasons why there ought to be a reference to the "taxing master to inquire into that agreement. It appears to me "that the view taken of this section by Cotton L.J. is in accord-"ance with common sense," and he then read the whole of that judgment. He continued: "It appears to me that it would not "be right to say, upon the material before us, that this agree-"ment was unfair and unreasonable. On the other hand, the "evidence about it is such as to render it right to direct an order "to tax, and the taxing master will have to look into the "question and see what the truth is. The fact is, that it is "impossible to decide whether the agreement is unfair or "unreasonable without taxing the bill." In that case, putting quite briefly the figures, the solicitor had said: "I agreed £80 "and now I will show you that I can produce a bill up to £140." So far from that persuading the court, it acted, perhaps not unnaturally, as something of a boomerang—if the bill was going to be as big as that perhaps the whole thing had better be looked into. But the purpose of my reference is to show that three years after In re Palmer,[5] Cotton L.J.'s judgment was by three other Lords Justices treated as properly laying down the law which was to be found in section 8 of the Solicitors Act, 1881.

The third case was that of Ray v. Newton,[6] 20 years later, in 1913. That was a rather more complicated case. The cases of In re Palmer [7] and In re Frape [8] were brought to the attention of the court and Farwell L.J. and Hamilton L.J., as he then was closely followed what I take to be the ratio of those cases, and said that the right of a client, notwithstanding an agreement, is to have an order for delivery of a bill, provided he can show some prima facie case for saying that the question, aye or no, was it reasonable, should be inquired into—having due regard to the circumstance that for so long a period of time Parliament has thought it right that solicitors' charges should be somewhat strictly regulated. But even if it had been possible to say (as I think it would not) that these cases could be disregarded by us as having all proceeded on a misapprehension of the real point, the

[4] [1893] 2 Ch. 284, 295.
[5] 45 Ch.D. 291.
[6] [1913] 1 K.B. 249.
[7] 45 Ch.D. 291.
[8] [1893] 2 Ch. 284.

coup de grace to any such argument is presented by this circumstance. In 1932 Parliament re-enacted the law relating to solicitors. It is quite true that in 1890 and in 1913 the Solicitors Act, 1843, had not been repealed, and the provisions, particularly of section 37 of that Act (saying in general terms that there shall be no action by a solicitor to recover his fees until a month after his bill) were still on the statute book. But in 1932 Parliament repealed expressly the Act of 1843 and yet re-enacted the provisions of section 8 (4) of the Act of 1881, and, according to well-known principles, it must be taken to have done so with knowledge that the Court of Appeal had interpreted section 8 of the Act of 1881 as it had. It seems, therefore, quite plain to me that as a matter of general principle it is not right to say that a client, who has made an agreement for paying a lump sum for non-contentious business, has an unqualified right to come and ask for a bill. His right to require a bill is limited to cases where he can show, on the facts of the particular case, to the satisfaction of the court that there is something which as a matter of general principle or private right, or both, the court ought to look into. Indeed, I will go somewhat further and say that the Act of 1932 has made it even plainer than it was before, because the second part of the subsection, instead of being simply an addition to what goes before, is now expressed as a proviso: for as a general matter, a proviso should prima facie be construed as something which merely qualifies the general terms of what has gone before.

I therefore reject the argument of Mr. Holdsworth that, apart from any special circumstances he can extract from this case, he is now entitled to require the delivery of a bill. We are informed that Havers J. had taken the view that the client was so entitled and based his decision on that view. In so far, therefore, as he did so, I am bound to say that I am unable to agree with him; but on careful reflection I have come to the conclusion that his judgment should nevertheless be upheld on other grounds.

I turn, accordingly, to the question whether it is here established, the onus being clearly on the client, that there is good ground for saying that an itemized bill ought to be delivered and referred to the taxing master so that the court can see whether the agreement was in the circumstances unreasonable or unfair. I have referred to the somewhat prolific nature of the documents in this case, and I must now refer to the last affidavit which the plaintiff swore. That he was provoked into making another affidavit I am ready to concede; because, although in a very long earlier affidavit he had not in terms said that the £150, which was the subject-matter of the action, should have been paid over to his firm's account with the defendant's assent or agreement (as perhaps he might have done) the defendant's counsel, when the case was before the court, had apparently suggested that there had been no authority whatever for the solicitors making that transfer. How the defendant came so to instruct his counsel

C. A.
1958
Rutter v. Sheridan-Young.
Lord Evershed M.R.

I do not know, because it is quite plain from the correspondence that the sums were paid in respect of costs, and I am by no means clear why the plaintiff should keep sums paid in respect of costs to be incurred or already due indefinitely in the client's account. However, that is what the defendant told his counsel to say and, therefore, the plaintiff swore another affidavit producing certain letters refuting the suggestion which had been made. But then the plaintiff went on to expand the point that at the time the agreement was made for a lump sum charge, he, the plaintiff, had pointed out to the defendant that since this conveyancing matter of Brunswick Gardens appeared to be a somewhat complex and tortuous business, he would exercise his right, which has been recently conferred upon solicitors, to charge not according to Schedule I in the Remuneration Order but Schedule II, that is to say, not by way of a scale charge upon the consideration, the subject of the sale, mortgage or lease, but according to the work done. The provisions about this so-called election are, however, strict, and it is made quite plain that, if a solicitor desires to avail himself of the privilege of charging according to the work done under Schedule II, then there must be an election in writing by the solicitor before the work is undertaken. Paragraph 6 of the relevant order states: "In all cases to which the scales pre-"scribed in Schedule I hereto shall apply, a solicitor may, before "undertaking any business, by writing under his hand, communi-"cated to the client, elect that his remuneration shall be in "accordance with Schedule II hereto; but if no such election "shall be made, his remuneration shall be according to the scales "prescribed by this order." A perusal of the last four or five paragraphs of the affidavit had led me to suppose, I must confess, that the plaintiff was saying that in judging the defendant's case made for an inquiry into the reasonableness of the plaintiff's charges, one must bear in mind this is a case in which he had elected to charge under the Second Schedule in accordance with the work done, which may notoriously give a higher rate of charge than the scale charges. But it was conceded by Mr. Lyell, and it is quite plain, that the plaintiff failed to comply with paragraph 6 of the Solicitors' Remuneration Order, 1883 (as amended by the order of 1953), and, therefore, is unable to charge in accordance with Schedule II except in those cases which are not covered by Schedule I; and was unable so to do when the agreement was made for the 150 guineas lump sum. I am not saying that there was any deliberate attempt to deceive either the defendant, still less the court, on the part of the plaintiff; but it is an unfortunate fact that in this respect he made an error, and I am bound to say in the circumstances of this case I think it was rather a grievous error.

I will go at once to the letter which on January 14, 1957, the plaintiff or his firm wrote to the defendant as a result of which the agreement was made. The letter reads as follows: "Our charges "have been arrived at on the basis of a reasonable amount for the "actual work done, under Schedule II of the Solicitors' "Remuneration Order; therefore, the amount of the considera- "tion payable by you or whether the property is registered or not, "does not enter into the matter. Mr. Rutter told you long ago "that our charges would be based on work actually done by us "and not on the basis of any consideration. The leasehold "interest which is being granted to you is not registered at H.M. "Land Registry but it will have to be registered immediately the "lease is granted.

"It will take a considerable time to prepare a detailed bill in "this matter and if you insist, and we would point out that you "are entitled to one if you so desire, then we will prepare such a "bill, but would point out that it may come to a greater amount "than what has been intimated to you in our recent letter, in "which case we would naturally look to you for full payment. "We assure you that our suggested charges are reasonable, "particularly in view of the extremely voluminous and compli- "cated correspondence and other work which was necessary by "virtue of the action taken," and then they refer to the pro- ceedings, "and we do respectfully suggest that you should call "and inspect our file which will be made available to you, so that "you can satisfy yourself as to the reasonableness of our "suggested charges and thus save a lot of trouble in preparing "a bill."

On the strength of that the defendant did attend the plaintiff's offices and, as a consequence, he did make and sign the agreement that there should be this lump sum payment of £150. On January 30 he sent a letter saying: "I hand you my cheque "for" the sum of the disbursements "which, together with the "sum of £157 10s. retained by you in respect of your profit costs "in regard to this matter makes a total of" so much "which "sum I agree is in full settlement of your agreed costs and dis- "bursements in the above matter (as set out in your letter to "me of even date)." The misfortune from the plaintiff's point of view is that the main argument he appears to have been using in his letter of January 14, namely that he was entitled in this case not to charge for a great deal of the work under Schedule I but under Schedule II, was ill-founded, as is now conceded. It is of course quite true to say that the defendant went up and saw all the figures, and, although it has been suggested by his counsel that he is somewhat young and "green," I am not persuaded that he was not ordinarily capable of looking after himself. Neverthless he would not in the natural course of events by expected to be well informed about solicitors' charges and the schedules and such matters. The plain fact is that one of the matters, at any rate, which led to the making of this agreement

C. A.
1958
Rutter
v.
Sheridan-Young.
Lord Evershed M.R.

was the plaintiff's mistaken statement, representation if you like, that he was entitled to charge on the higher Schedule II basis. No question is raised here of setting aside the agreement altogether on the ground of an innocent misrepresentation or anything of that kind. Had such a claim been made, it might or might not have been a matter for consideration under the general terms of subsection (4) of section 57. But in face of the facts and bearing in mind the general public good that solicitors' charges should not only be right but manifestly shown to be right, I do think here that there should be a bill delivered. This unfortunate error does produce the result that the agreement was made or induced—I am of course using the words without any offensive connotation—by the assertion of a right to charge which was not well founded. Prima facie I would have thought that would not only justify but require the court in a case of this kind to say: "We will look into it and then it will be seen if "there is anything anybody could say is unreasonable." Of course if on examination of the figures it is clear, even if the plaintiff is limited to his Schedule I charges for those items to which Schedule I applies, that 150 guineas is reasonable, that will be the answer. Mr. Lyell has put forward, to say the least, a strong case for saying that even on that basis 150 guineas is certainly not unreasonable. Much turns upon what might have been put in a bill or should have been put in a bill in respect of negotiations for a mortgage which went right up to completion but which was never in fact completed. I am far from saying that when the matter is looked into, it will be found that the defendant was charged anything unreasonable; but I am not satisfied that there is not shown to be something which in the very special circumstances of this case the court ought not on the whole to look into.

I think, therefore, for those reasons that the view taken by the judge ought to be sustained.

I have wondered whether it necessarily follows that the defendant should have the benefit of a total stay of the proceedings. If this was the only matter being investigated I might well have thought there was no ground for a complete stay. But I do not forget that the contentious matter, the charge in respect of which was £500, is also now the subject of an order and it is of course possible, though I am not suggesting it is necessarily likely, that the defendant may reduce the plaintiff's charges by an amount which exceeds what he is asked to pay in this action. Events will show hereafter; I have no facts to justify my forming any opinion. But without saying that the charge under the agreement was unreasonable or unfair (and certainly not the latter), I think that in the special circumstances, which I have stated, it would not be right to say that the order for delivery of a bill for taxation which the judge made should be set aside. I think that that matter should be looked into and I would, therefore, on those grounds, dismiss the appeal.

PARKER L.J. I entirely agree with all that my Lord has said and there is nothing which I desire to add.

SELLERS L.J. I agree and for the same reasons.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: S. Rutter & Co.; Mrs. Helen Evans.

B. A. B.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

* IN THE ESTATE OF COLMAN, DECD.

1957 Dec. 11.
1958 March 17.
Karminski J.

Will—Soldier's will—"In actual military service"—Occupation force—Infant—Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 11—Wills (Soldiers and Sailors) Act, 1918 (7 & 8 Geo. 5, c. 58), ss. 1 and 3. Military Law—"Active service."

In May, 1954, an infant testator, who was, at that date, on leave in England from the British Army of the Rhine, purported to execute a will which was prepared on the advice of a solicitor and properly executed according to section 9 of the Wills Act, 1837.

According to information supplied by the War Office, Her Majesty's forces were, in May, 1954, in military occupation of certain areas of Germany by virtue of the unconditional surrender of 1945, and the position, status and function of those forces were that of an army in occupation of a foreign country by force of arms.

On an application by the executors of the will for a grant of probate:—

Held, that, since the testator was on military service and that service, despite the lapse of almost nine years since the unconditional surrender, was directly concerned with a war which had been in progress, he was "in actual military service" in May, 1954, within section 11 of the Act of 1837; the will was a valid will by virtue of section 1 of the Wills Act, 1918, and the grant, as sought, should be made.

In re Wingham, decd. [1949] P. 187; 64 T.L.R. 594; [1948] 2 All E.R. 908 applied.

In the Estate of Grey [1922] P. 140; 38 T.L.R. 401 distinguished.

PROBATE MOTION.

The testator died at the age of 22, domiciled and resident in England and a bachelor, on July 3, 1956. He purported to execute a will on May 3, 1954, in accordance with the provisions of section 9 of the Wills Act, 1837. He was at that time 19 years of age, but he was serving as an officer in the 1st Battalion of the King's Royal Rifle Corps, then stationed in Germany. He had joined his 1958

In the Estate of Colman, decd.

battalion in Germany on August 23, 1953, and he remained there until his demobilization in September of 1954.

At the time of the purported execution of the will the testator was on leave in England, the period of his leave lasting from April 20, 1954, until May 6, 1954. The will was prepared on the advice of a solicitor and there was no suggestion that the testator was under any sort of disability save that he had not attained the age of 21 years. He died as the result of an accident on July 3, 1956.

On December 11, 1957, the application of the executors for a grant of probate of the will of May 3, 1954, came before Karminski J. It was submitted on behalf of the executors that the testator was "in actual military service" on May 4, 1954, and that the will was, therefore, valid by virtue of the provisions of the Wills Act, 1837, and the Wills (Soldiers and Sailors) Act, 1918.[1] Karminski J., requiring further information as to the position in fact and in law of Her Majesty's forces in Germany in May, 1954, adjourned the matter for the appropriate inquiries to be made.

As a result of those inquiries it was clear from a letter from the War Office dated February 5, 1958, that the testator in May, 1954, was a member of Her Majesty's forces in Germany and was on active service, within the meaning of section 189 (1) of the Army Act of 1881, that being the Army Act then in force, and that Her Majesty's forces were in military occupation of the British Zone in Germany and the British Sector of Berlin by virtue of the unconditional surrender of Germany in 1945, and that, therefore, the testator was on active service for the reasons given.

It was not, according to the War Office, contemplated in May, 1954, that hostilities with any foreign power were imminent. Lastly, the position, status and function of Her Majesty's forces in Germany in May, 1954, were that of an army in occupation of a foreign country by force of arms.

A. H. Ormerod for the executors.

C. R. Beddington for the next-of-kin.

The cases and statute cited in argument are referred to in the judgment.

[1] Wills Act, 1837, s. 11: "Provided always, that any soldier being "in actual military service, or any "mariner or seaman being at sea, "may dispose of his personal estate "as he might have done before the "making of this Act."

Wills (Soldiers and Sailors) Act, 1918, s. 1: " . . . it is hereby "declared and enacted that section 11 "of [the Wills Act, 1837] authorises "and always has authorised any "soldier being in actual military "service, . . . to dispose of his per-"sonal estate as he might have done "before the passing of that Act, "though under the age of 21 years."

S. 3 of the Act of 1918 extended the provisions of s. 11 of the Act of 1837 to testamentary dispositions of real estate.

KARMINSKI J. referred to the facts, to the War Office letter, and to section 189 (1) of the Army Act of 1881,[1] and continued: Accepting the statement of facts given by the War Office, I am bound to hold, as I do, that Her Majesty's forces in Germany in May, 1954, were there in military occupation of a foreign country, and it must therefore follow that the deceased was on active service within the provisions of the Army Act, 1881.

The term "active service" appears to have derived from the Mutiny Act, 1867, where it was used, as I understand it, to define amongst other things a state of affairs in which a soldier might be flogged. Subsequently it came to have a less fearsome meaning, but it still leaves a state of affairs in which certain special disciplinary precautions might be applied.

I have to decide whether or not this young man was in May, 1954, on "actual military service" within the provisions of the Wills Act, 1837, and the Wills (Soldiers and Sailors) Act, 1918. It is, of course, clear from the line of authorities that "actual "military service" could be said to exist if at the time the will was made hostilities were said to be imminent. That cannot be said in this case, because no hostilities were imminent; but I have to consider the position as it was in 1954; the British forces were there in military occupation of Germany following the surrender of Germany.

The tests sufficient to allow a privileged will have been much canvassed as a result of two world wars; and there was, at any rate at one time, some doubt as to the meaning of the words "in actual military service"; some confusion possibly had arisen due to the attempt to apply the privilege of the Roman legionary to the somewhat different conditions of modern warfare, but the difficulties have now been resolved by the decision of the Court of Appeal in November, 1948, in In re Wingham, decd.[2]

The facts of that case were widely different from the present, since they concerned an informal, unattested will by a young airman who was about to go to Canada for training in operational flying duties. While he was there in 1943 he died in hospital following a flying accident. The circumstances were, therefore, different from those in the present case. First, in In re Wingham, decd.,[2] there was a world war in progress in which this country was involved; secondly, at the time of his death the testator was not engaged in operational duties but was training young airmen to fly.

The matter came to the Court of Appeal on appeal from Pilcher J., who had dismissed the motion on the ground that the

[1] Army Act, 1881, s. 189 (1): "In this Act, if not inconsistent with "the context, the expression 'on "'active service' as applied to a per-"son subject to military law means "whenever he is attached to or forms "part of a force which is engaged in "operations against the enemy or is "engaged in military operations in a "country or place wholly or partly "occupied by an enemy, or is in "military occupation of any foreign "country."

[2] [1949] P. 187; 64 T.L.R. 594; [1948] 2 All E.R. 908.

1958

In the Estate of Colman, decd.

Karminski J.

testator was not engaged upon a campaign, nor proceeding in readiness to join a campaign, nor serving in a beleaguered fortress, nor in a war base from which active offensive or defensive operations were being conducted.

The Court of Appeal dealt with the general position as to the meaning of "actual military service." Bucknill L.J. said[3]: "If the presence of danger arising from enemy activity is not "essential in order that a man may be properly described as "being on active military service, what is the test of such "service? In my opinion the tests are: (a) was the testator 'on "'military service'? (b) was such service, 'active'? In my "opinion the adjective 'active' in this connexion confines "military service to such service as is directly concerned with "operations in a war which is or has been in progress or is "imminent. If I apply these tests, then, in my opinion, the "deceased was so engaged."

I pause there for a moment to apply the test laid down by Bucknill L.J. To the question "Was the testator 'on military "'service'?" the answer must, of course, be "Yes." To the second question "Was such service 'active'?" I have to consider whether the service on which he was then engaged, namely, as a member of the occupying forces in Germany, was or was not "directly concerned with operations in a war which "is or has been in progress or is imminent." To the question whether the war was "in progress or is imminent" the answer must, of course, be "No"; but, in my view, the service on which the testator was engaged was "directly concerned with operations "in a war" which had been "in progress."

It is true, as Mr. Beddington rightly pointed out, that the end of hostilities with Germany had come in May, 1945, and that this will was said to have been executed almost precisely nine years later; but the fact remains that in 1954 Her Majesty's forces were there in direct consequence of the surrender of Germany in May, 1945, and were still there nine years after such surrender as an occupying force.

Mr. Beddington called my attention to the decision in In the Estate of Grey.[4] There Hill J., I think with some regret, was unable to accept that a will made by an officer about to enter hospital was a valid soldier's will. But the facts there were a good deal different, because the testator had served in the 1914–1918 war, had been a prisoner in Germany, and had subsequently rejoined his regiment. Though his regiment was liable for service abroad and under orders to proceed to Ireland, he was in no immediate danger of going on "actual military service." It is to be observed that in that case he was serving in London; he wrote out a will at his club just before he went into hospital and was not expecting to go abroad at that time; in fact he died in hospital a very few days after he had signed his will. Hill J. said[5]: " . . .

[3] [1949] P. 187, 192.
[4] [1922] P. 140; 38 T.L.R. 401.
[5] [1922] P. 140, 143.

" (1) for a soldier to be in actual military service it is not sufficient " that there should be a state of war . . . and (2) ' actual military " ' service ' refers to a state of fact, not to a date artificially fixed " by Act of Parliament or Order in Council."

I return for a moment to the judgment of Denning L.J. in In re Wingham, decd.[6] After discussing the origin of privileged wills for soldiers and sailors, he concluded his judgment[7]: " It " also includes those members of the Forces who, under stress of " war, both work at their jobs and man the defences, such as the " Home Guard." After saying[8] that it included, not only fighting men, but also the non-combatant members of the forces like doctors, nurses, chaplains and Wrens, he added[9]: " It includes " them not only in time of war but also when war is imminent. " After hostilities are ended, it may still include them, as, for " instance, when they garrison the countries which we occupy, " or when they are engaged in military operations overseas. In all " these cases they are plainly ' in actual military service.' "

In this case the testator was part of a force garrisoning a country occupied by our forces. I appreciate, as Mr. Beddington rightly emphasized, that when the testator purported to execute this will he was in fact in England and was not in ops concilii because he had the advantage of a solicitor to guide him in his testamentary dispositions; but he was only on a fortnight's leave, and he knew that he was returning to his duties as a member of an occupying force. He did, in fact, so return and remained there for a few more months until he was demobilised.

This, so far as I know, is the first time in which this particular point has arisen; namely, whether or not a member of the British forces in Germany is entitled to make a privileged will. I desire to make it perfectly plain that I am dealing with this case on the facts as they were in May, 1954. Nothing which I have said concerns any changes subsequent to that time. I have come to the conclusion that this was a privileged will.

It is right to say that this will has not, as I understand it, been the subject of any family dispute; the matter had to come before the court in the circumstances of the case. I am much obliged both to Mr. Beddington, who appeared for the next-of-kin, and to Mr. Ormerod, for the applicants, for their careful arguments on the law. The motion succeeds, and I make the order in the terms of the motion, namely, that probate should be granted to the executors of the will of the testator dated May 3, 1954. This is a proper case for the costs of the next-of-kin, in opposing the application, to be paid out of the estate.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Field, Roscoe & Co.

E. J.

[6] [1949] P. 187, 194.
[7] Ibid. 196.
[8] Ibid.
[9] Ibid.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

1958
March 19.

Sachs J.

* In the Estate of DENNING, decd.

Will—Attestation—Proof—Signatures on back of will—Omnia praesumuntur rite esse acta.

Omnia praesumuntur rite esse acta.

On an application for a grant of letters of administration with the will annexed the purported will consisted of a small single sheet of writing paper covered by the date, the dispositive words and the signature of the testatrix. On the reverse side of the sheet upside down were written, each in different handwriting from the other and from that on the face of the paper, the names of two persons whom it had proved impossible to trace.

During her lifetime the testatrix had told the plaintiff that she had made a will in favour of himself and his sister, and this was, in fact, the effect of the purported will. No other testamentary document had been found:—

Held, that, in the special circumstances of the case, and since there was no practical explanation of the two names on the back of the document save that they were there for the purpose of attesting a will, the maxim omnia praesumuntur rite esse acta should be applied, the document was a valid will and a grant should be made as sought.

In the Goods of Peverett [1902] P. 205 considered.

Probate action.

The beneficiaries under a purported will dated September 3, 1939, applied for a grant of letters of administration with the will annexed. The document which it was sought to establish as the last will consisted of a small single sheet of writing paper, the whole of the face of which was taken up by the date "Sept. 3rd. Year "of our Lord 1939" followed by five lines which consisted of the words "I give all I possess to my cousins Mary Jane and John "Harnett in Parish of St. Feock, County of Cornwall" and lastly a word intended to read "signed" followed by the signature "Alice Mary Denning, Spinster." On the reverse side, turning the sheet upside down, were the names written in two different hands "Edith Freeman" and "Dorothy Edwards," one below the other. The handwriting on the back did not coincide with that on the face of the document. Save for a single letter which was crossed out there was nothing else whatsoever on the back of the document. In spite of considerable searches no persons of the name of either "Edith Freeman" or "Dorothy Edwards" had been traced.

During her lifetime the testatrix had told John Harnett, the plaintiff in the action, that she had made a will and that he was one of the beneficiaries and his sister the other. The document in respect of which the grant was sought was found after the death of the deceased and no other testamentary document had been discovered.

James Comyn for the plaintiff.

SACHS J. referred to the facts and continued: In these circumstances the real issue for the court is whether the maxim omnia praesumuntur rite esse acta can be applied. In In the Goods of Peverett,[1] Sir Francis Jeune P., dealt with a case in which, following the signature of the testatrix, appeared those of two ladies on the face of the document, one of them with the words: "Mary Ann Brand, Sep. 14, 1893, sine these wishes" and said [2]: "Two things may be laid down as general principles. The "first is, that the court is always extremely anxious to give effect "to the wishes of persons if satisfied that they really are their "testamentary wishes; and, secondly, the court will not allow a "matter of form to stand in the way if the essential elements of "execution have been fulfilled." The President goes on to say [3]: "Those are principles which I can act upon, although I am con-"scious that in this case, where there is no attestation clause at "all, I am going to the furthest limit."

That was a case in which, as I have said, the words: "Mary "Ann Brand, sine these wishes" appeared on the face of the document. If I make a grant of letters of administration in this case it seems to me that I am going a step further than that which was regarded in 1902 as the furthest limit, in that here there is no indication of why the names were on the back of the document upside down. Having taken into account all the factors, I think it proper to take that step further because it seems to me that there is no other practical reason why those names should be on the back of the document unless it was for the purpose of attesting the will.

I find that the document of September 3, 1939, was a duly executed will. In these circumstances it is proper to grant the plaintiff letters of administration with the will annexed.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Gregory, Rowcliffe & Co. for Sitwell, Harvey & Money, Truro.

E. J.

[1] [1902] P. 205.
[2] Ibid. 206–207.
[3] Ibid. 207.

[BIRMINGHAM ASSIZES.]

* CLUEIT v. CLUEIT.

1957
Dec. 5, 19.

Davies J.

[1956 D. No. 956.]

Husband and Wife—Practice—Amendment to allege adultery—Discretion statement—Amendment of petition at trial to add charge of adultery based on facts disclosed in discretion statement.

[Reported by R. J. TOYN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

1957

Clubit
v.
Clubit.

The wife having petitioned on the ground of desertion, the husband by his answer denied his wife's allegation and cross-prayed for relief on the ground of the wife's alleged desertion. The husband's answer also prayed the exercise of the court's discretion in his favour notwithstanding his own adultery, of which the wife had, until the filing of the answer, been ignorant. Upon the discretion statement being put in as evidence at the conclusion of the husband's evidence, counsel for the wife applied for leave to amend the petition in order to include an allegation of adultery by the husband with the woman named in his discretion statement:—

Held, that leave to amend should be granted in order that the issue of adultery might be dealt with in this suit to avoid the possibility of further expense which would be occasioned if the wife brought a separate petition on the ground of adultery.

Burford v. Burford [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1242; [1955] 3 All E.R. 664 considered.

Petition by a wife for divorce on the grounds of desertion and cruelty.

The parties were married on March 3, 1951, and lived at first in the home of the wife's parents. Five weeks after the marriage, the husband left the wife and went to live with his mother. A child was born in May, 1951; and subsequently, in August, 1951, the parties met and had a holiday together and intercourse took place with the result that a second child was born in May, 1952. Shortly after the birth of the second child, the husband recommenced living with the wife at her parents' home, but finally left that address when told to do so by the wife's father in April, 1953, the wife knowing and approving of her father's action. In October, 1954, upon the wife's complaint, a summons alleging desertion was issued against the husband but was adjourned. On January 26, 1955, the husband obtained the key of a house at which he requested the wife to resume cohabitation with him. The wife, having refused the husband's request, withdrew her summons against him on January 27, 1955, and instead obtained an order by consent under the Guardianship of Infants Acts, 1886 and 1925. On that occasion the wife said that she would not live with the husband.

The wife presented her petition on October 16, 1956, on the ground of desertion from April, 1953, and cruelty, but the latter allegation was not strongly relied on. The husband in his answer filed on April 30, 1957, denied both allegations and cross-prayed on the ground of desertion from April, 1953. The husband further prayed the exercise of the court's discretion in his favour notwithstanding his adultery with a named woman during 1956, particulars of which appeared in his discretion statement dated September 18, 1957. Apart from the prayer of the answer and the facts disclosed when the discretion statement was put in evidence, the wife was ignorant of the husband's adultery.

The discretion statement was put in evidence at the conclusion of the husband's evidence, after his cross-examination, and counsel for the wife then applied for leave to amend the petition in order to include an allegation of adultery based on the facts admitted in the discretion statement. This report is only concerned with the judge's ruling upon this application.

P. J. Cox, for the wife, in support of his application referred to Burford v. Burford [1] and submitted that, where the only reason for the application not having been made earlier was the wife's ignorance of the facts, she should not be precluded even at so late a stage from alleging adultery.

F. Blennerhassett, for the husband, objected to the application on the ground that compulsory disclosure of adultery under the operation of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957, r. 28 (1) should not be permitted to form the basis of a subsequent charge against the party making the disclosure. He conceded that in the event of neither party obtaining a decree on the ground of desertion, nothing would preclude the wife from presenting a fresh petition charging the adultery admitted in the discretion statement, but submitted that the court should do nothing to assist the wife to use the information gleaned from the discretion statement, because (i) if it were found that the wife had deserted the husband, the adultery would not have affected her attitude, she being ignorant of it; (ii) where one party is compelled to disclose adultery the other will necessarily be enabled to obtain a decree, and (iii) may by that method put herself in a much stronger position to obtain maintenance than the merits of her case would otherwise warrant.

DAVIES J. This is a very interesting little point. There is no reason to give a full judgment about it. Right at the end of the evidence of the respondent husband, and after he had been cross-examined, Mr. Blennerhassett, under pressure from the wife's counsel, put in the husband's discretion statement. In it he admits having committed adultery in 1956, some three years after the parties finally separated, and says that the woman named in his discretion statement was expecting a baby in September, 1957. Mr. Cox, for the wife, has asked leave—this being a case of cross-allegations of desertion—to amend the petition to include an allegation of adultery, namely, the adultery admitted in the discretion statement; and counsel cited Burford v. Burford.[1]

The course proposed is a course which, to my own personal knowledge, has been taken in a number of cases. I think I can recollect cases where it happened when I was at the Bar; and it has certainly happened while I have been on the Bench.

Mr. Blennerhassett has taken what I must say is an extremely attractive point in asking me to refuse leave to amend. The disclosure by the husband of his own adultery was a compulsory disclosure under the rules and practice of the court. It is argued that it is a principle of our law—which is exemplified in a number

[1] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1242; [1955] 3 All E.R. 664.

[1] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1242; [1955] 3 All E.R. 664.

1957

Cluett
v.
Cluett.

Davies J.

of other branches of law—that if a man is compelled to make a disclosure or admission, that disclosure or admission must not be used against him to his prejudice thereafter. I think it is an attractive argument, but it seems to me to break down from the practical point of view. As I have said, this is a case of cross-allegations of desertion. Supposing I were to come to the view—I have not heard the concluding speeches of counsel yet, and I have not come to any decided view about this case—that neither party should have a decree, since neither party was in desertion of the other. Then there would, as I think and as Mr. Blennerhassett admits, be nothing in the world to prevent another petition from being filed by the wife immediately, alleging adultery on the admission contained in the discretion statement. If the wife could not prove her case in any other way, she would be able, at the hearing of the supposed new petition to bespeak the file in the present suit and prove her husband's adultery by identifying his signature to his discretion statement. So that, in the ultimate result, the principle put forward by Mr. Blennerhassett in opposition to this application could not operate to protect the husband from being prejudiced by his admission. That being so, it seems to me that it is right and proper to give the wife leave to amend now; for obviously it is a great saving of expense for this application to be made and granted in the present suit rather than to go to the expense of bringing a separate petition.

It is suggested that the real point of this application is that the wife wishes to strengthen her hand on an application for maintenance. I am not sure I agree with that. As I ventured to say in the course of the argument, whatever happens in the result of this case, in any application for maintenance the whole of her conduct will be investigated and will be taken into account by the registrar.

I think, in all the circumstances, that it is right and proper for me to grant the wife leave to amend. That necessarily involves that the amended petition will have to be re-served. I could dispense with re-service on the respondent, but it must, of course, be served on the woman to be named. What line she will take, one does not know; but perhaps one can hazard a guess.

There will be leave to amend the petition, service on the husband to be dispensed with and service on the woman named by 6 p.m. tomorrow. The case will be stayed pending renewal of the certificate and is to be restored for hearing before the end of this assize. No doubt you will be able to give the appropriate notice, if, as seems very probable, the woman named will be admitting—at any rate not denying—the adultery to be alleged against her, as soon as she acknowledges service. Then the case can come on again.

Application granted.

1957

CLUEIT v. CLUEIT.

Dec. 19. The suit again came before Davies J., the woman named having acknowledged service of the amended petition but taken no further step. Davies J. found that the husband had not deserted the wife but that the wife had deserted the husband from January, 1955, but not from April, 1953, or any date prior to April 30, 1954, and therefore three years desertion by the wife prior to the filing of the answer was not proved. In the exercise of the court's discretion with regard to her desertion from January, 1955, onwards, a decree nisi was pronounced in favour of the wife on the ground of the husband's adultery. The judge made an order for the wife's costs up to the amount in court as security, which was £10.

Solicitors: H. B. Keight & Co., Birmingham; Philip Baker & Co., Birmingham.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* CLEAR v. CLEAR.

C. A.

1958
Feb. 26, 27.

Hodson, Morris and Pearce L.JJ.

Husband and Wife—Practice—Pleading—Amendment to allege adultery—Discretion statement—Petition by wife for decree on ground of cruelty—Answer by husband denying cruelty and alleging cruelty by wife—Discretion statement by wife admitting adultery—Application by husband during trial of petition to amend answer by alleging adultery by wife and to serve notice on alleged co-respondent.

Husband and Wife—Maintenance—Divorce—Relevance of who obtained decree—Whole conduct of parties.

A wife, who petitioned for divorce on the ground of cruelty, filed a discretion statement admitting adultery. The husband answered the petition by denying cruelty and alleging that the wife had herself been guilty of cruelty. He knew nothing of her adultery except that she was going to ask for the discretion of the court. The contents of the wife's discretion statement were disclosed by counsel for the wife in opening, when it was stated, not only that she had committed adultery with a named man known to the husband, but that she had given birth to a child shortly before the trial. The husband accordingly applied to amend his answer by alleging adultery by the wife and to serve notice on the alleged co-respondent while he was still within the jurisdiction. The application was refused by the commissioner having regard to the delay it would entail. He ultimately dismissed the husband's plea of cruelty and, exercising his discretion in favour of the wife, granted her a decree on the ground of cruelty. The husband appealed:—

Held, that, although the fact that delay would be caused was not of itself a sufficient ground for not granting an adjournment, the exercise by the commissioner of his discretion should stand since the husband knew that the wife had committed adultery and could in the circumstances have made inquiries, but had taken no steps to obtain proof of the adultery. Although in most civil actions leave to amend would generally be granted where injustice would not thereby be done, in the present action there was a discretion to be exercised judicially and, where a party had merely waited for the evidence to be presented at the trial, leave to amend should not

C. A.

1958

Clear
v.
Clear.

necessarily be given. It was not in every case, where the parties came to trial, one knowing nothing of the circumstances in which the other side was asking for discretion, and finding the evidence for the first time at the hearing, that leave to amend must be given ex debito justitiae, but if the husband wanted to raise the issue of adultery it was, prima facie, incumbent on him to take steps to obtain proof.

Per Hodson L.J. To say that because the wife has obtained a decree she is automatically in a stronger position as regards maintenance than if the husband had obtained a decree, where matrimonial offences are proved on both sides, seems to be wrong. In any application for maintenance the whole of the conduct of the parties would be investigated and determined by the registrar.

Dictum of Davies J. in Clueit v. Clueit, ante p. 463; [1958] 1 All E.R. 417 approved.

Burford v. Burford [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1242; [1955] 3 All E.R. 664 and B. v. B. and G. [1937] P. 1; 52 T.L.R. 719; [1936] 2 All E.R. 1254 considered.

Appeal from Mr. Commissioner Blanco White.

The wife, Doreen Betty Cynthia Clear, by her petition sought a decree of divorce on the ground of cruelty by her husband, John Frederick Clear, and prayed for the exercise of the discretion of the court notwithstanding her adultery during the marriage. The husband answered by denying cruelty and alleging that the wife had herself been guilty of cruelty to him. The wife filed a discretion statement in which she admitted adultery with an Iraki army officer stationed in this country.

The husband, who was deceived by his wife throughout as to her infidelity, did not know anything of the adultery (except that she was going to ask for the discretion of the court) until he actually entered the court and then learnt for the first time, when counsel was opening the case against him, that his wife had not only committed adultery with an Iraki officer (one Captain Tikriti, whom she named) who was stationed in this country and who turned out to be known to the husband, but she also had, very shortly before the trial, given birth to a child, a child who must have been conceived in or about August, 1956, before the parties had actually separated.

The husband accordingly applied to the commissioner for leave to amend his answer by alleging adultery on the part of the wife, and also to enable him to serve a notice on the alleged co-respondent before he left the jurisdiction. The commissioner refused the application and ultimately dismissed the husband's cross plea of cruelty, granted the wife a decree on the ground of cruelty and exercised his discretion in her favour. The husband appealed on the grounds first, that, in the circumstances, the wife should have been found to have been guilty in the matrimonial sense of cruelty towards her husband; secondly, that even assuming that the husband had been guilty of cruelty, the evidence showed that it had been condoned and, thirdly, that the husband should have been given leave to amend his answer.

The case is reported solely on the issue of leave to amend.

K. Bruce Campbell and Elaine Jones for the husband.

Ifor Lloyd Q.C., Victor Russell and C. H. Beaumont for the wife.

The cases cited in argument relevant to the above issue are referred to in the judgments.

HODSON L.J., having stated the facts and referred to the other grounds of appeal, continued: The third question under appeal is whether the husband ought to have been granted an adjournment in order that justice should be done between the parties, the position being that the pleadings disclose that the wife was going to say in the witness-box that she had committed adultery, but the allegations related only to cruelty.

The application for an adjournment was made by the husband's counsel after the opening statement had been made on the other side, and before evidence had been given on this matter, in anticipation of that evidence being given, in order that he might have time before the Iraki disappeared from this country to serve him, if need be, and give him an opportunity of defending the case. The application was refused. Mr. Campbell made it plain that he was anticipating the proper moment when the application should be made, and I do not think it ought to be taken against him that he did not repeat the application at the proper moment, namely, when the wife gave evidence (which she subsequently did) of her adultery, because it was obviously convenient, he having the material in paper form at any rate in his hand, that he should get the amendment in train as soon as possible. He explained to the commissioner that he was making the application then because he would have to act quickly in serving the man. He said: "My information is that at this moment he may be in "this country but we think it more likely that he is in Iraq. As "this case is expected to go on for the rest of the week it is "just possible that service may be effected upon him during that "time and thus avoid delay at the end." The commissioner, realizing the practical difficulties involved, said, and I respectfully agree with him, that if the amendment were granted the man would have to be served because he was entitled to hear the allegation against him. The allegation made is not like Sage v. Sage; Stockbridge v. Stockbridge,[1] before Willmer J., to which we were referred, an admission made by a wife outside the court implicating another man, but a sworn statement not yet made but later made in the case, implicating that man as the adulterer. The commissioner refused to consider any device by which the regular practice laid down by statute of instituting service on the co-respondent could be avoided, and he eventually expressed his opinion in these words: "I see no advantage in acceding to the "application. I do not even know that this Captain Tikriti is in "this country, and if he is not in this country a lot of delay would

[1] [1947] P. 71; 63 T.L.R. 252; [1947] 1 All E.R. 492.

C. A.
1958
Clear
v.
Clear.
Hodson L.J.

"be caused by serving him." It was pointed out by the wife's counsel, after the commissioner had expressed this opinion, which was, I think, not necessarily a final decision in the matter, that if such a charge were made it would be at least open to the wife to plead conduct conducing in answer to the charge. The application was never renewed, and I am treating this case as if it has been made at the proper time.

The mere fact that delay would be caused by serving him is not of itself, in my judgment, a sufficient ground for not granting an adjournment in order that an amendment may be made and the necessary steps taken. On the other hand, I am not prepared to say that in every case where the parties come to trial, one knowing nothing of the circumstances in which the other side is asking for discretion, and finding the evidence for the first time at the hearing, leave to amend must be given ex debito justitiae. It is quite true the courts have gone a long way in civil actions in saying that leave to amend will always be granted where injustice will not thereby be done, and where any injustice which is temporarily done can be remedied by costs, but it must always be remembered that there is a discretion to be exercised judicially in this case, and in this matrimonial jurisdiction very often the exercise of the discretion is peculiarly difficult. It would, I think, be wrong to say that, where a party had merely lain by and waited so to speak for the evidence to fall into his or her lap at the trial, the amendment must necessarily be given.

This situation was dealt with recently by Davies J. at Birmingham Assizes in Clueit v. Clueit.[2] I agree with the judge's observations in which he said that on the facts of the case before him it was right that leave to amend should be given to enable one of the parties before him to make an allegation of adultery on the facts in the admission made by the other side in asking for discretion. He had in mind what was said by this court in Burford v. Burford,[3] a case to which we have also been referred, where this court in considering that situation by no means sought to lay down that in all such cases must leave to amend be given. I agree with Davies J. in so far as he implied that it was very often the right thing to do, so that justice could be done between the parties appearing before the court.

One has to remember that the parties are not entirely helpless in these matters. They are told, when the petition is served on them by the other side, that discretion is being asked for notwithstanding the adultery committed. If they want to raise the issue of adultery as a live issue and fight it, and not merely accept the finding of adultery which they are reasonably sure they will get against the other side at the hearing, if they want proof of it themselves it is, prima facie, incumbent on them to take steps so to obtain proof.

[2] Ante, p. 463; [1958] 1 All E.R. 417.

[3] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1242; [1955] 3 All E.R. 664.

The husband was not without the means by which he could have taken steps to inquire whether his wife was then associating with this or any other man. He knew she had committed adultery before the presentation of the petition, but he did not know she was pregnant. If he had found out that she was pregnant that would have put him on inquiry because, whatever the physical relationship between him and his wife had been at the time of the conception, if she did not disclose her pregnancy to him, it would at least tend to show that she was doubtful whether he in truth was the father. He could have made inquiries at Bath, for he knew at least as soon as February, 1957, three months after the parting in November, 1956, that she was there. There was nothing in the world to prevent his solicitors making inquiry of the opposite party and saying: "We see your "client is asking for the discretion of the court notwithstanding "her adultery. Are you prepared to give us any information "which may save expense in proving our case?" No step at all was taken, and it was left in this way, that the husband came to trial without on his side any allegation of adultery made against his wife.

The commissioner refused him leave to amend. Although I am not upholding the particular reason, namely, delay, for refusing leave to amend, and substituting (if that be the right way of dealing with the matter) our discretion for his, I do not think that leave ought to be given to amend in this case so as to enable the husband, at this late hour, to make a positive charge of adultery against his wife.

We were referred in passing to a decision, which has stood for many years, of Langton J. in B. v. B. and G.,[4] which was a case of an attempt by the respondent wife to frame a charge of adultery in answer to a petition, upon the language of the prayer, which in that case did not refer to adultery, but merely asked for discretion, which the court took as inferring that discretion would be asked for in respect of adultery. Langton J. came to the conclusion that a pleading of that kind, in answer to the petition, would not stand, and I agree with him, notwithstanding the distinction which emerges in the present case that the prayer does contain a reference to the matrimonial offence of adultery.

I refer to the language of Maugham L.J., when he was dealing with the admissibility of evidence in Bevis v. Bevis.[5] He said[6]: "It may be observed that the petitioner, the husband, in the "previous proceedings, according to the usual practice, stated in "his petition that he would ask for the exercise of the discretion "of the court in his favour, which was notice that he had been "guilty of adultery and was notice to the wife that, complying "with the direction, he had filed or lodged with the application "for the registrar's certificate a statement of the matters in "respect whereof the exercise of the discretion was prayed."

[4] [1937] P. 1; 52 T.L.R. 719; [1936] 2 All E.R. 1254.

[5] [1935] P. 86; 51 T.L.R. 291.

[6] [1935] P. 86, 97.

C. A.
1958
Clear
v.
Clear.
Hodson L.J.

The present position is that the statement which is lodged with the court is not open to inspection by the opposite party until it is put in, and all that has happened in the present case is that the husband has had notice by the wife that at some future date she was going to make an admission which she has not yet made. I do not think it could be said that in those circumstances there was material upon which the husband could have put in an answer of alleged adultery by reason merely of the existence of that prayer. However, he did have an opportunity to take his own steps to establish that charge if he thought it right so to do, and he did not avail himself of it.

We have been pressed with the argument that leave to amend in any case is futile because it is merely a question of amour propre. Once adultery is established against the wife, so far as maintenance is concerned, it does not in the least matter in whose favour the decree is pronounced. So far as that is concerned I do not think it can be quite so lightly dismissed. Although it is common nowadays for the discretion to be exercised, and indeed it is not easy to say in every case that the blame rests on the party who has been unsuccessful in the suit rather than the one who has been successful, nevertheless proceedings in these courts are still proceedings for remedies for injuries suffered. If a husband has in fact been injured by a matrimonial offence committed by the other spouse he is entitled at any rate to be heard to say that he wishes to have a judgment which embodies the declaration that he has suffered such an injury. I do not treat this application casually, as if it was a matter of mere triviality.

So far as maintenance is concerned it is, to my mind, quite clear, as Davies J. pointed out in Clueit v. Clueit,[7] that whatever happens in the result of this case, in any application for maintenance the whole of the wife's conduct will be investigated and will be determined by the registrar. I entirely agree with that. My recollection is that observations to that effect have been made in this court from time to time.

We were referred to a decision of this court in Sydenham v. Sydenham and Illingworth,[8] where Denning L.J. said, as I should have thought, sufficiently clearly[9]: "There is nothing in "the statute to say that a wife against whom a decree has been "made cannot be awarded maintenance, and there is nothing in "it about discretion being exercised 'in favour of' one side or "the other or about a 'compassionate allowance.' All it says "is that on a decree of divorce the court may award maintenance "to the wife. This includes a guilty wife as well as an innocent "one, but in awarding maintenance the court must have regard, "of course, to the conduct of the parties . . . the registrar must "do the best he can, not merely from the form of the decree but "also from the shorthand note of the judgment."

[7] Ante, p. 463.
[8] 65 T.L.R. 489; [1949] 2 All E.R. 196.
[9] [1949] 2 All E.R. 196, 198.

The record of the court, as it stands now, shows that the wife has committed adultery. It shows that she has by that action at any rate forfeited her common law right to be maintained, because her adultery was not condoned or connived at, and that she could not get any maintenance in a court of summary jurisdiction. It is only by virtue of divorce legislation that she is enabled to get maintenance at all, and in such cases the court will consider whether she ought to have maintenance. It could hardly be said here that she is entitled to nothing because she has to make a home for the child of the marriage, of whom she has the custody, and it would not presumably be right to leave her without provision, if she has to make a home for this child. To say that, because she is in fact the petitioner and because she has obtained a decree, therefore she is automatically in a stronger position than if the decree had been pronounced the other way round, where matrimonial offences are proved on both sides, seems to be wrong.

It is for the court, in practice in the first place the registrar, to consider the conduct of the parties. It is quite true that he may be limited in his investigation to facts which have been proved, matters which have been established in the court; and and in many cases it may not be open—this does not arise in this case, I think—to one party to raise matters which he had the opportunity of raising at the trial. In regard to a claim for maintenance, to say that the wife or the husband start with a handicap in the registry because of the form of decree seems to me to be wrong. The vital thing is to consider what the facts are, and it is not, I think, right to say that a court in exercising its discretion in favour of the wife must necessarily be saying that her adultery, in the ordinary sense of the word, is excusable. Discretion is exercised nowadays for a variety of reasons, and does not, I think, necessarily involve a palliation of the offence which has been committed, and in respect of which discretion is sought. I have said what I have said because of the plea which was addressed to this court by counsel to the effect that, if the husband did not get a decree in his favour, it might be a handicap in subsequent proceedings for maintenance.

One other argument was put forward by counsel for the husband. He said justice demanded that he should have a decree, which he was entitled to because the commissioner had said at the end of the case in effect that, if only the pleadings had been in order and the charge of adultery had been before him, he would have pronounced a decree to both sides. On reading the interlocutory observations of the commissioner I do not think what he said in that respect can be treated without qualification. He said, finally, that he would have to consider in pronouncing a decree who was to blame, that he would not necessarily have pronounced a decree in favour of the husband in the exercise of discretion. The matter was, therefore, left at large.

On all points the appeal fails and ought to be dismissed.

C. A.
1958
Clear
v.
Clear.

Morris L.J. I agree. When the learned commissioner had the application before him for leave to amend the answer I think he had quite a difficult decision to make. The situation then was not the same as in a civil action when a defendant asks for leave to amend so as to present a cross-claim. In a civil action such a cross-claim can in all probability be presented at some later date. Nor, I think, is it enough to say that the circumstance that the wife has had to acknowledge her misconduct and to seek to obtain the discretion of the court will form part of the matters that can be considered on a claim for maintenance and can be referred to when the conduct of the parties is borne in mind. Nor is it sufficient answer to the application to say that the circumstance that the wife has to make her admission can be considered on any question as to costs. The point of view of the husband cannot be dismissed as being a manifestation of amour propre. He may feel that he desires to have on the record his complaint in regard to what he considers to have been grievous matrimonial misconduct on the part of his spouse. However, making allowance for all those considerations, I am not prepared to say that in this case the commissioner came to a wrong conclusion, and that he ought to have exercised his discretion in a different way.

I agree that the appeal fails.

Pearce L.J. I also agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Marcy & Co.; Shield & Son.

A. W. G.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.]

C. C. A.
1958
Mar. 10, 24; April 1.

Lord Goddard C.J., Streatfeild, Slade, Donovan and Havers JJ.

* REGINA v. MATHESON.

Criminal Law—Murder—Diminished responsibility—Standard of proof—Medical evidence as to state of mind—Unchallenged medical evidence that abnormality such as substantially to impair mental responsibility—No evidence to contrary—Verdict of murder—Whether in accordance with evidence—Homicide Act, 1957 (5 & 6 Eliz. 2, c. 11), s. 2.

Criminal Law—Murder—Diminished responsibility—Practice—Plea of guilty to manslaughter not to be accepted—Practice to be followed when defence ask for verdict of manslaughter on ground of diminished responsibility and some other ground.

The appellant, a confirmed practising sodomite, killed a boy, cut the body in half, disembowelled it packing the intestines in a suitcase, hid the remains, sent anonymous postcards to the boy's mother indicative of a desire to torture her, and gave himself up to the police.

At the trial of the appellant for capital murder, the defence of diminished responsibility under section 2 (1) of the Homicide Act.

1957,[1] was raised. Three doctors who gave evidence on behalf of the appellant were of the unanimous opinion that he was suffering from such an abnormality of mind (due to arrested or retarded development) as substantially to impair his mental responsibility; the prosecution did not challenge that opinion or call evidence in rebuttal; nevertheless the jury convicted of capital murder. On appeal against conviction on the ground, inter alia, that the verdict, in not giving effect to the defence of diminished responsibility, was unreasonable and not supported by the evidence:—

Held, that as there was unchallenged evidence that the appellant was within the provisions of section 2 of the Act, and no evidence that he was not, the verdict was not supported by the evidence, and must be set aside and a verdict of manslaughter substituted.

Although there was evidence of premeditation, an abnormal mind is as capable of forming an intention and desire to kill as one that is normal. Nor was the view of the doctors displaced by the postcards—a desire to torture the mother was a sign of abnormality, as was the revolting nature of the crime.

Per curiam. A plea of guilty to manslaughter on the ground of diminished responsibility should not be accepted; the issue must be left to the jury as it must be if the defence is one of insanity. If, on an indictment for murder, the defence ask for a verdict of manslaughter on the ground of diminished responsibility and also on some other ground such as provocation, and the jury return a verdict of manslaughter, the judge may, and generally should, then ask them whether their verdict is based on diminished responsibility or on the other ground or on both.

APPEAL against conviction.

The appellant, Albert Edward Matheson, was convicted at Durham Assizes before Finnemore J. of the capital murder of Gordon Lockhart, a boy aged 15. The case for the prosecution was that the appellant killed the boy by hitting him on the head with a bottle filled with water and then with a claw hammer, and that the crime was committed in the course or furtherance of theft. The facts are fully stated in the judgment.

At the trial, the defences put forward were: (1) that the appellant was suffering from diminished responsibility within the meaning of section 2 of the Homicide Act, 1957, and (2) that the murder was not in the course or furtherance of theft, so that, if the defence of diminished responsibility was not accepted, it was not capital murder.

The appellant appealed against his conviction on the grounds, inter alia, that the verdict of the jury could not be supported by the evidence either on the issue of diminished responsibility or on the issue whether the killing was committed in the course of furtherance of theft. On the issue of diminished responsibility (which was the only point considered on the appeal) it was submitted that the only evidence put forward was that of three

[1] Homicide Act, 1957, s. 2: "(1) "Where a person kills or is a party "to the killing of another, he shall "not be convicted of murder if he "was suffering from such abnormality "of mind (whether arising from a "condition of arrested or retarded "development of mind or any in-"herent causes or induced by disease "or injury) as substantially impaired "his mental responsibility for his "acts and omissions in doing or "being a party to the killing."

C. C. A.
1958
Regina
v.
Matheson.

doctors, all of whom were agreed in the appellant's favour that he was suffering from such abnormality of mind (arising from a condition of arrested or retarded development of mind) as substantially impaired his mental responsibility for his acts in doing the killing; that all three doctors, the senior medical officer at H.M. Prison, Durham, and two consultant psychiatrists, agreed that the appellant was a psychopathic personality and was feeble-minded with a mental age of less than 10 years; and that there was no evidence to the contrary.

The appeal was first heard on March 10 before Streatfeild, Slade and Havers JJ., but at the conclusion of the argument on the issue of diminished responsibility it was adjourned for hearing by a court of five judges. At the rehearing on March 24, a court of five judges, at the conclusion of the argument on diminished responsibility, allowed the appeal, substituted a verdict of manslaughter for that of murder and a sentence of 20 years' imprisonment for the capital sentence. The court reserved the reasons for its decision.

George Waller Q.C. and Peter Taylor for the appellant.
P. Stanley-Price Q.C. and R. R. Rawden-Smith for the Crown.

The following cases were cited in argument: Rex v. Rivett [2]; Reg. v. Spriggs.[3]

Cur. adv. vult.

April 1. Lord Goddard C.J. read the following judgment of the court: The appellant was convicted at the last Durham Assizes before Finnemore J. of the capital murder of a boy aged 15 named Gordon Lockhart. The defence was (1) that in killing the boy the appellant was suffering from diminished responsibility as defined by section 2 of the Homicide Act, 1957, and was accordingly guilty not of murder but of manslaughter; (2) that the murder was not in the course or furtherance of theft so that, if the defence of diminished responsibility was not accepted, the murder was not capital. The court at the close of the argument allowed the appeal on the first ground, and substituted a verdict of manslaughter for that of murder. The second ground, therefore, need not be considered, and the court gives no decision upon it. We now proceed to give our reasons for allowing the appeal on the first ground.

The murder was of the most horrible description, so revolting as to be almost beyond belief. The appellant, who is 52 years of age, was a confirmed practising sodomite, and there was evidence of some association before the murder between him and the boy. The appellant worked as a handyman at St. James' Boxing Hall in Newcastle, and on November 18, 1957, the boy went to a new job at a cinema, which he left about 4.30 p.m.,

[2] (1950) 34 Cr.App.R. 87.

[3] [1958] 2 W.L.R. 162; [1958] 1 All E.R. 300.

having previously collected wages due to him from a previous employer. He did not arrive home and was not again seen alive. Two days later his mother received an anonymous postcard saying the boy had gone to London as a woman was after him for money. A second postcard was received by her the next day saying that Gordon was living in London with prostitutes, making money like them, and on November 22 a third was received saying "Gordon is dead." All these three cards were written by the appellant. On the evening of November 22 the police went to the boxing hall and found the boy's body cut in half and stowed in a sump under the hall; it had been disembowelled and the intestines packed into a suitcase. The appellant also wrote anonymously to the Chief Constable of Newcastle saying the body was in the Tyne in sacks, and accusing the boy of sodomy. The same day that this letter was received the appellant gave himself up to the police in Glasgow and described how he had killed the boy. All that need be said with regard to his confession is that he described how he had killed the boy by smashing his head, first with a glass bottle which he had filled with water to make it heavier, and then beating it with a claw hammer. This was confirmed by the post-mortem. His other statements alleged that the boy was demanding £2 from him as the price of buggery and as he, the appellant, was only willing to pay £1 he killed him. There is, of course, only the appellant's word for this accusation. He described how the bottle broke and that he threw the pieces to a place where the police found them, and they found the broken bottle with newspaper packed round the neck so that, if it broke, it would not cut the hand that was holding it. He afterwards made further statements saying that he knew the boy would have his week's pay on him, and that was why he killed him, but we need not consider this part of the confession as it would only be material if the court had to consider whether the murder was to be regarded as one in furtherance or in course of theft.

The only issue dealt with on the appeal was that of diminished responsibility; none of the facts were disputed by the appellant. Three medical men were called by the defence, Dr. Pickering, the Senior Medical Officer of Durham Gaol; Dr. Orton, Consultant Psychiatrist at the Newcastle General Hospital, and Dr. Cuthbert, Physician Superintendent at St. Luke's Hospital, Newcastle; all three of experience in matters relating to mental health. Cross-examination was directed only to the elucidation of some points in their evidence, but the prosecution did not challenge the opinions they had formed and all three had personally examined the appellant. They all agreed that he was not insane within the M'Naghten Rules. Both Dr. Pickering and Dr. Cuthbert said that his mental development was that of a boy of 10. Dr. Orton considered he was certifiable under the Mental Deficiency Acts, 1913–38, though not under the Lunacy and Mental Treatment Acts, 1890–1930. They were all satisfied that his mind was so

C. C. A.
1958
Regina
v.
Matheson.

abnormal as substantially to impair his mental responsibility. They did not merely repeat the words of the section but gave the reasons which led them to form this opinion. Thus, Dr. Pickering said the appellant's intelligence, measured by certain tests recognized for this purpose was not more than 73, while that of a normal or average man would be 100, and that his mental condition was due to arrested or retarded development. Dr. Orton called attention to the records which showed the man had on many occasions swallowed razor blades and inserted nails in his urethra and, as we have said, was prepared to certify him under the Mental Deficiency Act. Dr. Cuthbert agreed that his mental development was rather less than what one expects in a child of 10 and that he suffered from retarded development. It is unnecessary to set out their evidence in any greater detail. It was clearly enough to shift the burden of proof thrown on the defence by the section yet no medical evidence was given by the prosecution in rebuttal.

What then were the facts or circumstances which would justify a jury in coming to a conclusion contrary to the unchallenged evidence of these gentlemen? While it has often been emphasized, and we would repeat, that the decision in these cases, as in those in which insanity is pleaded, is for the jury and not for doctors, the verdict must be founded on evidence. If there are facts which would entitle a jury to reject or differ from the opinions of the medical men, this court would not, and indeed could not, disturb their verdict, but if the doctors' evidence is unchallenged and there is no other on this issue, a verdict contrary to their opinion would not be "a true verdict in accordance with the evidence." Here it is said there was evidence of premeditation and undoubtedly there was, but an abnormal mind is as capable of forming an intention and desire to kill as one that is normal; it is just what an abnormal mind might do. A desire to kill is quite common in cases of insanity. We cannot see that the anonymous letters displace the view that the man's mind was abnormal, or that his responsibility was substantially impaired. They would appear indicative rather of a desire to torture the mother, again a sign of abnormality. The attempts at self-mutilation in a most painful manner are surely acts of a man on the border of insanity and not of a rational person. The revolting nature of the crime itself would cause most people to say it was the work of a maniac resembling, as it did, the murders of some 70 years ago which terrorised the East End of London and were known as the Ripper murders. We can well understand that a jury, faced with such an appalling crime committed by a sodomite, whether from jealousy or because his victim would no longer pander to his vice, would think, as would many, that such a creature ought not to live, and that consequently a verdict involving the capital sentence was the only one appropriate. But we have to bear in mind that Parliament has altered the law and decreed that if a killing is committed by a person whose abnormal mind has seriously diminished his responsibility the verdict is to be manslaughter and not murder. If, then, there is unchallenged evidence that there is abnormality of mind and consequent substantial impairment of mental responsibility, and no facts or circumstances appear that can displace or throw doubt on that evidence, it seems to the court that we are bound to say that a verdict of murder is unsupported by the evidence. We prefer to rely on those words of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, rather than on the word "unreasonable." The Act directs the court to allow an appeal if they think that the verdict of the jury should be set aside on the ground that it is unreasonable or cannot be supported having regard to the evidence. Having regard to what we think must have affected the jury or any body of ordinary minded citizens, we should not care to say their verdict was unreasonable, though we feel bound to say it was not supported by the evidence. The fact is there was unchallenged evidence that this man was within the provisions of section 2 of the Homicide Act, 1957, and no evidence that he was not. This decision, therefore, in no way departs from what has been said in other cases, that the decision is for the jury and not for the doctors; it only emphasizes that a verdict must be supported by evidence. If there is evidence and a proper direction, this court will not usurp the function of the jury, unless, indeed, there is evidence so overwhelming that the court comes to the conclusion that though it might be said there was some evidence the other way, the verdict would amount to a miscarriage of justice. We base our decision on the ground that the evidence in this particular case did not support the conviction. But we recognize that there may be cases where, on the issue under section 2 of the Homicide Act, 1957, evidence of the conduct of the accused before, at the time of, and after the killing, may be relevant considerations for the jury in determining whether the accused has discharged the onus of proving such abnormality of mind as substantially to impair his mental responsibility for his acts.

Before parting with the case, this is a convenient opportunity for laying down a rule of practice in cases where a defence of diminished responsibility is raised. The judges of this court have resolved that a plea of Guilty to manslaughter on this ground should not be accepted, though it seems it may be in Scotland—Kirkwood v. Lord Advocate.[1] This issue must be left to the jury, just as the issue must be if the defence is insanity. It may happen that on an indictment for murder the defence may ask for a verdict of manslaughter on the ground of diminished responsibility and also on some other ground such as provocation. If [1] 1939 S.C.(J.) 36.

C. C. A.
1958
Regina
v.
Matheson.

the jury return a verdict of manslaughter the judge may, and generally should, then ask them whether their verdict is based on diminished responsibility or on the other ground or on both.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Registrar, Court of Criminal Appeal; Director of Public Prosecutions.

E. M. W.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

1958
Feb. 24, 25, 26; Mar. 10.
Sachs J.

* BURCH v. BURCH.

Husband and Wife—Condonation—"Knowledge" of adultery—Ingrained suspicion—Wrong man suspected of adultery—Continuance of conjugal cohabitation—Whether with requisite knowledge of all material facts.

From, at the latest, March, 1950, a husband, without being aware of any facts on which a reasonable husband could found a belief in his wife's adultery, nourished a convinced belief that the wife had committed adultery in or about March, 1945, with a United States soldier with whom she had associated, and that a child which, in fact, had been conceived prior to that association, was the result of the suspected adultery. The husband continued to live with the wife in all respects as husband and wife except that in 1952 sexual intercourse between the parties ceased. The wife confessed that she had committed one act of adultery in or about January, 1945, with a Canadian airman. The husband consulted a solicitor and pursued inquiries as to the wife's confession, and in August, 1956, he left the matrimonial home, filing a petition seeking a divorce on the ground of the wife's admitted adultery. The wife alleged that the adultery had been condoned:—

Held, (1) that, as the case was clearly not one in which the husband had continued in full matrimonial cohabitation with the wife not caring whether his suspicions as to her adultery were true or false, it was essential to consider whether, at the relevant period, he had the knowledge of the wife's offence requisite to render such cohabitation condonation of the offence.

Keats v. Keats and Montezuma (1859) 1 Sw. & Tr. 334 considered.

(2) That, unless a husband's belief in his wife's adultery was founded on a reasonable deduction from ascertained facts it did not constitute that knowledge of the offence which was a prerequisite of condonation.

D'Aguilar v. D'Aguilar (1794) 1 Hag.Ecc. 773 and Allen v. Allen [1951] W.N. 322; [1951] 1 All E.R. 724 applied.

(3) That the husband's convinced belief that the wife had committed adultery with a United States soldier had been based on mere suspicion and had, therefore, been unreasonable.

(4) That facts which a wife knew would affect her husband's mind on the question of forgiveness and which were not disclosed to him were material to the knowledge required for condonation.

Accordingly, the fact that the wife was associating with the Canadian airman as well as with the United States soldier, and that this was not known to the husband, provided a further reason for holding that the husband had not the knowledge requisite to condone her offence.

DEFENDED PETITION.

The marriage between the parties was a very happy one from the time it took place in 1938 until January, 1945, there being at that time one child, a little girl. Early that month the husband, then a regular serving soldier, sailed for Burma, having previously had an embarkation leave which officially commenced on December 22, 1944, and ended on January 4, 1945. He left his home either about that date or soon afterwards. Very shortly after that date the wife committed one act of adultery with a Canadian airman.

By February, 1945, the wife was aware that she was pregnant, having, however, first had, after the husband was last at home, a period of which she told him, but which was a false period as she also informed him. Of the many letters written by the wife to her husband in the first three months of 1945, the first that survived was a letter dated March 22, 1945, which reached the husband in Burma. In it she referred both to her pregnancy, of which she had already written in February, and to her having been in association with a United States soldier during the days immediately preceding the writing of the letter.

In tenor the letter was that of a wife having a baby by a husband whom she loved, and her evidence at the hearing of the divorce suit that at that time she had no doubts but that the child was his was accepted by the court, as also was so much of the husband's evidence as stated that, at the moment of receipt of the letter, he, too, although a bit surprised at the unintended pregnancy, accepted the baby as being his. The first child of the marriage was also the result of an unintended pregnancy. The husband, however, was distressed by the fact that the wife had been going about with a United States soldier, for they were anathema to him; he was doubly distressed as he thought that advantage of the wife's condition of pregnancy might have been taken by that soldier to have sexual intercourse with her, using the phrase in his evidence: "a woman cannot become "pregnant twice."

After receiving that letter the husband wrote a bitter reply and, though the later correspondence appears to show that matters before long got onto an even keel, yet some bitterness remained in his heart. In his view his wife had let him down by having thus associated with a United States soldier; this fact he seemed never to get over. Later, by confused and erroneous thinking, including some wholly unfounded idea that the child was born considerably later than the wife had originally wished him to believe probable, he began to question matters which he had previously and rightly accepted as true and to wonder if the

1958

Burch
v.
Burch.

pregnancy was not due to his wife's association with the United States soldier. In fact the child, a son, was born on October 12, 1945, somewhere between 278 and 283 days after the end of the husband's last leave. The child weighed 10 lbs. at birth, was certainly not premature, and arrived perhaps a week after its due date. The husband, at the trial, expressly disclaimed any intention of ever seeking to try and bastardize the child.

In February, 1946, the husband returned to England. He resumed married life, including sexual intercourse with his wife, without making any reference to the doubts that had crossed his mind. He was, however, of a suspicious nature and indeed already before 1945 had from time to time wrongly felt jealous of other men. In 1947, and again in 1949, unfounded suspicions of his wife on account of matters nothing to do with the birth of the child stirred his mind. That in turn revived his clouded thoughts about the child's birth. At some stage this husband, whose thoughts had, apparently, never fully recovered from the effects of the letter of March 22, 1945—in the sense that the ideas engendered by it returned intermittently to his mind—managed to convince himself that the child was not his own son. He reached this conviction despite having no facts emanating either from his wife or from any other source on which he could reasonably found that belief, and without ever having heard of the Canadian airman or of having any cause for complaint of his wife's conduct in January, 1944. The date at which he reached that state of mind could not be precisely fixed, but the court found that it was probably reached in 1947 or 1948 and at very latest by March, 1950. Having reached that state of mind he from time to time—not frequently—threw out remarks to his wife such as "I am certain the child is not mine." Later he made other remarks which were intended to convey the same impression to his wife. Sexual intercourse, however, continued, but with lessening frequency, and it continued until at any rate 1952. Between the date of the cessation of sexual intercourse and April, 1956, the wife continued, in all other respects, in her position in the matrimonial home.

About April, 1956, the wife discovered that the husband had formed an undue association, which, however, was not adulterous, with a girl whom he met in the course of serving in the Royal Auxiliary Air Force, which he had then joined. In fact the association had started about 1953. She tackled her husband about this and embarked on a conversation with a view to trying to keep the marriage together. In the course of this conversation she on her side came to confess her adultery with the Canadian airman 11 years before. The husband, still in undue association with the other girl, went immediately to a solicitor with a view to seeking a divorce. The husband and wife remained together in the same house until August, 1956, when the husband, who had been making further inquiries in order to check the confession made by the wife, left. By his petition dated August 21, 1956, he sought a decree of divorce on the ground of the wife's adultery in January, 1945. The wife, by her answer, admitted the adultery but alleged that it had been condoned by the husband.

The matter came on for hearing in July, 1957, at Winchester Assizes, when Sachs J., holding that the wife's evidence was to be preferred to that of the husband, found the adultery proved and adjourned the matter for further argument by the Queen's Proctor on the question of condonation.

Guy Willett for the husband.
Robert Hughes for the wife.
Roger Ormrod for the Queen's Proctor.

The following cases were cited in argument in addition to those referred to in the judgment: Wells v. Wells [1]; Roberts v. Roberts and Temple [2]; Marczuk v. Marczuk [3]; Fearn v. Fearn [4]; Peacock v. Peacock [5]; Beeby v. Beeby [6]; Elwes v. Elwes [7]; Collins v. Collins [8]; Wilmot v. Wilmot and Martin [9]; Cook v. Cook [10]; Baguley v. Baguley [11]; Everitt v. Everitt [12]; Forbes v. Forbes [13]; Beer v. Beer [14]; Hartley v. Hartley [15]; Elliott v. Elliott [16]; Crewe v. Crewe [17]; Preston-Jones v. Preston-Jones.[18]

Cur. adv. vult.

SACHS J., reading his judgment, said that the case raised in an acute form some questions on the issue of condonation, and, referring to the facts material to that issue and to the wife's confession as to the isolated, unpremeditated and unfortunate incident of adultery, continued: It was in this fashion that the husband became aware of this single lapse many years earlier of one who had both before and since been a good and loving wife and who, at all times, had been a good mother to both children. Whatever one may think of a man for seeking a decree against the above background, he is entitled to it unless the court either finds that he condoned the adultery or is not satisfied that he did not condone it.

[1] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1390; [1954] 3 All E.R. 491.
[2] (1917) 33 T.L.R. 333.
[3] [1956] P. 217; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 849; [1956] 1 All E.R. 657, C.A.; reversing [1956] 2 W.L.R. 1; [1955] 3 All E.R. 158.
[4] [1948] P. 241; 64 T.L.R. 218; [1948] 1 All E.R. 459.
[5] (1858) 1 Sw. & Tr. 183.
[6] (1799) 1 Hag.Ecc. 789.
[7] (1794) 1 Hag.Con. 269.
[8] (1884) 9 App.Cas. 205.
[9] (1948) 64 T.L.R. 460; [1948] 2 All E.R. 123.
[10] (1949) 65 T.L.R. 175; [1949] 1 All E.R. 384.
[11] The Times, Oct. 10, 1957.
[12] [1949] P. 374; [1949] 1 All E.R. 908.
[13] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1526; [1954] 3 All E.R. 461.
[14] [1948] P. 10; 63 T.L.R. 606; [1947] 2 All E.R. 711.
[15] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 384; [1955] 1 All E.R. 625.
[16] [1956] P. 160; [1956] 1 All E.R. 122.
[17] (1800) 3 Hag.Ecc. 123.
[18] [1951] A.C. 391; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 8; [1951] 1 All E.R. 124.

1958

Burch
v.
Burch.

Sachs J.

As regards condonation, the first period to be dealt with is that between February, 1946, and the date of the confession. Having regard to the arguments adduced on this issue, it is now convenient to summarize certain conclusions of fact, or in some instances, mixed fact and law, reached on the evidence before me.

During the above period: 1. The husband had no evidence upon which he could reasonably institute proceedings for divorce. 2. The husband had no reasonable grounds deriving from the wife's conduct for believing his wife had committed adultery—if the tests to be applied are the same as in the Glenister v. Glenister [1] line of cases. (In parenthesis it is to be noted that in Wood v. Wood [2] it was held that a 346 day gestation did not, of itself, afford such a ground, and in Jones v. Jones [3] emphasis was laid on the degree of proof needed to establish such a belief.) 3. The husband had no reasonable grounds for such a belief derived from any other source. 4. On no view of the facts (not even if the husband's evidence were accepted), could any proceedings ever have been reasonably instituted with a view to establishing that the child was not legitimate. (This view was accepted by all counsel concerned.) 5. The husband's suspicions, which gradually crystallized into convinced belief, related to the United States soldier and not to the Canadian airman. 6. He never forgave his wife (in the conversational meaning of "forgiveness") for her association with that soldier. Having assessed the husband as best I could after watching him in the witness-box, my finding is that upon and after convincing himself of his wife's guilt his attitude was in effect: "As I have no real "evidence, there is nothing I can do: I must carry on as if she "was not guilty." 7. Upon and at all times after convincing himself, he would, in all probability, have sought a divorce if he had secured evidence of his wife's guilt, and the wife probably feared that such was the case. 8. The husband never asked the wife a direct question as to her guilt; the wife never told a direct lie about it. Her replies to any remarks about the child took shapes such as: "If you know so much and suspect so much, "why did you come back?" (It is to be noted as regards all material times, i.e., before and immediately after the husband reached his convinced belief, the wife on being asked "Did you "commit adultery with that United States soldier?" or "Is "the child our son?" would in answering "No" and "Yes" respectively have stated what she believed to be true.)

Mr. Hughes, supported in this by Mr. Ormrod, submitted that in that state of affairs the husband had condoned the wife's guilty act. Their main submissions were that sexual intercourse with the wife, after being convinced of her guilt, constituted condonation with knowledge of that guilt; that the husband's state of mind in relation to foreigners was thus immaterial; and that because his concern related to the conception of the child it did not matter that the adultery was with a man different from the one he had in mind. Mr. Willett contended that there was no condonation, submitting, inter alia, that, in the absence of forgiveness in the conversational sense, there can be no condonation unless there is knowledge founded on appropriate evidence, and that in any event it did matter that the adultery was with someone other than the United States soldier.

[1] [1945] P. 30; [1945] 1 All E.R. 513.

[2] [1947] P. 103; 63 T.L.R. 450; [1947] 2 All E.R. 95.

[3] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 867; [1953] 2 All E.R. 345.

Mr. Ormrod helpfully cited a considerable number of authorities bearing on the problems raised by the above conclusions. Save in one set of circumstances, to which I will later refer, "knowledge" of the wife's offence is stated in every case to be essential before a husband can condone. The phrases used as to the extent of the requisite knowledge vary a little. To take the more modern authorities, one finds "with full knowledge of "all the circumstances of the particular offence forgiven," Bernstein v. Bernstein, per Lopes L.J.[4]; "substantially aware "of the matrimonial sin committed," Cramp v. Cramp and Freeman, per McCardie J.[5]; "knowledge of the wife's offence," Henderson v. Henderson and Crellin, per Viscount Simon L.C.[6]; "full knowledge of all material facts," Tilley v. Tilley, Denning L.J.[7]; but the necessity of such knowledge is emphasized.

The exception where no "knowledge" is required is that set out in the charge to the jury in the first case in which condonation was discussed after the passing of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857. In Keats v. Keats and Montezuma[8] the Judge Ordinary stated[9]: ". . . a man may condone whether he knows of the "offence or not, in this way: he may say, 'I have heard stories "'about my wife. A and B have told me she has committed "'adultery. I can hardly believe it. I am in doubt about it; "'but whether guilty or not, I will take her back; she shall be "'restored to my bed.' That would be a condonation without "actual knowledge; and I think if after this he took her to his "bed again, he could not afterwards, on acquiring more certain "knowledge, revive the charge, as to which he had himself said, "'I care not whether it is true or false; I do not know whether "'it is true or not; but be it one or be it the other, I would "'equally take her back to my bed.'" The above passage, so far as counsel before me were aware, has never been criticized, and indeed in Lowther v. Lowther[10] it was expressly approved.

It follows in the present case that if condonation is to be affirmatively established it must be shown either that the husband had "knowledge" of the wife's offence before the date of the confession or, alternatively, that the husband's attitude was

[4] [1893] P. 292, 303; 9 T.L.R. 639.
[5] [1920] P. 158, 163; 36 T.L.R. 333.
[6] [1944] A.C. 49, 52; 60 T.L.R. 113; [1944] 1 All E.R. 44.
[7] [1949] P. 240, 261; 65 T.L.R. 211; [1948] 2 All E.R. 1113.
[8] (1859) 1 Sw. & Tr. 334.
[9] Ibid. 346.
[10] Unreported, Feb. 5, 1945.

1958

Burch
v.
Burch.

Sachs J.

that referred to in the above-cited passage of the charge to the jury in Keats' case.[11] In the former event the fact that there was sexual intercourse at material times renders unnecessary any investigation into, or findings as to, the husband's state of mind or as to what he said: the fact that there was sexual intercourse amounts to "clear proof that the husband has carried forgiveness "into effect" (Henderson v. Henderson and Crellin[12]), and the husband is precluded from denying that there was forgiveness in the special meaning (see Cramp v. Cramp and Freeman[13]) of that word in relation to condonation. In the second event questions arise as to the husband's words and state of mind at the material time.

Accordingly, the first question is whether this husband had at any time before the wife's confession the requisite knowledge of her offence. That phrase seems in the above-cited authorities to have been used compendiously to cover a number of constituent elements. It is necessary in each case to consider upon what foundation rests the alleged knowledge, whether the spouse believes (or must be taken to believe) that which is alleged to be known, and what are the material facts which must be shown to be known.

As regards the foundation needed for the knowledge, it has been argued on behalf of the wife that a firm conclusion reached in the absence of what a reasonable man regards as evidence constitutes knowledge within the meaning of the authorities. For the husband it was asserted that the possession of credible evidence, whether coming from the wife or from third parties, is an essential element of such knowledge.

As a matter of first impression it seems to me that a conclusion based on intuition, delusion, jealous obsession, or any other method than reasonable deduction from ascertained facts, does not constitute knowledge. Ingrained suspicion does not become knowledge merely because the man who holds it becomes convinced of its truth without proper supporting evidence.

I turn next to the special problems that arise in relation to the word "knowledge" in connexion with condonation, to see if there is any reason for that first impression to be displaced. In Glenister v. Glenister Lord Merriman P. draws attention[14] to the risks which a husband might incur if he was not entitled for the time being to leave his wife when once he had reasonable grounds for believing she had committed adultery. Here one has the converse case and must take into account the risks and difficulties which a husband might incurr if, at a time when he has no reasonable grounds for such a belief, he were held to be bound either to leave his wife or forfeit for ever his right to relief.

In relation to the problems arising in the Glenister v. Glenister[15] line of cases Lord Evershed M.R. in Allen v. Allen

[11] (1859) 1 Sw. & Tr. 334, 346.
[12] [1944] A.C. 49, 52.
[13] [1920] P. 158, 169.
[14] [1945] P. 30, 38.
[15] Ibid. 30.

said [16] that if a man alleges that he bona fide and reasonably believes his wife to be an adulteress, he must (save perhaps in exceptional cases) be regarded as stating: "I say and allege that "the evidence and materials in my possession are such that on "them a court should and would find that adultery has been "committed." The same approach was made to the parallel problems that arise in respect of condonation by no less an authority than Sir William Scott (Lord Stowell) in D'Aguilar v. D'Aguilar,[17] where he said [18] "it is not shown that she knew it "so that she could legally prove it." There thus seems nothing to displace and much to confirm the above impression.

Condonation being an absolute bar to a husband's right on securing evidence to be granted relief, it is of course obvious that a court would not lightly hold the bar to have been applied at a moment when from a practical angle, having regard to the absence of evidence, he neither has that right nor has any wish to forgo it. It is not, however, in the present case, necessary to decide whether, in order to impute knowledge to a spouse, it must of necessity always be shown that he or she had evidence fit to be laid before a court. Here the husband was not aware of any facts on which a reasonable husband could ground a belief in his wife's adultery, and it seems to me that whilst belief is generally an essential ingredient in the knowledge required for condonation (Ellis v. Ellis and Smith [19]), belief of itself does not constitute such knowledge. Mere suspicion that grows to conviction is no different from suspicion that does not lead to that result. For these reasons the husband cannot be held to have had knowledge of his wife's adultery before the confession.

There is a further reason why this husband cannot be held to have had the requisite knowledge. The facts which he believed did not constitute all the material facts. What facts are material —or what are the facts of which the spouse must be "substan- "tially aware"—must necessarily depend on the circumstances of the particular case and are not always easy to determine. Prima facie, any fact is material which would be so taken by a reasonable man. In addition any fact is material which the offending party knows would be so regarded by the innocent spouse.

At one stage of the argument I was attracted to Mr. Ormrod's submission that the only thing that this husband was really concerned with was that there had been adultery at a time when the conception of the child might have been affected; that his belief thus related to the essence of the offence; that, accordingly, it was immaterial that the adultery was with a Canadian airman and not the United States soldier; and that in this way there could be overcome the obvious difficulty—well exemplified in terms of pleading—of asserting that mistaken awareness of adultery with A can constitute condonation of adultery with B.

[16] [1951] 1 All E.R. 724, 731.
[17] (1794) 1 Hag.Ecc. 773.
[18] Ibid. 786.
[19] (1865) 4 Sw. & Tr. 154.

1958

Burch
v.
Burch.

Sachs J.

On further consideration, however, I have been persuaded by the argument of Mr. Willett, whose submissions on the issue of condonation were consistently compact and helpful, that for this husband there would, as his wife well knew, have been a considerably added distress in finding that there had been two men in her life at that period—and not merely the one of whom she had told him. This added distress would undoubtedly have weighed in the scales with him, even if he could at the vital moment have approached the matter on the footing that the association with the United States soldier was innocent. Accordingly, I hold the identity of the adulterer was material, and would only add that I very much doubt whether the obvious difficulty to which I have above referred is overcome by Mr. Ormrod's argument, attractive though it may have been.

It is proper to record that in the course of argument at the Bar various submissions were made as to what the husband and wife respectively should have done as regards asking for and giving information in the period before the husband became convinced of his wife's adultery. Mr. Ormrod, in particular, founded much upon moves which he argued the husband should have made. Matrimonial life, however, is not a game of chess; it is an infinitely variable compound of human relations. I for one feel neither competent to formulate nor desirous of formulating rules as to how spouses should conduct themselves in circumstances such as those which here arose. The difficulties in such situations are always great and here the interests of the child were an important factor which could never be left out of account. Some of the difficulties that can arise are mentioned in the judgment of Richards J. in Donnithorne v. Donnithorne.[20] There he refers [21] to the risks which are run by a husband, who suspects his wife, of "insulting a perfectly innocent wife by a "question which she might take as implying an accusation or of "making surreptitious inquiries, the very fact of making which "might well embitter his mind, with the probable result of per-"manent unhappiness." Those were not perhaps the particular difficulties which faced the husband in this case, but that merely serves to illustrate the hazards of attempting to formulate rules.

It being thus established that before the wife's confession the husband had no knowledge of her guilt, she cannot assert that there was condonation before that date unless it can be shown that this was one of those cases in which in effect the husband said: "I care not whether it is true or false; I do not know "whether it is true or not; but be it one or be it the other, I "would equally take her back to my bed."

Once, however, I had indicated the probability that my findings as to the husband's state of mind would be those mentioned earlier in this judgment, the contention that the present case could be brought within the above passage in the Judge Ordinary's charge [22] was only faintly pressed.

[20] (1930) S.A.S.R. 182. [21] Ibid. 185.

One important respect in which the position of a husband who has knowledge of his wife's offence differs from that of one who has suspicion short of such knowledge is as follows. The former upon having sexual intercourse with his wife must be held, and upon otherwise reinstating her will normally be held, to be precluded from denying that he has forgiven her within the meaning of that word earlier indicated. In the case of the latter he cannot be held to have thus forgiven her unless the evidence of what he said or what he led his wife to believe warrants such a conclusion. (It may also be that proof of his intention aliunde would suffice—but that does not arise here.)

Suffice it accordingly to say that the husband neither stated nor felt that he "did not care": the wife was never led to believe he did not care—indeed she knew that he did care: and there was thus no express or implied foregiveness—either in the conversational sense or within the special meaning of that word. There was thus no condonation of the type under consideration.

There next falls to be considered the period between the confession and the time the husband left the matrimonial home. It was neither pleaded nor argued at Winchester that there had been such condonation, but Mr. Ormrod properly called attention to this question.

Where the parties remain, without having sexual intercourse, in the same matrimonial home after the husband has gained knowledge of his wife's guilt, the question whether condonation is to be inferred from continuance under the same roof is in essence a question of fact (cf. Mackrell v. Mackrell [23]): and cases were cited which fell on either side of the line on their particular circumstances. Immediately a husband learns the truth from his wife she is notionally deposed from her matrimonial position. There then follows that which, for lack of a better name, may be called a suspense period. During that period the husband has time to consider the position. That period may be terminated in favour of the wife either by some explicit words or conduct of his which constitutes condonation, or by his letting things run on so long that the day comes when the court infers that the wife has been reinstated. Alternatively if the husband leaves home before either of the above events, the court may be satisfied that there was no condonation.

Having regard to the strained relations that existed between this husband and his wife at the material times, to the fact that during the period he went to solicitors and made certain inquiries before he left, and to the other factors which emerged in evidence, I am satisfied that there was no condonation after the confession.

It follows that, as it has been affirmatively shown that the husband did not condone his wife's adultery either before or after the confession, his petition must succeed.

[22] (1859) 1 Sw. & Tr. 334, 346. [23] [1948] 2 All E.R. 858.

1958

Burch
v.
Burch.

Sachs J.

If the upshot of the present case reflects somewhat starkly the aphorism of McCardie J. that: "By the matrimonial law of "this country the offence of every married person is recorded on "tablets which do not perish" (Cramp v. Cramp and Freeman [24]) the remedy might lie in the legislature allowing some discretion as to whether those rare petitioners, who come to the courts on discovering after so many years an old offence, shall be granted a decree.

There remains to be mentioned the supplemental petition. This was filed at the end of October, 1957, just at the time when there would normally have been heard the argument for which this cause was adjourned from the Winchester Assizes. The matters in it have nothing to do with the issues I have so far referred to and rest on events alleged to have occurred after the evidence at Winchester was concluded. Neither the application to file this supplemental petition nor the order giving leave for it to be filed was brought to my notice till recently, when I caused a summons for further directions to be issued. It then appeared that it was not as universally known, as one would have thought, that once, at assizes, a judge has been seized of a cause to the extent of hearing evidence, every application affecting the pleadings or the conduct of the trial ought, save in really exceptional circumstances, to be made to or referred to that judge: and for this reason I mention the matter. Had the application come before me I would have rejected it: as it was the trial of the issues raised by the supplemental petition were ordered to be deferred until those raised by the original petition had been disposed of.

In the circumstances as they now exist it seems that the order, subject to any further argument as to its form, should be, first, that a decree nisi is granted on the original petition, and secondly, that the supplemental petition be either permanently stayed or alternatively dismissed—the order to dismiss not to be drawn up for three months; each party to have liberty to apply in that period.

Decree nisi.

Solicitors: Blundell, Baker & Co. for Clement J. Collard, Bournemouth; Batchelor, Fry, Coulson & Burder for F. J. M. Gale & Co., Bournemouth; The Queen's Proctor.

E. J.

[24] [1920] P. 158, 161.

[HOUSE OF LORDS.]

* TAYLOR	APPELLANT;	H. L. (E.)†
AND		1958
JOHN SUMMERS & SONS LTD. . . .	RESPONDENT.	April 15.

PETITION for leave to appeal to the House of Lords from the decision of the Court of Appeal in Taylor v. John Summers & Sons Ltd.[1]

The APPEAL COMMITTEE dismissed the petition.

---

* QUALCAST (WOLVERHAMPTON) LTD. .	APPELLANT;
AND
HAYNES	RESPONDENT.

PETITION for leave to appeal to the House of Lords from the decision of the Court of Appeal in Haynes v. Qualcast (Wolverhampton) Ltd.[2]

The APPEAL COMMITTEE allowed the petition.

---

* R. E. GLANVILLE & SONS (BOVEY TRACY) LTD.	APPELLANT;
AND
RUTHERFORD	RESPONDENT.

PETITION for leave to appeal to the House of Lords from the decision of the Court of Appeal in Rutherford v. R. E. Glanville & Sons (Bovey Tracy) Ltd.[3]

The APPEAL COMMITTEE allowed the petition.

---

† Present: LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON, LORD KEITH OF AVONHOLM and LORD SOMERVELL OF HARROW.

[1] [1957] 1 W.L.R. 1182; [1957] 3 All E.R. 541.

[2] [1958] 1 W.L.R. 225; [1958] 1 All E.R. 441.

[3] [1958] 1 W.L.R. 415; [1958] 1 All E.R. 532.

1958
March 24.

* PRACTICE NOTE.
(FEES FOR INTERLOCUTORY WORK IN MATRIMONIAL CAUSES.)

Husband and Wife—Practice—Costs—Counsel's fee for interlocutory work.
Barrister—Fees—Matrimonial causes—Interlocutory work.

Statement on the Application of the Joint Statement by the Law Society and Bar Council on Junior Counsel's Fees for Interlocutory Work in Matrimonial Causes.[1]

In view of the diversity of the interlocutory work in matrimonial causes, the following notes for guidance are issued by the registrar of the divorce registry as representing a statement of the policy which will in future be adopted by the taxing authorities in applying the Joint Statement to matrimonial causes.

1. A substantial amount of the interlocutory work in matrimonial causes will fall into the category which justifies the allowance on taxation of an increase in fees of only 50 per cent. rather than 100 per cent., for example—

(a) Settling simple petitions, except where cruelty, or constructive desertion, or two or more different matrimonial offences together are alleged, where a higher fee will be allowed.

(b) Short and simple Advices on Evidence in undefended causes which will always be allowed.

(c) Short Conferences or Opinions on a short point.

(d) Formal Answers or Replies.

2. Higher fees, however, will be allowed in such superficially simple work if it can be shown that in a particular case counsel has had to put more than the usual amount of time into it.

3. It is intended that in all other classes of work fees allowed shall ordinarily be raised by 100 per cent. and in proper cases by a greater percentage, so that in the aggregate, taking into account brief fees in ancillary matters, counsel's fees allowed for interlocutory work shall be increased by something approximating to 100 per cent. It is not proposed that the conference fee allowed on an interlocutory or ancillary brief should be increased.

B. LONG,
Senior Registrar.

March 24, 1958.

[1] The Joint Statement is contained in the April, 1958, issue of the Law Society's Gazette (see also 102 S.J. 268).

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* HICKS v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION.

C. A.

1958
March 3, 5, 10, 11, 12.

Lord Evershed M.R., Parker and Sellers L.JJ.

[1956 H. No. 2580.]

Railway—Negligence—Shunter injured by points lever—Practice tolerated by employers of riding on locomotive steps—Siting of lever—Foreseeability of risk—Failure to consider safety precautions.

Railway — Statutory duty — Points — Lever — Lever "parallel to the "adjacent lines"—Meaning of "parallel"—Meaning of "adja-"cent"—Prevention of Accidents Rules, 1902 (S.R. & O., 1902, No. 616), para. 5.

Negligence — Contributory negligence — Inadvertence of workman — Shunter riding on locomotive steps—Duty of care enhanced—Knowledge of special risks—Failure to see lever—Inexcusable inadvertence amounting to negligence.

A shunter employed by the defendant commission was riding on the bottom step of a locomotive travelling between a station and a nearby signal box when, apparently, he came into contact with a vertical points lever and fell off the locomotive. No one saw the man fall. The train went over his legs and he was seriously injured. The lever, which it was conceded that he struck, was about 3 feet high. It had been placed between the up line and a spur line leading to sidings about one month before the accident happened. It was slightly closer to the up line than the spur and the clearance between the steps of a passing locomotive and the lever was not more than 8 inches. The lever was painted white and the accident happened on a clear day about midday. It moved in a plane parallel to the up line, and operated to switch trains by a switch line from the up line to the down line. It was notorious that shunters doing the sort of job that the injured plaintiff did habitually rode on the steps of the locomotives and the practice was tolerated by the defendants with few exceptions where the circumstances were unusually dangerous. The line where the accident happened was used by only one train each day from Monday to Friday. The plaintiff had made the journey on a number of occasions since the lever was installed. He knew the risks of riding on the step past the lever but it was found that on that particular day he did not see the lever.

In proceedings brought against the defendants the plaintiff claimed that they were in breach of the statutory duty imposed by paragraph 5 of the Prevention of Accidents Rules, 1902,[1] and also that they were guilty of common law negligence:—

Held, (1) that "in a position parallel to" in paragraph 5 of the rules meant "in a position so that the lever moves in a plane "parallel to"; that, although the lever was not parallel in this

[1] Prevention of Accidents Rules, 1902, para. 5: "Where point rods "and signal wires are in such "position as to be a source of danger "to persons employed on a railway "whilst in the execution of their "duty, such point rods and signal "wires must, within two years from "the coming into operation of these "rules, be sufficiently covered or "otherwise guarded.

"Within the same period ground "levers working points must be so "placed that men when working "them are clear of adjacent lines, "and shall be placed in a position "parallel to the adjacent lines, or in "such other position and be of such "form, as to cause as little obstruc-"tion as possible to persons employed "on the railway whilst in the execu-"tion of their duty."

C. A.

1958

Hicks
v.
British Transport
Commission.

sense to the spur line, the relevant "adjacent lines" were the up lines, because the lever served the points for switching trains from the up to the down line; that, accordingly, the lever was placed in a position parallel to the adjacent lines; that that sufficed to satisfy the statutory duty imposed on the defendants towards the plaintiff, who was not a person engaged in working that lever; and that on the construction of paragraph 5 of the rules the requirement that the siting should be such as to minimize obstruction to railway employees was alternative to the first requirement and did not, therefore, have to be considered.

(2) That there was evidence to support the finding of the judge that on a reasonable balance of probabilities the defendants were negligent for, as prudent employers, they should have foreseen the danger to a shunter riding on the step of a locomotive and should have considered safety precautions.

(3) That the plaintiff's duty to take reasonable care of himself was enhanced by his knowledge of the risks involved in riding on the step because of the unusual siting of the lever, and that his inadvertence in the peaceful conditions of work prevailing and the absence of distraction amounted to negligence on his part which had contributed equally to the causation of the accident with the negligence of his employers.

Caswell v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries Ltd. [1940] A.C. 152; 55 T.L.R. 1004; [1939] 3 All E.R. 722; Staveley Iron and Chemical Co. Ltd. v. Jones [1956] A.C. 627; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 479; [1956] 1 All E.R. 403, and Hutchinson v. London and North Eastern Railway Co. [1942] 1 K.B. 481; 58 T.L.R. 174; [1942] 1 All E.R. 330 distinguished.

Decision of Havers J. varied.

Appeal from Havers J.

On February 1, 1955, at 1.30 p.m. John Thomas Hicks, a shunter employed by the British Transport Commission, fell from the step of a locomotive drawing goods wagons along a line close to a station and connecting Muswell Hill with Highgate. The station was known as Cranley Gardens station. The shunter was seriously injured and lost both feet. He brought an action against the commission, basing his claim both on common law negligence and also on breach of statutory duty. The commission denied liability and said that the plaintiff was the author of his own misfortune, or, alternatively, that it had been contributed to by his negligence. In addition to failing to keep a proper look out, it was said that the plaintiff had not heeded warnings given to him by the commission's servants, or the injunction contained in a booklet entitled "Your Personal Safety" given to him before the accident, which forbade the practice of travelling on steps, and had further ignored rule 118 of the British Railways' Rules for Observance by Employees, January 1, 1950, which required employees to take special care when travelling on engines to ensure that there was a sufficient clearance for safety.

At the time of the accident Cranley Gardens station had been closed to passengers for about six months and the line on which it stood was being used from Monday to Friday inclusive only once a day by one train which brought coal and other goods to various points including Cranley Gardens station. A short distance west of the disused station was a switch line enabling trains on the west-going up line to be carried over to the down line and to be returned whence they had come.

At a distance further west from the points operating that switch line there was a bridge, and by the bridge there was a "ground lever" whereby it was possible to divert trains on the up line to spurs or shunting lines. There were three such lines, called "front road," "coal road" and "back road," and their purpose was that wagons which were to be left at Cranley Gardens station would be pushed by the train on to one or other of those three lines and left there, the train continuing either further westward or going back again to Muswell Hill. The train would also be able to pick up from one or other of these three lines, "front road," "coal road" or "back road," empty wagons which had been left there on previous occasions. In the more active days of this length of railway line there had been a signal box to the west of the station from which the points or other mechanical devices were worked which switched trains from the up line to the down line, and to and from the three spurs. When the use of the line became restricted, it was thought to be no longer economic and sensible to keep the signal box in use, and it was closed. The means of switching trains from the up to the down lines or from the up line to the spurs thereafter was done by vertical hand-operated point levers; and that had been the state of affairs for some four of five weeks before the accident happened.

One of the levers was situated in front of the disused signal box and the other in the space between the up line and a spur. This latter lever controlled the points for the cross-over between the up and down lines. The lever was between 3 feet and 3 feet 1½ inches high and was worked by a spring, so that if a man pulled the lever correctly the tie rod to which it was connected made the tongue of the points come over into the position required to switch the trains. The lever was made of iron and when erected had been painted white on both flat sides and edges. It moved in a plane parallel to the up line.

At the point at which the switch lever was sited, the distance between the outside of the southern pair of the up lines and the spur metals was 5 feet 8½ inches, which was 3½ inches less than the ordinary distance between two parallel sets of metals on an operating section of the railway. The ordinary distance was 6 feet and was normally spoken of as "the six-foot." The lever was placed not midway between the southern rail of the up line and the spur but was closer to the up line. It was 2 feet 6¾ inches from the up line and 3 feet 1¾ inches from the spur and, as a locomotive passed the switch lever, the steps and the floor level of the engine cab would be not more than 8 inches from the lever. Further, at the material part of the railway there was a slight curve, the southern of the up lines being on the inside of the curve, so that there was a tendency for the trains coming round

C. A.
1958
Hicks
v.
British Transport
Commission.

the curve to lean very slightly southerly from the strictly horizontal. In these circumstances a man riding on the step of an engine past the switch lever would pass extremely close to it.

The plaintiff was an experienced shunter. His job was to come with the train from Muswell Hill. The train paused at the up platform at Cranley Gardens station and it was the plaintiff's function then to leave the train and to go and acquaint himself with the situation on the "front road," "coal road" and "back road"—to see what empty wagons were to be picked up and so forth; he then rejoined the train, which moved forward to the bridge, from which point it would go backwards into the shunting area.

The evidence proved clearly that it was notorious that shunters engaged in that sort of operation, during the short space of time which would elapse between the train moving forward to be shunted and the actual shunting, would not get into the cab of the engine or into the guard's van, but would stand on the steps, or one of the steps, of the locomotive itself. On the particular locomotive there were two steps. The bottom step was wider than the upper step, and a man standing on either step necessarily protruded somewhat away from the engine. The day of the accident was a clear winter day. The plaintiff got on to one or other of the steps of the locomotive to go to a point somewhere close to the bridge, and fell from the locomotive in such a way that his legs were crushed by the train. Although there was a guard on the train and an engine driver, and presumably a fireman too, nobody saw the actual fall or could describe what exactly caused it. The plaintiff had no recollection of the exact impact. The case was fought on the assumption that he had been knocked by the switch lever off his perch but it was not known whether his heels, his feet, or some other part of his anatomy or his clothes came into contact with the lever.

Havers J. found that there had been a breach of the statutory duty imposed on the commission by paragraph 5 of the Prevention of Accidents Rules, 1902, because the lever was not in "such "other position and . . . of such form, as to cause as little "obstruction as possible to persons employed on the railway "whilst in the execution of their duty." He further found that on a balance of probabilities the commission had been guilty of negligence for they should have foreseen the risk of serious injury to a shunter riding on the engine and the evidence showed that they had not considered the safety question at all. He found that the plaintiff had not seen the points lever on the day of the accident but, nevertheless, that he was not guilty of contributory negligence. Accordingly, he gave judgment for the plaintiff and awarded him £10,898 damages (£10,500 general damages).

The commission appealed, and on the appeal the additional ground of defence was taken, with leave of the Court of Appeal, that the commission were not in breach of paragraph 5 of the Prevention of Accidents Rules, 1902, because the lever was sited parallel to the adjacent lines and on the true construction of that rule it was sufficient for the commission to show that they had satisfied one of the alternative requirements there set out. The commission did not dispute the decision as to the quantum of damages which should be awarded if liability were established.

Marven Everett Q.C. and H. Tudor Evans for the commission.

N. R. Fox-Andrews Q.C., W. G. Wingate and Norman Irvine for the plaintiff.

In addition to the cases referred to in the judgments the following were cited in argument: Latimer v. A. E. C.[2]; Benmax v. Austin Motor Co. Ltd.[3]

LORD EVERSHED M.R. stated the facts set out above, commenting that a persistent difficulty had been the imprecise nature of the assumption on which the case had proceeded from the outset, namely that the plaintiff had been knocked off his "perch" by the lever. That, said his Lordship, had particular significance on the issue of contributory negligence. Dealing first with the questions of statutory liability, his Lordship continued:

The liability is alleged to arise under the Prevention of Accidents Rules, 1902 (S.R. & O., 1902, No. 616), made pursuant to the Railway Employment (Prevention of Accidents) Act, 1900. By section 1 of that Act power was conferred upon the Board of Trade to "make such rules as they think fit with respect to any of "the subjects mentioned in the schedule to this Act, with the "object of reducing or removing the dangers and risks incidental "to railway service." In subsection (3) the rule-making power was expressed to comprehend a power to require the use of certain plant or alternatively to require the disuse of certain plant. The schedule to which reference is made in subsection (1) included, among other things, the following: "Protection of point rods "and signal wires, and position of ground levers working points." It is not, I should say, in doubt that the thing that I have called the switch lever is a ground lever working point.

The relevant paragraph of the Prevention of Accidents Rules is paragraph 5, and it must be confessed that, looking at it now with the added wisdom given by time after the event, it is not a happily drawn paragraph. It begins as follows: "Where point "rods and signal wires are in such position as to be a source of "danger to persons employed on a railway whilst in the execution "of their duty, such point rods and signal wires must, within two "years from the coming into operation of these rules, be suffi-"ciently covered or otherwise guarded."

I have read that paragraph because of the reference to "two "years from the coming into operation of these rules"; for the second part of the paragraph inauspiciously opens with the phrase

[2] [1953] A.C. 643; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 259; [1953] 2 All E.R. 449.

[3] [1955] A.C. 370; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 418; [1955] 1 All E.R. 326.

C. A.
1958
Hicks v. British Transport Commission.
Lord Evershed M.R.

"within the same period"—which presumably, as a matter of construction of the language, means "within two years from the "coming into operation of these rules." It will be seen that that opening phrase creates at once a difficulty in this case, since the rules came into operation in 1902, whereas this point lever was installed over half a century later. No point, however, has been made by Mr. Everett upon those words; he has not sought to say that, in the circumstances, the whole of the second part of the regulation is rendered wholly futile and inoperative now; and so I will continue with my reading "Within the same period "ground levers working points must be so placed that men when "working them are clear of adjacent lines, and shall be placed "in a position parallel to the adjacent lines, or in such other "position and be of such form, as to cause as little obstruction "as possible to persons employed on the railway whilst in the "execution of their duty." It will be seen that that paragraph contains more than one distinct obligation. The first is in the opening phrase—"points must be so placed that men when "working them are clear of adjacent lines." The question in this case arises on that part of the paragraph, which relates only to the men who actually work the points; but, as a distinct obligation, the paragraph goes on: "and shall be placed in a position "parallel to the adjacent lines. . . ." [His Lordship referred to a plan which showed the direction in which the lever moved when it was operated. He continued:] That, from the ordinary practical common sense point of view, is beyond a peradventure in a plane "parallel to" the up line or up lines. That being so, the words I have read would appear to be satisfied; the points were placed in a position parallel to the adjacent line, for I conceive that when dealing with points, that phrase "in a position "parallel to" means "in a position so that the lever moves in "a plane parallel to." If that is right, then prima facie the alternative which follows has no application. I will come back in a moment to deal with it; but Mr. Fox-Andrews had a point of some mathematical ingenuity, but (I hope he will forgive me for saying) not of any apparent appeal to common sense. He said that it does so happen that here the lever is placed at a point where what I call the spur is shortly to the west going to join the up line—in other words, the up line and the spur line are converging; and although it is plain that this handle may be "parallel to" the up line, it cannot be parallel at the same time with the other line, because the two lines themselves are not parallel to each other. Therefore Mr. Fox-Andrews' point is that where one has got converging lines, mathematically it is absolutely impossible to comply with the first part of this alternative. I cannot accept that view of the meaning of this paragraph. As Parker L.J. pointed out, carried to its proper logical conclusion, it would be fatal in the present case that the lines here are on a slight curve, for the plane of the movement of the lever does not and could not follow the curve of the lines. But, construing the relevant words according to what I have called, and I hope justifiably, the common sense of them, it seems to me that the position of this lever was such that its plane of operation was parallel to the relevant adjacent line. It was in fact nearer to the up line than the spur line, but I do not rely on that. I think the relevant line was the up line, because it was the points for switching trains from the up line to the down line that this mechanism was erected to serve.

It seems to me, therefore, that the first part of this obligation covered by the words "and shall be placed in a position parallel "to . . . " are satisfied. But that is not quite the end of the matter, because the words which follow are: "or in such other "position and be of such form as to cause . . ." In the court below it was conceded that although the parallel position may suffice to exclude the words "or in such other position," it does not exclude the obligation to be extracted from the next five words "and be of such form." That view of the matter is given some emphasis first by the use of the conjunction "and," and, more, by the insertion here of the verb "be." It does not read "and in such other position and of such form," but "or in such "other position and be of such form"; and, so it was said, awkward as the language is, one should read these words as follows: "or in such other position and (in either alternative) "shall be of such form as to cause . . ." making the words "as "to cause as little obstruction" do a double duty applying to "the other position," in cases where that phrase operated, and to the words "and be of such form" in all cases.

It is a little tempting to think that such might have been the intention of the draftsman. But I have come to the conclusion that, as a matter of English (if this paragraph deserves such an appellation) it is not really possible so to construe the words. One great difficulty is the use of the commas which I emphasized in reading. The words "or in such other position and be of such "form" are preceded and followed by commas; and after the second comma come the words "as to cause as little obstruc-"tion. . . ." It seems to me, therefore, that the inevitable meaning of this collocation of words is that the whole formula "or in such "other position and be of such form" is intended as alternative and only alternative to the preceding part of the obligation "shall "be placed in a position parallel . . . "; so that the provision that the lever must be in such other position and of such form as to cause as little obstruction, etc., only has to be considered in cases where the lever is not in a parallel position.

There are, to my mind, two circumstances which lend a little support to that view. The first is that if the handle is parallel to the lines, then I should be disposed to think that the general nature of these things described as "ground levers working points" being well known, they would answer automatically any question as to form. It is only when one gets these things in an unusual position that their form as well as their position may have to be

C. A.
1958
Hicks v. British Transport Commission.
Lord Evershed M.R.

considered. Second, as was pointed out during the course of the argument, the schedule to the Act in terms limited the rule-making power to "the position of" the ground levers without any reference to their form.

I, therefore, conclude in Mr. Marven Everett's favour that the position of this lever is such that there was no breach of the paragraph. The point which I have decided in his favour was not in fact taken below. It was taken in this court by our leave (though I think it was open to Mr. Everett in any case); and, therefore, there is nothing in the judge's judgment to which I need allude.

There was another point on the paragraph of the regulation upon which Mr. Marven Everett sought to rely, if he were wrong on that with which I have tried to deal. He said that at the very end of the paragraph, the words "as to cause as little obstruction "as possible to persons employed on the railway whilst in the "execution of their duty" did not cover this case because the plaintiff, when riding as he was riding on the step of the locomotive, could not be said to be acting in the execution of his duty. In the circumstances it is not, of course, necessary to deal with that point; but my present inclination is to say that on that point the judge rightly held that the plaintiff was acting in the execution of his duty; in other words, if it were necessary, as at present advised I should be disposed to determine that point adversely to Mr. Marven Everett.

What I have so far said removes from the scene, so to speak, the claim raised for breach of statutory duties. I now come to that which has been the main burden of the case, namely, the question of common law negligence, and linked with it, the question of contributory negligence. I have already said that it is a feature of the case which is of real significance that the actual accident was observed by no one and there is no evidence as to its exact nature; but I apprehend that in cases of this kind, since it is conceded that the plaintiff did strike the lever, the problem for the judge was one of determining as a matter of fact to what end on that assumption the probabilities of the case pointed; and I observe that he cited the well-known passage from Paris v. Stepney Borough Council,[1] and in so doing it seems to me that no one could say that he had not properly directed himself as to the task in hand.

If I may usefully anticipate my conclusion, it is in my judgment of this nature: here was a section of the railway which had become disused save for the single purpose of acting as a place from which a few shunting operations daily took place, the object being to deliver certain goods to one or other of the spur lines and thence to remove the empty wagons. It was, therefore, of the essence of the case that the shunters employed would adopt habits and customs that shunters notoriously do adopt, and it has not been in dispute that, notwithstanding anything in the book of rules of 1950, shunters doing the sort of job that the plaintiff was employed to do, travel from the station (the point where the train first stops) to the point where they operate the shunting levers by standing on the steps of the locomotive. That such a practice in certain circumstances may be dangerous is undoubtedly the fact, and the evidence was that in some cases the responsible officers of the British Transport Commission or the British Railway Executive take steps to prevent, as far as they can, men exposing themselves to that sort of risk; but, apart from that limited class of case we must proceed, I think beyond any doubt, on the view that the riding on the steps of engines on the part of shunters was a practice recognized and accepted by the responsible officers of the railway undertaking. It follows, therefore, as I think, that the duty of the commission must be one related to the fact that someone riding on the steps of the engine would be put at peril if some obstruction were placed in a position in which it would be likely to hit him. So I think the really vital factor in this case is that the siting of this switch lever was such that it left between the plantiff and the up lines a space which was described by the adjective "meagre." In the context in which that phrase was used I am myself left in no doubt that the witnesses meant thereby to say that in this case there was unusually little room between the lever and the passing locomotive; and that is, I think, another way of saying that the margin of safety was extremely and unusually slight.

[1] [1951] A.C. 367, 384; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 25; [1951] 1 All E.R. 42.

[His Lordship referred to the judge's findings that the margin of safety was very small and that in siting the lever the responsible officials had paid no regard to the safety of shunters riding on the engine steps, on which he had concluded that the commission fell short of their duty as prudent employers knowing what their employees were likely to be doing. After reviewing the judgment and the evidence (which indicated that the lever could have been sited differently and in a place which might have made all the difference from the point of view of the safety of shunters, and that a different type of lever could have been used, and was in fact used after the accident) his Lordship concluded that the conclusion of fact reached by the judge was justified and ought not to be disturbed. His Lordship continued:] There remains the problem of contributory negligence. The installation of this points lever took place at the very beginning of 1955, so that when the accident occurred the plaintiff had on quite a number of occasions taken this journey, and taken it, as I assume, in the same way as he travelled on February 1. It further will be borne in mind that this was not a busy shunting line with men working at pressure and against a background of noise and movement. The quiet of Cranley Gardens station was broken only once a day by the arrival of this coal train. There was no particular urgency: the whole of the rest of the day was available to complete the not very intricate operation of taking on the empty wagon, a wagon left before, and leaving behind the

C. A.
1958
Hicks
v.
British Transport Commission.
Lord Evershed M.R.

full wagon or a wagon which the train had brought. This accident happened on February 1, 1955, but there had been the possibility of it happening on any of the days during the preceding five weeks. It is, therefore, not surprising that the judge concluded that it must have been something which the plaintiff himself omitted to do on February 1 which had produced this unhappy result. After referring to a passage from Flower v. Ebbw Vale Steel, Iron and Coal Co. Ltd.,[2] the judge said: "I bear these "principles in mind when I apply myself to the question which "I have to decide, whether or not the defendants have "satisfied me that the plaintiff was, in the circumstances of this "case, guilty of contributory negligence. I think it is an "inescapable conclusion that, for some reason or other, at the "critical time the plaintiff did not see this lever. I think it "follows also that his failure to see the lever was a contributory "cause of this accident; but, using the language of Lord Greene "M.R., in the case to which I have referred, the question I have "to consider is: Have the defendants proved that in all the "circumstances, whatever they may have been, the failure to see "the lever was negligence? On the one hand, as I have said, "the lever was 3 feet 6 inches high. It had been painted white "on the sides and edges. The handle and the bottom had not "been painted. No doubt there was, during the four to five "weeks which had elapsed, some discoloration of that white "from the ordinary incidence of the English climate in winter "time; but this was about 1.30 p.m. on February 1, when the "visibility was good, and I do not think that there was anything "in the background to make it more difficult to see this lever. "I find, therefore, it was clearly visible and could have been seen "by the plaintiff. Also, there can be no doubt that, though it had "not been there very long, between four and five weeks, its "position was well known to the plaintiff. He had been shunting "there during that period and, of course, he had had many "opportunities of seeing it. In addition, the plaintiff told me "that he had had a conversation with Mr. Smith—he says a few "months before the accident, but it cannot have been as long as "that; some time before the accident—in which he said, after "[the lever] had been erected, it was a bit dangerous and some-"body would catch it one of these days. Mr. Smith did not "remember this. Also, of course, I have to bear in mind rule "118, to which I have already referred, which says that staff riding "on engines or vehicles, or when on the ground alongside vehicles, "at converging points in sidings must take special care; also, the "general duty to take care imposed by rule 11 (a) of the rules "and, of course, the duty at common law which rests upon a "workman to take reasonable care for his own safety in all the "circumstances of the case. As Mr. Marven Everett has pointed

[2] [1936] A.C. 206.

"out, this accident did not take place in a factory, with all its "distraction of noise, confusion, moving machinery and men "moving about, and perhaps in a somewhat narrow space. This "man was engaged on a comparatively simple operation of "helping shunting, an operation with which he was familiar. It "was suggested by Mr. Marven Everett that while he was "riding on this step of the engine he had nothing in the world to "do except to look after his own safety. On the other hand, "Mr. Stanley, the station master, gave the plaintiff a very good "character. He said he was a good, sensible, hard-working chap, "and he said he would say that he was a careful workman. Mr. "Fox-Andrews on his behalf has contended that it is not con-"tributory negligence because on one occasion he did not see this "lever, and he argued that a momentary period of inattention "does not in itself constitute negligence on the part of the "workman." And then Mr. Fox-Andrews is quoted as having suggested that there might have been here some distraction of the plaintiff's attention.

I have read that passage at some length because upon this very difficult matter I well appreciate that it is said that the court should no more disturb the judge's conclusion of fact upon the question of contributory negligence than it should in the case of negligence on the part of the commission. But the two questions are not, I think, quite parallel. The judge has drawn the inference of fact that to a substantial extent, to say no more, a contributory cause of the accident was the plaintiff's own inattention, but he has gone on to conclude on the whole that the commission have failed to prove that the inattention, the inadvertence, amounted to negligence.

I cannot help feeling that perhaps there has been an undue significance attached to the word "inadvertence," as though inadvertence was something necessarily distinct from negligence. The fact, of course, is that inadvertence may itself amount to negligence or it may not. But, as Mr. Fox-Andrews himself pointed out, the question upon contributory negligence is, in essentials, the same as that upon negligence by the commission: in the circumstances of this case to what end does the reasonable balance of probabilities point? I have given my grounds for thinking that the reasonable balance of probabilities points to negligence on the part of the commission, or, at least, to the view that we should not disturb the finding of the judge to that effect. But on the whole I have been unable to follow the judge in his conclusion in the passage which I have read acquitting the plaintiff of contributory negligence; for, in my judgment, the conclusion is not in truth consistent with the premises which precede it. It is the fact here—the inescapable fact—that the plaintiff, riding as he was upon the engine, knew perfectly well what the risks of such conduct were; and although I fully agree with Mr. Fox-Andrews that the rules of 1950 which enshrine the

C. A.
1958
Hicks
v.
British
Transport
Commission.
Lord Evershed
M.R.

two injunctions to which the judge referred,[3] cannot be regarded as part of the contract of employment, still it is sufficiently made clear (and, indeed, the plaintiff himself conceded the point) that if one rides on the step of an engine, there are risks involved, and in this case the risks were perfectly well known to the plaintiff, since for four to five weeks he had done this journey. Not only that, but he knew, because he said he told Mr. Smith the very thing, that there was here very little clearance; and if, contrary to the advice, though not contrary to the contract, he chose to ride on the step, he plainly had, I should have said, an enhanced duty to look after himself; and I agree also with the point to which the judge refers, that, in the absence of any evidence of distraction, the plaintiff had—and I use his own phrase—nothing in the world to do except to look out for himself. It may well be that something did distract him. Possibly some twinge of cramp upset his equilibrium. But those risks the plaintiff thought it right to undertake when he rode on the step at all; and I have felt forced in the end to the conclusion that, knowing the risks, knowing the special risk here involved because of the unusual siting of the lever, the assumed circumstances of the accident point as clearly to contributory negligence on the plaintiff's part as they point to negligence on the part of the commission.

I am not at all losing sight of the relevant circumstance that according to the station master the plaintiff was a careful, conscientious, hard-working chap, not a day-dreaming scatterbrained type at all; but it is unfortunately in accordance with ordinary human experience that sometimes, to our surprise, the most careful people do make mistakes.

At any rate, I think, in all the circumstances, including the rules and the knowledge which the plaintiff as an experienced man had of the position of the lever, he had a strong obligation to look after himself. I think the finding that the accident was due to the circumstance that the plaintiff on this occasion did not see the lever—an inescapable conclusion on the assumption made—leads to the view that the balance of probabilities must be that for some reason the plaintiff on this occasion departed from the proper standard of care which he owed to himself, and, if you will, through himself, to his employers.

There only remains, if I am right, the question of apportionment. Once more, but finally, I revert to the fact that the exact circumstances of the accident are not known but assumed. Against that background I feel that no conclusion can be really satisfactory, but that the least unsatisfactory conclusion must be one of equal liability. No one will, for a moment, fail to feel sympathy with the plaintiff, a conscientious worker who has suffered a most calamitous and grievous accident. But I have come to the conclusion that as to 50 per cent. he was the author of his own calamity and that, therefore, the damages he may recover must be reduced by 50 per cent. To that extent I would allow the appeal.

[3] British Railways. Rules for Observance by Employees. January 1, 1950: Rule 11 (a): "No employee "shall expose himself to danger, and "he must prevent as far as possible "such exposure on the part of other "employees, and spare no opportunity of warning those who neglect "to take proper care."

R. 118: "Staff riding on engines "or vehicles, or on the ground alongside vehicles, at converging points "in sidings must take special care "that there is sufficient clearance for "their safety."

PARKER L.J. I agree, and I can state my reasons very shortly. As regards the claim based on the alleged breach of statutory duty, namely, a breach of rule 5 of the Prevention of Accidents Rules, 1902, the judge said: "I hold that this lever was not in such "other position and of such form as to cause as little obstruction "as possible to persons employed on the railway whilst in the "execution of their duty." I entirely agree with that, assuming that one ever gets as far as those words in rule 5. For the reasons given by my Lord it seems to me that in this case one never comes to consider those words, which are an alternative to what has gone before, and I think clearly the provisions that have gone before have been fully complied with.

I come, therefore, to the question of a breach of the duty at common law. To quote the words of Lord Herschell in Smith v. Charles Baker & Sons[4]: "It is quite clear that the contract "between employer and employed involves on the part of the "former the duty of taking reasonable care to provide proper "appliances, and to maintain them in a proper condition, and "so to carry on his operations as not to subject those employed "by him to unnecessary risk." Whether the risk is such that a prudent employer exercising reasonable care should take steps to guard against it, depends on a number of considerations—certainly on three: first, whether such an employer could reasonably foresee the risk of accident to an employee; secondly, if so, the degree of injury likely to result; and, thirdly, the nature of the precautions necessary to guard against that risk. If no precautions can guard against the risk, then it cannot be said to be an unnecessary risk. Equally, if the precautions involve great expense, then that is a matter to be put into the scale and weighed with the other considerations.

To take those matters in order, I think it is clear (from photographs and a plan put in) that an 8-inch clearance between the vertical lever and the steps of the locomotive is such that any prudent employer must foresee the risk of injury to a person riding on the locomotive. Here it is proved beyond a shadow of doubt that it was the common practice of shunters to ride on the steps of locomotives. It was only if they were exposing themselves to some extreme danger that any steps were taken to reprimand them. It was a practice which, as my Lord has said, was tolerated by the commission. Bearing in mind the position in which a man would have to stand if he was to hold the rails

[4] [1891] A.C. 325, 362.

C. A.
1958
Hicks
v.
British
Transport
Commission.
Parker L.J.

at the side of the entrance to the locomotive cab, and bearing in mind the fact that he might be wearing an overcoat, there was clearly, I should have thought, a risk of injury. But the matter does not end there, because the witnesses for the commission said perfectly clearly that in shunting yards the danger to men riding on the steps of locomotives was something to which they did pay regard. It seems to me that merely because there was only one train a day on this line, and not a great many locomotives and a great many shunters riding on them, the employers are not excused from considering the risk.

As regards the second consideration, it does not require any hind-sight in this case to see that if an accident did occur, very serious injuries might result. In regard to the precautions, it is to be observed that the commission are in this difficulty: nobody of those responsible, so far as the evidence was concerned, ever considered the question of safety at all.

[His Lordship referred to the evidence and the findings summarized above, and continued:] I cannot see any ground for interfering with the judge's finding that the commission were in breach of their duty; and, bearing in mind that it is conceded that this man was struck by the lever, that that breach of duty was a cause of this accident.

Finally there remains the question of contributory negligence. The judge found that this lever was visible and could have been seen by the plaintiff; that it was in a position well known to him; that he had passed it on a number of occasions during the preceding five weeks; that he realized that it was a bit dangerous and had said that somebody would catch it one of these days; that he also had in mind the commission's rules, and in particular rule 118 and rule 11 (a); and that the work on which he was engaged was a simple operation, there was no rush, and, of course, none of the atmosphere of a factory.

Pausing there, one would think that that was leading up to a finding of contributory negligence; but the judge went on to say that he had had evidence that this man was of very good character and was a careful man. One cannot say that such a consideration is irrelevant, but for my part comparatively little weight ought to be given to it because unfortunately the most careful men are guilty of inattention at times. And finally he went on to point out that all the facts of the case were not known, and in effect that for all one knows this man may have been guilty of momentary inattention or inadvertence. Now, for my part I quite agree that all the facts are not known in this case. Indeed, they very seldom are in any case. But just as the commission's negligence must be judged on the probabilities of the case, so must questions of contributory negligence. As regards inadvertence, of course it is a matter of degree. It is not every act of inadvertence which amounts to negligence. Equally, in certain circumstances inadvertence may well amount to negligence. It must depend upon all the facts of the case.

The judge, I think, was clearly influenced by the well-known passages in Caswell v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries Ltd.,[5] and he took the view that this might well have been a matter of momentary inadvertence not amounting to negligence. Caswell's case,[5] however, was a case of breach of statutory duty occurring in all the noise and bustle of a factory, and, as was pointed out by the House of Lords recently in Staveley Iron & Chemical Co. Ltd. v. Jones[6] different considerations may arise where there is no statute designed to protect a workman against himself and where the operation is divorced from the bustle, the noise and the repetition that occurs in a factory. Again I think the judge was influenced by passages in Hutchinson v. London and North Eastern Ry. Co.[7] That again was a claim based on a breach of statutory duty—indeed on rule 9 of the Prevention of Accidents Rules which have been referred to in this case. But, quite apart from that, the facts there were wholly different; that was a case of gangers working on the main line between Newcastle and York with express trains passing every eight or ten minutes. They were engaged on raising the rails and putting ballast underneath—an operation on which they would be concentrating and not thinking or having the opportunity to think very much of their own safety. That seems to me to be a wholly different case from this. Here was a man riding for his own convenience on the step of a locomotive, having nothing to do at that particular moment other than keep a look-out for his own safety, assisted, as my Lord has said, by the added injunction in the commission's rules. For my part, I feel that it is an irresistible conclusion that on the balance of probabilities this man was guilty of contributory negligence.

Finally, Mr. Fox-Andrews referred to Cummings v. Richard Thomas & Baldwins Ltd.[8] and Stimpson v. Standard Telephones and Cables Ltd.,[9] showing that this court is loath to interfere with an inference drawn by a trial judge who has seen and heard the witnesses. With that, of course, I entirely agree; but, at the same time, if this court is satisfied that the inference drawn is the wrong inference, then not only has it the power but it is its duty to substitute its own inference for that found by the judge. I have reluctantly come to the conclusion that this unfortunate man was guilty of contributory negligence, and, like my Lord, I would hold him 50 per cent. to blame.

SELLERS L.J. I agree. Although we are differing from the judge who tried this case on the question of contributory negligence, I hope it will not be thought to be in any way disrespectful

[5] [1940] A.C. 152; 55 T.L.R. 1004; [1939] 3 All E.R. 722.

[6] [1956] A.C. 627; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 479; [1956] 1 All E.R. 403.

[7] [1942] 1 K.B. 481; 58 T.L.R. 174; [1942] 1 All E.R. 330.

[8] [1953] 2 Q.B. 95; [1953] 2 All E.R. 43; (reversed in House of Lords [1955] A.C. 321; [1955] 1 All E.R. 285).

[9] [1940] 1 K.B. 342; 55 T.L.R. 90; [1939] 4 All E.R. 225.

C. A.
1958
Hicks v. British Transport Commission.

to him and to his careful and reasoned judgment if I say that my views so much accord with those of both my Lords that I feel that I ought not to take time expressing them in my own words.

Appeal allowed on issues as to breach of statutory duty and contributory negligence.

Solicitors: M. H. B. Gilmour; Pattinson & Brewer.

E. D.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

1958
Feb. 4, 5.
Lord Merriman P. and Wrangham J.

* BOWEN v. BOWEN.

Husband and Wife—Maintenance—Justices—Jurisdiction—Application to vary order—Order revoked without complaint to revoke being made—No jurisdiction to revoke.

Husband and Wife—Maintenance—Justices—Revocation of order—Possibility of reviver.

A man against whom a court of summary jurisdiction had made an order at £2 a week on the ground of wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance for his wife applied, after the marriage had been dissolved, for a variation of that order by having the amount reduced. Upon that complaint the justices revoked the order stating, inter alia, in their reasons that "if the wife's circumstances "altered and deteriorated, she could then apply again to the court":—

Held, (1) that the justices had no jurisdiction, upon an application on complaint to have an order varied, to revoke it.

Trathan v. Trathan [1955] 1 W.L.R. 805; [1955] 2 All E.R. 701 applied.

(2) That having regard to the respective means of the parties as found by the justices, the order should be varied to one of a nominal amount.

Per curiam. There are cases where reviver may be proper, as, for instance, where an order of the justices has "ceased to have "effect" because the parties temporarily resumed cohabitation.

Quaere whether a woman may apply (upon fresh evidence) for an order to be revived after it has been "discharged" or "revoked" (between which words there is no distinction).

Pratt v. Pratt (1927) 137 L.T. 491; 43 T.L.R. 523; Markham v. Markham [1947] W.N. 27; 63 T.L.R. 91; [1946] 2 All E.R. 737 considered.

Appeal by wife from the revocation by the justices for the Hereford petty sessional division of Hereford of an order of the justices for her maintenance upon cross-applications, initiated by the husband, to vary the order.

The parties were married in 1950. In May, 1952, the justices for the Hereford petty sessional division of Hereford granted the wife an order for £2 a week on the ground of wilful neglect to provide her with reasonable maintenance. On May 28, 1957, the marriage was dissolved by decree absolute on the ground of the husband's adultery; but the wife continued to rely upon the justices' order for maintenance. A summons was issued on October 3, 1957, upon the complaint of the husband made on September 27, 1957, whereby he asked that the order be varied by a reduction in the amount payable upon the grounds that his means were reduced and that the wife's means were sufficient "without the weekly sum of £2 or a large part thereof," and that the marriage had been dissolved. The wife replied by asking for the order to be increased. On October 12, 1957, the justices rejected the wife's complaint and upon the husband's complaint for variation made an order that the order of May, 1952, be revoked.

The justices in their reasons stated: "This was a matrimonial "case in which the magistrates were asked to reduce the main-"tenance of £2 per week made by the husband on their own "order of 1952, while the wife asked for it to be increased. "Some unusual features had to be taken into account. (1) There "were no children of this marriage to be considered. (2) The "parties were separated after some 18 months of marriage "(September, 1950, to February, 1952). (3) No divorce proceed-"ings were instituted for some 5 years. (4) Each party was "earning a good wage at work. The husband some £12 3s. and "the wife some £7 5s. per week. Out of these amounts the "husband had to pay the monies as set out in the clerk's notes "of evidence. He had also to pay off the costs of divorce "proceedings.

"The wife worked for the same firm as before her marriage "and lived at home. After paying her parents £3 for board and "lodging she was left with £2 5s. 6d. rather more than her "husband.

"The magistrates therefore had to bear in mind that (a) "There were no children. (b) The parties were divorced and "now again two ordinary young members of the community both "earning good money. (c) That the wife had more money to "spend on herself after paying essential outgoings than the "husband. (d) To assess what—if anything—the wife had lost "by this short and most unsatisfactory marriage. (e) Whether "any money should at this stage be paid by the husband to add to "the wife's expenditure income as in no circumstances could she "be described 'as in want.'

"The magistrates decided that as this childless couple were "divorced and each in receipt of good wages and in no want "whatsoever, it would be inequitable to take money from the "husband (and possibly thus from his aged mother) and give "it to the former wife and considered that this couple should be "treated as two individuals who had made an unfortunate matri-"monial attempt, but were now again just two members of the "public in good employ and bore in mind many cases of a similar

1958

Bowen
v.
Bowen.

"nature when they had to order allocations out of an income of "£7 to £8 per week to maintain 3 or more children.

"The magistrates bore in mind that if the wife's circum-"stances altered and deteriorated, she could then apply again "to the court. But that at present no order was justified or at "the most a token allotment, which they felt was not justified "for the above reasons."

A. T. Hoolahan for the wife appellant.

P. E. Underwood for the husband respondent.

Dodd v. Dodd * was cited in argument in addition to the cases cited in the judgment.

Lord Merriman P. This is a wife's appeal against the decision of the justices for the Hereford petty sessional division of Hereford, sitting at Hereford on October 12, 1957, whereby an order made by the same court on May 3, 1952, for £2 a week on the ground of wilful neglect to maintain was revoked. Having regard to the fact that I am of opinion that their order requires variation in what may or may not be an important particular as a matter of substance, but does raise, as I think, an important question as a matter of principle, I propose to say quite shortly what we are dealing with and what we are not dealing with.

The first thing to look at in this case is the complaint. I may say at once that I do not, as at present advised, withdraw one word of what I am reported as having said about the importance of the complaint as the foundation of justices' jurisdiction in Trathan v. Trathan.[1] In that respect the important part of my judgment, with which Davies J. agreed, runs from where I developed my use of the word "cardinal"[2] to show that this court regarded the form of the complaint as a vital matter, because it is upon that and that alone that justices are empowered to exercise their jurisdiction.

In this case the complaint was made on September 27, 1957, and the summons was issued thereon, reciting the order that I have already mentioned, £2 a week. [His Lordship referred to the nature of the complaint set out above and continued:] It is perfectly clear that this complaint, stating those two grounds, came under the head of a complaint to vary by reducing. I am fully aware, and it has been mentioned in this argument, that under section 7 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, the same petty sessional division may, "on the appli-"cation of the married woman or of her husband, and upon cause "being shown"—I leave out for the moment the words "upon

* [1906] P. 189; 22 T.L.R. 484.

[1] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 805; [1955] 2 All E.R. 701. In that case the order had been discharged without prior complaint by the husband, upon the husband's application made for the first time during the hearing of the wife's complaint for an increase in the order.

[2] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 805, 807.

"fresh evidence"—"to the satisfaction of the court at any time, "alter, vary, or discharge any such order."

I must say something about the words "alter, vary, "or discharge." I do not make any distinction whatever between "discharge" and "revoke," for they have been used interchangeably both in judgments and in the Act of Parliament, to which I do not think it is necessary to refer specifically, though both have been contrasted—and this may be of importance in considering one authority—with a mere cessation "to have "effect." That contrast occurs, as will be recognized, in the Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Act, 1925, to the details of which I do not think it necessary to refer specifically; it is a resumption of cohabitation which brings about the "cessation" of effect[3] just as the fact that they are living together at the time when the order is made prevents the order from coming into effect.[4] With regard to that combination of words, if I may quote myself for the purposes of brevity, in Trathan v. Trathan,[5] after the lapse of five pages from the passage to which I referred just now, I came to this conclusion: "However, I do not think that I need pursue that topic any "further"—that is, the fresh evidence topic, for I had pointed out that there was a distinction between "alter" and "vary," quoad amount, and "discharge," which almost certainly requires fresh evidence, whereas variation of amount does not, by reason of a subsequent enactment[6] which is now embodied in the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952, because, in my opinion, it is quite "plain on the face of section 7 itself that, though these things are "all put together in one sentence, they do, in fact, raise quite "separate issues, and there must be, in my opinion, under the "Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952, as there must have been under "the Summary Jurisdiction Act, a complaint which alleges that "there should be an alteration and upon what ground; or "that there should be a variation and upon what ground; or "that there should be a discharge, and again upon what "ground, though in that case at least"—(that is the case of discharge)—"the ground must be based upon 'fresh evidence.'"

Now, I stand by those words, and for the purposes of this case they are, as things stand, decisive, because there was before these justices no complaint for a discharge or a revocation but merely a complaint for a variation. The order is quite explicit, in my opinion. There are two orders, because there was a cross-summons by the wife to increase the amount. The order perfectly accurately recites the terms of the husband's complaint, and the adjudication is that "the complaint is true and cause "being shown upon fresh evidence to the satisfaction of the "court it is hereby ordered that the said first-mentioned order "be revoked." In my opinion, although "fresh evidence" was

[3] By s. 2 (2) of the Act.
[4] By s. 1 (4) of the Act.
[5] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 805, 812.
[6] The Money Payments (Justices Procedure) Act, 1935, s. 9.

1958

Bowen
v.
Bowen.

Lord
Merriman P.

not necessary to a pure question of amount, i.e., a less amount, it was necessary and appropriate to the ground which is recited in the order, that the marriage had been dissolved, for, of course, it goes without saying that the dissolution of a marriage after the making of an order comes within the well-known definition of "fresh evidence," as being, amongst other things, something which has manifestly occurred since the order was made.

At the same time it was adjudged that the wife's complaint for an increase was not true, and it was ordered that the first-mentioned order be revoked. I withhold any comment on the inclusion of that in reference to the wife's complaint; it does not matter, because the order is obviously made, in fact, on the husband's complaint. That is the formal order.

That brings me to what the justices said about it, what they really intended to do. If I may be allowed to say so, they went into a very careful and close examination of the figures, with the result that on the merits as disclosed by the figures they came to a conclusion, from which I am not prepared to dissent at all, for I do not think that the question of figures in this case is one which calls for any further examination on our part beyond accepting the very clear finding at which they themselves arrived. Their conclusion was that on the figures the wife was left with £2 5s. 6d., rather more than her husband was left with. I am not suggesting that that is a conclusive circumstance; far from it. They could ignore that if they chose, but they have chosen to act upon it and to revoke the order altogether. They go into the question of there being no children; they go into the question of the parties being divorced and being, as they put it, "now "again two ordinary young members of the community both "earning good money" and "that the wife had more money to "spend on herself after paying essential outgoings than the "husband." They then went into an attempt to assess what, if anything, the wife had lost by this short and most unsatisfactory marriage, and whether any money should at this stage be paid by the husband to add to the wife's expendable income, as in no circumstances could she be described as being in want. [His Lordship then read their conclusion as set out above, observing that the reference to cases of a similar nature was a somewhat irrelevant introduction, and continued:]

I have already dealt with the fact that the justices arrived at a revocation on a complaint which asked for no more than a variation, and there I think they were wrong. Again I think that they were wrong in their allusion to the divorce case, in this sense: it has been well settled for many years in this court by the decision in Bragg v. Bragg[7] which has been repeatedly followed here, and has been recently followed by the Court of Appeal in Wood v. Wood,[8] where it is well settled[9] that though there has been a divorce, it is a matter of discretion whether to allow an order nevertheless to stand or to discharge it. As all judges of this Division well know, and all practitioners well know, it is the commonest thing in the world in an undefended or a defended divorce case, for that matter, to allow a maintenance order to stand whether or not it also includes a custody order and maintenance in respect of children, none of which could be allowed if divorce per se was decisive to get rid of an order. As I say, it is frequently done by justices and frequently followed in this court that the original order is allowed to stand, and it is very convenient that it should be so, for it has the merit of saving costs in the Divorce Court. The mere fact that these parties had been divorced is nothing but a discretionary ground, and, no doubt, may be an important ground in connexion with the question of amount; but it certainly does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that there must be a revocation.

[7] [1925] P. 20; 41 T.L.R. 8.
[8] [1957] P. 254; [1957] 2 W.L.R. 826; [1957] 2 All E.R. 14.
[9] [1957] P. 254, 278.

But it is said (and this is all I propose to say, quite shortly, about the complicated issue which appears to have been involved in this case) that the justices have not revoked the order at all; all that they have done is, as it were, to suspend the money payments, and to leave them, in spite of the use of the word "revocation," to be revived at any time under the terms of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952, s. 53, which reads as follows:—"Revocation, variation, etc., of orders for periodical payment. "Where a magistrates' court has made an order for the periodical "payment of money, the court may, by order on complaint, "revoke, revive or vary the order." Now, I have already indicated that there are many cases in which variation is proper, cases in which I think reviver is proper, for instance, the case which I have mentioned in passing where an order ceases to be of effect because the parties have temporarily resumed cohabitation; the order still remains, but it ceases to have the effect of enforceability as regards amount. As to revocation, which, as I have already said, I think would be equivalent to a total "discharge" of the order, which was the word used in the Act of 1895, I do not resile at all from what I said in the passage I quoted just now in Trathan v. Trathan[10] and I do not hesitate to add that in terms of the section which I have just read reviver, like the other two things, falls to be decided separately upon whatever are the grounds of the appropriate complaint. But I am not prepared, as at present advised, to assume that because of that section it is inapt to make an order for a nominal payment in order to keep an order alive, for which there is ample precedent in decisions of this court, reported or unreported. I can think of one which is reported, though it has nothing otherwise to do with this case than that we did make an order in that form in order to keep a wife's rights alive. It is the case of Starkie v. Starkie (No. 2),[11] but I do not propose to pursue that.

[10] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 805.

[11] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 98; [1953] 2 All E R. 1519.

1958

Bowen
v.
Bowen.

Lord
Merriman P.

In my opinion the whole of this argument turns on the decision in Pratt v. Pratt.[12] That was a very remarkable case, and the substance of it was this: the wife's order had been revoked, or discharged, under section 7, because it was found that she had committed adultery, and it will be remembered that under section 7 if she commits an act of adultery," such order "shall"—it is obligatory—"upon proof thereof be discharged." There was no appeal against that order—the discharge of her original order—but there was a divorce suit in which precisely the same issue of her alleged adultery came up for decision, and a judge of the High Court decided that she had not committed adultery. Thereupon, upon the fresh evidence made available by the decision of the High Court judge, there was a complaint to restore or revive the original order. The simplest course (which has been to my knowledge adopted either on common-sense grounds or in oblivion of this decision in Pratt v. Pratt[12]) would have been to extend the time to appeal against the revocation by the justices and to deal with the matter then and there on that basis. Instead of which this court treated this decision of the High Court as being fresh evidence, as, of course, it was, and thereupon, without more, restored the original order.

Upon that foundation it is said that however definitely a court may discharge or revoke an order, it is open under this section for the wife to come back at any time and say: "Now I want "that order revived," of course, upon fresh evidence to the satisfaction of the court. Well, when it is necessary to decide that as being the only way in which the case may be decided, one way or the other I shall have to face that issue.

I say in passing, however, that we did, with obvious reluctance, follow Pratt v. Pratt[12] in Markham v. Markham.[13] That was a case to which I have already alluded in passing, where the order ceased to have effect owing to a resumption of cohabitation, and with regard to that, at any rate, I feel no doubt that reviver is a proper term. However, we appear to have based our judgment on the authority of Pratt v. Pratt,[14] both cases are of respectable antiquity, and both were decided before the Magistrates' Courts Act of 1952, and the draftsmen, of course, as they always do, are taken to know all the law about everything which has ever arisen out of the fact that everything we do in this court and everything in a justices' court in a matrimonial case is treated as if it were an affiliation order. Further than that I do not want to go in elucidating that particular problem.

It is only right to say, however, that in In re Dankbars (An Infant),[15] which was a guardianship of infants case in the Court of Appeal, the Master of the Rolls—(I am not going into detail about this)—expressly refrained, because they were not cases

[12] (1927) 137 L.T. 491; 43 T.L.R. 523.

[13] [1947] W.N. 27; 63 T.L.R. 91; [1946] 2 All E.R. 737.

[14] 43 T.L.R. 523.

[15] [1954] Ch. 98; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 957; sub nom. D. (An Infant), Re [1953] 2 All E.R. 1318.

under the Guardianship of Infants Act, from expressing any definite opinion about the validity of Pratt v. Pratt [16] or Markham v. Markham,[17] and I say no more about it than that there may come a time when some court or other will have to say what the law really is about this matter, whether it is really true that an order which has been revoked can be revived without more than a mere complaint saying "Now I want this order revived," when there has been no appeal against the revocation.

During the adjournment of this case at midday we discovered that Pratt v. Pratt [18] had been referred to incidentally in another judgment of the Court of Appeal in Thompson v. Thompson.[19] In his judgment Denning L.J. referred to Pratt v. Pratt [20] for the purpose only of basing the proposition [21] "but where the previous "proceedings were before the magistrates for maintenance, the "court usually thinks it right to inquire into the matter afresh," that is on the question of estoppel per rem judicatam—"in which "case it allows the accused party to defend himself for the second time: see Pratt v. Pratt [22] and Hudson v. Hudson.[23]" And there I leave it, because I am now coming back to where I began.

In spite of our criticism that the revocation was out of order because it was not based on a complaint, and in spite of the fact that the justices, I think, paid more attention than they should have done in the circumstances of this case to the fact that the parties had been divorced, and do not seem to have been referred by anybody to cases like Bragg v. Bragg,[24] which point out exactly how the matter stands to enable justices to deal at their own discretion with that particular circumstance, I come back to what I think should have happened, for we are entitled to draw any inference which the court below should have drawn, and it is particularly easy for us to do that in this case because it happens to be an order which has been welcomed, with moderate enthusiasm at any rate, by both sides, and also it happens in effect to be what the justices themselves really wanted, and that is to vary this order for £2 by reducing it, as the complaint invited them to do, not to nought by discharge or revocation but to a nominal order which will keep the matter alive. That is plainly what the justices thought that they were doing. I do not think that they achieved the purpose, but we can quite easily achieve that purpose by that particular variation of the original amount, and that is what I propose that we should do—allow the appeal to that extent, while accepting the justices' findings about the figures.

[16] 43 T.L.R. 523.
[17] 63 T.L.R. 91.
[18] 43 T.L.R. 523.
[19] [1957] P. 19; [1957] 2 W.L.R. 138; [1957] 1 All E.R. 161.
[20] 43 T.L.R. 523.
[21] [1957] P. 19, 30.
[22] 43 T.L.R. 523.
[23] [1948] P. 292; 64 T.L.R. 258; [1948] 1 All E.R. 773.
[24] [1925] P. 20.

1958

Bowen
v.
Bowen.

Wrangham J. I agree. The case for the wife in this matter was put upon two grounds:—(1) that the justices had no jurisdiction to revoke their previous maintenance order because there was not in existence any complaint asking them to revoke it, and (2) because the reasons which the justices have given show that they misunderstood the law, in that they thought that if the wife's circumstances altered and deteriorated, she could then apply again to the court, despite the revocation of the order.

The question whether the justices were indeed in error in thinking that that was the law is, as my Lord has indicated, a very difficult question, upon which Pratt v. Pratt[25] is a directly relevant authority; and, as we are not deciding that question, I desire to say nothing whatever about it.

Upon the other argument presented on behalf of the wife, the matter seems to me to be as plain as it could be. It is clear, first of all, that it results from the law laid down in Trathan v. Trathan,[26] to which my Lord has referred, that an order revoking a previous maintenance order cannot be made unless there is a complaint applying for that revocation and not applying for something quite different; and, secondly, that the justices, despite the absence of such a complaint, did in fact revoke the order.

In those circumstances it seems to me that what the justices did was done without jurisdiction, and I agree, therefore, with the consequence which my Lord has indicated.

Lord Merriman P. The result will be that the appeal will be allowed by varying the order made by the justices by substituting for the revocation of the order an order that the original order be varied by the reduction from £2 a week to 1s. a month. So far, what we have dealt with is the order made in favour of the husband, that is, the revocation order. I think we have got to dismiss the wife's appeal against the dismissal of her complaint, and we will order that all the words after "it is hereby "adjudged the said complaint is not true" be struck out, and the words "and is hereby dismissed" be inserted.

Appeal against revocation allowed: nominal order substituted.

Solicitors: Kinch & Richardson for T. A. Matthews & Co., Hereford; Corner & Wadsworth, Hereford.

J. B. G.

[25] 43 T.L.R. 523.

[26] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 805.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* REGINA v. MEDICAL APPEAL TRIBUNAL FOR SOUTH WALES DISTRICT. Ex parte GRIFFITHS.

1958
April 16.

Lord Goddard C.J., Hilbery and Donovan JJ.

National Insurance — Industrial injuries benefit — "Paired organs" principle — Whether legs "paired organs" — National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) (Benefit) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1372), reg. 2 (5).

The applicant's left leg was injured during the First World War. In 1955, his right leg was injured in an accident at work, resulting in disablement within the meaning of the National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) Act, 1946. The medical appeal tribunal in assessing his disablement did not take into account the injury to the left leg. The applicant applied for an order of certiorari to quash the tribunal's decision on the ground that in assessing the disability to the right leg, they failed to make an assessment of the disability to the left leg as required by regulation 2 (5) of the National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) (Benefit) Regulations, 1948. On the question whether legs were "paired organs," i.e., were "one of "two similar organs, the functions of which would be interchange- "able or complementary" within regulation 2 (5):—

Held, that legs were "paired organs" and, accordingly, in assessing the disablement to the right leg, in accordance with regulation 2 (5), the injury to the left leg had to be taken into account.

Reg. v. Medical Appeal Tribunal at London, Ex parte Burpitt [1957] 2 Q.B. 584; [1957] 3 W.L.R. 1447; [1957] 2 All E.R. 704 applied.

APPLICATION FOR CERTIORARI.

The applicant, Richard Griffiths, sustained injuries to his left leg as a result of a bullet wound incurred during the First World War. On April 19, 1955, the applicant, while working underground as a colliery repairer, was in an accident in which he sustained injuries to his right leg, resulting in disablement within the meaning of the National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) Act, 1946. In consequence of the accident the applicant claimed and received disablement benefit in accordance with the decisions of various medical boards. He appealed from the final decision of the board to the Medical Appeal Tribunal for South Wales who assessed the disablement in respect of his right leg at 1 per cent. for life. The applicant applied for an order of certiorari to bring up and quash the decision of the tribunal on the ground that the tribunal, while making the assessment of the disability of the right leg did not make any assessment of the disability of the left leg, which they were required by law to do under regulation 2 (5) of the National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) (Benefit) Regulations, 1948.[1]

[1] National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) (Benefit) Regulations, 1948, reg. 2 (5): "Where as a result of "the relevant accident a claimant has "suffered an injury to an organ of his "body which in a person whose "physical condition is normal would "be one of two similar organs, the "functions of which would be inter- "changeable or complementary, in "assessing the extent of the disable- "ment resulting from the relevant

1958

REGINA
v.
MEDICAL APPEAL TRIBUNAL FOR SOUTH WALES
DISTRICT.
Ex parte
GRIFFITHS.

G. G. Baker Q.C. and Norman Francis for the applicant.
Rodger Winn for the respondents.

The cases cited in argument are referred to in the judgment.

LORD GODDARD C.J. This is a motion for certiorari to bring up and quash a decision of the Medical Appeal Tribunal for South Wales dated March 21, 1957, on the ground that the tribunal were bound to make an assessment in respect of a man's left leg which had received injuries in the First World War but which had not been injured in the accident, the accident having only injured his right leg. It was claimed that a separate assessment must be made in respect of the left leg because of the provisions of paragraph (5) of regulation 2 of the National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) (Benefit) Regulations, 1948, which provides: "Where as a result of the relevant accident a claimant has "suffered an injury to an organ of his body which in a person "whose physical condition is normal would be one of two similar "organs, the functions of which would be interchangeable or "complementary, in assessing the extent of the disablement "resulting from the relevant loss of faculty for any period during "which the claimant may be expected to be subject to any dis-"ability resulting from that injury—(a) any disability in respect "of the other organ to which the claimant would in any case "have been subject by reason of a congential defect, or an injury "or disease received or contracted before the relevant accident "and not attributable to any accident against which he was "insured under the Act, shall nevertheless be treated as having "been incurred as a result of the relevant loss of faculty; . . ." I have no doubt that miners and other workmen thoroughly understand that very clear regulation, and it is a great comfort to them.

It is said here that a leg is what is known as a "paired organ," so that, if an injury takes place to one leg, one has to consider whether the other leg is in a damaged condition even though the damage was not the result of the accident. The only question that is submitted to this court is whether legs are to be regarded as "paired organs," that is to say "one of two similar organs, the "functions of which would be interchangeable or complementary."

So far as this court is concerned, it seems to me that this case is entirely governed by Reg. v. Medical Appeal Tribunal at London, ex parte Burpitt,[1] in which this court held that hands were organs, and fingers of one hand which had been injured in an accident were similar organs within this regulation. We decided that the hand or finger was an organ, and we decided that having regard to the definitions of organs which are found in the Oxford English Dictionary. Having so found although one member of the court seemed to have some doubt whether a leg is an organ, it seems to me that it follows if a hand is an organ, a foot is an organ, if a hand is an organ an arm is an organ. If an arm is an organ, a leg is an organ because it comes within the words of the regulation, which are authoritative and which are what the legislative authority must have meant when they were dealing with the words "similar organs." In Reg. v. Medical Appeal Tribunal, ex parte Gilmore,[2] the Court of Appeal quite obviously thought, or at any rate Denning L.J., who gave the leading judgment, thought, that a leg was an organ. He said[3]: "That "regulation deals with an injury to one of two 'paired organs,' "as they are called, such as eyes, legs, and so forth."

"loss of faculty for any period during "which the claimant may be expected "to be subject to any disability "resulting from that injury—(a) any "disability in respect of the other "organ to which the claimant would "in any case have been subject by "reason of a congenital defect, or an "injury or disease received or contracted before the relevant accident "and not attributable to any accident "against which he was insured under "the Act, shall nevertheless be "treated as having been incurred as "a result of the relevant loss of "faculty;"

[1] [1957] 2 Q.B. 584; [1957] 3 W.L.R. 447; [1957] 2 All E.R. 704.

For this reason I think that Burpitt[4] applies to the present case, and therefore the order of certiorari must go on the ground that legs are "paired organs," and therefore a separate assessment must be made in respect of the left leg as well as an assessment in respect of the right. For these reasons the order will go.

HILBERY J. I agree.

DONOVAN J. I agree.

Order of certiorari.

Solicitors: Botterell & Roche for T. S. Edwards & Son, Newport, Monmouth; The Solicitor, Ministry of Pensions.

C. J. E.

[2] [1957] 1 Q.B. 574; [1957] 2 W.L.R. 498; sub nom. In re Gilmore's Application [1957] 1 All E.R. 796.

[3] [1957] 1 Q.B. 574, 581.

[4] [1957] 2 Q.B. 584.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

* In re J. & P. SUSSMAN LTD.

1958
March 10.

Vaisey J.

[00127 of 1958.]

Company—Winding up—Petition—Incorrect spelling of company's name in petition, advertisement and winding-up order—Application for leave to amend—Jurisdiction.

In a creditor's action intended to be against J. & P. Sussmann Ltd. the company's name was incorrectly spelt "J. & P. Sussman "Ltd.," in the writ as it was also in the appearance entered by the company, and in a subsequent winding-up petition, the advertisement and the winding-up order. When, on the usual procedure to record the order on the register, the mistake was discovered and the order could not be recorded against J. & P. Sussmann Ltd. because of the mistake, the winding-up petition was again brought before the court on an application to amend it by correctly spelling the company's name: and another creditor who by then also had recovered judgment and was closely associated with the company asked leave to appear out of time and oppose the application.

1958

J. & P. SUSSMAN LTD., In re.

Held, in refusing leave to appear, that the court could and, accordingly, would, allow amendments to rectify a trifling error of spelling and would make the winding-up order as at the date of this application.

In re L'Industrie Verrière Ltd. [1914] W.N. 222 followed.

PETITION to wind up.

In an action intended and purported to be brought against J. & P. Sussmann Ltd., a creditor of that company inadvertently spelt the name "J. & P. Sussman Ltd.," the mistake being repeated in the appearance entered by the company and in a subsequent winding-up petition, advertisement and winding-up order. That order was made on March 3, 1958, and the mistake was not discovered until, in due course, the usual steps were taken to record the order on the register. There was not a company called J. & P. Sussman Ltd. and the order could not be recorded against J. & P. Sussmann Ltd. Meanwhile, judgment had been obtained against J. & P. Sussmann Ltd. by yet another creditor who was closely associated with that company. When, on March 10, 1958, the petition was again before the court on an application so to amend it that the name of the company be correctly spelt, that other creditor sought leave to appear, out of time, in order to oppose the application.

Ian Edwards-Jones for the petitioning creditor.
Leonard Lewis for the creditor seeking leave to appear.

VAISEY J. This is a petition by Arthur Maiden Ltd. to wind up a company whose correct name is "J. & P. Sussmann Ltd." The petition originally was presented with the name of the company that was to be wound up misspelt and when the matter came before me on March 3, 1958, I made an order to wind up "J. & P. Sussman Ltd." (as misspelt). When the necessary steps were taken to record on the register the winding-up order, it was discovered that there was no company called "J. & P. "Sussman Ltd." The order which I made could not be recorded against the company which did exist, J. & P. Sussmann Ltd.

This petition was based on a judgment debt, and the judgment was for a sum which, with costs, amounted to £447 4s. 9d. The apparent origin of the mistake was undoubtedly the innocent fault of the petitioners, Arthur Maiden Ltd. because they brought their action against a company, the name of which was spelt "Suss-"man" in the action of Arthur Maiden Ltd. against J. & P. Sussman Ltd. If the defendant company J. & P. Sussmann Ltd.

wished to defend the action, as undoubtedly they did, they ought to have entered appearance for J. & P. Sussmann, Ltd. "sued "as J. & P. Sussman Ltd."

I have the duplicate appearance before me and they did not do that. They entered an appearance in the name of J. & P. Sussman Ltd. (as misspelt), not realizing the unfortunate consequences which would ensue from their having adopted the misspelt name.

Having got judgment in that form, Arthur Maiden Ltd. presented a petition based on that judgment to wind up the company which we now know to be J. & P. Sussmann Ltd. At the time this mistake was made another creditor had recovered judgment and the sheriff had gone into possession and various rights, described as vested rights, had been created.

To make the matter a little more complicated perhaps, that other creditor, who now asks me for leave to appear on this petition, is closely associated with J. & P. Sussmann Ltd. and he asks me to treat this petition as if it were a complete nullity, and objects, not improperly for his own purposes, to my permitting any kind of amendment which would give effect to the order which I made on the petition by correcting the name of the company.

I think that the real origin of the mistake was the conduct of this Sussmann company which chose to adopt as its name, and enter an appearance in, the misspelt name. I do not see how the company can be now heard to say that my order against "J. & P. Sussman Ltd." is not effective against J. & P. Sussmann Ltd. (with two "n's").

The decision of Astbury J. in In re L'Industrie Verrière Ltd.[1] seems to give me jurisdiction to make the amendment which would put this matter right. Astbury J. said: "that the rule on "which the court had long acted was that an error in the name "of the company in the advertisement rendered the advertisement "absolutely void." Here of course, there was Sussman (with one "n") in the advertisement as well as in the petition Astbury J. continued saying that: "It was important that this rule should "be strictly enforced, but where the mistake consisted of "a very trifling error in spelling, by which no one could possibly "be misled, and there was no other company of any similar name "on the register, his Lordship thought he had and ought to "exercise his discretion of waiving the formal defect under rule "217 [of the Companies (Winding up) Rules, 1909]. This view "was in accordance with In re E. S. Snell & Sons Ltd.,[2] "where the petition had been presented and advertised as 'In "re E. S. Snell & Son Limited,' and the title was corrected and "the order made without re-advertisement. In these circum-"stances the petition might be amended and the order stand "without any further advertisement."

In the case before Astbury J. the difference was not between "Sons" and "Son" but between "industrie," a French word,

[1] [1914] W.N. 222.

[2] "The Times," Dec. 20, 1911.

1958

J. & P. SUSSMAN LTD., In re.

Vaisey J.

and a non-existent word "industre" leaving out the last letter but one. That is very much the same sort of error as has crept into the proceedings on this occasion. It seems to me that I have jurisdiction to allow this petition to be properly amended.

The amendments in the petition which are required are not only to get the name "Sussmann" correctly spelt wherever it appears, but also to word the reference to the judgment as follows: "The company is indebted to your petitioner" in [the relevant amount] "the amount of a final judgment obtained by "your petitioner against the company in an action in the High "Court of Justice described as 'J. & P. Sussman Ltd.'" It will then state the judgment correctly, but it will indicate that it was obtained in the wrong name.

I think that I am entitled to allow the matter to be put in order in that way and a winding-up order to be made under the authority of In re L'Industrie Verrière Ltd.[3] and to treat the petition as amended. That case justifies me in making, as I do make, the original order for the winding up the company as of today.

The petition need not be re-advertised. I do not give the leave to appear which has been applied for.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Pritchard, Englefield & Co., for Latin & Masheder, Liverpool; B. A. Woolf & Co.

K. R. A. H.

[3] [1914] W.N. 222.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.]

C. C. A.

1958 April 1, 21.

Lord Goddard C.J., Donovan and Havers JJ.

* REGINA v. ST. MARGARETS TRUST LTD.
REGINA v. OLIVER AUTOS LTD.
REGINA v. RICHARD.
REGINA v. HONE.

Criminal Law — Mens rea — Statutory prohibition — Hire-purchase — Finance company unaware that requirements not complied with— Whether guilty of an offence—Hire-Purchase and Credit Sale Agreements (Control) Order, 1956 (S.I. 1956, No. 180), art. 1.

Hire-Purchase—Credit control.

Article 1 of the Hire-Purchase and Credit Sale Agreements (Control) Order, 1956, provides: "A person shall not dispose of "any goods to which this Order applies in pursuance of a hire-"purchase or credit sale agreement . . . unless the requirements "specified in the second schedule hereto are or have been satisfied "in relation to that agreement." The Second Schedule requires, inter alia, that certain specified percentages of the cash price of the goods must be paid before the signing of the agreement. In the case of "mechanically propelled vehicles" 50 per cent. is specified.

A motor-car company accepted less than the required 50 per cent. deposit for the sale of a motor-car on hire-purchase terms. A falsely inflated cash price having been inserted in the agreement, a finance company advanced a higher sum than they would otherwise have done had they known the true cash price and the excess over the true price was used by the motor-car company to make up the deficiency between the deposit paid and the 50 per cent. of the true cash price. The finance company, who were unaware that 50 per cent. of the purchase price had not been paid by the purchaser, were charged with an offence in that they disposed of the motor-car, i.e., parted with the right to possession under circumstances which contravened article 1, and the motor-car company with aiding and abetting the offence:—

Held, that the prohibition in article 1 was absolute and mens rea was not an essential ingredient of the offence, and, accordingly, the finance company, even though acting innocently, were nevertheless guilty of an offence under article 1 and the motor-car company were guilty of aiding and abetting the offence.

Dicta of Kennedy L.J. in Hobbs v. Winchester Corporation [1910] 2 K.B. 471, 483; 26 T.L.R. 557 applied.

APPEALS against convictions.

St. Margarets Trust Ltd., a company who engaged in the business of financing hire-purchase transactions, were charged on an indictment containing seven counts with disposing of goods in circumstances which contravened article 1 of the Hire-Purchase and Credit Sale Agreements (Control) Order, 1956.[1] Oliver Autos Ltd., a company engaged in buying and selling motor-cars, Victor Richard and Sydney John Hone, two of its officers, were charged with aiding and abetting the commission of the offences.

Oliver Autos, in order to obtain an advance of more than 50 per cent. for a motor-vehicle from the finance company, stated a false inflated cash price to the finance company, as a result of which they advanced more than they would have done had they known the true cash price. The motor-car company at the same time, falsely informed the finance company that the customer had already paid 50 per cent. of the inflated cash price, when he had in fact not even paid 50 per cent. of the true cash price. The excess received from the finance company was used to make up the deficiency between the deposit paid by the customer and the 50 per cent. of the true cash price. The finance company were convicted and fined a nominal fine of £5 on each count; the motor-car company were convicted of aiding and abetting the commission of the offences and were fined £50 on each count. Richard

[1] Hire-Purchase and Credit Sale Agreements (Control) Order, 1956, art. 1: "A person shall not dispose "of any goods to which this order "applies in pursuance of a hire-"purchase or credit sale agreement "entered into after February 24, "1955, unless the requirements speci-"fied in the second schedule hereto "are or have been satisfied in rela-"tion to that agreement."

Sched. II: "3. Before the sign-"ing of the agreement actual pay-"ment was made in respect of . . . "goods comprised in the agreement of "not less than an amount equal to "the percentage specified in . . . the "first schedule [50 per cent. in "respect of 'mechanically propelled "'vehicles'] . . ."

C. C. A.
1958
REGINA
v.
ST.
MARGARETS
TRUST LTD.

and Hone were convicted of aiding and abetting, the former being fined £50 on each count and the latter £50 in all.

The finance company appealed on the ground that in the absence of mens rea they could not be convicted of an offence under article 1. The other appellants supported that ground of appeal for if the finance company had committed no offence they themselves had aided and abetted the commission of no offence.

The relevant facts are more fully set out in the judgment.

Gerald Gardiner Q.C. and J. C. Lawrence for the finance company.

S. C. Silkin for the other appellants.

F. H. Lawton Q.C. and Neville Faulks for the Crown.

Somerset v. Wade,[2] in addition to the cases referred to in the judgment, was cited in argument.

Cur. adv. vult.

April 21. DONOVAN J. reading the judgment of the court: On April 1, the court dismissed these appeals for reasons which we now proceed to give.

St. Margarets Trust Ltd., a company whose business comprises the financing of hire-purchase transactions, was convicted at the Central Criminal Court before Diplock J. on September 16, 1957, of seven offences of disposing of goods under circumstances which contravened article 1 of the Hire-Purchase and Credit Sale Agreements (Control) Order, 1956, hereinafter called "the Order." Oliver Autos Ltd., a company engaged in buying and selling motor-cars, and Richard and Hone, two of its officers, were convicted of aiding and abetting the commission of these offences. All the appellants were fined, the fine on St. Margarets Trust Ltd. being the nominal one of £5 for each offence.

The case arose out of what is popularly known as "the credit "squeeze." One aspect of this was a decision by the Government to restrict the amount of credit given in hire-purchase transactions; and to implement this decision the Order was made by the Board of Trade pursuant to its statutory powers in that behalf which the Order recites. Article 1 thereof enacts that "A person shall not dispose of any goods to which this order "applies in pursuance of a hire-purchase or credit sale agreement "entered into after February 24, 1955, unless the requirements "specified in the second schedule hereto are or have been satis-"fied in relation to that agreement."

The requirements contained in the Second Schedule include a requirement that a specified percentage of the cash price of the goods must be paid before the signing of the agreement. The percentage is laid down in the First Schedule to the Order and varies with the class of goods. In the case of "mechanically "propelled vehicles" it is 50 per cent. One effect of the Order is therefore this, that a purchaser of a motor-car on hire-purchase must pay a deposit of at least 50 per cent. of the cash price. Paragraph 3 of the Second Schedule allows the reasonable value of any car tendered in part exchange to be reckoned as part of the deposit.

[2] [1894] 1 Q.B. 574; 10 T.L.R. 313.

The Order considerably restricted, as no doubt it was intended to do, the business of selling motor-cars on hire-purchase or credit terms, a business in which Oliver Autos Ltd. are engaged, and that company, together with Richard and Hone, set themselves out deliberately and dishonestly to break the law. To describe what they did it is unnecessary to go into figures. It is clear that if a customer must pay at least 50 per cent. deposit on a car he wishes to purchase, any hire-purchase finance company like St. Margarets Trust Ltd. can advance no more than the remaining 50 per cent. It follows that the higher the cash price the larger will be this advance. If therefore, the hire-purchase company is told and accepts that the cash price is a higher figure than it really is, the advance will be more than if the true cash price were revealed, and that the excess may be used by the car dealer or the customer to make up the customer's deposit of 50 per cent. of the true cash price, if the customer himself is unable to provide it all. That is what was done in the present case. A false inflated cash price was stated to St. Margarets Trust Ltd., who were thereby induced to advance more than they would had the truth been told to them. They were also informed untruthfully that the customer had already paid his 50 per cent. of this false cash price. In fact he had not even paid the full 50 per cent. of the true cash price, and part of the excessive advance from St. Margarets Trust Ltd. was used to supply the deficiency. In these circumstances since the transaction was carried out in a way which in law made St. Margarets Trust Ltd. the owner of the vehicle, and since the word "dispose" in article 1 of the Order by definition includes the disposal of the right to possession, it follows that St. Margarets Trust Ltd. executed a transaction which was forbidden by article 1, inasmuch as 50 per cent. of the true cash price was not paid before the signing of the hire-purchase agreement. St. Margarets Trust Ltd. admittedly acted, however, quite innocently throughout. The fraud by which they were induced to dispose of the vehicle, although an inadequate deposit had been paid, was the result of a conspiracy between Oliver Autos Ltd., Richard, Hone and the respective customers who wanted the cars.

In these circumstances, not surprisingly, St. Margarets Trust Ltd. argued before the trial judge that in the absence of mens rea on its part, it could not be convicted under article 1 of the Order. Oliver Autos Ltd. and Richard and Hone in turn submitted that as St. Margarets Trust Ltd. in the absence of mens rea on its part had committed no offence they themselves had aided and abetted the commission of no offence. None of the respective customers was charged, they being called instead as

C. C. A.
1958
REGINA
v.
ST.
MARGARETS
TRUST LTD.

witnesses for the Crown. The prosecution, while admitting the absence of mens rea in St. Margarets Trust Ltd., contended that this was irrelevant and that the prohibition contained in article 1 of the Order was absolute in the sense that if a prohibited transaction was entered into an offence was committed even if the person concerned did so innocently. Diplock J. upheld this view. He then granted a certificate of appeal on the ground that in the preceding session of the Central Criminal Court Barry J. had come to an opposite conclusion in a similar case. The present appellants, however, had at the time of Barry J.'s ruling already been committed for trial, so that the prosecution were able, when the matter came before Diplock J., to argue the point afresh.

The language of article 1 of the Order expressly prohibits what was done by St. Margarets Trust Ltd., and if that company is to be held to have committed no offence some judicial modification of the actual terms of the article is essential. The appellants contend that the article should be construed so as not to apply where the prohibited act was done innocently. In other words, that mens rea should be regarded as essential to the commission of the offence. The appellants rely on the presumption that mens rea is essential for the commission of any statutory offence unless the language of the statute, expressly or by necessary implication, negatives such presumption. The matter was thus put by R. S. Wright J. in his well-known judgment in Sherras v. De Rutzen [1]: "There is a presumption that mens rea, an evil intention, or a "knowledge of the wrongfulness of the act, is an essential ingre-"dient in every offence; but that presumption is liable to be dis-"placed either by the words of the statute creating the offence "or by the subject-matter with which it deals, and both must be "considered."

A little nearer to the present day Kennedy L.J. put the matter in this way in Hobbs v. Winchester Corporation [2]: "I think that "there is a clear balance of authority that in construing a modern "statute this presumption as to mens rea does not exist. I think "with great respect to my brother Channell that he has applied to "the construction of this modern statute a maxim which is recog-"nized as applicable to offences at common law, and it may be, "as Stephen J. suggests in Cundy v. Le Cocq,[3] also to offences "under the earlier statutes which are to be treated on the same "basis as offences under the common law. To quote his words, "so far as they have not been quoted—and I accept the view "which Stephen J. there states [4]—'In old time, and as applicable "'to the common law or to earlier statutes, the maxim'—that is, "the maxim that in every criminal offence there must be a guilty "mind—'may have been of general application; but a difference "'has arisen owing to the greater precision of modern statutes. "'It is impossible now, as illustrated by the cases of Reg. v.

[1] [1895] 1 Q.B. 918, 921; 11 T.L.R. 369.
[2] [1910] 2 K.B. 471, 483; 26 T.L.R. 557.
[3] (1884) 13 Q.B.D. 207.
[4] Ibid. 207, 210.

" ' Prince[5] and Reg. v. Bishop,[6] to apply the maxim generally " ' to all statutes, and the substance of all the reported cases is " ' that it is necessary to look at the object of each Act that is " ' under consideration to see whether and how far knowledge is " ' of the essence of the offence created.' " What Kennedy L.J. is here saying, we think, is that modern statutes create offences where knowledge on the part of an offender is not essential, and that accordingly there is no universal prior presumption of mens rea. Each statute must be construed according to its terms and its object. If so construed mens rea is not expressly or by necessary implication excluded, it is then that it will be regarded as essential.

Other cases cited in the course of the argument included Nichols v. Hall,[7] Reg. v. Tolson,[8] Brooks v. Mason,[9] Brend v. Wood,[10] Harding v. Price,[11] Reynolds v. G. H. Austin & Sons Ltd.,[12] Mousell Bros. v. London and North-Western Ry.,[13] Quality Dairies (York) Ltd. v. Pedley.[14]

There is no difference for present purposes between a statute and a statutory instrument and the question for determination is therefore this: Do the words of article 1 of the Order considered together with the object of the Order make the prohibited act an offence, even though the doer of the act had no guilty mind and acted innocently?

The words of the Order themselves are an express and unqualified prohibition of the acts done in this case by St. Margarets Trust Ltd. The object of the Order was to help to defend the currency against the peril of inflation which, if unchecked, would bring disaster upon the country. There is no need to elaborate this. The present generation has witnessed the collapse of the currency in other countries and the consequent chaos, misery and widespread ruin. It would not be at all surprising if Parliament, determined to prevent similar calamities here, enacted measures whch it intended to be absolute prohibition of acts which might increase the risk in however small a degree. Indeed, that would be the natural expectation. There would be little point in enacting that no one should breach the defences against a flood, and at the same time excusing anyone who did it innocently. For these reasons we think that article 1 of the Order should receive a literal construction, and that the ruling of Diplock J. was correct.

It is true that Parliament has prescribed imprisonment as one of the punishments that may be inflicted for a breach of the Order, and this circumstance is urged in support of the appellants' argument that Parliament intended to punish only the guilty.

[5] (1875) L.R. 2 C.C.R. 154.
[6] (1880) 5 Q.B.D. 259.
[7] (1873) L.R. 8 C.P. 322.
[8] (1889) 23 Q.B.D. 168; 5 T.L.R. 464.
[9] [1902] 2 K.B. 743; 19 T.L.R. 4.
[10] (1946) 62 T.L.R. 462.
[11] [1948] 1 K.B. 695; 64 T.L.R. 111; [1948] 1 All E.R. 283.
[12] [1951] 2 K.B. 135; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 614; [1951] 1 All E.R. 606.
[13] [1917] 2 K.B. 836.
[14] [1952] 1 K.B. 275; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 376; [1952] 1 All E.R. 380.

C. C. A.
1958
REGINA
v.
ST.
MARGARETS
TRUST LTD.

We think it is the better view that, having regard to the gravity of the issues, Parliament intended the prohibition to be absolute, leaving the court to use its powers to inflict nominal punishment or none at all in appropriate cases.

It may also be true that hire-purchase transactions, in order to avoid difficulties under the Bills of Sale Acts, are carried through in such a way that the finance companies concerned become easy victims of such a fraud as was here perpetrated on St. Margarets Trust Ltd., for they have no control over the car dealer or the customer. But if Parliament enacts that a certain thing shall not be done it is not necessarily an excuse to say: "I carry on "my business in such a way that I may do this thing unwittingly "and therefore should suffer no penalty if I transgress." The answer in some cases is that the importance of not doing what is prohibited is such that the method of business must be re-arranged so as to give the necessary knowledge. The present, we think, is such a case.

Stress was also laid during the course of the argument for the appellants on the language of article 3 of the Order which prohibits any person from causing or permitting goods owned by him to be in the possession of another by virtue of a hire-purchase agreement under certain circumstances. It is said that the words "cause or permit" involve that mens rea is essential to the commission of an offence under article 3, and it is not to be supposed that the same order requires mens rea for the commission of an offence under one article and not under another. The argument is obviously double-edged: for the prosecution might argue that the presence of the words "cause or permit" in article 3 shows that their omission in article 1 was deliberate and that, therefore, the inference regarding mens rea is the opposite to that contended for by the appellants. It is not, however, possible to deal adequately with the argument without knowing exactly the type of transaction envisaged by article 3, and this seems to be in doubt. It might be of such a type that in contradistinction to the transactions covered by article 1 it would be reasonable to imply that mens rea was a necessary ingredient of any transgression. But regarding the matter purely as one of construction we are not prepared to say that the presence of the words "cause or permit" in article 3 outweighs the considerations we have referred to as bearing on the construction of article 1.

It should not be inferred from what we have said that we are deciding that mens rea is required by the language of article 3. We leave that point entirely open, to be decided if and when the issue directly arises, which it does not do in the present case.

Appeals dismissed.

Solicitors: Dennison, Horne & Co.; Lewis Silkin and Partners; The Solicitor, Board of Trade.

C. J. E.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* BAYLIS BAXTER LTD. v. SABATH.

C. A.

1958
April 15, 16.

Jenkins, Parker and Pearce L.JJ.

[1955 B. No. 2448.]

Costs—Appeal—Jurisdiction—Judgment for plaintiffs at trial—Plaintiffs refused costs because of unsatisfactory witness—Appeal as to costs without leave of judge—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 49), ss. 31 (1), 50 (1)—R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 1.

Costs—Set-off—Counterclaim or set-off—Counterclaim amounting to equitable set-off.

The plaintiff company brought an action against the defendant, a former employee, to recover £1,253, said to be a debt due on a running account. The defendant alleged that repayment of the debt was to be contingent on the receipt by him of a sum claimed in respect of certain expropriated assets abroad, and counterclaimed a sum of £1,083 said to be due to him as arrears of a salary of £500 a year.

At the trial the principal witness for the plaintiff company was one P. who controlled the company though he was not a director. McNair J. rejected much of the evidence given by P. but gave judgment for the plaintiff company on the claim and counterclaim on the ground that the defendant had not made out his case on either issue. McNair J. stated that he attached little weight or credibility to the evidence of either P. or the defendant; he refused to make any order as to costs in view of the impression he had formed of P.'s evidence, and refused leave to appeal on that issue. On an appeal by the plaintiff company:—

Held, that as the exercise of the judge's discretion had been based on matters connected with the case, the Court of Appeal was prohibited by section 31 (1) (h) of the Judicature Act, 1925,[1] from entertaining the appeal.

Observations of Lord Cave in Donald Campbell and Co. Ltd. v. Pollak [1927] A.C. 732, at p. 811; 43 T.L.R. 787 applied.

Hudsons Ltd. v. De Halpert (1913) 108 L.T. 416; 29 T.L.R. 257 overruled.

Hong v. A. & R. Brown Ltd. [1948] 1 K.B. 515; [1948] 1 All E.R. 185; sub nom. Wong Kwok Hong v. Brown (A. & R.) Ltd. and Runcimans (London) Ltd., 64 T.L.R. 132 considered.

Per Jenkins L.J. In a case where it is sought to appeal, without leave, from an order relating solely to costs, such an application should not be entertained in view of the express terms of section 31 (1) (h) of the Judicature Act, 1925, unless the circumstances are such that this court can say, in effect: "In this case the judge did not "in truth exercise his discretion at all" . . . That means that in order that an appeal may properly be entertained the case in question must be one of the type to which Lord Cave referred by way of illustration where the decision of the judge was based on some misconduct wholly unconnected with the cause of action or on some wholly irrelevant consideration.

[1] Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 31: "(1) "No appeal shall lie— . . . (h) without the leave of the court or judge "making the order, from an order of "the High Court or any judge thereof "made with the consent of the parties "or as to costs only which by law are "left to the discretion of the court."

C. A.

1958

Baylis Baxter Ltd. v. Sabath.

Per Parker L.J. In a case such as this, where the counterclaim amounts to an equitable set-off, it is only right that the judge should deal with the claim and cross-claim as one in relation to costs.

Appeal from McNair J.

The statement of facts is taken substantially from the judgment of Jenkins L.J.

The plaintiffs, Baylis Baxter Ltd., appealed from a judgment of McNair J. dated June 14, 1957, the appeal relating only to the terms of that judgment in regard to costs. The action was commenced by specially indorsed writ for the sum of £1,253 10s., moneys claimed as due from the defendant to the plaintiff company on a running account kept with the company by the defendant. The defendant's defence was to the effect that his indebtedness on the running account had included loans totalling £2,500 which were made on terms that they were only to be repayable when a claim which the defendant had, or claimed that he had, against the Czech Foreign Compensation Commission in respect of the expropriation of his assets in Czechoslovakia, should have been paid in full. Secondly, the defendant alleged that he was employed by the plaintiff company at a salary of £500 a year, and he claimed £1,083 13s. 4d. as due to him in respect of arrears of that salary; and having paid £169 6s. 8d. to the plaintiff company after action brought he said that there was nothing due to them because the balance of £1,083 13s. 4d. represented the arrears of salary claimed by him to be due to himself from the plaintiff company, for which amount he entered a counterclaim.

At the conclusion of the hearing, the judge found for the plaintiff company both on the claim and on the counterclaim, and gave judgment in favour of the plaintiffs for the £1,083 13s. 4d., representing the balance due (according to the plaintiff company) after allowance had been made for the payment of the £169 6s. 8d. since action brought. But although the judge held the plaintiff company entitled to succeed, he held that no order should be made as to costs. It was contended for the plaintiff company that the judge erred in dealing with the costs in that way, and that there was no sufficient reason for departing from the ordinary rule that costs should follow the event.

The history of the matter involved two companies, namely, the plaintiff company itself and another company called British Overseas and Export Trading Co. Ltd. The businesses of these companies were associated, and the principal shareholder was one Otto Popper, who was not a director. The defendant was employed by one or other or both of these companies on terms which it was unnecessary to define with precision. The defendant apparently had a drawing account with both companies. It seemed that the £2,500 already referred to was originally advanced by the British Overseas and Export Trading Co. Ltd., which apparently also advanced to the defendant a further sum of £1,200. It appeared that these sums were subsequently transferred to the debit of the defendant's drawing account with the plaintiff company by means of a payment in account by the plaintiff company to the British Overseas and Export Trading Co. Ltd. of the appropriate amount. The substantial issues in the case were: first, whether the loan of £2,500 was made on the condition mentioned, to the effect that it was only to be repayable on payment of the defendant's claim against the Foreign Compensation Commission; and secondly, whether, as the defendant claimed, he was employed by the plaintiff company at a salary of £500 a year, the allegation that he was so employed being the basis of his counterclaim for £1,083 13s. 4d. But the first issue was complicated by the fact that the plaintiffs alleged, and sought to prove, not merely that the loan was made without the condition relied on by the defendant, but that the loan was never in fact made at all; and the plaintiffs further alleged and sought to prove that there was no transfer of the amounts owing to the British Overseas and Export Trading Co. Ltd. from the defendant with the assent of either of the companies or of Popper.

The judge, on the issue as to the £2,500 loan, wholly rejected Popper's evidence to the effect that there was no loan at all; and he also wholly rejected Popper's evidence that there was no transfer of this indebtedness to the plaintiff company; but he found in favour of the plaintiff company on this issue on the ground that the bargain included nothing amounting to a legally binding condition to the effect that the liability to repay was only to arise when the defendant's claim against the Foreign Compensation Commission should have been met. On the other hand, the judge rejected the defendant's evidence in regard to his employment by the plaintiff company at the salary of £500 a year; and, in general, he attached little weight or credibility to the evidence of Popper, and likewise attached little weight or credibility to the evidence of the defendant.

In dealing with the question of costs McNair J. said: "As "regards costs, Mr. McDonnell, I have formed a view unfavour- "able to your clients"—that is, the plaintiff company—"as "regards the evidence of Mr. Popper, which I have expressed in "the course of my judgment, and I think that should be "reflected in the matter of costs. I have in mind to say that "there should be no costs either way. I propose to say judgment "to be entered for the sum indicated without costs in view of the "impression I have formed as to Mr. Popper's evidence." Then Mr. McDonnell said: "Might I address your Lordship on that? "Your Lordship has formed a no more favourable view of the "evidence of the defendant. In my respectful submission the "unfavourable view that your Lordship has formed of both Mr. "Popper and Mr. Sabath should cancel each other out. In my "submission the proper order would be the usual one that, as the "plaintiff has succeeded . . ."—and then the judge said: "The "plaintiffs have not succeeded by reason of any evidence they "have brought before me." Then Mr. McDonnell said: "They "have succeeded in this sense, with respect, my Lord, that a

C. A.
1958
BAYLIS BAXTER LTD. v. SABATH.

"dispute having arisen between the parties and unsatisfactory "evidence having been given on behalf of the plaintiffs and by "the defendant, the plaintiffs' claim is found to be well-founded, "and in these circumstances I would submit that you should not "differ from the usual result that costs should follow." Then McNair J. said: "That is the usual result when a claim is "supported by honest evidence." He refused leave to appeal.

D. L. McDonnell for the plaintiffs.
A. R. Barrowclough for the defendant.

Cases cited in argument, not referred to in the judgments: Ottway v. Jones [2]; Evans v. Bartlam [3]; Metropolitan Asylum District v. Hill [4]; Huxley v. West London Extension Railway Co. [5]; Yelland v. Taylor [6]; Fane v. Fane. [7]

JENKINS L.J., after stating the facts: That is how the matter was left by the judge. An application was made to him for leave to appeal, which was refused; and, in the circumstances I have stated, Mr. McDonnell, for the plaintiff company, now invites us to hold that we should entertain this appeal and should conclude that the judge was in error in making no order as to costs and should have given the plaintiff company their costs of the action and of the counterclaim.

Mr. McDonnell is met at the outset with certain statutory difficulties arising under the Judicature Act, 1925. I should first refer to section 50, which provides, in subsection (1): "Subject "to the provisions of this Act and to rules of court and to the "express provisions of any other Act, the costs of and incidental "to all proceedings in the Supreme Court . . . shall be in the "discretion of the court or judge, and the court or judge shall "have full power to determine by whom and to what extent the "costs are to be paid . . ."

The other section of the Act to which I should refer is section 31; but before doing that I should mention Order 65, r. 1 of the Rules of the Supreme Court. That rule provides: "Subject to "the provisions of the Act and these Rules, the costs of and "incident to all proceedings in the Supreme Court, . . . shall be "in the discretion of the court or judge . . ."

If the matter rested there, Mr. McDonnell would be faced with the difficulty usually attendant upon an appeal against a decision arrived at by a judge in exercise of some discretionary jurisdiction vested in him. But the matter does not rest there, for section 31 of the Act provides, by subsection (1), "No appeal "shall lie"—then there are a number of lettered sub-paragraphs, and, in particular, sub-paragraph (h), "without the leave of the

[2] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 706; [1955] 2 All E.R. 585.
[3] [1937] A.C. 473; 53 T.L.R. 689; [1937] 2 All E.R. 646.
[4] (1880) 5 App.Cas. 582.
[5] (1889) 14 App.Cas. 26; 5 T.L.R. 355.
[6] [1957] 1 W.L.R. 459; [1957] 1 All E.R. 627.
[7] (1879) 13 Ch.D. 228.

"court or judge making the order, from an order of the High "Court or any judge thereof made with the consent of the parties "or as to costs only which by law are left to the discretion of the "court." So, the position being that the judge had made an order as to costs which it was within his discretion to make, and having refused leave to appeal, according to the express terms of section 31 (1) (h), no appeal lies to this court.

Mr. McDonnell answers that in this way: he says that, on the authorities, notwithstanding the express language of section 31 (1) (h), it is open to an appellant who is dissatisfied with an order as to costs, to appeal without leave where he can show that the judge exercised his discretion wrongly, either because in exercising it he had regard to wholly irrelevant matters or because he exercised it without any material to support his exercise of it in the particular way. He invites us to hold that this is one of the exceptional cases in which an appeal should be entertained although leave to appeal has been refused by the judge. In support of this argument, Mr. McDonnell said that there were two witnesses whose credibility was in question: on the one side Popper and on the other side the defendant, Sabath; and he says that the judge found both these witnesses unreliable and Sabath no more reliable than Popper: accordingly, he says that the unreliability of the witnesses is a circumstance to be put in the scale on either side and that the shortcomings of the two witnesses in this competition, so to speak, cancel each other out, so that Popper's lack of credibility did not provide any material for an exercise by the judge of his discretion in any manner other than the usual one of directing that the costs should follow the event.

With respect to Mr. McDonnell, I am not impressed by that argument, for, as it seems to me, once it is conceded that the credibility of the witnesses and the conduct of the parties in regard to the case they allege and seek to prove is a relevant matter for a judge to take into account in dealing with the question of costs, any comparison to be made of the conduct or misconduct of the parties on each side is a matter for the judge, and he is entitled to weigh one against the other and if he finds that one party has behaved particularly badly, although in the end successful in his claim, that is a matter which he can take into account, even though the conduct of the other party might appear to be equally or almost equally culpable. The judge has seen and heard the witnesses and attended to the whole course of the proceedings, and he is obviously in the best position to decide whether one side has behaved so badly in the matter as to justify that party being deprived of costs.

Then Mr. McDonnell said—and he supported it by the authority of Hudsons Ltd. v. De Halpert[1]—that although Popper (as I understand it) admittedly controlled the plaintiff

[1] (1913) 108 L.T. 416; 29 T.L.R. 257.

C. A.
1958
BAYLIS BAXTER LTD. v. SABATH.
Jenkins L.J.

company, and although it was for him to decide what case the plaintiff company should allege and how it was to be proved, nevertheless the fact that he gave false evidence could not be held against the company in any way, inasmuch as the company was not Popper, and to penalize the company for Popper's misconduct would be to penalize one person for the fault of another. It is true that support for that proposition is to be found in the case of Hudsons Ltd. v. De Halpert[2]; but for my part I cannot accept the view of the Divisional Court in that case if it is intended to convey that in no case can a company be penalized in the matter of costs where those responsible for the conduct of its affairs present a false case and seek to support it by false evidence. That is a proposition which I cannot accept, with all respect to the Divisional Court, who appear to have held to the contrary in Hudsons' case.

Mr. McDonnell and Mr. Barrowclough, in full and careful arguments on each side, referred us to many of the authorities dealing with this or kindred topics. The case on which Mr. McDonnell mainly relied, apart from Hudsons Ltd. v. De Halpert, was Hong v. A. & R. Brown Ltd.[3] He cited that case for the general observations made by Lord Greene M.R. as to the effect of section 31 (1) (h) of the Judicature Act, 1925. I can confine my citation to Lord Greene's statement of the general principle. The passage to which I refer is at the opening of Lord Greene's judgment.[4] He said: "This is an appeal on "a matter of costs only. Such an appeal cannot be brought "without the leave of the court or judge by reason of section "31, subs. (1) (h) of the Judicature Act, 1925. The statement "that such an appeal cannot be brought 'without the leave of "'the judge' requires this qualification; that, in as much as the "costs are in the discretion of the judge, it is always possible to "attack his order if it can be shown that the discretion has never "really been exercised. In that expression I would include two "matters, each of which nullifies the purported exercise of a "judicial discretion. One matter is the failure to act as a judge "should act, that is to say a failure to act judicially; the other "is what is really a branch of the same thing, namely, the pur-"ported exercise of the discretion without any materials on which "a judge could exercise it."

Applying those general principles to the case now before the court, Mr. McDonnell said that in the present case the judge failed to act as a judge should act—that is to say, failed to act judicially—and further, purported to exercise his discretion without any materials on which his exercise of it could be based. Mr. McDonnell said, in effect, that the judge failed to act judicially in that he founded himself upon the conduct of Popper in giving his evidence, and that this was not a matter by reference to which the judge, acting judicially, could properly determine the question of costs adversely to the plaintiff company.

[2] 108 L.T. 416.

[3] [1948] 1 K.B. 515; [1948] 1 All E.R. 185; sub nom. Wong Kwok Hong v. Brown (A. & R.) Ltd. and Runcimans (London) Ltd., 64 T.L.R. 132.

[4] [1948] 1 K.B. 515, 517.

Then Mr. McDonnell says that there was no material on which the judge could exercise his discretion in the way he did as there was nothing on which he could found himself apart from the way in which the opposing witnesses gave their evidence, a consideration which, as I have already put it, cancelled itself out because both sides were equally culpable.

That is Hong v. A. & R. Brown Ltd.,[5] and that is the way in which Mr. McDonnell seeks to use it. But any discussion of this topic at this date must inevitably begin with a reference to the case in the House of Lords of Donald Campbell & Company Ltd. v. Pollak.[6] In that case the earlier decisions were reviewed, particularly by Lord Cave in a very full speech; and quite clearly the intention and effect of the decision was to curtail the latitude which in earlier cases had been held to exist in the matter of entertaining appeals on the question of costs notwithstanding the provisions of section 31 (1) (h) of the Judicature Act, 1925, or its precursors in earlier Acts. I think I need only read from Lord Cave's speech his summary of the position.[7] Lord Cave said this: "My Lords, it appears to me that the true view is substantially that taken by Lord Sterndale in the above quoted passage in his judgment in Ritter v. Godfrey,[8] although I would express it in somewhat different language. A successful defendant in a non-jury case has no doubt, in the absence of special circumstances, a reasonable expectation of obtaining an order for the payment of his costs by the plaintiff; but he has no right to costs unless and until the court awards them to him, and the court has an absolute and unfettered discretion to award or not to award them. This discretion, like any other discretion, must of course be exercised judicially, and the judge ought not to exercise it against the successful party except for some reason connected with the case. Thus, if—to put a hypothesis which in our courts would never in fact be realized—a judge were to refuse to give a party his costs on the ground of some misconduct wholly unconnected with the cause of action or of some prejudice due to his race or religion or (to quote a familiar illustration) to the colour of his hair, then a court of appeal might well feel itself compelled to intervene. But when a judge, deliberately intending to exercise his discretionary powers, has acted on facts connected with or leading up to the litigation which have been proved before him or which he has himself observed during the progress of the case, then it seems to me that a court of appeal, although it may deem his reasons insufficient and may disagree with his conclusion, is prohibited by the statute from entertaining an appeal from it."

[5] [1948] 1 K.B. 515, 517.
[6] [1927] A.C. 732; 43 T.L.R. 787.
[7] [1927] A.C. 732, 811.
[8] [1920] 2 K.B. 47.

C. A.
1958
BAYLIS BAXTER LTD. v. SABATH.
Jenkins L.J.

Now the statement of principle contained in the judgment of Lord Greene in Hong v. Brown[9] is more shortly expressed than is the passage I have just read from Lord Cave's speech: it is less explicit and therefore might be capable of a wider interpretation: but for my part I cannot accept the view that Lord Greene intended to depart in any way from the conclusion expressed by Lord Cave in that passage. Accordingly, I regard that passage as providing the test to be applied in the present case and in other similar cases; and in so far as Hudsons' case[10] or any other of the earlier cases is inconsistent with Donald Campbell & Co. Ltd. v. Pollak,[11] then in my view such case cannot be regarded as authoritative.

Applying Lord Cave's test in the present case, it seems to me that the present appeal must fail. It cannot be said here that the judge's decision as to costs was not based on "some reason "connected with the case." It was based on the view, unfavourable to the plaintiff company, which the judge had formed as regards the evidence of Popper. That, I have no doubt, was a reason "connected with the case," and quite clearly not one of those entirely extraneous or irrelevant reasons to which Lord Cave referred. This too, I think, was a case in which the judge, "deliberately intending to exercise his discretionary powers, acted "on facts connected with or leading up to the litigation which "had been proved before him or which he had himself observed "during the progress of the case." I think that the judge here, during the progress of the case, observed the unsatisfactory character of Popper's evidence and considered that this was a matter proper to be taken into account in determining the incidence of costs. If that is right, then the consequence follows that this court is prohibited by the statute from entertaining an appeal from the judge's order, even though this court might regard his reasons as insufficient and might disagree with his conclusion.

I should add a reference to the case of "The Young Sid,"[12] in which Scrutton L.J. emphasized the restrictive character of the test laid down in Donald Campbell & Company Ltd. v. Pollak.[13]

I think that the matter as it now stands really comes to this, that in a case of this sort—that is to say, in a case in which it is sought to appeal, without leave, from an order relating solely to costs—such an application should not be entertained in view of the express terms of section 31 (1) (h) of the Judicature Act, 1925, unless the circumstances are such that this court can say, in effect, "In this case the judge did "not in truth exercise his discretion at all." I think it is only in a case of that kind that this court has jurisdiction to entertain such an appeal. That means that in order that an appeal may properly be entertained the case in question must be one

[9] [1948] 1 K.B. 515, 517.
[10] 108 L.T. 416.
[11] [1927] A.C. 732.
[12] [1929] P. 190, 194; 45 T.L.R. 389.
[13] [1927] A.C. 732, 811.

of the type to which Lord Cave referred by way of illustration where the decision of the judge was based on some misconduct wholly unconnected with the cause of action or on some wholly irrelevant consideration such as the colour of the parties' hair—in other words, one might say, cases in which the decision has been purely arbitrary as distinct from judicial, or has been based on considerations which are clearly wholly irrelevant to the determination of the question as to the incidence of costs. But to my mind it is a wrong method of approach to begin by criticizing the order made by the judge on the ground that it was not a proper exercise of the discretion, and, founding oneself on that, to go on to say that, because the mode in which discretion was exercised is open to criticism, therefore the case is one in which an appeal will lie without the leave of the judge notwithstanding the clear injunction to the contrary contained in the section.

It is only, in my judgment, in exceptional cases of the kind that I have endeavoured to describe that such an appeal can lie at all; and notwithstanding the clear and persuasive argument of Mr. McDonnell he has failed to convince me that the present case is a case of that exceptional character. What view this court might have formed of the manner in which the judge exercised his discretion if the matter was open to review it is entirely unnecessary and irrelevant to say. In my view this appeal should be dismissed, simply on the ground that it is not an appeal which can properly be entertained having regard to the terms of the statute. Accordingly, I would dismiss this appeal.

PARKER L.J. I agree; and I would only add a few words in deference to Mr. McDonnell's argument.

Section 31 (1) (h) of the Judicature Act, 1925, prohibits any appeal on costs only, in a case where costs are left to the discretion of the judge, unless leave is given by the judge himself. No provision is there made for leave being given by this court in a case where the judge has refused leave, and, that being so, the section prima facie imposes an absolute prohibition in such a case. This prohibition is a re-enactment of a similar prohibition which appeared in section 49 of the Act of 1873; and while this court thereafter, in order to mitigate the severity of the prohibition, opened the door rather wide to appeals, that door was firmly closed by the decision of the House of Lords in Donald Campbell & Company Ltd. v. Pollak.[14] As a result of that decision, the only cases where an appeal on costs only can be brought without leave are the extreme and, happily, rare cases where it can be said that the judge had no materials

[14] [1927] A.C. 732, 811.

C. A.
1958
BAYLIS BAXTER LTD. v. SABATH.
Parker L.J.

connected with the case on which he could exercise his discretion in the way he did. In the passage to which my Lord has referred,[15] Scrutton L.J., in his usual way, stated the matter emphatically and concisely. Mr. McDonnell, however, relied to a large extent on the words of Lord Greene M.R. (to which my Lord has also referred) in Hong v. A. & R. Brown Ltd.[16] For my part I think that, in referring to the word "judicially" and in saying that the discretion must be exercised judicially, he is using that word in contradistinction to "arbitrarily," in the sense of the illustrations given by Lord Cave in Donald Campbell & Company Ltd. v. Pollak.[17]

That being the position, it seems to me quite impossible in this case to say that there was nothing connected with the case which would enable the judge to deprive the plaintiffs of their costs. He clearly took a very unfavourable view of Popper and found that his evidence was unreliable. It is true that he also found that the defendant's evidence was unreliable. But that does not mean that the adverse view of Popper's evidence was, as it were, cancelled out. Indeed, it is clear that Popper in his evidence was charging the defendant with dishonesty, for which there was no justification whatsoever. Even so, Mr. McDonnell goes on to argue that the company and Popper were two separate legal entities and that the judge in effect was penalizing the company for the sins of Popper; and in that connection he referred to the case of Hudsons Ltd. v. De Halpert.[18] For my part, like my Lord, I very much doubt whether the decision in that case, in so far as it is based on that principle, can be correct. A company can only give evidence by its responsible officers, and if one of those officers gives evidence which is subject to criticism then it seems to me that the company itself must accept responsibility.

Finally, Mr. McDonnell pointed out, with some force, that in regard to the counterclaim at any rate Popper's evidence was wholly accepted, whereas the defendant's evidence was wholly rejected; and in those circumstances he says that there could be no material upon which the judge could deprive the plaintiffs of the costs of the counterclaim. I think for myself that the answer to that is that in a case such as this, where the counterclaim amounts to an equitable set-off, it is only right that the judge should deal with the claim and cross-claim as one, and looked at in that way it seems to me that no valid distinction can be drawn between the way in which he should exercise his discretion in regard to the claim and in regard to the counterclaim.

[15] [1929] P. 190, 194.
[16] [1948] 1 K.B. 515, 517.
[17] [1927] A.C. 732, 811.
[18] 108 L.T. 416.

For those reasons, and for the reasons given by my Lord, I also would dismiss this appeal.

C. A.
1958
BAYLIS BAXTER LTD. v. SABATH.

PEARCE L.J. I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: P. Cromwell; Herbert Oppenheimer, Nathan & Vandyk.

F. R. D.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* WILLIAMSON v. BRITISH BOXING BOARD OF CONTROL (1929) AND OTHERS.

1958
April 23.
Devlin J.

PRACTICE NOTE.

Practice and Procedure—Settlement of action—Duty to inform Crown Office—Duty on all parties—R.S.C., Ord. 36, r. 29 (6).[1]

APPLICATION.

In an action by the plaintiff against three defendants, the first two defendants were dismissed from the action on failure of the plaintiff to deliver particulars, and on April 1, 1958, the third defendant obtained an order from Master Lawrence dismissing the action against him for want of prosecution. The case was down to be heard by a jury and was in the list for hearing on April 15. On being informed of the discontinuance of the action, Devlin J. ordered that the case should be put in the list again so that he might determine what order should be made.

Basil Garland for the plaintiff.
R. A. Gatehouse for the first and second defendants.
G. E. Janner for the third defendant.

DEVLIN J. This is the second case in this list in which notification has not been given to the Crown Office of some order that has been made in chambers which has affected the hearing of the action. In the case which I dealt with the other day[2] it was an order made by the master taking the case out of the term's list. In the present case the only remaining defendant in the action

[1] R.S.C., Ord. 36, r. 29 (6): "It "shall be the duty of all parties to "any cause or matter entered in any "of the . . . lists to furnish without "delay to the officer by whom the "list is kept all available information "relating to any settlement, or likeli-"hood of settlement, of the cause or "matter, or affecting the estimated "length of the trial."

[2] Kloss v. Curtis, The Times, April 18, 19, 1958.

1958

Williamson v. British Boxing Board of Control (1929) (Practice Note).

Devlin J.

obtained an order by which the action against him was to be dismissed for want of prosecution, under R.S.C., Ord. 31, r. 21. In this case as in the last one with which I dealt, the Crown Office was not given the necessary information to enable it to take the case out of the list, and, as in the last case, the solicitors have blamed each other, each one saying that it was the duty of the other to take the necessary steps to inform the Crown Office.

The overriding rule in this matter is Order 36, r. 29 (6), and that makes it abundantly plain that it is the duty of both solicitors to take the necessary steps, and that it is not open to either of them to advance the argument that has been advanced in this case that the responsibility lay wholly on the other one. If solicitors want to be safe in this matter the proper course to take is for each one of them to make sure that the Crown Office is notified; and it is because of the importance of the Crown Office being notified and of the List being kept in order that the rule, as I apprehend it, places the duty fairly and squarely upon both solicitors. It is the duty, therefore, of both of them either to make the communication direct themselves or to see and satisfy themselves that the communication is made on behalf of them both by one or other of the parties. If that rule is not fulfilled solicitors lay themselves open to being made to pay personally the costs that have been thrown away as a result of the waste of public time.

What I am doing today is to investigate where the responsibility lies. While, as I have said, it is the duty of them both, it may well be that the blame may fall more heavily upon one rather than the other. In this case I think it falls upon the solicitors for the third-named defendant. It was they who obtained the order which dismissed the action for want of prosecution. It has been argued on their behalf that all they had to do was to send a copy of that order to the plaintiff and to leave it to the plaintiff who had had his action dismissed to take the necessary steps to bring it to the attention of the Crown Office. I do not accept that view at all. I think it is the duty of the solicitor who obtains the order in the first place to see that it is filed with the Crown Office so that the action can be removed from the list. It might very well be that there was a plaintiff in person, a plaintiff who had not appeared at all and was not prosecuting the action because he had disappeared from the country or something of that sort; or, again, it might very well be that time was extremely short and that the matter could not wait until the order had been drawn up and sent through the post and left for the plaintiff to deal with. I think that the burden lay primarily upon the solicitors for the third-named defendant. While the plaintiff's solicitors cannot entirely be exonerated, in this particular matter, where the responsibility is principally upon the third-named defendant's solicitors, I think it is right that they should have to pay the costs thrown away.

Accordingly I order that they should pay personally the costs thrown away in this matter. Those costs will include the costs of bringing the twelve gentlemen of the jury here, whose time was entirely wasted; they will include all the costs of this application; and they will include the costs of the proceedings before me when the case came into the list, since the plaintiff very properly, in those circumstances, thought it right to be represented by counsel so that counsel might explain to me what the position was.

1958

WILLIAMSON v. BRITISH BOXING BOARD OF CONTROL (1929) (PRACTICE NOTE).

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Lewis & Shaw; Field, Roscoe & Co.; Barnett Janner & Davis.

J. D. P.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* GUINNESS TRUST (LONDON FUND) FOUNDED 1890 REGISTERED 1902 v. WEST HAM BOROUGH COUNCIL.

SAME v. SAME.

1958
April 22.

Lord Goddard C.J., Hilbery and Donovan JJ.

Rates and Rating—Profit—Housing trust—Trust to provide decent housing for poorer classes—Trustees required to obtain return on capital of trust fund and increase fund—Whether trust established or conducted for profit—Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955 (4 & 5 Eliz. 2, c. 9), s. 8 (1) (a).

The trust deed of a housing trust showed that its main object was to provide proper dwelling accommodation for the poorer classes of London. The trustees were required by expending the original capital of the trust fund on objects of a permanent character returning a fair low rate of interest to keep the fund intact and increase it so as to make more assets available for the purposes of the trust. The trust claimed that a hereditament which it owned and occupied and a flat which it let to a tenant were entitled to rating relief under section 8 of the Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955,[1] as premises "occupied for the purposes of "an organization (whether corporate or unincorporate) which is not "established or conducted for profit and whose main objects are "charitable . . .":—

[Reported by NORMAN PRIMOST, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

[1] Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955, s. 8: "(1) This section applies to the following hereditaments, that is to "say—(a) any hereditament occupied "for the purposes of an organization "(whether corporate or unincorporate) "which is not established or conducted "for profit and whose main objects are "charitable or are otherwise concerned "with the advancement of religion, "education or social welfare."

1958

Guinness Trust (London Fund) Founded 1890 Registered 1902 v. West Ham Borough Council

Held, that the trustees having been directed to make investments and so earn a profit on the trust capital were conducting the trust for profit and were not entitled to relief.

National Deposit Friendly Society Trustees v. Skegness Urban District Council [1957] 2 Q.B. 573; [1957] 3 W.L.R. 550; [1957] 3 All E.R. 199 distinguished.

Cases stated by the Recorder of West Ham Quarter Sessions.

The appellants, the Guinness Trust (London Fund) Founded 1890 Registered 1902 (hereinafter called the "trust"), who owned and occupied premises known as the Working Persons Hostel and Premises situate at John Street, West Ham, appealed against the levying of rates on these premises by the respondents, the rating authority for the area.

The recorder heard the appeal on April 15, 1957, and gave judgment on June 3, 1957.

He found the following facts: The trust was an organization whose main objects were charitable. It was established in 1890 by a deed of trust and was incorporated by order of the Charity Commissioners in 1902. Its main activity was the provision of housing for persons who were not well-to-do. The policy of the trustees had been, after allowing for all outgoings, to realize a net income of 3 per cent. on the trust capital which was applied in acquiring additional properties and expanding the work of the trust. The original capital fund, which amounted to £200,000, had increased by the end of 1955 to something of the order of £1,500,000. Paragraph 1 (B) of the deed of trust provided: "Without restricting the interpretation "in the widest sense of the objects as before defined, it is the "intention of the founder that the original capital of the fund "should, by expenditure on objects of a permanent character "returning a fair low rate of interest, as far as possible, be "kept intact and go on increasing, so that, whilst payments "of money in the nature of gifts or not returnable by the "recipients are not precluded, the purpose to be kept in view "may be assistance to individuals to improve their condition, "without placing them in the position of being the recipients "of a bounty." The rateable value of the premises for the financial year 1955/1956—that is, for the last year of the old valuation list—was £188, and the rates paid for that year amounted to £263 4s. The rateable value of the premises for the financial year 1956/1957—that is, for the first year of the new valuation list—was £976 and the rates payable for that year would be £935 6s. 8d. The issue to be determined was whether or not the trust was "established or conducted for profit" within section 8 (1) of the Rating and Valuation (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1955.

It was contended by the trust that it was not established or conducted for profit in that although it was the policy of the trustees to secure a surplus of receipts over expenditure in any year, such surplus was applied exclusively for the charitable purposes of the trust.

It was contended by the rating authority that the terms of the deed of trust made it clear that a profit was deliberately aimed at, that the accounts and the course of business showed a profit was made, that its destination was irrelevant and that under the terms of the deed of trust it could in any event be lawfully applied in support of some other undertaking expressly formed for the purposes of profit.

The recorder was of the opinion that if it could be shown the trust was not established for profit, the question of whether or not it was conducted for profit did not arise; that "established for profit" meant established for the purpose of profit; and that for determining the question whether the trust was established for profit regard must be had to the objects of the trust as set out in the deed of trust. Profit, while contemplated by the deed of trust, was entirely incidental to the objects of the trust. The recorder, therefore, allowed the appeal.

There was a further appeal by the trust against the levying of rates on a flat, which they had let on a weekly tenancy, situate at 106 John Street, West Ham. The additional point raised was whether, assuming the trust was not established or conducted for profit, the flat was being occupied for the purposes of its organization.

The recorder was of opinion that the flat was so occupied.

The rating authority appealed. It was conceded by counsel in argument that if it be held that the trust was established or conducted for profit, the additional point in the second appeal did not arise.

Michael Rowe Q.C. and Geoffrey Rippon for the rating authority.

J. P. Widgery Q.C. for the trust.

The following cases were cited in argument, in addition to the case referred to in the judgments: Reg. v. Whitmarsh [2]; Brighton College v. Marriott [3]; John Laing & Son Ltd. v. Kingswood Assessment Committee [4]; Guinness Trust (London Fund) v. Green. [5]

LORD GODDARD C.J. stated the facts and continued: We have merely to consider the exemption which is given by the Act of Parliament to an organization which must not only be charitable but be neither established nor conducted for profit. Let it be assumed, as I think it may properly be assumed, that the

[2] (1850) 15 Q.B. 600.
[3] [1926] A.C. 192; 42 T.L.R. 228.
[4] [1949] 1 K.B. 344; 65 T.L.R. 80; [1949] 1 All E.R. 244.
[5] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 872; [1955] 2 All E.R. 871.

1958

GUINNESS TRUST (LONDON FUND) FOUNDED 1890 REGISTERED 1902 v. WEST HAM BOROUGH COUNCIL.

Lord Goddard C.J.

Guinness Trust is not established for profit, in the sense that that is not the object of the trust, but is to be conducted for profit and exists in order that there may become an accumulation of funds which will enable the trustees to invest in other buildings and thus increase the benevolent objects the settlor had in mind. So far as the rating authority is concerned, the rating authority is not, it seems to me, concerned with more than whether the conduct of the business is for profit; and it is for profit. It is for other objects, no doubt, but it is conducted for profit because clause 1 (B), which, to my mind, distinguishes the present case, if distinction is needed, from National Deposit Friendly Society Trustees v. Skegness Urban District Council,[1] to which we have been referred, shows that if there is profit being made the rating authority is not concerned with what is done with that profit. The rating authority does not have to consider whether the profit is used for charitable purposes or whether it is used for any other purpose. In my opinion, with all respect to the recorder and Mr. Widgery's argument, I think it is a very short point, and although I will assume it is not the case that the organization is established for profit, in my opinion it is conducted for profit because it is making profits, and its object is making profits for the purposes I have indicated; and, in my opinion, although its main objects are charitable it is not entitled to the benefit of the section, and the appeals must be allowed.

HILBERY J. I am of the same opinion. To bring these premises in question within section 8 of the Act of 1955 it must be shown that the Guinness Trust is not established or conducted for profit and its main objects are charitable. The difficulty in the way of the Guinness Trust seems to me to be in the terms of the deed which created the trust. It is quite true, perhaps, to say that under that deed the main object for which it was established is charitable, and indeed that is conceded. The main object is charitable, but the question arises whether it is conducted for profit as well as having for its main object charitable objects. I find it difficult to escape from the express terms of paragraph 1 (B) because there the founder of the trust expressed himself thus: "Without restricting the interpretation in the widest sense of the "objects as before defined, it is the intention of the founder that "the original capital of the fund should, by expenditure on "objects of a permanent character returning a fair low rate of "interest, as far as possible, be kept intact and go on increasing." In my view the fair interpretation of that is a direction to the trustees so to conduct the affairs of the trust as to produce a profit, which will, if possible, increase the fund available for the charitable purposes, and that is conducting for profit—true, for the purpose eventually of effecting the charitable purposes, but none the less they are directed to conduct for profit. That seems to me to distinguish the case from the decision of the Court of Appeal on which Mr. Widgery placed great reliance: National Deposit Friendly Society Trustees v. Skegness Urban District Council,[2] because the words of Parker L.J., on which particular stress was laid, were these [3]: "The organization accordingly does earn profits from which the members benefit, but that as it seems to us is a very different thing from being established or conducted for profit. In our judgment the earning of profits is purely incidental, and it cannot be said that the organization is established or conducted for profit." In my view, if the facts were that in this case the trustees had merely, as incidental to the discharge of the trust, so to invest money as to increase the money available for charitable purposes, the case would come immediately within the reasoning of that judgment, but that is not the case here. It is not that incidentally or fortuitously these profits have been made by the trustees. They have been made pursuant to the direction given to the trustees about the affairs of the trust under the trust deed in that paragraph 1 (B). In my view, therefore, the contention of the trustees fails.

[1] [1957] 2 Q.B. 573; [1957] 3 W.L.R. 550; [1957] 3 All E.R. 199.

DONOVAN J. I agree. It seems to me that all that the learned recorder thought he had to decide was whether the trust was established for profit, and if he decided it was not, then he had automatically decided that the trust was not conducted for profit. I think that is clearly wrong. There are two separate conditions in the section, both of which must be satisfied before there is a claim for relief. I merely venture to repeat what I said in argument to Mr. Widgery in connexion with the judgment of Parker L.J. about the concern being conducted for profit. Where a concern simply invests its reserves in order to get a return until the reserves are required for the business, it is natural to say that in so investing its reserves the concern is not, merely on that account, conducting its affairs for profit. But I think it is otherwise where the whole business is to make investments and so earn a profit, whether the investments be in stocks and shares or in dwelling-houses.

Appeals allowed. Leave to appeal.

Solicitors: G. E. Smith, West Ham; Travers Smith, Braithwaite & Co.

[2] [1957] 2 Q.B. 573. [3] Ibid. 580.

[PRIVY COUNCIL.]

J. C.† 1958 March 17.

* ROSS-CLUNIS . . . . . APPELLANT;

AND

PAPADOPOULLOS AND OTHERS . . . RESPONDENTS.

ON APPEAL FROM THE SUPREME COURT OF CYPRUS.

Delegated Legislation—Public safety or order—Relation to purpose—Cyprus—Collective punishment regulations—Validity—Collective fine order—Prior inquiry—Whether statutory requirements complied with—Emergency Powers Order in Council, 1939, s. 6 (1)—Emergency Powers (Collective Punishment) Regulations, 1955 to (No. 1), 1955, regs. 3, 5 (1) (2). Cyprus.

Minister—Determination by—Whether subject to review by courts—Required to be "satisfied"—Whether any grounds on which he could be satisfied—"As thinks fit"—Cyprus commissioner—Collective fine order.

By section 6 of the Emergency Powers Order in Council, 1939: "(1) The Governor may make such Regulations as appear to him "to be necessary or expedient for securing the public safety . . . "the maintenance of public order . . ."

The Cyprus Emergency Powers (Collective Punishment) Regulations, 1955, made under the Order in Council of 1939 provided: "3. If an offence has been committed . . . within any area of the "Colony . . . and the commissioner has reason to believe that all "or any of the inhabitants of the said area have: . . . (c) failed "to take reasonable steps to prevent the commission of the offence; "or (d) failed to render all the assistance in their power to discover "the offender or offenders . . . it shall be lawful for the commis-"sioner, with the approval of the Governor, . . . (i) to order that "a fine be levied collectively on the assessable inhabitants of the "said area . . ."

By regulation 5: "(1) No order shall be made under regula-"tion 3 . . . unless an inquiry into the facts and circumstances "giving rise to such order has been held by the commissioner. "(2) In holding inquiries under these Regulations the commissioner "shall satisfy himself that the inhabitants of the said area are "given adequate opportunity of understanding the subject-matter "of the inquiry and making representations thereon, and, subject "thereto, such inquiry shall be conducted in such manner as the "commissioner thinks fit."

The appellant, the Commissioner of Limassol, Cyprus, after holding an inquiry, made an order under regulation 3 imposing a collective fine of £35,000 on the assessable Greek-Cypriot inhabitants of the area of the Municipality of Limassol on the ground that "I have reason to believe that a substantial number of the Greek-"Cypriot inhabitants of the area failed to take reasonable steps to "prevent the commission of" a number of murders and other offences "and failed to render all the assistance in their power "to discover the offenders." The respondents, representative Greek-Cypriots, sought to have the order quashed on the grounds, inter alia, (1) that regulation 3 in so far as it purported to empower the imposition of a collective fine resulted in the punishment of the innocent for the guilty, was contrary to British ideas of justice, and went beyond the powers vested in the Governor by section 6 (1) of the Order in Council of 1939 and was ultra vires; and (2) that the requirements of regulation 5 (2) in relation to the inquiry had not been complied with. Affidavit evidence on behalf of the appellant and the respondents stated their respective views of what had occurred at the inquiry:—

† Present: LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON, LORD SOMERVELL OF HARROW, LORD DENNING.

Held, first, that regulation 3 was clearly "related to the purposes prescribed" by section 6 (1) of the Order in Council of 1939 within the meaning of those words in Attorney-General for Canada v. Hallet & Carey Ltd. [1952] A.C. 427 at 450; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1408 and was intra vires. The purpose of imposing a collective fine was to ensure that the inhabitants of the area would adopt an attitude more helpful to "securing the public safety" and "the maintenance of public order"—two of the purposes specified in section 6 (1) of the Order in Council.

Secondly, that if it could be shown that there were no grounds on which the commissioner could be satisfied that, within the meaning of regulation 5 (2), the inhabitants of the area were given adequate opportunity of understanding the subject-matter of the inquiry and making representations, a court might infer either that he did not honestly form that view or that, in forming it, he could not have applied his mind to the relevant facts; in the present case, however, there were ample grounds, as stated in his affidavit evidence, on which he could feel "satisfied" of the matters mentioned in regulation 5 (2). Further, the manner in which the inquiry should be conducted was, in the terms of regulation 5 (2), "as the commissioner thinks fit," and was thus a matter for the commissioner and not for the court.

The order imposing the collective fine was accordingly valid.

Order of the Supreme Court of Cyprus reversed.

APPEAL (No. 16 of 1957) by Robert Chattan Ross-Clunis, Commissioner of Limassol, Cyprus, from a judgment of the Supreme Court of Cyprus in its appellate jurisdiction (March 8, 1957) dismissing his appeal from an order of the Supreme Court of Cyprus in its original jurisdiction (December 15, 1956) ordering that an order made by the appellant on July 4, 1956, under the Cyprus Emergency Powers (Collective Punishment) Regulations, 1955, as amended, made under the Emergency Powers Order in Council, 1939, be removed into the Supreme Court and quashed.

The following facts and statutory provisions are taken from the judgment of the Judicial Committee. The question for decision in this appeal was whether an order made by the appellant, as Commissioner of Limassol, Cyprus, on July 4, 1956, was valid or invalid. The order imposed a fine of £35,000 on the assessable Greek-Cypriot inhabitants of the area of the Municipality of Limassol, and was made under regulation 3 of the Emergency Powers (Collective Punishment) Regulations, 1955, to (No. 1) 1955. These Regulations will hereafter by referred to as "the "Regulations." They were made in exercise (or purported exercise) of the powers conferred on the Governor by section 6 of the Emergency Powers Order in Council, 1939 (hereafter referred to as "the Order in Council").

The relevant provisions of the Order in Council and the regulations were as follows: "Emergency Powers Order in Council

J. C.
1958
ROSS-CLUNIS
v.
PAPADOPOULLOS.

"1939. Part I.—General. 2.—(1) In this Order, unless the "context otherwise requires—'territory' means any territory "mentioned in the First Schedule hereto and its dependances, "and includes the territorial waters, if any, adjacent thereto; "'Governor' includes any person administering the government "of the territory. . . .

"'Law' includes any Order of His Majesty in Council except "this Order, and any Ordinance, order, rule, regulation, by-law, "or other law for the time being in force in the territory."

"Part II.—Regulations. 6.—(1) The Governor may make "such Regulations as appear to him to be necessary or expedient "for securing the public safety, the defence of the territory, the "maintenance of public order and the suppression of mutiny, "rebellion and riot, and for maintaining supplies and services "essential to the life of the community.

"(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the powers con-"ferred by the preceding subsection, the Regulations may, so far "as appears to the Governor to be necessary or expedient for any "of the purposes mentioned in that subsection—

"(a) make provision for the detention of persons and the "deportation and exclusion of persons from the territory;

"(b) authorize—(i) the taking of possession or control, on "behalf of His Majesty, of any property or undertaking; (ii) the "acquisition on behalf of His Majesty of any property other than "land;

"(c) authorize the entering and search of any premises;

"(d) provide for amending any law, for suspending the opera-"tion of any law and for applying any law with or without modi-"fication;

"(e) provide for charging, in respect of the grant or issue of "any licence, permit, certificate or other document for the "purposes of the Regulations, such fee as may be prescribed by or "under the Regulations;

"(f) provide for payment of compensation and remuneration "to persons affected by the Regulations;

"(g) provide for the apprehension, trial and punishment of "persons offending against the Regulations;

"Provided that nothing in this section shall authorize the "making of provision for the trial of persons by Military Courts."

Cyprus was mentioned in the First Schedule to this Order.

The relevant portions of the Regulations were as follows:

"2.—(1) In these Regulations, unless the context otherwise "requires—'assessable inhabitant' in relation to any area means "any male who lives in such area and who is, or appears to the "Commissioner to be, not less than eighteen years of age; . . .

"'offence' means an offence the commission of which is, in "the opinion of the Commissioner, prejudicial to the internal "security of the Colony or to the maintenance of public order in "the Colony.

"3. If an offence has been committed or loss of or damage to "property has wilfully and unlawfully been caused within any "area of the Colony (hereinafter referred to as 'the said area') "and the Commissioner has reason to believe that all or any of "the inhabitants of the said area have:

"(a) committed the offence or caused the loss or damage; or

"(b) connived at or in any way abetted the commission of the "offence or the loss or damage; or

"(c) failed to take reasonable steps to prevent the commission "of the offence; or

"(d) failed to render all the assistance in their power to dis-"cover the offender or offenders, or to effect his or their arrest; or

"(e) connived at the escape of, or harboured, any offender or "person suspected of having taken part in the commission of the "offence or implicated in the loss or damage; or

"(f) combined to suppress material evidence of the commis-"sion of the offence or of the occurrence of the loss or damage; or

"(g) by reason of the commission of a series of offences in the "said area, been generally responsible for the commission of such "offences,

"it shall be lawful for the Commissioner, with the approval of the "Governor, to take all or any of the following actions:

"(i) to order that a fine be levied collectively on the assessable "inhabitants of the said area, or any part thereof;

"(ii) to order that all or any of the shops in the said area shall "be closed until such order be revoked or shall open only during "such times and under such conditions as may be specified in "the order;

"(iii) to order the seizure of any movable or immovable "property of any inhabitant of the said area;

"(iv) to order that all or any dwelling-houses in the said area "be closed and kept closed and unavailable for human habitation "for such period or periods as may be specified:

"Provided that where the Commissioner has reason to believe "that paragraphs (a) to (g) of this Regulation are applicable only "to any particular section, class, group or community of the "inhabitants of the said area, it shall be lawful for the Commis-"sioner, with the approval of the Governor, to take all or any "of the actions specified in paragraphs (i) to (iv) of this Regula-"tion in respect of only such section, class, group or community "of the inhabitants of the said area."

"5.—(1) No order shall be made under regulation 3 of these "Regulations unless an inquiry into the facts and circumstances "giving rise to such order has been held by the Commissioner.

"(2) In holding inquiries under these Regulations the Com-"missioner shall satisfy himself that the inhabitants of the said "area are given adequate opportunity of understanding the "subject-matter of the inquiry and making representations "thereon, and, subject thereto, such inquiry shall be conducted "in such manner as the Commissioner thinks fit.

J. C.
1958
Ross-Clunis v. Papadopoullos.

"(3) A written report of any inquiry shall be submitted to the "Governor as soon as possible after the completion thereof, and "shall contain a certificate that the requirements of this regula- "tion have been complied with.

"6. The Commissioner may at any time after an order under "regulation 3 of these Regulations has been made, in his absolute "discretion, remit the whole of any fine or any part thereof or "may order that any amount which has been paid by any assess- "able inhabitant shall be repaid to him or may return to any "inhabitant all or any of the property seized from any such "inhabitant or may generally revoke or vary any order made by "him under regulation 3 of these Regulations.

"7.—(1) It shall be lawful for the Commissioner to order that "out of a fine levied in pursuance of regulation 3 of these Regula- "tions compensation shall be paid to any person who has suffered "injury, or loss of, or damage to, his property unlawfully in the "area in which the fine was levied.

"(2) Application for compensation shall be made in writing "by the person aggrieved or his representative within two months "from the date upon which the fine has been levied.

"(3) Where the injury, for which compensation is being "sought, is a death, a dependant of the deceased may be deemed "to be a person aggrieved.

"(4) No application for compensation shall be granted if it "appears that the applicant, or in the case of a death, the "deceased participated in the offence or offences in respect of "which fines have been levied or was blameworthy in connexion "with such offence or offences.

"8. Any fine ordered to be paid in pursuance of these Regula- "tions shall be apportioned among the assessable inhabitants of "the said area by the Commissioner in such manner as he may "think fit and in particular he may order that each assessable "inhabitant shall pay any amount which the Commissioner shall "specify."

"13. Save as provided in regulation 6 of these Regulations, "an order made by a Commissioner, under regulation 3 of these "Regulations, shall be final and no appeal shall lie from any "such order."

The Regulations were revoked on December 19, 1956, by the Emergency Powers (Collective Punishment) (Revocation) Regulations, 1956, but that fact was immaterial for the present purpose.

The order made by the appellant on July 4, 1956 (hereafter referred to as "the order"), was in the following terms:

"Whereas between January 1, 1956, and June 10, 1956, six "murders, 10 attempted murders and about 70 other terrorist "offences have been committed within the area of the Muni- "cipality of Limassol (hereinafter referred to as 'the area') which "offences, in my opinion, are offences the commission of which "are prejudicial to the internal security of the Colony and to the " maintenance of public order in the Colony (hereinafter referred " to as ' the offences ');

" And whereas I have reason to believe that a substantial " number of the Greek Cypriot inhabitants of the area failed to " take reasonable steps to prevent the commission of the offences " and failed to render all the assistance in their power to discover " the offenders;

" And whereas I have held an inquiry into the facts and " circumstances appertaining to the offences after giving adequate " opportunity to the inhabitants of the area of understanding the " subject-matter of the inquiry and making representations " thereon;

" And whereas I have submitted a written report of the inquiry " to His Excellency the Governor and have certified that the " requirements of regulation 5 have been complied with:

" Now, therefore I, the Commissioner of Limassol, in exercise " of the powers vested in me by regulation 3 of the Emergency " Powers (Collective Punishment) Regulations, 1955, to (No. 1) " 1955, and with the approval of His Excellency the Governor, " do hereby order that a fine of £35,000 (thirty-five thousand " pounds) be levied collectively on the assessable Greek Cypriot " inhabitants of the area.

" Made this 4th day of July, 1956.

" R. C. ROSS-CLUNIS,
" Commissioner of Limassol."

The events which followed upon the making of the order were as follows: On November 22, 1956, the respondents applied for, and obtained from Zekia J. leave to apply for an order of certiorari to remove the order into the Supreme Court of Cyprus and quash it. In the " Statement of grounds of application " filed by the respondents each of them described himself as a " Greek-Cypriot " carrying on business at Limassol " and the grounds were stated as follows:

" (a) That the said order is ultra vires, illegal, void and of no " effect on the following grounds:

" (1) The Emergency Powers (Collective Punishment) Regula- " tions 1955, to (No. 1) 1955, are, in so far as they purport to " empower the Commissioner with the approval of the Governor " to order that a fine be levied collectively on the assessable " inhabitants of an area in the Colony of Cyprus or any part " thereof, ultra vires, illegal, void and of no effect; and that all " the regulations contained in such Regulations and relating to the " levying, apportionment and collection of the collective fine and " of the enforcement of the order ordering the levying of such " fine as well as regulation 13 of the said regulations are ultra " vires, illegal, void and of no effect.

" (2) The requirements of regulation 5 of the Emergency " Powers (Collective Punishment) Regulations, 1955, to (No. 1) " 1955, if intra vires, have not been complied with and the said " order was in excess of the jurisdiction of the Commissioner of

J. C.

1958

ROSS-CLUNIS
v.
PAPADOPOULLOS.

"Limassol. Also the rules of natural justice were not observed "by the Commissioner in connexion with the inquiry held under "regulation 5.

"(3) That the said order was wrong in law.

"(4) That the said order was contrary to natural justice."

In support of the second ground in the respondents' application the first respondent alleged in his affidavit as follows:

"The defendants failed to hold such an inquiry into the facts "and circumstances giving rise to the above order as could reason-"ably satisfy the Commissioner that the inhabitants of the area "of the Municipality of Limassol were given adequate opportunity "of understanding the subject-matter of such inquiry and making "representations thereon. In fact the Commissioner summoned "a meeting at the office of the Commissioner of Limassol to "which only the Greek members of the Council of the Munici-"pality of Limassol and the Greek Mukhtars and Azas of the "Limassol town were invited to attend. Such meeting was held "and attended by me, five Greek Municipal Councillors and the "Greek Mukhtars and Azas of the town of Limassol to whom the "Commissioner spoke about certain murders and other offences "committed in Limassol and added that he was determined to "impose a collective fine unless cause was shown to the contrary. "Then all those present were asked by the Commissioner to show "cause why a collective fine should not be levied on the assess-"able inhabitants of the area of the Municipality of Limassol and "the reply was that the imposition of a collective fine would be "unjustified, unwarranted and anachronistic. None of the above "persons represented or claimed to represent the Greek-Cypriot "assessable inhabitants of the area of the Municipality of "Limassol in the above matter nor have they undertaken or "accepted to communicate anything conveyed to them at the "above meeting to the assessable inhabitants of Limassol nor "have they done so. Furthermore, according to information "received from Haralambos Hadji Arabis of Limassol, one of the "said Mukhtars, the great majority of the said Greek Mukhtars "(including the said Haralambos Hadji Arabis) and Azas of the "Town of Limassol had resigned their office as such and ceased "to exercise their powers and duties under the Village Authorities "Law long before the said meeting."

In paragraphs 3 to 14 inclusive of his affidavit of December 4, 1956, the appellant replied to the first respondent's affidavit as follows:

"3. In my official capacity I followed six murders, 10 "attempted murders and a great number of bomb outrages, "causing two other deaths and damage to property, which took "place in the Limassol town during the six or seven months prior "to July, 1956, and came to know, through confidential reports "and information, that a great many of the Greek inhabitants "living and working within the municipal limits of Limassol were "in a position to identify the persons committing these outrages,

"but were wilfully abstaining from doing so, and that a "great number of the remaining Greek inhabitants were either "actively or passively encouraging others to abstain from giving "useful information to the authorities. I was convinced that "with the full co-operation of the Greek inhabitants of the town "such outrages would not have taken place or remain undetected.

"4. After due consideration of the situation, I invited in "writing the six Greek Municipal Councillors (including the "Deputy Mayor) and nine Greek Mukhtars and 27 Azas of the "various quarters of the town of Limassol to attend a meeting "in my office on June 11, 1956, at 4 p.m. informing them that "the inquiry would be under regulation 5 of the Emergency "Powers (Collective Punishment) Regulations, 1955. I should "point out that these were the Greek authorities appointed and "elected of the town of Limassol and there were no other persons "qualified to represent its Greek inhabitants. In reply to the last "sentence of paragraph 8 of Dr. Papadopoullos' affidavit I say "that the resignation of the persons therein mentioned has never "been accepted.

"5. Publicity was given to the fact that such an inquiry was "to be carried out on June 11, 1956, through the local representa-"tive of the Greek Press.

"6. On June 11, at the time and place appointed the above-"mentioned Councillors, Mukhtars and Azas appeared. All local "representatives of the Greek Press were also there.

"7. I informed the meeting that I was holding this public "inquiry with a view to deciding whether I should recommend to "His Excellency the Governor the levying of a fine on the Greek "inhabitants of the town in respect of a long list of outrages "which had occurred within the town since January 1, 1956. I "invited them to show cause why a fine should not be imposed. "After discussion I came to the conclusion that no cause was "shown and I accordingly told them that I was not satisfied with "their representations and asked them to inform their co-inhabi-"tants as widely as possible of what had transpired at the "meeting and suggested that if there was any person or group "of persons wishing to make further representations they could "do so through the elected Municipal Councillors.

"8. The inquiry was fully reported in all Greek papers and "the invitation for further representations was given full pub-"licity. There is now produced and shown to me marked 'A' "the translation of an extract from the Greek paper Ethnos dated "June 12, 1956.

"9. In fact the following day I received petitions or represen-"tations submitted by groups of people representing the following "localities, quarters and associations:—(a) Ayios Ioannis Quarter. "(b) Katholiki Quarter. (c) Ayios Nicolaos Quarter. (d) Ayia "Zoni Quarter. (e) Kessarianis locality. (f) The Committee of "Shop-Keepers' Association. (g) Male and female members of "KEAN factory. (h) Trade Union of the workers of LOEL.

J. C.
1958
ROSS-CLUNIS
v.
PAPADOPOULLOS.

"(i) Pancyprian Labour Federation of Limassol (PEO). (j) "Twenty-four advocates of the Limassol town. Of the above "(g) was received on the 13th, (h) on the 15th, (i) on the 19th "and (j) on the 16th of June, 1956. Other individual representa- "tions were also received until the end of the first week in July, "but none of the above representations contained anything to "convince me that a fine should not be levied as aforesaid. I "hold the originals to the above petitions and representations.

"10. Accordingly, in compliance with the Emergency Powers "(Collective Punishment) Regulations, 1955, to (No. 1) 1955, I "submitted a report on the inquiry to His Excellency the "Governor and certified that the requirements of regulation 5 "had been complied with and with the approval of the Governor "I issued my order dated July 4, 1956, which was published in "the Gazette of July 12, 1956.

"11. None of the representations received between June 11 "and the issue of my order on July 4 have supplied material to "make me change my decision.

"12. In my view the inhabitants of the Limassol town were "given adequate opportunity of understanding the subject-matter "of the inquiry on June 11, 1956, and of making representations "thereon as laid down in regulation 5.

"13. The amount of the fine imposed was related to the "amount of the compensation which could properly have been "awarded for injury and damage under regulation 7 of the Regu- "lations mentioned.

"14. In conclusion I humbly submit that I am entitled to rely "on regulation 13 of the Regulations above mentioned as applic- "able to a ministerial act on my part, alternatively I deny that I "have acted in any way at variance with the rules of natural "justice in exercising quasi-judicial functions (if any)."

Exhibit "A," mentioned in paragraph 8 of this affidavit, was as follows: "On the conclusion of the public inquiry the Commis- "sioner said that those who attended the public inquiry said "nothing which could convince him not to suggest the imposition "of a fine and he added that if there are citizens who wish to "express their opinion why the collective fine should not be "imposed, they must submit it to the town authorities who will "forward it to him."

Zekia J. gave judgment on December 15, 1956. He rejected the respondents' contention that the Regulations exceeded the powers of the Governor under section 6 of the Order in Council, but he allowed the respondents' application, made an order of certiorari, and quashed the order of July 4, 1956, on the ground that the appellant had not complied with regulation 5 of the Regulations. In the course of his judgment the judge observed: "in the meeting held no inquiry going into the facts and circum- "stances giving rise to the order under question had been held. "The Commissioner simply informed persons attending the "meeting that he was determined to impose a collective fine

"owing to murders and other outrages committed in the town "and that they were invited to show cause why such a course "should not be taken. Nothing else transpired in the meeting of "June 11."

The judge then read paragraph 7 of the appellant's affidavit and paragraph 8 of the first respondent's affidavit and observed: "It is clear from the contents I quoted from the two affidavits "that in the meeting of June 11, 1956, no inquiry whatsoever "was held in the nature of one contemplated by regulation "5 (1). Nothing was said as to the facts and circumstances "giving rise to the proposed collective fine order. The persons "assembled were informed of the intention of the Commissioner "to make such an order on account of the offences committed in "Limassol and they were invited to show cause why this course "should not be taken. This was contrary to the letter and spirit "of regulation 5 (1) and (2)."

The Commissioner appealed from the order of Zekia J. and the respondents applied for a variation of that order in regard to the judge's decision that the order was not ultra vires. The appeal was heard by Hallinan C.J. and Zannetides J. Both members of the court rejected the respondents' contention that the regulations were ultra vires, but they differed on the question whether or not the Commissioner had complied with regulation 5. The Chief Justice was of opinion that the Commissioner had complied with this regulation, and Zannetides J. was of the contrary opinion. The appeal was therefore dismissed in accordance with section 23 (1) of the Courts of Justice Law, 1953, which was as follows: "Whenever an appeal is heard by two judges of the Supreme "Court, and the two judges differ in opinion as to whether the "appeal should be allowed, the judgment of the court below shall "stand."

On June 11, 1957, the Supreme Court granted the appellant final leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council. Thereafter the appellant applied successfully, by petition, for leave to use two further affidavits at the hearing of the appeal. They were an affidavit by the appellant sworn on December 27, 1957, and an affidavit of Mr. Papadouris sworn on December 28, 1957. The former affidavit gave a full account of what was in fact said by the appellant at the meeting on June 11, 1956, and the latter affidavit exhibited extracts or translations of extracts from four newspapers, "The Times of Cyprus," "The Cyprus Mail," "Eleftheira" and "Ethnos," all published on June 12, 1956. Each newspaper gave an account of what was said at the meeting on June 11, 1956, and in substance confirmed the statements contained in the appellant's affidavit.

1958. February 18, 19, 20. B. J. M. MacKenna Q.C. and J. G. Le Quesne for the appellant.

Sir David Cairns Q.C. and Ian Baillieu for the respondents.

J. C.
1958
ROSS-CLUNIS v. PAPADOPOULLOS.

In addition to the cases referred to in the judgment the following were cited in argument: Abitibi Power and Paper Co. v. Montreal Trust Co.[1]; Board of Education v. Rice[2]; Local Government Board v. Arlidge[3]; Liversidge v. Anderson[4]; Everett v. Griffiths[5]; Rex v. Comptroller-General of Patents, Ex parte Bayer Products Ltd.[6]; Rex v. Halliday, Ex parte Zadig[7]; King-Emperor v. Sibnath Banerji[8]; Chester v. Bateson[9]; In re The Vexatious Actions Act, 1896, In re Boaler[10]; Attorney-General v. Wilts United Dairies Ltd.[11]; Roberts v. Hopwood[12]; Robinson v. Minister of Town and Country Planning.[13]

March 17. The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON, who stated the relevant statutory provisions and the facts as set out above, observed that paragraph 7 of the appellant's original affidavit contained only a very brief account of what was said by the appellant at the meeting of June 11, 1956, and exhibit "A" added little to that paragraph, and continued: It is indeed regrettable that the further affidavit evidence admitted by the Board was not before Zekia J., as it might have led that judge to a different conclusion at the original hearing. Again, if it had been before the Supreme Court on appeal, it might well have affected the result, for Zannetides J. said: "As "I said in dealing with the construction of regulation 5 (2), I take "the words 'subject-matter of the inquiry' to mean the facts and "circumstances giving rise to the making of the order as provided "in regulation 5 (1). Here the Commissioner did not tell them any-"thing about it. What he told them is contained in paragraph 7 "of his affidavit and paragraph 8 of Mr. Papadopoullos's affidavit. "This is far from giving them adequate opportunity of under-"standing the subject-matter of the inquiry. I do not propose "for a moment to hold that he was bound to give them all details "and disclose to them confidential information and its source but "I think that he ought to give them sufficient facts and circum-"stances of the outrages committed and sufficient facts and "circumstances showing that they were collectively liable. They "would then, and then only, be able to make representations on "the inquiry. This the Commissioner did not do and I am of "the opinion that he did not comply with regulation 5; and, "though I am deeply sorry that my opinion will have to differ "from the opinion of my Lord the Chief Justice on this point, I

[1] [1943] A.C. 536; 59 T.L.R. 348; [1943] 2 All E.R. 311.
[2] [1911] A.C. 179; 27 T.L.R. 378.
[3] [1915] A.C. 120, 132; 30 T.L.R. 672.
[4] [1942] A.C. 206; 58 T.L.R. 35; [1941] 3 All E.R. 338.
[5] [1921] 1 A.C. 631; 37 T.L.R. 481.
[6] [1941] 2 K.B. 306; [1941] 2 All E.R. 677.
[7] [1917] A.C. 260; 33 T.L.R. 336.
[8] (1945) L.R. 72 I.A. 241.
[9] [1920] 1 K.B. 829; 36 T.L.R. 225.
[10] [1915] 1 K.B. 21, 38; 30 T.L.R. 580.
[11] (1922) 38 T.L.R. 781.
[12] [1925] A.C. 578; 41 T.L.R. 436.
[13] [1947] K.B. 702; 63 T.L.R. 374; [1947] 1 All E.R. 851.

" am of the opinion that the order of the Commissioner was bad " and the appeal must fail also on this point."

And the Chief Justice said: " It is not entirely clear from the " affidavit before the court as to what precisely the Commissioner " told the Mukhtars and Azas. The affidavit of Mr. Papa- " dopoullos merely states that ' The Commissioner spoke about " ' certain murders and other offences committed in Limassol and " ' added that he was determined to impose a collective fine " ' unless cause was shown to the contrary.' Neither the notice " of motion nor the facts stated in what respect the information " given by the Commissioner fell short of what was required under " regulation 5 (2) and it is not surprising that the Commissioner " should give nothing more than a summary of what he said to " the meeting in paragraph 7 of his affidavit."

Their Lordships have found it necessary to set out this somewhat lengthy history for two reasons, first, because the events thus set out have an important bearing on the costs of this appeal, and, secondly, because they feel it is only fair to make it quite clear that the evidence before their Lordships differed very materially from the evidence before the courts in Cyprus. They will later set out in some detail the evidence contained in the affidavit of the appellant dated December 27, 1957.

Before the argument began at the hearing of the appeal before the Board, Sir David Cairns, for the respondents, stated that he desired to take a preliminary point, and their Lordships thought it convenient to hear the point argued at once. Sir David submitted that no valid leave to appeal had ever been given by the Supreme Court of Cyprus. He based his argument upon the provisions of the Cyprus (Appeal to Privy Council) Order in Council, 1927, and particularly upon articles 4 and 5 of that Order, which are as follows:

" 4. Where in any action or other proceeding no final judgment " can be duly given in consequence of a difference of opinion " between the judges, the final judgment may be entered pro " forma on the application of any party to such action or other pro- " ceeding according to the opinion of the senior member of the " court or in his absence of the member of court next in seniority, " but such judgment shall only be deemed final for purposes of an " appeal therefrom, and not for any other purpose.

" 5. Applications to the court for leave to appeal shall be made " by motion or petition within 30 days from the date of the judg- " ment to be appealed from, and the applicant shall give the " opposite party notice of his intended application."

Their Lordships find it unnecessary to set out Sir David's argument in detail, for the short answer to his preliminary objection is that article 4, so far at least as it applies to a case where an appeal is heard by two judges of the Supreme Court and the two judges differ in opinion, is superseded by section 23 of the Courts of Justice Law, 1953, already quoted, and the result is that the judgment of Zekia J. stood. This being so, the 30 days

J. C.
1958
ROSS-CLUNIS
v.
PAPADOPOULLOS.

mentioned in article 5 of the Order in Council of 1927 began to run from the date when the judgment on appeal, dismissing the appeal, was pronounced. That date was March 8, 1957, and the motion for leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council was dated April 6, 1957.

Their Lordships now turn, at last, to consideration of the questions arising on this appeal. Mr. MacKenna, for the appellant, relied on the wide words of section 6 (1) of the Order in Council, and submitted that these words entirely justified the Regulations which were made by the Governor. He further submitted that on the true construction of regulation 5 (1) and (2), and on the facts as set out in the evidence, there had been no breach by the appellant of the provisions of regulation 5 (1) and (2). He cited several authorities in support of these submissions. He did not, however, rely on one argument put forward in the Supreme Court, namely, that by reason of regulation 13 and of the nature of the order made, the remedy by certiorari was not available to the respondents. Counsel for the respondents first submitted that regulation 3 went beyond the powers vested in the Governor by section 6 (1) of the Order in Council. They submitted that the specific powers set out in section 6 (2) were illustrative of the type of regulation covered by the general words in section 6 (1), and these general words should not be construed so widely as to cover a regulation such as regulation 3. The imposition of a collective fine, they said, resulted in the punishment of the innocent for the crimes of the guilty and was contrary to British ideas of justice. They also relied upon section 6 (2) (g) of the Order in Council, and the proviso thereto, as indicating that no regulation could be made enabling persons to be punished without any trial.

Similar arguments were addressed to both courts in Cyprus, and were rejected, and in their Lordships' opinion rightly rejected, by all the three judges there concerned. Words substantially identical with the words of section 6 (1) of the Order in Council were recently considered by the Board in Attorney-General for Canada v. Hallet & Carey Ltd.[1] Lord Radcliffe, delivering the opinion of the Board, quoted[2] with approval the words of Duff C.J. in Reference re Chemical Regulations[3]: "I cannot agree that "it is competent to any court to canvass the considerations which "have, or may have, led him to deem such regulations necessary "or advisable for the transcendent objects set forth. . . . The "words are too plain for dispute: the measures authorized are "such as the Governor-General in Council (not the courts) deems "necessary or advisable." Later, Lord Radcliffe said[4]: "It is "fair to say that there is a well-known general principle that "statutes which encroach upon the rights of the subject, whether

[1] [1952] A.C. 427; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1408.
[2] [1952] A.C. 427, 445.
[3] [1943] S.C.R. 1, 12.
[4] [1952] A.C. 427, 450.

" as regards person or property, are subject to a ' strict ' construc" tion. Most statutes can be shown to achieve such an " encroachment in some form or another, and the general prin" ciple means no more than that, where the import of some
" enactment is inconclusive or ambiguous, the court may properly
" lean in favour of an interpretation that leaves private rights
" undisturbed. But in a case such as the present the weight of " that principle is too slight to counterbalance the considerations
" that have already been noticed. For here the words that invest
" the Governor with power are neither vague nor ambiguous:
" Parliament has chosen to say explicitly that he shall do what" ever things he may deem necessary or advisable. That does " not allow him to do whatever he may feel inclined, for what he " does must be capable of being related to one of the prescribed
" purposes, and the court is entitled to read the Act in this way.
" But then, expropriation is altogether capable of being so " related."

In their Lordships' opinion regulation 3 is clearly " related to " the purposes prescribed " by section 6 (1) of the Order in Council. There can be no doubt as to the purpose of imposing a collective fine in a case where crimes have been committed in a particular area, and some or all of the inhabitants of the area have " failed to take reasonable steps to prevent the commission " of the offence," or have " failed to render all the assistance in " their power to discover the offenders or to effect their arrest." Clearly the purpose is to ensure, so far as possible, that in future the inhabitants of the area will adopt a different attitude, more helpful to " securing the public safety " and to " the maintenance " of public order," two of the purposes specified in section 6 (1) of the Order in Council. A further purpose is served by regulation 3, namely, the purpose of providing, out of the fine, for compensation to persons who have suffered injury by the crimes committed in the area. See regulation 7.

Counsel's argument, already mentioned, based on section 6 (2) (g), was briefly and conclusively answered by Zekia J. as follows: " There is nothing to warrant the reading of section 6 (2) (g) as a " restrictive proviso to section 6 (1). On the contrary, the words " ' without prejudice to the generality of the powers conferred by " ' the preceding subsection ' in section 6 (2) lead us to a contrary " view. The language of the relevant section is clear and " unambiguous."

Counsel next sought to contend that the Commissioner's order of July 4, 1956, was void for uncertainty because the phrase " Greek Cypriot " had no clear meaning. This was not one of the grounds stated in the respondents' application for an order of certiorari, but counsel asked the Board to admit this contention, in the exercise of its discretion. Their Lordships did not think it right to admit this contention at this stage, since it had never been considered by the courts in Cyprus, and if it had been raised in these courts the appellant might well have wished to file

J. C.
1958
ROSS-CLUNIS
v.
PAPADOPOULLOS.

evidence in answer to it. As matters stand, their Lordships are not assisted by any evidence on the subject, save the fact that each of the respondents described himself as "a Greek-Cypriot" in the "Statement of Grounds," which seems to indicate that to them, at least, the phrase had a definite meaning.

The last contention of counsel for the respondents was that the Commissioner had failed to comply with regulation 5 (1) and (2). In their Lordships' opinion the only question of substance arising under this contention is the question whether the appellant discharged the positive duty cast upon him to "satisfy himself "that the inhabitants of the said area are given adequate oppor- "tunity of understanding the subject-matter of the inquiry and "making representations thereon." Mr. MacKenna, for the appellant, submitted that the only duty cast upon the appellant was to satisfy himself of these facts; that the test was a subjective one, and the statement in paragraph 12 of the appellant's affidavit of December 4, 1956 (already quoted), was a complete answer to the argument of counsel for the respondents, unless it could be shown that the statement in the affidavit was not made in good faith, and bad faith was not alleged.

Their Lordships feel the force of this argument, but they think that if it could be shown that there were no grounds upon which the Commissioner could be so satisfied, a court might infer either that he did not honestly form that view or that in forming it he could not have applied his mind to the relevant facts. In the present case, however, there were ample grounds upon which the appellant could feel "satisfied" of the matters mentioned in regulation 5 (2). If the matter had rested only upon the appellant's affidavit of December 4, 1956, their Lordships might have felt considerable doubt on the matter, for it would appear from paragraph 7 of that affidavit that at the meeting on June 11, 1956, the appellant said nothing which would convey to the inhabitants of Limassol the reasons why they, as distinct from the persons who had actually committed the murders and other outrages, should be held blameworthy. It was this aspect of the matter which so strongly impressed Zekia J. and, on appeal, Zannetides J. The information in this paragraph is, however, greatly amplified by the affidavit of the appellant sworn on December 27, 1957, already mentioned, which contained the following full account of the proceedings at the meeting of June 11, 1956:

"I explained to the meeting that since January 1 there had "been six assassinations, 10 woundings and attempts to assassi- "nate and 70 bomb outrages which from my own knowledge of "the facts and circumstances and the investigations made by "the police led me to believe:

"(a) that the outrages were attributable to Greek terrorist "activity;

"(b) that in the majority of the cases mentioned members of "the Greek community were eye-witnesses and in a position to "assist the police in tracing the perpetrators and in giving "evidence before the court, but without exception they had con- "cealed their knowledge and obstructed the process of law;

"(c) that there had been instances in which the perpetrators "had made good their escape through the failure of Greek on- "lookers to assist in their capture.

"In regard to (c) I quoted two instances as follows:—

"(i) On June 6, an English teacher, Mr. A. T. Mylrea, was "assassinated as he arrived at the Lanition Gymnasium to con- "duct certain school examinations. It was estimated there were "about 35 pupils at the actual scene of the assassination who "should have been in a position to recognize the assassins and to "effect their arrest, but no attempt was made to hinder the "criminals and no one had come forward with information to the "police.

"(ii) On June 7, Andreas Serghides, an Assistant District "Inspector of my office, was murdered as he arrived outside the "office for his morning's work, in the presence of a fair number "of persons, many of them believed to be persons of good stand- "ing. Here again no attempt was made to hinder the assassins "and the persons believed to have been present have all denied "knowledge of the incident.

"I went on to explain that under the terms of regulation 3 "of the Emergency Powers (Collective Punishment) Regulations, "1955, which I cited at the meeting in detail I had reason to "believe that the inhabitants of Limassol town had rendered "themselves liable to a collective punishment and that unless "they could show cause to the contrary, it was my intention to "recommend to His Excellency the Governor that a fine should "be imposed on the inhabitants of Limassol town in accordance "with the Collective Punishment Regulations. I then invited "them to make their representations. After hearing their "representations I came to the conclusion that no cause had been "shown why a fine should not be imposed and I accordingly told "those present at the meeting that I was not satisfied with their "representations but asked them to inform their co-inhabitants "as widely as possible as to what had transpired at the meeting "and suggested that if there was any person or group of persons "wishing to make further representations they could do so through "the elected municipal councillors.

"In conclusion I beg to state that in my affidavit dated "December 4, 1956, which was filed in opposition to that of "Mr. Vassos Papadopoullos dated November 20, 1956, I did not "enter upon a full narrative of the meeting held on June 11, "1956, and in particular did not recount the matters set forth in "this my present affidavit, for the following reasons, that is to "say:

"(i) because in paragraph 8 of the said affidavit of Mr. "Papadopoullos it was stated that I had spoken about the "murders and other offences committed in Limassol and there

J. C.
1958
ROSS-CLUNIS
v.
PAPADOPOULLOS.

"was no indication that it would be contended that I had done "so in such terms as not to make it clear why I held the "inhabitants responsible;

"(ii) because, as stated in paragraph 10 of my said affidavit, "I had already made my report to the Governor, and having done "so and deposed on oath in paragraph 12 my belief that I had "complied with regulation 5, I considered that I had sufficiently "dealt with the matter."

As has already been stated, this account of the meeting was confirmed by the contemporary accounts of the meeting in four Cyprus newspapers, set out in the affidavit of Mr. Papadouris.

When these affidavits are read in conjunction with the appellant's affidavit of December 4, 1956, it is manifest that the appellant had ample reason for being satisfied that the inhabitants of Limassol "had adequate opportunity of understanding the "subject-matter of the inquiry and of making representations "thereon." And it is to be noted that the opportunity given of making representations had the widespread results set out in paragraph 9 of the appellant's affidavit of December 4, 1956.

Counsel for the respondents submitted other objections to the manner in which the appellant conducted his "inquiry into the "facts and circumstances," but in their Lordships' opinion there is no substance in any of these objections. Regulation 5 (2) provides that, subject to the positive duty already mentioned, which was fully discharged, "such inquiry shall be conducted in such "manner as the Commissioner thinks fit." The manner in which the inquiry shall be conducted, if in fact an inquiry has been held, is thus a matter for the Commissioner and not for the court; but their Lordships think it only fair to say that the careful steps taken by the appellant, as set out in his two affidavits, seem to them adequate and sensible. For these reasons the arguments on behalf of the respondents fail, and the appeal succeeds.

There remains only the question of the costs of the proceedings. The appellant has already been ordered to pay the costs of his petition for leave to file further evidence. Having regard to the course which the proceedings have taken, as already described, their Lordships do not think it right that the respondents, though unsuccessful in their attack upon the appellant's order, should be required to pay his costs.

Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that this appeal should be allowed; that the order of the appellant of July 4, 1956 should be restored, and that the order of Zekia J., dated December 15, 1956, should be set aside. They do not think fit to make any further order as to the costs of these proceedings.

Solicitors: Charles Russell & Co.; Ince, Roscoe, Wilson & Griggs.

C. C.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* KITCHEN v. ROYAL AIR FORCE ASSOCIATION AND OTHERS.

[1955 K. No. 1085.]

C. A.

1958
Mar. 18, 19, 20, 21, 24, 25, 26, 27, 31;
April 1.

Lord Evershed M.R., Parker and Sellers L.JJ.

Limitation of Action—Concealment by fraud—Solicitor—Negligence—Failure to issue writ in due time—Plaintiff's claim under Fatal Accidents Acts lost—Claim against solicitor after 13 years—Whether "right of action . . . concealed by . . . fraud"—Limitation Act, 1939 (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 21), s. 26 (b).

Solicitor—Negligence.

Damages—Negligence—Solicitor.

On May 22, 1945, the plaintiff's husband, a member of the Royal Air Force, was electrocuted and killed in the kitchen of his house. His death, the plaintiff alleged, was due to a defect in the control unit of an electric cooker, the wires of which had in 1940 been connected up by the local electricity company. The plaintiff, considering that the electricity company were responsible for her husband's death, consulted the Royal Air Force Association, who sent particulars of her case to a firm of solicitors. These solicitors investigated the matter but did not get any independent report of an expert on the cause of the accident. They allowed the time for proceedings under the Fatal Accidents Act to run out, since they failed to issue a writ on the plaintiff's behalf before May 22, 1946. The solicitors tried but failed to get an ex gratia payment from the electricity company. However, the plaintiff herself wrote in October, 1946, to the company, and thereupon their solicitor telephoned to the defendant solicitors saying that the company were prepared to make a donation to the Royal Air Force Association of £100 if they were satisfied that the money would be used for the plaintiff's benefit. The defendant solicitors made inquiries and, in the event, the £100 was paid to the association, from which sum five guineas were paid to the defendant solicitors for costs. The fact that this payment had been offered by the company was concealed from the plaintiff and she only discovered some years later that the company had made the payment. Subsequently, in 1950, the plaintiff started proceedings against the electricity company as administratrix of her husband, claiming damages under the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935. That action was compromised by the payment of £250 by the company. Subsequently, the plaintiff started this action against the Royal Air Force Association and the defendant solicitors, claiming damages for negligence in the formulation and prosecution of her claim arising out of her husband's death against the electricity company. The action, as against the association, was dismissed, but Lloyd-Jacob J. awarded the plaintiff £2,000 as damages for negligence against the solicitors:—

Held, (1) that, on the facts, the solicitors were acting as the solicitors of the plaintiff during the years 1945 and 1946, and that the plaintiff's case of negligence against them was made out.

(2) That the failure of the solicitors to inform the plaintiff of her possible claim under the Fatal Accidents Acts did not of itself constitute a concealment of her right of action against the

C. A.

1958

KITCHEN
v.
ROYAL
AIR FORCE
ASSOCIATION.

solicitors by "fraud" within section 26 (1) (b) of the Limitation Act, 1939,[1] so as to prevent the Act running in the solicitors' favour.

Bulli Coal Mining Co. v. Osborne [1899] A.C. 351; 15 T.L.R. 257 and Wood v. Jones (1889) 61 L.T. 551 considered.

(3) That at the time of the payment of the £100 by the electricity company in October, 1946, the solicitors still remained the plaintiff's solicitors and, notwithstanding the fact that the judge had acquitted the solicitors of any deliberate motive of protecting their firm from the possible consequences of their failure to start proceedings under the Fatal Accidents Acts, the concealment by the solicitors from the plaintiff of the electricity company's offer to pay £100 amounted to "fraud" for the purposes of section 26 (b); no degree of moral turpitude was necessary to establish fraud for the purposes of that section, since it covered conduct, which, having regard to the relationship of the parties, was unconscionable and, accordingly, the solicitors were not entitled to rely on the Limitation Act, 1939, as barring the plaintiff's claim.

Beaman v. A.R.T.S. Ltd. [1949] 1 K.B. 550; 65 T.L.R. 389; [1949] 1 All E.R. 465, C.A.; [1948] 2 All E.R. 89 applied.

(4) That the plaintiff having established negligence, the court had not to determine the question of liability as between the plaintiff and the electricity company, but that the plaintiff having satisfied the court that she had some prospect of success, it was the duty of the court to evaluate those prospects, taking into consideration the difficulties that remained to be surmounted, and that the judge's award of £2,000 should stand.

Decision of Lloyd-Jacob J. affirmed.

APPEAL from Lloyd-Jacob J.

The plaintiff, Hilda Kitchen, was the widow and administratrix of John William Kitchen, who died intestate on May 22, 1945. In this action she claimed damages against the defendants, the Royal Air Force Association, and Donald, Darlington & Nice, a firm of solicitors, for negligence in and about the formulation and prosecution of a claim arising out of the death of her husband against the West Kent Electricity Co. In her statement of claim the plaintiff also alleged conspiracy and breach of trust. Those latter claims failed.

The following statement of facts is summarized from the judgment of Lord Evershed M.R.

The plaintiff's husband, a Leading Aircraftsman in the Royal Air Force, was home on leave with his wife, the plaintiff, in their flat in Renton Drive, St. Mary Cray. At about 8 o'clock in the morning of May 22, 1945, the husband went to the kitchen to prepare his wife a cup of tea, for which purpose he turned on the main switch at the control box. He was electrocuted and died almost at once. The plaintiff was firmly persuaded that the West Kent Electricity Co., now absorbed in the South Eastern Electricity Board, was in some way responsible for her husband's death. After the accident, the plaintiff was helped by Mrs.

[1] Limitation Act, 1939, s. 26: "Where, in the case of any action for "which a period of limitation is prescribed by this Act . . . (b) the "right of action is concealed by "the fraud of any such person as "aforesaid . . . the period of limitation shall not begin to run until "the plaintiff has discovered the "fraud . . . or could with reasonable "diligence have discovered it; . . ."

Griffiths, the local secretary of the Soldiers', Sailors' and Airmen's Families Association, a charitable organization. Her case was sent forward by Mrs. Griffiths to the first defendants, the Royal Air Force Association, in November, 1945; the association forwarded the information they had obtained from Mrs. Griffiths, together with the notes taken by a solicitor, then acting for the plaintiff at the inquest on her husband, to the firm of Donald, Darlington & Nice, the present appellants. Those notes showed briefly the case that the electricity company had put forward through one Penfold, who was their agent, but they did not show what the plaintiff's case was. It had not been put by anyone or to anyone. The appellants thereupon made out a back-sheet and sent the matter in that condition to junior counsel (not now appearing before the court) for advice. Counsel said that the first thing to do was to try to get some expert opinion which would assist them to arrive at a conclusion how the accident occurred, and he also advised them to get further information from the plaintiff herself. On receiving that opinion, the appellants sent it direct to the Royal Air Force Association. That was the sum of what they did on behalf of the plaintiff until the following May, except that in the February following, some ten weeks later, they wrote to the Royal Air Force Association to inquire if that association had "made the arrangements" which had been referred to in the appellants' earlier letter, namely, the arrangements for getting an expert opinion. As a result of that reminder, on April 15, a representative of the association called on the plaintiff; but as the installation responsible for the accident had long since gone, the representative could give no useful opinion as to the cause of the accident and, accordingly, so reported to the Air Force Association, a fact which the association in turn passed on to the appellants on April 29.

At this point of time, Mr. Arditti, a man experienced in legal work, but not an admitted solicitor, joined the appellants as articled clerk, and Mr. Darlington, the senior partner in the appellant firm, thought he would depute to him the plaintiff's case. In response to a letter which he accordingly wrote to the plaintiff she called, and there was an interview between her and Mr. Arditti on May 7, 1946. This left a fortnight within which any case based on the Fatal Accidents Acts could be made.

On May 9 there was a conference with counsel and the note of that conference is in the following terms: "Attending counsel, "discussing the case with him, when he was of the opinion that "no claim lay against the landlord, and that the only step we "could take would be to try and obtain an ex gratia payment "from the electrical company." Counsel, in the circumstances (no expert evidence having been obtained in answer to his earlier request) was in no position to add anything to what he had said before. According to their evidence, the appellants suggested that counsel had expressly stated that in no circumstances was there a ground, in his view, for any claim; the judge did not

C. A.
1958
KITCHEN
v.
ROYAL
AIR FORCE
ASSOCIATION.

accept that evidence. In the circumstances the appellants wrote on May 12 to the Royal Air Force Association a letter, in which they said: "The possibility of an action against the electric "company was discussed with counsel who advised that the "chances of success are extremely remote, and that our only "hope would be to try and obtain some form of ex gratia payment "from them. We accordingly approached the electric company, "but, in view of the fact that a writ must be issued before the "end of next week and this case does not warrant such expendi-"ture, we are not very hopeful that our approach will meet with "any appreciable success."

It was clear that at this stage the appellants had formed the view that the thing to do was to allow time to expire, so barring the plaintiff's claim. There was no evidence whatever that they had applied their minds to the distinction between the more valuable claim under the Fatal Accidents Acts and the Law Reform claim, which was not subject to the 12 months' limitation period. So much was in terms admitted in evidence by Mr. Arditti. The appellants had obtained no instructions whatever from their client, the plaintiff. They had made no distinction at all between the Fatal Accidents claim and the Law Reform claim. The letter said (admittedly wrongly) that they "had approached" the electric company. The truth was, that shortly afterwards they did so, and a meeting took place between Mr. Arditti and Mr. Stubbins, who was the solicitor for the West Kent Co.

Following that meeting, and by arrangement, Mr. Arditti proceeded to write a letter, which Lord Evershed M.R. considered to be an extremely feeble presentation of the plaintiff's case, and it contained no reference whatever to the distinction between the Fatal Accidents claim and the Law Reform claim. Further, this letter in requesting an ex gratia payment, and notwithstanding the absence of any instructions, contained the following statement: "Needless to say, any such grant by your company will be "reciprocated by an undertaking on the part of Mrs. Kitchen "that anything she accepts is in full and final settlement of any "claim she may have as a result of the accident aforesaid."

On July 8 the reply of the electricity company to this request was a firm and uncompromising negative. The appellants then wrote to the Royal Air Force Association: "Further to our letter "of May 10, we are now informed by the solicitor to the West "Kent Electric Co. that after careful consideration of this matter "his board have decided they cannot recommend any form of ex "gratia payment to Mrs. Kitchen. In view of the unfortunate "outcome of this case, we do not propose making any charge to "Mrs. Kitchen for our services."

Lloyd-Jacob J. dismissed the action as against the Royal Air Force Association, but held that the defendant solicitors had been guilty of negligence, that the plaintiff's claim for negligence against them was not statute barred and he awarded the plaintiff

£2,000 as damages. The judge acquitted both Mr. Darlington and Mr. Arditti of any dishonesty.

The solicitors appealed.

Patrick O'Connor and J. G. H. Gasson for the defendants.
Neil Lawson Q.C. and John Wilmers for the plaintiff.

The following cases which were cited in argument were not referred to in the judgments: In re Halifax Sugar Refining Co. Ltd.[2]; Dow Hager Lawrance v. Norreys (Lord)[3]; R. B. Policies at Lloyd's v. Butler[4]; In re McCallum[5]; Nocton v. Ld. Ashburton[6]; Shephard v. Cartwright[7]; Shaw v. Shaw[8]; Sellars v. Best[9]; Faithfull v. Kesteven[10]; Clayton v. Kearsey.[11]

LORD EVERSHED M.R. This long and difficult case has raised three distinct points for our determination: (1) Did the appellants act as solicitors for the plaintiff during some, and if so, what period in the years 1945 and 1946; and if they did so act, did they fail to devote the standard of care which was due from them as solicitors to their client: in other words, were the appellants guilty of negligence towards the plaintiff? (2) If so, then since admittedly the Limitation Act, 1939, applies to a cause of action founded on such negligence, and since admittedly the statutory six-year period elapsed since any alleged act of negligence and before the commencement of proceedings against the appellants, can the solicitors rely on the Statute of Limitations? More precisely, can the plaintiff escape the effect of the statute by showing concealment by fraud of her right of action within the terms of section 26 (b) of the Act of 1939? (3) Assuming that both the first and second questions are answered in the plaintiff's favour, what was the loss or damage, if any, which flowed from the negligence?

I have stated the three questions in the order in which they were argued before us and in the order in which they were decided by the judge below. I have also stated them in what may be an ascending order of difficulty. If the plaintiff fails on any one of the three points, she fails altogether. The onus is squarely upon her as regards the first and second points. To a substantial extent it is also upon her as regards the third point.

An action against a firm of solicitors for alleged negligence by one who says that she was their client is always a matter of special anxiety to the court, for to some extent, inevitably, our system and profession of the law is impugned and its adequacy

[2] (1891) 7 T.L.R. 293.
[3] (1890) 15 App.Cas. 210.
[4] [1950] 1 K.B. 76; 65 T.L.R. 436; [1949] 2 All E.R. 226.
[5] [1901] 1 Ch. 143; 14 T.L.R. 112.
[6] [1914] A.C. 932; 30 T.L.R. 602.
[7] [1955] A.C. 431; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 967; [1954] 3 All E.R. 649.
[8] [1954] 2 Q.B. 429; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 265; [1954] 2 All E.R. 638.
[9] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 913; [1954] 2 All E.R. 389.
[10] (1910) 103 L.T. 56.
[11] (1935) 79 S.J. 180.

C. A.
1958
KITCHEN v. ROYAL AIR FORCE ASSOCIATION.
Lord Evershed M.R.

and competence challenged. Especially is this so in the present case.

[His Lordship reviewed the evidence, held that the appellants were the plaintiff's solicitors and she was their client from November or December, 1945, to June or July, 1946, and, further, that they owed a duty to her which they had not discharged, and continued:] In my judgment, the appellants adopted the line of least possible effort. It is not merely that the firm never applied their minds at all to what their duties were, and what the possible rights of the plaintiff might be, but they never applied their minds, as Mr. Darlington himself stated, to the question who their client was. They did not even think fit in the circumstances to ask for the depositions before the coroner. It is not merely that they put the case so feebly to the West Kent Co., and included without any authority whatever the suggestion that anything they paid would be accepted in full settlement, but the real gravamen of the case, as it seems to me, is that they deliberately allowed the time to run out without getting any instructions at all, and knowing that no expert evidence had been obtained. I cannot, for my part, understand how, in the circumstances, a responsible firm of solicitors failed to make any attempt at least to keep the case alive, while they made some effort to get the essential expert evidence which counsel had advised them to do months before. I will only add that, in my judgment, it is no answer to what I have said to say that the appellants, by writing and giving the information they did to the Air Force Association were thereby to be taken to be giving information to the plaintiff on the ground that the Air Force Association were, in some sense, the agents of the plaintiff to accept and receive such information as the appellants chose to give. I, therefore, agree with the judge that the case of negligence by the appellants is made out.

But they have pleaded the Statute of Limitations, 1939, as they are entitled to do. I think it is no doubt true that the court will not be astute in an action by a client against his or her solicitors for proved negligence to find that the solicitors can escape the consequences of their default by relying upon the statute. Still, the appellants are entitled, if the case is made out, to set up the Statute of Limitations. What is more, in the present case, as I have said, the statutory period of six years since the breach of duty had occurred had elapsed long before the action had been brought, and so the onus lies upon the plaintiff to show, if she can, that the solicitors are disentitled to rely upon the Statute of Limitations. This she has sought to do, so far as this court is concerned—we need not look further—by relying upon section 26 (1) (b) of the Act of 1939. The relevant passage is as follows: "Where, in the case of any action for "which a period of limitation is prescribed by this Act, . . . (b) the "right of action is concealed by the fraud of any such person "as aforesaid . . . the period of limitation shall not begin to run "until the plaintiff has discovered the fraud . . . or could with "reasonable diligence have discovered it." As Mr. O'Connor has pointed out, the plaintiff has to show, first, that the right of action raised in this case was concealed by the appellants, and, further, that it was so concealed by their fraud. The judge decided the point in the plaintiff's favour. The first ground of his decision was, as I understand it, that the original failure by the appellants to inform the plaintiff in regard to the limitation of time in regard to her possible claim under the Fatal Accidents Acts was itself, not merely an act of negligence, but also constituted concealment by fraud. In this matter, however, "fraud" in the section is to be defined, I am unable to agree with the judge's conclusion. No doubt in some cases the facts may be such that the circumstances of the wrongful acts may also constitute concealment by fraud; for example, where the wrongful acts are continuous and are also surreptitious. Such was the case, for example, in Bulli Coal Mining Co. v. Osborne.[1] I will cite a sentence from the headnote to show what the position in that case was: "Where the appellants had furtively for a series of years taken "the respondent's coal by means of a wilful and secret under-"ground trespass." That, however, is not, in my judgment, the present case. Indeed, a decision to the effect that the failure to inform the plaintiff, while being an act of negligence, also constituted the requisite concealment by fraud, would be contrary to the decision in Wood v. Jones,[2] where it had been suggested that the failure of solicitors to give the client proper information as to a valuation also constituted the necessary concealment. That suggestion was rejected, and, in my judgment, rightly so, by Kekewich J. I do not think that the present case can be distinguished in this respect by the mere circumstance that the appellants continued to act as the plaintiff's solicitors after the particular act of negligence to which I have referred.

But Lloyd-Jacob J. also based himself upon the events which occurred in October and November, 1946, and those events I must now shortly relate. It will be recalled that by the letter which the appellants had written to the West Kent Co.'s solicitor, they had suggested that any grant made by the company would be reciprocated by an undertaking on the part of the plaintiff to accept it in full and final settlement of her claim. On October 8, the plaintiff had written to the company. As a consequence, two telephone conversations are recorded. The first is the record made by Mr. Arditti of the call made by the solicitor of the West Kent Co.: "Attending solicitor of West Kent Electric on phone "when he informed us that his company was unable to make any "ex gratia payment to Mrs. Kitchen because she may consider "this as an admission of liability on the part of his company. "However, the board might consider making a donation to the "Royal Air Force Association but they would want to know how [1] [1899] A.C. 351; 15 T.L.R. 257. [2] (1889) 61 L.J. 551.

C. A.
1958
Kitchen v. Royal Air Force Association.
Lord Evershed M.R.

"the money would be used. We undertook to make inquiry and "report back."

The second conversation was as follows: "Attending "Squadron Leader O'Donnell of the Royal Air Force Association "and informing him that the West Kent Co. had approached us. "He advised that the full amount of any donation that the "company cared to make to the Royal Air Force Association "would be used for the benefit of the Kitchen family." Then: "We undertook to inform this to the company and keep Squadron "Leader O'Donnell informed. We also advised him that we "would have to make a small deduction in respect of our "charges." The note which Squadron Leader O'Donnell made of that conversation was made a little time afterwards: "Mr. "Arditti spoke to me re this case on October 25, 1946, to the "effect that he had received a communication from the solicitor "of the West Kent Electricity Co. Ltd. stating that there might "be a possibility of a donation from a certain quarter to the "R.A.F.A. funds and that it might be appropriate if such dona-"tion were distributed to Mrs. Kitchen, tactfully, by such means "as the R.A.F.A. should decide." At the end of his note Mr. O'Donnell recorded: "Confidentially, it appears to me, that the "West Kent Electricity Co. Ltd. may be thinking of helping "Mrs. Kitchen in this indirect way, without making any actual "ex gratia payment which would probably in law be rather "awkward." Finally—and this is underlined: "Mrs. Kitchen "must not know, of course, the originator of the donation when "it is received and distributed." The reference to secrecy is to be observed, and that, in fact, was how the matter was carried out. The West Kent Co. sent £100 and that sum diminished by an amount of five guineas for the appellants' charges was entrusted to the Royal Air Force Association, who applied it in assisting the plaintiff and her family; but there was never any disclosure—in fact there was careful non-disclosure—to the plaintiff or to Mrs. Griffiths of the source of the money.

In a case fruitful of mysteries this is indeed one. From the point of view of the West Kent Electric Co., if the plaintiff was a person who might be inclined (in Mr. O'Connor's phrase) to misconstrue any grant, why did they not accept the suggestion in the appellants' letter, namely, that if they made a payment it would be taken in full settlement of all claims the plaintiff had? Vis-à-vis the plaintiff, by doing as they did they were no better off. They remained liable to the plaintiff's importunities. What is said is this, not that it was necessary to do as they did, but that it eased their conscience, and, indeed, that may be the simple answer. It may be that, though they had avoided for their own purposes making officially any payment at all, for some reason or another they felt under an obligation to help the plaintiff. That, of course, would be wholly creditable. However, any further light on what they were thinking is not available to us. The West Kent Co.'s solicitor appears to have been in court during the trial, but he was not called to give evidence. Another possible solution is that this idea of secrecy was something which was thought of and suggested by Mr. Arditti, and done (for example) for the reason that he knew that he could not in fact implement the suggestion he had made in his letter.

On this matter the judge reached a clear finding. He treated Mr. Arditti's evidence as requiring caution and he concluded that the secrecy suggestion was an idea of Mr. Arditti's put forward by him, in order that he or the firm could avoid entering into the relationship of solicitor and client with the plaintiff. I must, however, add that the judge expressly acquitted Mr. Arditti of any deliberate motive, for example, of protecting his firm or himself from possible consequences. He said it was a snap decision to avoid the consequences of the solicitor and client relationship. I think, in fairness to Mr. Arditti, I should read this passage of the judgment: "I hope I made it perfectly clear that in finding, "as I do, that the initiation of secrecy must plainly be accepted "by Mr. Arditti as his responsibility, I do not wish it to be "thought that in so determining and introducing it into the tele-"phone conversation he had in mind any particular consequences "to himself or to his firm which might have saved them from "criticism or difficulty thereafter. It was plain that it was a "telephone conversation at which a decision was made, so to "speak, on the spur of the moment."

The finding has been strongly challenged by Mr. O'Connor. Assuming, he says, that the idea was to make the payment to the Royal Air Force Association, then the secrecy provision is really a matter of very little significance and this suggestion, which Mr. Arditti was supposed to be putting forward, was a prior (and his) elaboration. I have found this point, as I earlier indicated, one of great difficulty, but, on the whole, I am not prepared to differ in this respect from the conclusion of the judge, to the extent that I think Mr. Arditti ought to be taken as having been at heart a willing and ready party to this secrecy scheme even if he was not its author, though I am not thereby qualifying the judge's acquittal of deliberate motive on Mr. Arditti's part.

If that is right, what is the result? The judge said that the suggestion was made on the spur of the moment in order that Mr. Arditti, and his firm, might not reconstitute or constitute the solicitor and client relationship; and that he was successful is so doing. On this last matter I must say that I find myself in disagreement with the judge. I am satisfied that at this period and for the purposes in hand the appellants were, and remained, the plaintiff's solicitors. I cannot accept Mr. O'Connor's argument that there was some clear determination of the relation which followed upon the express refusal in July of the West Kent Co. to make an ex gratia payment. Such determination would, perhaps, be somewhat more easy to establish if the appellants had ever clearly thought out and assumed the duties and responsibilities of acting (as they did in fact act) as the plaintiff's

C. A.
1958
KITCHEN
v.
ROYAL
AIR FORCE
ASSOCIATION.
Lord Evershed
M.R.

solicitors. But, and this goes to the root of their conduct—they were always, to say the least of it, hazy in the extreme in thinking out what their relationships were with those with whom they were in communication.

I base my conclusion on the fact that the solicitor and client relationship existed in this vital period. Mr. Arditti and his firm knew nothing whatever of the plaintiff's letter of October 8. Any approach from the West Kent Co. so far as Mr. Arditti was concerned must have been related to his last communication to them. Indeed, Mr. Darlington went so far as to say in his letter: "Subsequently we were able to induce the West Kent Electric "Co. to pay a sum of £100." Further, if reference is made, to the correspondence, the appellants were there writing to the Air Force Association that if they could be "of any further "assistance in this unfortunate matter please do not hesitate to "let us know." Elsewhere they refer to their having failed "so "far" to obtain anything for the plaintiff.

But the conclusive matter I take to be the matter of their charges. They had written to the association to say: "We do "not propose to make any charge to Mrs. Kitchen." But in reporting the telephone conversation with the company's solicitor on October 25, Mr. Arditti had said to Squadron Leader O'Donnell: "We have to make a small deduction in respect of "our charges," that is to say, a deduction from the sum which otherwise would be wholly applied for the plaintiff's benefit.

If then the solicitors were acting, as I think they were, for the plaintiff, what was the effect of the concealment from her of this payment? It is all very well now to justify their having done so on the ground that otherwise she possibly, or probably, would have got nothing from the West Kent Co., but I cannot accept that as a satisfactory answer. If the appellants were, as I hold they were, acting as solicitors for the plaintiff, they clearly should have informed her of what the West Kent Co. were proposing and, indeed, Mr. Darlington himself so stated. A necessary consequence of the concealment was, as they must, if they had given any thought to the matter at all, have realized, was a concealment also from the plaintiff of the real effect of their having thrown away—and I use that word deliberately—any case which she might have possessed under the Fatal Accidents Acts in the previous May. Does, however, that concealment amount to fraud? I repeat that there is no finding and no justification for any finding of dishonesty as that word is ordinarily understood. But it is now clear that the word "fraud" in the section which I have read, is by no means limited to common law fraud or deceit. Equally, it is clear, having regard to the decision in Beaman v. A.R.T.S. Ltd.[3] that no degree of moral turpitude is necessary to establish fraud within the section. What is covered by equitable fraud is a matter which Lord Hardwicke did not attempt to define 200 years ago, and I certainly shall not attempt to do so now, but it is, I think, clear that the phrase covers conduct which, having regard to some special relationship between the two parties concerned, is an unconscionable thing for the one to do towards the other.

[3] [1949] 1 K.B. 550; 65 T.L.R. 389; [1949] 1 All E.R. 465, C.A.; reversing 64 T.L.R. 285; [1948] 2 All E.R. 89.

In Beaman v. A.R.T.S. Ltd.,[3] the relationship between the parties was that of bailor and bailee. The complaint was that the bailee, in breach of their duty and contrary to what the bailor relied upon them to do, took steps to get rid of certain goods belonging to the bailor, not for any malevolent motive, or any motive which, in the ordinary way, would be called dishonest, but because it suited their own business to do so, and since they thought the goods were of no use to the plaintiff. The plaintiff was abroad during the war and the defendants thought that by disposing of the goods they would assist the bailor by saving her charges. Lord Greene M.R. said[4]: "The defendants' principal "purpose, if not their sole real purpose, in getting rid of the "plaintiff's goods was to obtain for themselves the commercial "advantage of being able to close down their business. In breach "of their duty as bailees to communicate with the plaintiff before "converting her goods, they recklessly and without making the "slightest effort to ascertain the true position, assumed that com-"munication was impossible, and it is noticeable that, even after "the Mediterranean was opened in 1943 on the surrender of Italy, "they made no attempt to let the plaintiff know what they had "done. They recklessly and without taking the least trouble to "verify the facts assumed (what was false and on a simple "examination of their records would have been shown to be false) "that the plaintiff had not troubled about her goods, and that "large storage charges had mounted up and would continue to "mount up which the plaintiff would be unable to pay. They "recklessly formed the opinion that the goods were valueless "without having any independent valuation and in disregard of "the fact (which as bailees carrying on business as such they "must have known) that the absence of pecuniary value could "afford no justification for disregarding their obligations." A little later on the Master of the Rolls says: "I am of opinion that "the conduct of the defendants, by the very manner in which "they converted the plaintiff's chattels in breach of the con-"fidence reposed in them, and in circumstances calculated to "keep her in ignorance of the wrong that they had committed "amounted to a fraudulent concealment of the cause of action." In my judgment, similar reasoning applies in this case. The nature and consequences of the relationship between solicitor and client are, to my mind, more powerful in favour of the plaintiff here than was the relationship of bailee and bailor. I think that in this case the conduct of the appellants was, in the sense in [3] [1949] 1 K.B. 550. [4] Ibid. 550, 565.

C. A.
1958
Kitchen
v.
Royal
Air Force
Association.
Lord Evershed
M.R.

which Lord Greene M.R. used the word, reckless, in at least to the same degree as it was in Beaman's case.[5]

Assuming, as I do, that the plaintiff was the appellants' client, she was entitled to rely upon them to look after her interests, and it was in breach of that confidence, as I think, that they did what they did in October and November, and concealed from her facts which would undoubtedly, if disclosed, have brought to light what her true rights against the appellants were. Therefore, though I have felt considerable difficulty about this part of the case, on the whole I have come to the conclusion that there is here just enough established by the plaintiff to enable her to say that there was concealment by fraud by the appellants, and so to deprive them of the right to set up against her the Statute of Limitations.

Mr. O'Connor, in opening the case, put the argument that even though the position was as I have stated, still the plaintiff had not acted with reasonable diligence within the provisions of the section and should have found out earlier than she did what her rights were against the appellants. I do not think she could or should. She says she did not find out what her rights were till 1954, and she was in fact believed by the judge. I cannot think it would be reasonable to expect a woman in her position to have found out by reasonable diligence what the situation was at least until about the time of the action brought by her in 1950.

I come last to what may be the most difficult point of all; namely, assuming that she has established negligence, has the plaintiff proved anything other than nominal damages? It is necessary to say something of the nature of the problem which (as I understand the law) the court has to solve in determining the measure of damages in such a case as this. Mr. O'Connor's point is that we have now to consider the question of liability as between the plaintiff and the electricity company (or their successors) as though it were a distinct proceeding within the present action; and Mr. O'Connor says that, if we find on balance against the plaintiff, that is to say, that she fails in her claim against the electricity board (considered as if it were a separate and existing proceeding), then it follows that her damage is no more than nominal. If that is the right approach, it must follow that in any case such as the present the result expressed in terms of money is always all for the plaintiff or nothing. I cannot, for my part, accept that as the right formulation of the problem.

If, in this kind of action, it is plain that an action could have been brought, and if it had been brought that it must have succeeded, of course the answer is easy. The damaged plaintiff then would recover the full amount of the damages lost by the failure to bring the action originally. On the other hand, if it be made clear that the plaintiff never had a cause of action, that there was no case which the plaintiff could reasonably ever have formulated, then it is equally plain that the answer is that she can get nothing save nominal damages for the solicitors' negligence. I would add, as was conceded by Mr. Neil Lawson, that in such a case it is not enough for the plaintiff to say: "Though "I had no claim in law, still, I had a nuisance value which I could "have so utilized as to extract something from the other side and "they would have had to pay something to me in order to "persuade me to go away."

[5] [1949] 1 K.B. 550.

But the present case falls into neither one nor the other of the categories which I have mentioned. There may be cases where it would be quite impossible to try "the action within the "action" as Mr. O'Connor asks. It may be that for one reason or another the action for negligence is not brought till, say, twenty years after the event and in the process of time the material witnesses or many of them may have died or become quite out of reach for the purpose of being called to give evidence.

In my judgment, what the court has to do (assuming that the plaintiff has established negligence) in such a case as the present, is to determine what the plaintiff has by that negligence lost. The question is, has the plaintiff lost some right of value, some chose in action of reality and substance? In such a case, it may be that its value is not easy to determine, but it is the duty of the court to determine that value as best it can. In the present case, I start with this. The judge here found all these points in the end for the plaintiff. Moreover, he, having seen the plaintiff in the witness-box, found expressly that she was a truthful and candid witness. He, therefore, concluded that she should be entitled to recover £2,000, which was a figure he arrived at as being equivalent to two-thirds arithmetically of the full amount which (admittedly) was the maximum recoverable under the Fatal Accidents Acts. The relevant passage in the judgment is: "I am "not prepared myself to say that there was no hope for this "action. I think there were certain difficulties in the way, and "I think that having regard to the fact that this lady had three "children to look after, it was a very heavy responsibility upon "those advising her, if an offer of compromise had been made to "reject it out of hand. The more I think about it the more I "think that, weighing up these possibilities and considering that "even successful actions may involve a party in some part of "the costs, the fair figure at which to estimate the damage which "was suffered by the failure to bring this matter to trial or to "issue proceedings is the sum of £2,000."

However that may be, this finding has been strongly and most formidably criticized by Mr. O'Connor on more than one ground. [His Lordship considered the evidence and continued:] After giving my best consideration to the matter and directing myself, I hope, properly to the problems which are to be solved in this case, I find it impossible to say that there was here no valuable right, no cause of action, which was lost by the negligence. I

C. A.
1958
KITCHEN v. ROYAL AIR FORCE ASSOCIATION.
Lord Evershed M.R.

agree with the judge that there were difficulties. The whole case is fraught with mystery and you are almost at a loss to conceive how such a state of things ever should have arisen. But the fact is that it did arise because, unfortunately, the husband was killed. The plaintiff has suffered many buffetings in the course of the last thirteen years but in this one respect fortune, it may be, has smiled upon her; for I think for my part she has been generously treated in being awarded £2,000. But the appellants are not quarrelling with the matter of quantum. There is, therefore, nothing I need say on that matter. I think that the plaintiff established that there was a cause of action and that she had lost something of value. So I think on this matter, too, that we should not disturb the judge's finding. In the end, therefore, I would say that this appeal should be dismissed.

PARKER L.J. I have come to the same conclusion. That the solicitors were negligent towards the plaintiff in May of 1946 I have no doubt and for the reasons given by my Lord.

Whether, however, by fraud they concealed the cause of action from the plaintiff is a matter upon which I have had considerable doubt. If there was such a concealment it is to be found and to be found only, in my view, in the events of October, 1946. On the whole, though with considerable hesitation, I have come to the same conclusion as my Lord and I would accept his judgment on this point.

The only matter on which I would desire to add something is on the difficult question of damages. As to this, the first question to consider is how this unfortunate man met his death by electrocution. That his left hand was on the tap over the sink is, I think, clear. The tap and pipe were torn away from their proper position in his convulsions. That his right hand must at the same time come in touch with the control unit is also, I think, clear. It could not have been the cooker itself because this was found to be adequately earthed. Moreover, the plaintiff herself, immediately after the accident, in putting on the kettle, got a slight shock from the control unit. According to the plaintiff, the switch on the control unit was turned off at nights, and since it was found on I think that it seems probable that he was pulling down the switch on the control unit with his right hand at the same time as his left hand was on the tap. Thus he was making himself into a conductor from the control unit to earth. [His Lordship considered the evidence as to the cause of the accident and continued:] The matter remains a mystery and were it necessary for this court to decide whether the plaintiff would have succeeded, I, for my part, would have found great difficulty in coming to that conclusion; but, as I understand it, that is not our task. If the plaintiff can satisfy the court that she would have had some prospect of success, then it would be for the court to evaluate those prospects, taking into consideration the difficulties that remained to be surmounted. In other words, unless the court is satisfied that her claim was bound to fail, something more than nominal damages fall to be awarded.

Bearing that in mind, what is the position? The plaintiff is clearly a person whose evidence was likely to be believed. The judge was clearly impressed by her. Mr. O'Connor has raised forcible criticisms of her evidence, but it is to be observed that all those criticisms were made, and no doubt made with equal force, before the judge, and he, despite that, was prepared to accept the plaintiff's evidence. No doubt the plaintiff would in the action have maintained that the company reconnected the lead wires in 1940. As my Lord has said, that is not a last minute assertion on the part of the plaintiff. In January, 1946, that was her case. Furthermore, whoever connected those wires connected them wrongly, and, if capable of doing that, he might equally be capable of breaking the lead sheath and trying to hide his fault by fixing the clip over or in the gap so caused.

If, in the year 1946, in an action against the electricity company, she had given this evidence, it would clearly have called for an answer by the company, and what would have happened then nobody knows. Edwards, the fitter, might or might not have been called. If the company were not in a position to call him, they might have sought to compromise the action, as indeed they did the Law Reform Act claim. If Edwards had been called, he might or might not have been believed. True, he was an experienced meter fixer but he was not a wireman and for all one knows he might have left the work of reconnection to a mate or underling. There remains, above all, the fact to which I have already referred, that there is really no alternative suggestion as to how the lead sheath was broken. In these circumstances, I cannot say that the claim was bound to fail, and accordingly the plaintiff is entitled to something more than nominal damages.

The judge assessed the damages at £2,000 as against £3,000 the amount agreed to be the maximum recoverable if she had succeeded in the action. I confess that, in the light of my analysis of the position, I should have valued the plaintiff's potential claim at very much less, but there is no appeal against this award insofar as it exceeds nominal damages, and, accordingly, that award must stand.

In these circumstances, I would, like my Lord, dismiss the appeal.

SELLERS L.J. I agree with the judgments of my Lords, and I will add only a few observations of my own on some of the issues.

With regard to the appellants' reliance on the Limitation Act, 1939, and the plaintiff's endeavour to overcome it, there was, in my view, no active concealment by the defendants in June or July, 1946. There was a negligent decision by Mr. Arditti on the plaintiff's proposed claim, because inadequate efforts had been made to obtain the evidence on which an opinion could properly

C. A.
1958
Kitchen v. Royal Air Force Association.
Sellers L.J.

be expressed. The evidence of the plaintiff and others, available at the time, required careful investigation and assessment by an experienced expert in electrical matters and this was not obtained.

There were further acts of negligent omission by Mr. Arditti. He failed to serve a writ within the statutory period of one year to keep the claim open and so, at least, to enable an expert to be consulted and his report to be considered. He failed to inform the plaintiff of the time-limit for the writ and the consequences of not issuing the writ and to obtain her instructions one way or the other.

It has been accepted by the appellants, and, indeed, it is quite obvious, that the plaintiff would have insisted on a writ being issued and would have rejected advice to let the matter drop. Those are the acts of omission, which gave rise to the claim against the appellants for negligence or breach of duty, but I do not find in them or in the circumstances surrounding them any evidence of fraudulent concealment. But, in October and November, 1946, there was an active concealment, a deliberate and intentional failure for some reason to disclose the offer of £100 made by the West Kent Co. What was the reason? If it had been solely to benefit the plaintiff and ensure that she received safely from an undisclosed source financial benefit she would not otherwise have received, then, although there was concealment, I would not have thought that fraud, even in its widest sense, or on general equitable grounds, had been established.

But if the evidence establishes that the non-disclosure to the plaintiff of the West Kent Co.'s renewed approach to the defendants in October and their offer of some payment for the benefit of the plaintiff amounted to a further breach of duty to the plaintiff by the defendants, or that disclosure was withheld in order to benefit the defendants themselves, then I think circumstances arise which would establish fraudulent concealment under section 26 (1) (b) of the Limitation Act, 1939, as it has been interpreted in the authorities to which my Lord has referred.

The judge rejected the defendants' contention that their motive and interest were solely to obtain a benefit for the plaintiff and that the West Kent Co. enforced secrecy as a basis of their financial assistance. I see no reason to reject the judge's view. The approach to the West Kent Co. had been brought about by the plaintiff's letter direct to them of October 25, 1946, requesting a reconsideration of her claim. Although the evidence did not touch on it, I find it hard to believe that no reference was made to that letter by the West Kent Co.'s solicitor, Mr. Stubbins, to Mr. Arditti during the vital telephone conversation. For all the electricity company knew, it might have been followed up by many more such letters or by direct personal approach or both, and it would hardly seem to have been serving the West Kent Co.'s interest to require secrecy and to dispense with a receipt in final settlement of all claims, which the defendants earlier and without any authority had been rash enough to offer.

I think there was abundant justification for the judge's finding that the suggestion of secrecy emanated from Mr. Arditti. The judgment holds, if I understand it aright, that Mr. Arditti, not wishing to make a full disclosure of what had taken place, sought to evade that responsibility by acting in a manner which would not involve him in a solicitor and client relationship with the plaintiff. I agree with my Lords that the appellants were solicitors and were acting as solicitors for the plaintiff in October and November and that their decision not to disclose the approach to the West Kent Co. was a breach of their duty in that capacity. The plaintiff had written the letter and if she had heard that in response the electricity company were making some offer, call it ex gratia or a donation, after an earlier complete refusal to do anything, she would no doubt have been prompted to press further. The offer of £100, generous as it was, if there was no legal liability, was modest indeed in comparison with the needs of the plaintiff and her children. If she had known of what was taking place and had demanded more and had insisted, as it seems she would have done, that action should be taken, the defendants would have been in a difficulty and their failure to inform her of the omission to have issued a writ would have been revealed.

Whatever may have been in the mind of Mr. Arditti at the time of the telephone conversation, his failure of duty concealed from the plaintiff facts which would, in all probability, have revealed the appellants' earlier breach of duty. The concealment was intentional and did, in fact, benefit and save the interests of the appellants. If the "device," as it has been called in argument, was Mr. Arditti's, as I would hold it to have been, it cannot be regarded in all the circumstances merely as a high-minded endeavour to benefit the plaintiff, and in my view, it is sufficient to prevent the appellants from relying on the defence of the Statute of Limitations. Whatever is to be said for it, the result was that the plaintiff was put in a false position. She received a curt and rather callous letter from the electricity company on October 28, 1946, saying that "they felt no useful "purpose would be served by granting the interview for which "you have asked."

The only other matter on which I would wish to touch is the damages. Cases concerning electricity are often difficult and may develop surprisingly in the course of a trial when all the factors are judicially investigated by examination, cross-examination and argument, and therefore, until judgment, may leave a position of uncertainty in the minds of the contesting parties. The plaintiff was not an expert electrician but she did know something, perhaps more than anyone else who gave evidence, about the electrical arrangements in her kitchen. The judge believed her as a witness, and, notwithstanding Mr. O'Connor's powerful criticisms of her evidence and its inconsistencies, I would not feel justified in saying the judge was wrong.

C. A.
1958
Kitchen v. Royal Air Force Association.
Sellers L.J.

It became apparent that a vital factor in the case was the finding after the accident of a fracture in the lead covering of the lead running from the control box to the meter. The question arises how this fracture could have occurred. The plaintiff recalled that in 1940, when the cooker was not connected and was out of use, this lead and also the lead covering to the cooker were detached and bent back. It is possible that a fracture could have occurred then. When the available evidence is examined, there is no other evidence to be contrasted or balanced with it, and, if fracture there was, that it occurred at the time of the bending back or the reinstating becomes a probability.

Then there is some evidence that the connecting up in 1940 of this lead, which had been bent back and possibly or probably damaged, had been done by a servant of the electricity company. I do not repeat the evidence with regard to the suggested earthings or the absence of an earth to the control box. I adopt fully Parker L.J.'s analysis with regard to that. But, in my view, it is quite untenable to regard the claim against the electricity company as one without any foundation and as one which was bound to fail.

On behalf of the plaintiff, it has not been sought to establish that she was certain of victory and should have recovered £3,000, which was agreed as the appropriate sum in a successful claim under the Fatal Accidents Acts. There was room for compromise on both sides, and, as I view it, every probability of a compromise if the plaintiff's action had been pressed, and I would not disturb the judge's assessment of £2,000, high though I regard it.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Hewitt, Woollacott & Chown; H. C. L. Hanne & Co.

B. A. B.

[NORWICH ASSIZES.]

1958
Feb. 12, 13, 17, 18.
Gorman J.

* COSTAGLIOLA v. BUNTING and Another.

Agriculture—Agricultural holding—Notice to quit—Death of tenant—Administratrix of tenant—Whether "tenant with whom the contract of tenancy was made"—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 63), s. 24 (2) (g).

By a memorandum of agreement dated August 19, 1914, agricultural land was leased by the plaintiff's predecessor in title to B. On B.'s death in 1932 his widow remained in occupation on the terms of her husband's tenancy until her death on March 8, 1956. Her sons continued in possession and on May 23, 1956, the plaintiff gave them a year's notice to quit. The notice stated that it was given in pursuance of the provisions of section 24 (2) (g) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948,[1] and for the reason that the

[1] Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, s. 24: "(1) Where notice to quit an "agricultural holding or part of an "agricultural holding is given to the late tenant had died within three months before the date of the giving of the notice. In June, 1956, the defendants served a counter-notice under section 24 (1) [1] of the Act:—

Held, that the widow was not "the tenant with whom the "contract of tenancy was made" within section 24 (2) (g) of the Act of 1948, and that the Minister not having consented to its operation as required by section 24 (1) the notice to quit was bad.

ACTION.

The plaintiff, Alexandra Tamzen Johannah Costagliola, was the successor in title of two parcels of agricultural land at Terrington St. John, Norfolk, one of them situate at 63, Church Lane, and the other at 15, Middlegate Lane. By a memorandum of agreement dated August 19, 1914, the Church Lane holding was leased to John Bunting by Captain Richard Charles Monson, the plaintiff's predecessor in title. On John Bunting's death in 1932, his widow, Sarah Bunting, remained in occupation of the holding on the terms of her husband's tenancy until her death on March 8, 1956. By a memorandum of agreement dated March 12, 1934, the Middlegate holding was leased to her by Captain Monson. She had paid a total rent of £20 15s. per annum for both the holdings; and her sons, the defendants, had worked on the land at both holdings since 1929.

The plaintiff served a notice to quit on May 23, 1956, on the defendants who had continued in possession of both holdings after Sarah Bunting's death. The notice to quit required delivery up to the plaintiff of the possession of both holdings and the last paragraph read: "Please take notice that this notice to quit is "given for the following reason and in pursuance of the provisions "of section 24 (2) (g) of the [Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948] "namely, that the said Sarah Bunting, the late tenant, has died "within three months before the giving of this notice to quit."

The defendants served a counter-notice in June, 1956, under section 24 (1) of the Act of 1948. The consent of the Minister to the operation of the notice to quit had not been obtained, and the defendants contended that the notice was thereby rendered ineffective by the service of the counter-notice. The plaintiff contended that Mrs. Bunting was the "tenant" within section 24 (2) (g) of the Act, and that therefore the Minister's consent was not required to the operation of the notice to quit. Alternatively, the plaintiff contended that the defendants were estopped from denying that Mrs. Bunting was the "tenant."

"tenant thereof, and not later than "one month from the giving of the "notice to quit the tenant serves on "the landlord a counter-notice in "writing requiring that this subsec-"tion shall apply to the notice to "quit, then, subject to the provisions "of the next following subsection, the "notice to quit shall not have effect "unless the Minister consents to the "operation thereof. (2) The foregoing "subsection shall not apply where ". . . (g) the tenant with whom the "contract of tenancy was made had "died within three months before the "date of the giving of the notice to "quit, and it is stated in the notice "that it is given by reason of the "matter aforesaid."

1958

Costagliola v. Bunting.

The defendants conceded that Mrs. Bunting was the "tenant" so far as the Middlegate holding was concerned, since she held that tenancy under an express contract. They contended that so far as the Church Lane holding was concerned she was not the "tenant" within section 24 (2) (g) of the Act.

Other defences were raised to the plaintiff's claim for possession but the case is only reported on the construction of the statute.

Gorman J. held that the plaintiff was entitled to possession of the Middlegate holding.

Michael Havers for the plaintiff.
Claud Allen for the defendants.

The following case and authority relevant to the report was referred to in argument: Woodward v. Earl of Dudley[2]; Scammall's Law of Agricultural Holdings, 2nd ed., p. 223.

Gorman J. stated the facts and continued: The defendants submit that section 24 (2) (g) of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, do not authorize the giving of notice to quit in respect of the Church Lane property because Mrs. Bunting was not the tenant with whom the contract of tenancy was made. There appears a general definition of "tenant" in section 94 (1) of the Act in these terms: "In this Act, unless the context otherwise "requires, the following expressions have the meanings hereby "respectively assigned to them, that is to say:—'tenant' means "the holder of land under a contract of tenancy, and includes "the executors, administrators, assigns, committee of the "estate or trustee in bankruptcy of a tenant, or other person "deriving title from a tenant." It is said by Mr. Allen on behalf of the defendants that Mrs. Bunting was not at any time the person with whom a contract of tenancy was made; that she was the administratrix of her husband, and though she qualifies, as a tenant within the meaning of section 94 (1) of the Act, she is not the tenant within section 24 (2) (g). It is contended that the words "with whom the contract of tenancy was made" have a limiting effect on the definition of "tenant" in section 94 (1), so that in section 24 (2) (g) the meaning of the word "tenant" is restricted by the qualifying words "with whom the contract of "tenancy is made." It is said by Mr. Allen that the only person who comes within the scope of section 24 (2) (g) is the tenant with whom the contract of tenancy was made. Mr. Havers contends that the meaning of "tenant" in section 24 (2) (g) was not limiting, but has the width of the definition in section 94 (1).

I am clearly of the opinion that the contention of the defendants is right, and that the words "with whom the contract of "tenancy was made" in section 24 (2) (g) have a limiting effect upon the word "tenant" in section 94 (1). Under section 24

[2] [1954] Ch. 283; [1954] 1 W.L.R. 476; [1954] 1 All E.R. 559.

(2) (g) the legislature only contemplated the original tenant who had actually been in contractual relationship with the landowner. The effect of this construction is that one is unable to get rid, without the consent of the Minister, of a tenant other than the tenant having a direct contract with the owner of the land.

Mr. Havers said that if he was wrong in saying that the interpretation of section 24 (2) (g) was the wide one, then whether one considered the position from the point of view of estoppel, or as a question of inferences to be drawn from the facts, whatever might be the initial relationship between Mrs. Bunting and the landlord it would be sufficient if she was the contractual tenant at the time of the death.

I have been referred to Foster v. Robinson [3] but I cannot accept that there is evidence upon which I can find—whether I consider it as a question of estoppel or as an inference to be drawn from the facts—that there was a change in the relationship in the sense that Mrs. Bunting ceased to be holder by virtue of her being administratix of her husband, and became holder by reason of a contract of tenancy between her and Captain Monson or some other person. Therefore, so far as the first contention is concerned, the notice served in respect of Church Lane was a bad notice because Mrs. Bunting was not the person who came within the scope of the word "tenant" within section 24 (2) (g).

Solicitors: Metcalfe, Copeman & Pettefar; Sadler, Lemmon & Gethin, King's Lynn.

J. D. P.

[3] [1951] 1 K.B. 149; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 120; [1950] 2 All E.R. 343.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

* IN THE ESTATE OF HASLIP, DECD.

1958
April 2.
Karminski J.

Administration—Administration pendente lite—Possibility of minority or life interest arising—Power to appoint a sole administrator—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 49), s. 163 (1).

The court has power to appoint a sole administrator pendente lite under section 163 (1) of the Judicature Act, 1925,[1] although there is the possibility of a life or minority interest arising.

[1] Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 163 (1): "Where any legal proceedings touching the validity of the will of a deceased person, or for obtaining, recalling or revoking any grant, are pending, the High Court may grant administration of the estate of the deceased to an administrator, who shall have all the rights and powers of a general administrator, other than the right of distributing the residue of the estate, and every such administrator shall be subject to the immediate control of the court and act under its direction.

"(2) The court may, out of the estate of the deceased, assign to an administrator appointed under this section such reasonable remuneration as the court thinks fit."

1958

IN THE ESTATE OF HASLIP, DECD.

In the Estate of Lindley, decd. [1953] P. 203; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 168; [1953] 2 All E.R. 319 followed.

In re White [1928] P. 75; 43 T.L.R. 729 distinguished.

PROBATE MOTION.

A testatrix executed a will and codicil appointing by the latter the plaintiff, a nephew, executor. The will, which was drawn by the testatrix herself contained interlineations and deletions the effect of which required, according to counsel for the plaintiff, decision by the court in default of settlement between the parties. The will disclosed on its face the possibility of a life interest arising.

The application was for the appointment of the plaintiff or some other fit and proper person to be administrator pendente lite of the real and personal estate of the testatrix under section 163 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925.[1]

Douglas Lowe for the plaintiff. There is recent authority that section 163 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, is not governed by the preceeding section 160 (1) [2] and that the court may appoint a sole administrator under that section even though the possibility exists of a minority or life interest arising: see In the Estate of Lindley, decd.[3] The current edition of Tristram and Coote, Probate Practice (19th ed., p. 515), however, states that the court must appoint two administrators and maintains that the authority referred to conflicts with the decision of the Court of Appeal in In re White.[4]

James Comyn for the defendant, who was one of those entitled on intestacy. The application is not opposed; it is agreed that the court is entitled, under this section, to appoint a sole administrator. It was, however, thought that the statement in Tristram and Coote should be brought to the attention of the court.

KARMINSKI J. In In re White * an application to grant letters of administration to a sole administratrix was refused but that decision is to be distinguished from the present application since it concerned an application under a different section of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, namely, section 162. The section now invoked, namely, section 163, refers to "administrator" in the singular. Further, an administrator pendente lite is clearly, by virtue of the statute, in an

[1] For foonote 1 see p. 583.

[2] Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 160: "(1) Probate or administration shall "not be granted to more than four "persons in respect of the same "property, and administration shall, "if there is a minority or if a life "interest arises under the will or "intestacy, be granted either to a "trust corporation, with or without "an individual, or to not less than "two individuals: Provided that the "court in granting administration "may act on such prima facie "evidence . . . as to whether or not "there is a minority or life interest, "as may be prescribed by the probate "rules and orders."

[3] [1953] P. 203; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 168; [1953] 2 All E.R. 319.

[4] [1928] P. 75; 43 T.L.R. 729.

* [1928] P. 75; 43 T.L.R. 729.

especial position since he is under the constant supervision of the court.

1958

IN THE ESTATE OF HASLIP, DECD.

It is obviously to the benefit of the estate not to be burdened with the possible expense of a second administrator and I have no hesitation in following the decision of Wallington J. in In the Estate of Lindley, decd.[2]

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Wilkinsons; Kimbers.

E. J.

[2] [1953] P. 203; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 168; [1953] 2 All E.R. 319.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

*FYNN v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.

1957 Dec. 10, 11.

Upjohn J.

Revenue—Income tax—Transfer of assets to company incorporated abroad—Charge by company of transferred assets to bank—Subsequent payment by taxpayer into company's account at same bank of moneys on unsecured loan to company—Whether company's income deemed to be taxpayer's income — "Associated operation" — Income Tax Act, 1918 (8 & 9 Geo. 5, c. 40), Sch. 1, Sch. D, Case VI —Income Tax Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 10), ss. 412 (2) (4) (5), 413 (1).

In 1947 a taxpayer caused to be incorporated in the Republic of Ireland a company to which, in 1948, he sold investments worth about £35,437, allowing the price to be left owing to him. In 1949 there were allotted to the taxpayer ordinary shares at a price satisfied by cancelling the company's indebtedness to him, which shares he settled on trusts governed by the law of the Republic of Ireland. Later, the company at various times bought further investments in the market, largely by borrowing from its bankers on an overdraft limited to £35,000 and secured by a charge on the company's securities, including those which the taxpayer had transferred to it. In January, 1952, at a date when the overdraft approached and possibly exceeded the limit, the taxpayer lent to the company out of his surplus funds, free of interest and on day to day loan, £12,000, which was paid into the company's bank and enabled the company to buy more investments. There was no evidence of pressure by the bank to reduce the overdraft.

It was conceded (1) that the sale of the transferred securities to the company was a "transfer of assets" abroad to avoid tax within section 412 of the Income Tax Act, 1952,[1] and (2) that the charge by

[1] Income Tax Act, 1918, Sch. 1, Sch. D: "(2) Tax under this "Schedule shall be charged under the "following cases respectively; that "is to say,— . . . Case VI. Tax in "respect of any annual profits or "gains not falling under any of the "foregoing cases, and not charged by "virtue of any other Schedule . . ."

Income Tax Act, 1952, s. 412: "For the purpose of preventing the "avoiding by individuals ordinarily "resident in the United Kingdom of "liability to income tax by means of "transfers of assets by virtue or in "consequence whereof, either alone "or in conjunction with associated "operations, income becomes payable "to persons resident or domiciled out "of the United Kingdom, it is hereby "enacted as follows: . . .

"(2) Where, before or after any "such transfer, such an individual "receives or is entitled to receive any "capital sum the payment whereof is "in any way connected with the

1957

Fynn
v.
Inland
Revenue
Commissioners.

the company of those transferred assets to secure its overdraft was an operation associated with that transfer:—

Held, in respect of the loan of £12,000, (1) that neither the making of the loan nor the right to receive repayment of it was "in any way connected with the transfer" of the original assets, within the meaning of section 412 (2), or with the charging of those assets that was the associated operation.

(2) That the actual loan itself was not an "associated operation" within section 412 (4), being an unsecured loan which the company could have used as it pleased, and not made either to reduce the ovedraft or to free the assets from the charge.

Appeal from a decision of the Commissioners for the Special Purposes of the Income Tax Acts.

The case stated, so far as relevant, provided in substance as follows: At a meeting of the commissioners on July 13 and 16, 1956, the taxpayer, B. M. Lindsay Fynn, appealed against assessments to income tax made on him under Case VI of Schedule D for 1951–52 in the sum of £4,005 and for 1952–53 in the sum of £1,769. The assessments were in respect of sums, being income of Crescent Investments Ltd. (hereinafter called "Crescent"), which the Inland Revenue Commissioners contended were deemed to be income of the taxpayer by virtue (in the case of the 1951–52 assessment) of section 18 of the Finance Act, 1936, as amended by section 28 of the Finance Act, 1938, and (in the case of the 1952–53 assessment) of section 412 of the Income Tax Act, 1952. It was agreed that, for the purposes of this appeal, there was no material difference between section 18 as amended and section 412, and the appeal was argued, and the case stated, as if section 412 applied to both assessments.

On July 25, 1947, the taxpayer caused Crescent to be incorporated in the Republic of Ireland, where, accordingly, it was "transfer or any associated operation, any income which, by virtue or in consequence of the transfer, either alone or in conjunction with associated operations, has become the income of a person resident or domiciled out of the United Kingdom shall, whether it would or would not have been chargeable to income tax apart from the provisions of this section, be deemed to be the income of that individual for all the purposes of this Act. In this subsection, 'capital sum' means—(a) any sum paid or payable by way of loan or repayment of a loan. . . .

"(4) For the purposes of this section, 'an associated operation' means, in relation to any transfer, an operation of any kind effected by any person in relation to any of the assets transferred or any assets representing, whether directly or indirectly, any of the assets transferred, or to the income arising from any such assets, or to any assets representing, whether directly or indirectly, the accumulations of income arising from any such assets."

"(5) An individual shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to have power to enjoy income of a person resident or domiciled out of the United Kingdom if . . . (b) the receipt or accrual of the income operates to increase the value to the individual of any assets held by him or for his benefit. . . ."

S. 413 (1): "Tax at the standard rate shall not be charged by virtue of the last preceding section in respect of income which has borne tax at the standard rate by deduction or otherwise but, save as aforesaid, tax chargeable at the standard rate by virtue of that section shall be charged under Case VI of Schedule D and all assessments in respect thereof shall be made by the special commissioners."

resident and domiciled, with a capital of £30,000 divided into 15,000 preference shares of £1 each (none of which had been issued at the date of these proceedings) and 15,000 ordinary shares of £1 each, of which 998 were issued to the taxpayer and one each to E. J. Shott and W. S. Cunningham. Shortly afterwards the taxpayer's wife lent £3,200 to Crescent. In March, 1948, the taxpayer sold to Crescent investments (hereinafter called "the transferred securities") to the value of £35,437 10s. at that price, which was left outstanding and owing by Crescent to the taxpayer: and the taxpayer's wife transferred to the taxpayer the benefit of her loan to Crescent, whose indebtedness to the taxpayer amounted to £38,637 10s. It was not disputed that the sale of the transferred securities by the taxpayer to Crescent was a "transfer of assets" within section 412 or that one of the transfer's purposes was to avoid liability to taxation. In June, 1949, Crescent's capital was increased to £41,000 by the creation of 11,000 further ordinary shares, making 26,000 ordinary shares in all. On June 14, 1949, a further 25,000 ordinary shares were allotted to the taxpayer for £38,637 10s., which was satisfied by cancelling Crescent's indebtedness to him. About June 20, 1949, he caused his 25,998 ordinary shares to become vested in Shott and Cunningham, executing, on that date, a deed of settlement whereby they were to be held by Shott and Cunningham as trustees on trusts in favour of the taxpayer's children. The settlement was irrevocable and was governed by the law of the Republic of Ireland where the trustees resided. Later, questions arose between the taxpayer and the Revenue about the effect of section 412 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, in relation to Crescent's income up to the date of the settlement. At various times between the date of the settlement and August, 1951, the taxpayer sold further investments to Crescent for full consideration and at various times Crescent bought further investments in the market, largely by borrowing from its bankers, the overdraft being secured by a charge on the securities which Crescent held, including the transferred securities. On September 30, 1951, Crescent held investments which had cost £81,286 and the overdraft, which was then limited to £35,000 stood at £33,654. On January 3, 1952, the taxpayer wrote to Shott, who was, as well as a trustee, a director of Crescent: "As I have for the moment some surplus "funds, I have to-day arranged to transfer £12,000 from my "personal account to the credit of the account of Crescent Invest-"ments Ltd. with the Midland Bank Ltd., 133 Regent Street, on "day to day loan, free of interest. Would you be good enough to "send to me an undated letter addressed to the Midland Bank "Ltd., in terms similar to the carbon copy letter which I attach "requesting them to debit the Crescent Investment Ltd. account "and credit my account with the sum of £12,000. This is merely a "protection on my part. The manager of the Midland Bank will "then be in a position to let me know at any time if there is "any risk of the loan account of Crescent Investments Ltd.

1957

Fynn v. Inland Revenue Commissioners.

"being frozen at a lower level." The "loan account" was the overdraft, which was near, and possibly exceeded, the limit at the date of the loan of £12,000 by the taxpayer, who happened to have cash available. There was no evidence of pressure by the bank to reduce the overdraft and the loan enabled Crescent to buy more investments. On September 19, 1952, the taxpayer wrote to Shott: "With reference to the loan of £12,000 . . . the "best thing to do would be to add it to the settlement . . ." On March 1, 1954, the taxpayer executed a deed releasing Crescent from its obligation to repay the £12,000. The substantive offect from the taxpayer's point of view was that he added £12,000 to the amount settled on his children and—the point in his mind when he executed the deed—that it ended the period for which it might be possible for Crescent's income to be deemed to be his by virtue of section 412. Part (possibly all) of Crescent's income consisted of dividends paid under deduction of income tax, Crescent obtaining repayment of the income tax deducted under the double taxation convention between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland set out in Schedule II to the Finance Act, 1926 (or Schedule 18 to the Finance Act, 1952).

The Revenue contended: (i) that the taxpayer's transfer of the transferred securities to Crescent was a "transfer of assets" within section 412; (ii) that the charging of those assets to Crescent's bankers as security for Crescent's overdraft was an "associated "operation" in relation to that "transfer of assets"; (iii) that the loan of £12,000 also was an "associated operation" in relation thereto; (iv) that by lending the £12,000 to Crescent the taxpayer became entitled within section 412 (2) to a capital sum payment whereof was connected with each of those "associated operations" and that, accordingly, Crescent's income for the financial years 1951–52 and 1952–53 was deemed to be the taxpayer's income by virtue of section 412 (2); (v) alternatively that by making that loan the taxpayer acquired rights by virtue of which he had, within the meaning of section 412 (5) (b) and (c) (and by reference to section 412 (4)) power to enjoy the income of Crescent for the financial years 1951–52 and 1952–53 and that that income was deemed to be his income by virtue of section 412 (1); (vi) that the whole of Crescent's income for the fiscal year 1951–52 must be deemed to be the taxpayer's income; (vii) that Crescent's income had not borne tax at the standard rate within the meaning of section 413 (1), that no relief was due to the taxpayer under section 413, and that the assessments under Case VI of Schedule D were correctly made and should be confirmed.

The taxpayer contended: (i) that the taxpayer's loan of £12,000 to Crescent was not an operation associated with the transfer of the transferred securities; (ii) that, if the charging of the transferred securities was an associated operation, the taxpayer was at no time entitled to receive any capital sum the payment whereof was in any way connected therewith; (iii) that, if the taxpayer was entitled to receive any capital sum, the payment thereof was not in any way connected with anything, since no such payment ever had been made or ever would be made; (iv) that, accordingly, section 412 (2) had no application; (v) that the taxpayer did not at any material time have power to enjoy the income of Crescent within section 412 (5) (b) and (c); (vi) that, if the taxpayer did have power to enjoy the income of Crescent by reason of his having made the loan to Crescent, he did not have that power by virtue of any rights which were acquired by means of the transfer of the transferred securities, either alone or in conjunction with an associated operation, since the loan was not an associated operation; (vii) that, accordingly, section 412 (1) had no operation; (viii) that if, contrary to the taxpayer's contentions, any income of Crescent was deemed to be the taxpayer's income by virtue of any of the provisions of section 412, the only income which could be affected was income which became the income of Crescent since January 3, 1952, when the loan was made; (ix) that in any event Crescent's income had borne tax at the standard rate and, accordingly, the assessments should not have been made, by virtue of section 413.

The commissioners held that the charging of the transferred securities to Crescent's bankers was an associated operation in relation to those securities. They held that, on January 3, 1952, when the taxpayer lent £12,000 to Crescent, he became entitled to a capital sum the payment whereof was connected with that associated operation. In so concluding, they were of opinion that, if (as they held to be the case) the loan itself was in any way connected with the charge which secured Crescent's overdraft, the taxpayer's right to demand repayment of the loan was equally so connected. Further, in so concluding they held that, on the true construction of section 412 (2), the fact that no capital sum was ever paid or would ever be paid was immaterial so long as the taxpayer was entitled to demand payment.

For the foregoing reasons the commissioners held that Crescent's income was deemed to be the income of the taxpayer by virtue of section 412 (2), and they expressed no opinion on the other questions raised by both parties relating to section 412 (1) and (2). On the question whether the income which had in their opinion to be so treated included the whole of Crescent's income for the whole of the fiscal year 1951–52 or only such part of that income as became Crescent's income after January 3, 1952, the commissioners held that, on the true construction of section 412 (2), the Crown's contention was right and that the whole of Crescent's income for the fiscal year 1951–52 must be deemed to be the income of the taxpayer. On the taxpayer's contention as to section 413, the commissioners held that the income of Crescent in question was not income which had borne income tax at the standard rate within the meaning of that section. They confirmed the assessments. The taxpayer appealed.

1957

FYNN v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.

C. N. Beattie for the taxpayer.

Sir Lynn Ungoed-Thomas Q.C., E. Blanshard Stamp and Alan Orr for the Crown.

Case cited in argument not referred to in the judgment: Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Dalgety & Co. Ltd.[2]

UPJOHN J. This is an appeal by way of case stated from two assessments made by the Revenue and confirmed by the special commissioners, on the taxpayer for 1951–52 under the Finance Act, 1936, section 18, as amended by the Finance Act, 1938, section 28, and for 1952–53 under the Income Tax Act, 1952, section 412. The Income Tax Act, 1952, section 412, substantially re-enacted the earlier sections which were repealed, and before the commissioners, and before me, the matter has been treated as arising entirely in both years under section 412. That section, as appears from the sidenote, is designed to prevent the avoidance of income tax by transactions resulting in the transfer of income to persons abroad.

In 1947 the taxpayer caused a company known as Crescent Investments Ltd. (to which I shall refer as "Crescent") to be incorporated in the Republic of Ireland and shares were issued to him. In March, 1948, the taxpayer sold some £35,000 worth of securities to Crescent, the amount due to the taxpayer being left outstanding. It is not disputed that that transfer of securities was a transfer of assets within section 412, and it is also admitted that one of the objects of the transfer was to avoid liability to English taxation. I shall refer to these securities as "the transferred "assets."

In 1949 25,000 shares were issued to the taxpayer in satisfaction of Crescent's indebtedness to him in respect of the transfer of assets, and in 1949 the taxpayer settled the shares then vested in him on the trusts of a settlement, which was governed in all respects by the law of the Republic of Ireland. Later, Crescent purchased further investments in the open market, which were financed by borrowing from its own bankers; and the position in September, 1951, was apparently that Crescent held investments to the extent of about £81,000, and the bank overdraft, secured by a charge on the transferred assets, stood at some £33,000, the limit permitted by the bank being apparently £35,000.

In January, 1952, the transaction took place with which this appeal is concerned. The taxpayer, being possessed of some surplus funds, lent £12,000 as an interest-free unsecured loan to Crescent, repayable on demand, and caused that sum of £12,000 to be paid to Crescent's bankers. No doubt the immediate effect of that was to reduce the overdraft (for which the transferred assets were security) by that amount, but, as is stated in the case, "At the time when the [taxpayer] made this loan of £12,000 to

[2] [1930] A.C. 527; 46 T.L.R. 349.

" Crescent, Crescent's overdraft was near the limit and may have " exceeded the limit; the taxpayer happened to have cash avail- " able; there was no evidence that Crescent was being pressed by " the bank to reduce the overdraft, and the loan enabled Crescent " to make further purchases of investments." The inference I draw from that is that Crescent, had it wanted to, could have forthwith withdrawn that £12,000 and used it for any purpose that it cared to.

Nothing further happened that is relevant to this case, but, as a matter of history, in March, 1954, the taxpayer in fact released Crescent from its obligation to repay the loan of £12,000. The substantive effect of that was to increase the value of the settled shares by that amount.

Section 412 of the Act of 1952 begins: " For the purpose of " preventing the avoiding by individuals ordinarily resident in the " United Kingdom of liability to income tax by means of transfers " of assets by virtue or in consequence whereof, either alone or in " conjunction with associated operations, income becomes payable " to persons resident or domiciled out of the United Kingdom, it " is hereby enacted as follows . . . "

It is common ground that that part of the section is entirely satisfied, that is to say, the individual, the taxpayer, is ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom and he has transferred assets whereby income becomes payable to a person (i.e., Crescent) who is resident or domiciled out of the United Kingdom, and it was done with the avowed object of avoiding income tax. On that matter I need say no more than that the taxpayer is perfectly entitled to avoid income tax if he properly can. If, on the other hand, he finds himself in difficulties with a penal section such as this, then one has no sympathy with him if, to use the language of the late Lord Greene M.R. in Howard de Walden v. Inland Revenue Commissioners,[1] he finds that his fingers have been burnt.

[His Lordship read section 412 (2), (4), and (5) of the Act of 1952, and continued:] After the transfer the taxpayer was entitled to receive a capital sum, i.e., repayment of the £12,000 lent by him to Crescent. The question which I have to consider is whether it is proper to say that, within the terms of section 412 (2), the taxpayer was entitled to receive a capital sum " the " payment whereof is in any way connected with the transfer or " any associated operation." Having regard to the definition of " an associated operation " in subsection (4), it is conceded that the charge by the company of the transferred assets to secure its overdraft is an operation which can properly be described as associated with the transfer of assets. We do not know exactly when that charge was created, but it is common ground that it was so created.

The special commissioners have held that the right to receive the capital is connected with the associated operation of the [1] [1942] 1 K.B. 389, 397; [1942] 1 All E.R. 287, 289.

1957

Fynn v. Inland Revenue Commissioners.

Upjohn J.

charge of assets, and they put it in this way, in paragraph 7 of the case: "We, the commissioners who heard the appeal, held "that the charging of the transferred securities to Crescent's "bankers was an associated operation in relation to the transfer "of the transferred securities. We held that on January 3, 1952, "when the [taxpayer] lent £12,000 to Crescent, he became "entitled to receive a capital sum the payment whereof was "connected with the said associated operation; in coming to this "conclusion we were of the opinion that if (as we held to be the "case) the loan itself was in any way connected with the charge "which secured Crescent's overdraft, then the [taxpayer's] right "to demand repayment of the loan was equally so connected; "further, in coming to this conclusion, we held that on the true "construction of section 412 (2), the fact that no capital sum was "ever paid or will ever be paid was immaterial, so long the [tax-"payer] was entitled to demand payment."

I am not going to attempt any definition of what meaning should be given to the phrase "the payment whereof is in any "way connected with the transfer"; or in particular to attempt any definition of the vital word "connected" except to say it must receive its ordinary meaning. Every case must be dependent on its own facts, but I look at those facts and ask myself whether it can be said that the right to receive repayment of the sum of £12,000 is in any way connected with the original transfer or with the charging of the transferred assets by Crescent. It is said that it is so connected because the payment of the £12,000 reduced the overdraft secured on the transferred assets. Speaking for myself, I can only express my view in one sentence. I can see no connexion whatever between the charge of transferred assets on the one hand and either the lending of the money or the right to receive payment on the other. They do not seem to me to have any connexion at all one with the other on the facts of this case.

Then it is said that the actual loan itself is "an associated "operation," and attention is drawn to the words in section 412 (4) "an operation of any kind effected by any person." So far so good. Is it an operation effected in relation to any of the transferred assets? It is said that it is because the loan reduced the overdraft. There, again, I propose not to attempt any definition of the phrase "in relation to any of the assets transferred." I cannot see that the making of the unsecured loan can be said in any ordinary use of language to have any relation to the previously created charge. It was an unsecured loan made on the facts of this case, not for the purpose of reducing the overdraft because the bank were pressing for payment; nor for the purpose of freeing the assets from the charge. It was made to Crescent as an interest-free unsecured loan and Crescent could have used it in any way that it pleased. I cannot see that it bears any relation to any of the transferred assets or to the charge.

A further argument was addressed to me. It was said that the operation was in relation to the transferred assets even if the assets had not been charged, because the assets are available for repayment of the loan. I do not follow this argument.

1957

FYNN v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.

Upjohn J.

An argument was addressed to me on subsection (5). It was said that the taxpayer had power to enjoy income because he fell within paragraph (b) of that subsection. That may or may not be so. There is some authority on that, but in my judgment, subsection (5) is linked up with subsection (1) where the phrase is used "power to enjoy income," and, in my judgment, subsection (5) cannot be used to enlarge the definition in subsection (4).

In my judgment the special commissioners have misdirected themselves, and the appeal must be allowed and the assessment discharged.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Allen & Overy; Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

K. R. A. H.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

* WRIGHT v. BOYCE (INSPECTOR OF TAXES).

1958
Mar. 5, 6.

Vaisey J.

Revenue — Income tax — Employment — Perquisites or profits — Professional huntsman—Whether gifts received from hunt followers and others at Christmas time part of remuneration—Whether such gifts taxable—Income Tax Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 10), s. 156, Sch. E, paras. 1 and 2; Sch. 9, Rules applicable to Sch. E, r. 1.

W. was a professional huntsman and was engaged by the master and was responsible to him. As senior hunt servant W.'s duties involved the feeding and care of the hounds and the management of the kennels, and he was responsible for controlling the hounds in the field. W.'s appointment was made orally, and at the time nothing was said about Christmas gifts. Voluntary gifts were made to W. at Christmas time, both in cash and in kind, by followers of the hunt and persons interested in it, but although it was found that many donors were influenced by their personal regard for W., that regard had its origin in the way in which he performed his duties. W. was assessed to income tax under Schedule E in respect of those gifts made in cash, and on appeal the special commissioners held that such gifts (other than those given by persons not connected with the hunt) were taxable since they accrued to him by way of his employment. On appeal:—

Held, that such gifts were taxable since they accrued to W. by reason of his employment as huntsman and could not be considered as presents or testimonials.

Moorhouse v. Dooland [1955] Ch. 284; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 96; [1955] 1 All E.R. 93; 36 T.C. 1 applied.

[Reported by M. B. KELLY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

1958

WRIGHT
v.
BOYCE
(INSPECTOR OF TAXES).

CASE STATED by the Commissioners for the Special Purposes of the Income Tax Acts.

Joseph Wright, a huntsman, of Brigstock near Kettering, Northants, appealed to the special commissioners against assessments to income tax under Schedule E made upon him in respect of gifts made to him in the form of cash presents at Christmas time by members and followers of the hunt as follows: additional assessments in respect of gratuities only, 1948–49 £200; 1949–50 £200; first assessments, 1950–51 £341; 1951–52 £353; 1952–53 £583; 1953–54 £709; 1954–55 £658. The question for the determination of the court as stated by the special commissioners was whether certain sums received by Wright were taxable emoluments of his employment. Wright had been successively huntsman of the Bathurst and the Woodland Pytchley, and it was contended on his behalf that the sums involved which were given to him at Christmas time by hunt members and followers were not taxable emoluments. On behalf of the Inland Revenue it was contended that the sums were a profit accruing to Wright by reason of his employment as huntsman and were properly assessable to tax. The special commissioners dismissed his appeal, having found that, apart from certain gifts in kind and gifts which came to Wright from persons not connected with the hunt by which he was employed during the relevant years under consideration, most gifts came to Wright because he was employed as huntsman, and accrued to him by virtue of his employment as such, notwithstanding that the givers were influenced by personal regard for Wright, such personal regard having its origin in the way in which he carried out his duties as huntsman. Wright appealed.

H. B. Magnus Q.C. and R. A. Watson for the appellant.
Cyril King Q.C. and Alan Orr for the Crown.

The case referred to in the judgment was cited in argument.

VAISEY J. This is a case which comes before the court by way of an appeal from the decision of the special commissioners assessing for tax under Schedule E the appellant Mr. Joseph Wright. The assessments were made in respect of the appellant's emoluments as a huntsman, first to the Bathurst Hunt and later to the Woodland Pytchley Hunt. The question is whether in those emoluments there ought to be included certain sums of money which Wright received at or about Christmas time in each of the years in question. The amounts are not great, but the point which is raised is not easy. This is the latest of many decisions on a similar point.

The Bathurst Hunt, which operates in the South of Gloucestershire and North of Wiltshire, has no written rules. Its hounds and kennels are owned by Lord Bathhurst, and he appoints the master. There is a hunt club which is a social club without funds, and I do not think anything turns on it. There is a committee, and the committee guarantees to the master a sum of money which goes towards his working expenses or the working expenses of the hunt. The Woodland Pytchley Hunt, which operates in Northamptonshire, again has no written rules. The master is elected by a committee which represents subscribers, farmers and landowners, and there is an annual general meeting at which persons who contribute more than a certain sum are invited, together with certain landowners and farmers who are concerned and interested.

In the case of both hunts it appears that the hunstman is engaged by the master and is under the master's orders, and his principal duties are to be responsible for the feeding of the hounds, management of the pack and the kennels and, as the case somewhat naively states, "finding foxes and getting the hounds on to "them." There is no doubt (it is found as a fact and it is no doubt a truism) that the success of the hunt is largely dependent on the huntsman's abilities. The appellant had been a hunt servant since boyhood. He was engaged as huntsman with the Bathurst Hunt in 1946 orally at an interview, and at that interview nothing was said about Christmas presents or Boxing day presents or tips or anything of that kind. He was told the terms of his employment, which I suppose included the terms of his salary, and the same thing happened when, in 1952, he left the service of the Bathurst Hunt and was engaged as huntsman to the Woodland Pytchley Hunt. Again, at the time of his appointment, which was by word of mouth, nothing was said about tips or presents.

The commissioners find that in each year when the appellant was huntsman to the Bathurst Hunt and the Woodland Pytchley Hunt he received presents of cash at or about Christmas time. Some of them came from persons with whom he had come into contact in his capacity as a hunt servant earlier in his career but who had no connexion with the hunt with which he was huntsman at the time the presents were given. These people were few in number and most of the presents of cash given to the appellant at Christmas or on Boxing Day came from people with whom he was at the time in contact in his capacity as huntsman. Such persons would mostly be people who regularly rode in the hunt but would also include persons who occasionally rode and persons who did not ride but had an interest in the hunt. Many of those were personal friends of the appellant, who, in his capacity of huntsman, had become a personality of some note to a wide circle of people in the district, not only to people who hunt but also to people who voluntarily assist in the work of the kennels, to farmers and people who attend meets on foot. He also got presents in kind from farmers. I gather from that, although the word is not used, that Wright was a very popular as well as a very successful huntsman.

The commissioners find these facts: "It is a widespread "custom in hunts in most parts of the country (including the

1958

WRIGHT
v.
BOYCE (INSPECTOR OF TAXES).

Vaisey J.

"Bathurst and Woodland Pytchley Hunts) for followers of the "hunt to give the huntsman presents of cash at Christmas time, "and the usual occasion for the gifts is the meet on Boxing Day. "The custom is one of long standing and well known to people "who hunt" (including, if I may say so, obviously the appellant himself) "and soon becomes known to people who take up hunt-"ing. There is no compulsion on followers of the hunt to give "such presents nor (in the case of the Bathurst and Woodland "Pytchley Hunts) was any form of circular or reminder given to "followers about it, or any organized collection or cap, either on "Boxing Day or at any other time. There is no conventional "amount to give; a person would give a larger amount if he "liked or respected the appellant, or a smaller one or none at "all if he disliked him. About half of the persons riding at the "Boxing Day meet would give the appellant a present (where "several members of the same family were riding, the appellant "generally receives one present from the head of the family "only); some people (particularly those who could not attend the "Boxing Day meet) give the appellant a present before or after "Boxing Day; if, however, there is no meet on Boxing Day the "appellant does not receive many presents. For example in one "year when hunting was stopped by frost from October to "February and in another year when the appellant was prevented "by illness from hunting during the Christmas season he received "very few presents of cash."

Pausing there, it was opened to me, and I have no doubt it is the fact, that in addition to the presents of cash Wright was accustomed to receive presents in kind—a box of cigars, or a bottle of whisky, or a bottle of port, or a couple of pheasants; I do not know what; but at any rate not in cash. Those presents in kind do not come into this case at all. No claim is made by the Crown for treating those presents or the value of them as a taxable interest in the hands of Wright; but his contention was that the sums in question were not taxable as emoluments of his employment as huntsman, and that the assessments under appeal should be reduced accordingly. In other words, his submission and contention before me is that these were not part of his income at all; they were not remuneration, they were not pay, they were not salary or accretion either of pay or salary; they were testimonials or presents. Drawing the line between those types of things received is not a very easy task.

The inspector of taxes, on the other hand, before the commissioners, stated or urged that the sums in question were a profit accruing to the appellant by reason of his employment as huntsman and were properly assessable to income tax under Schedule E.

We now come to the finding of the commissioners. They found, after considering the evidence, that, with the exception of the gifts which I will mention in a moment, the sums of money in question came to the appellant because he was employed as huntsman, and accrued to him by virtue of his employment, and they say that in coming to that conclusion they did not overlook the fact that in the case of many of the sums the giver was influenced to some extent by personal regard for the appellant, but they found that such personal regard had its origin in the way in which the appellant personally performed his duties as huntsman. The gifts which were found to be not liable to tax are the amounts which are excluded from the assessment as those which came from persons who had no connexion with the hunt with which the appellant was employed in the relevant years. In other words, they say that no tax should be paid on presents which came from old friends.

It is difficult for me to express my own conclusions in terms which are completely accurate, having regard to the many authorities on this subject; but as I understand the matter, if these sums were received not merely because Wright was a huntsman and because, being a huntsman, he came in contact with a good many people who enjoyed hunting or joined in the hunting, that is not enough. The question is: Do they come to him by virtue of his office? That is to say, are they linked up with his office as distinct from his personality that they must fairly be regarded not as mere presents, not as mere gifts, but as contributions to what he was paid, looked at from his own point of view, from the point of view of those who made the gifts and from the point of view of the taxing authorities?

The most recent case on this kind of point was the case of Moorhouse v. Dooland.[1] That was the case of a cricket club professional who, under the terms of his employment, was permitted to have collections made for him in respect of any meritorious performance on the cricket field. The judgments of Harman J. in the court below and of the members of the Court of Appeal contain many statements as to the law applicable to this subject to which I have referred. I, personally, find much guidance from the statement of principles which were enunciated by Jenkins L.J. in that case. Jenkins L.J. said this[2]: "(i) The test of "liability to tax on a voluntary payment made to the holder of an "office or employment is whether, from the standpoint of the "person who receives it, it accrues to him by virtue of his office "or employment, or in other words by way of remuneration for "his services. (ii) If the recipient's contract of employment "entitles him to receive the voluntary payment" [as was obviously the case here] "whatever it may amount to, that is a "ground, and I should say a strong ground, for holding that, from "the standpoint of the recipient, it does accrue to him by virtue "of his employment, or in other words, by way of remuneration "for his services. (iii) The fact that the voluntary payment is of

[1] [1955] Ch. 284; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 96; [1955] 1 All E.R. 93; 36 T.C. 1.

[2] [1955] Ch. 284, 303.

1958

Wright v. Boyce (Inspector of Taxes).

Vaisey J.

"a periodic or recurrent character affords a further, but I should "say a less cogent, ground for the same conclusion. (iv) On the "other hand, a voluntary payment may be made in circumstances "which show that it is given by way of present or testimonial "on grounds personal to the recipient, as, for example, a collection "made for the particular individual who is at the time vicar of a "given parish because he is in straitened circumstances."

The question of law which is now before me is: In view of the facts herein set out, are the sums in question assessable to income tax under Schedule E? I do not think that it is necessary for me to cite Schedule E at length, but what Schedule E says is that tax (that is to say, income tax under that Schedule) "shall "be charged in respect of every public office or employment of "profit or in respect of any stipend," leaving out the words that do not apply, "payable out of the revenue by the Crown." Then, in the second paragraph, it says: "Tax under this Schedule shall "also be charged in respect of any office, employment or pension "the profit or gains arising or accruing from which would be "chargeable to tax under Schedule D but for the proviso of para-"graph 1 of that Schedule," which throws us back to Schedule E, but I do not think that I need refer to that. Then in the Ninth Schedule, which contains rules applicable to Schedule E, we have these words: "Tax under Schedule E shall be annually charged "on every person having or exercising an office or employment "of profit," again leaving out some words which are not material, "in respect of all salaries, fees, wages, perquisites or "profits whatsoever therefrom for the year of assessment," after making certain deductions.

What I have to decide is: Were these payments, this collection made on Boxing Day or thereabouts in favour of Wright, part of the fees, wages, perquisites or profits arising from his employment?—because they did not come from the person employing him, either the master or the committee of the hunt; they came from sympathizing supporters of the hunt, and no doubt also largely from personal friends. Considering the matter from the unsympathetic point of view of everybody having to pay tax on what they earn, Wright really earned as huntsman of these two hunts successively first of all his salary and secondly the customary collection which is made for him at Christmas or Boxing Day. The special commissioners, having seen Wright and having very carefully set out the circumstances under which he was employed and under which he was remunerated, came to the conclusion that these sums were not mere presents nor mere testimonials. I pause to observe that a testimonial, of course, indicates some special matter which has to be commemorated, either making a large score at cricket or some other special performance of a duty it may be, or at any rate on some special occasion such as a birthday or wedding and so forth, and I cannot regard these payments as testimonials, nor, I think, in the strict sense are they gifts. Mr. Magnus, who has said everything that could possibly be said for the appellant in this case, points out that many of them came from people who were personal friends of Wright and indeed perhaps all of them came from people who could call themselves friends, although the degree of friendship must have been somewhat variable. Still, he got them not merely because he was huntsman. Of course, if he had never been huntsman he would not have been there; he would not have been dressed up as huntsman at the meet and therefore the occasion of his receiving presents would never have arisen but for the fact that he was huntsman. That is not the way to look at it, I think. The way to look at it is: Is it part of what resulted by virtue of his being huntsman, that is to say, because of his performance of his duties as huntsman?

I think that, so regarded, the findings of the special commissioners were correct, though I regret the result in this case, just as I have regretted it in the past in the cases of a clergyman's Easter offerings, because it is very much against the wishes of those who made the presents that Wright should have to pay tax on them instead of taking them and treating them as spending money without deduction. I have no doubt that they would say that that was the last thing they wanted, just as the last thing that an ordinary contributor who gives an Easter offering to a clergyman wishes is that it should be depleted by the requirements of the Revenue.

I say that with, I hope, a not improper feeling of regret but undoubtedly a strong feeling of regret, that sums which were never contemplated as being taxable profits or taxable income of that sort have to be so treated on the authority of the very large number of cases that have been decided on this point. If the parson has to pay on his Easter offering and if the taxi driver has to pay on his tips and if the waiters have to pay on their tips from the customers and in other cases (I need not mention other kinds of employment), I feel bound to hold that these sums were assessable to income tax. I uphold these assessments and dismiss this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Withers & Co.; Solicitor, Inland Revenue.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

* Ex parte NATIONAL COAL BOARD.

1958
May 6.
Roxburgh J.

[1957 N. 1056.]

Mines and Minerals—Coal—Working—Application by National Coal Board for leave to work—Delay of months through extension of time to objectors to file evidence—Application for interim order to expedite working—Expense caused by delay—"National interest"—Jurisdiction to make interim order—Form of order—Mines

1958

NATIONAL COAL BOARD, Ex parte.

(Working Facilities and Support) Act, 1923 (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 20), s. 1—Railway and Canal Commission (Abolition) Act, 1949 (12, 13 & 14 Geo. 6, c. 11), s. 1 (1) (a)—R.S.C., Ord. 54o.

In 1957 the National Coal Board, at a time when it was working certain areas which it had a right to work and, in course of so doing, was approaching others which it had possibly no such right, made, under the Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Act, 1923,[1] an application to work the latter, which, because of extensions of time for evidence by objectors, could not be heard before October, 1958. In May, 1958, the board applied for an interim order giving leave to continue its workings on the grounds (i) that not to continue them would involve it in great expense, and (ii) that it would be contrary to the national interest for it to have to discontinue the workings merely because of the impracticability of getting the application of 1957 heard before the long vacation of 1958. No objections were lodged by interested parties, who had been notified:—

Held, in upholding the board's contentions and making the order asked, that the court had jurisdiction to make the order under R.S.C., Ord. 54o.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

An application was made by the National Coal Board for an interim order under the Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Act, 1923, for an interim order, pending the hearing by the court of an original application by the board, granting the board certain rights of letting down surfaces and of searching for and working coal. The original application was under the same Act by originating summons dated September 13, 1957. It was for the right to let down certain lands and work certain seams in the neighbourhoods of Stoke-on-Trent and Newcastle-under-Lyme: and the present application was for liberty to work certain small portions of those lands and to let down surfaces, subject to terms of compensation to be determined on the hearing of the main application. The master referred that application to the Chancery Division and the summons was taken out on September 13, 1957, asking

[1] Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Act, 1923, s. 1: "(1) Where "there is danger of minerals being "left permanently unworked—(a) by "reason of the minerals being com-"prised in or lying under land which "is or has been copyhold land, or land "subject to a lease exception reserva-"tion restriction covenant or condi-"tion, or otherwise not being capable "of being worked without the concur-"rence of two or more persons . . . a "right to work the minerals may be "conferred in the manner and subject "to the provisions hereinafter appear-"ing on any person having an interest "in them, or, in the case of minerals "owned in small parcels, in minerals "adjacent to them, who is desirous of "working them either by himself or "through his lessees."

Railway and Canal Commission (Abolition) Act, 1949, s. 1: "(1) The "Railway and Canal Commission . . . "shall cease to exist, and the func-"tions which immediately before the "commencement of this Act were "functions of the Commission shall— "(a) so far as they extend to England "and Wales, be exercised and per-"formed by the High Court . . ."

R.S.C., Ord. 54o, r. 1: "Applica-"tions under any enactment which "are referred to the High Court pur-"suant to section 1 (1) (a) of the "Railway and Canal Commission "(Abolition) Act, 1949, shall be made "in the Chancery Division by ex "parte originating summons."

R. 12: "The ordinary practice "and rules of the Chancery Division "so far as they are not inconsistent "with this Order shall apply to pro-"ceedings under this Order."

for the grant of specified rights. The master made the usual form of order requiring any objectors to give notice on or before December 19, 1957, and requiring the board to file an affidavit giving particulars of those notices on or before January 21, 1958. On January 2, 1958, the board filed an affidavit listing 85 objectors who had given notice and 10 more received out of time, and on January 21, 1958, the master ordered that all 95 be at liberty to enter appearances. Seventy-five did so and 65 of those obtained an extension of time to file their evidence until May 9, and later 50 asked for a further extension until July 9. The board had proceeded with all due diligence. The main application was not likely to be heard for a considerable time. At the date of this application the board had until July 11 in which to reply. The objectors were certain to ask for further time and there was no likelihood of getting the main application on before the long vacation. The objectors were not saying that the board had no right to work the coal. Their objections were rather to methods, or they were wanting more compensation than the board was offering, e.g., consequential damages. At the time of the main application the board was working seams which it had a right to work but the work was progressing towards an area where the right was in doubt or the board had not got it. The board was going to come up against two areas in mid-May and mid-July respectively, and took out this present summons on February 25, 1958. On March 12 the master directed service on seven persons or bodies whom he thought to be affected by the workings. On April 10 the board filed an affidavit showing the number served. Six wrote saying that they did not object. The seventh did not reply.

The present application was made because it would have been very expensive for the board and contrary to the national interest to suspend working just because the original application could not be heard for some months.

The form of order asked for and made is set out at length in his Lordship's judgment.

Sir Andrew Clark Q.C. and J. C. Leonard for the board. If there is any doubt as to the jurisdiction to make the interim order asked for, that doubt is set at rest by R.S.C., Ord. 54o, which clearly enables the court to make it.

ROXBURGH J. This is an application for an interim order under the Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Act, 1923, and is so straightforward that I should not have given reasons for my judgment had I not understood that it is the first case, at any rate since the matter was transferred to the Chancery Division, in which there has been a separate application for an interim order.

That there is jurisdiction to entertain such an application seems quite clear. There is no specific reference to interim applications in the Act or in the rules, which are in Order 540 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, but rule 12, at the end of that Order, provides: "The ordinary practice and rules of the "Chancery Division so far as they are not inconsistent with this "Order shall apply to proceedings under this Order." That seems to me plainly to imply that there is jurisdiction to make interim orders where the circumstances so require.

1958

National Coal Board, Ex parte.

Roxburgh J.

I am not going to state the facts at length. The original application, for an order applying to an extensive area, is one by which 60 or 70 people consider themselves to be affected, mainly in connexion with compensation. The present application relates, however, only to a minute portion of that area, and the urgency of the matter is that, having regard to the multiplicity of the objections and the weight of the evidence, which is still being filed, the original application clearly cannot be determined for many months, and meanwhile the workings have come so near to these two small areas that it is quite plain that not only would it cause the National Coal Board a great deal of expense to suspend working, but it would be contrary to the national interest that working should be suspended merely because of the difficulty of getting the case heard at an earlier date than is practicable.

The two areas affected, minute as they are, have been very carefully considered by the board and by the master, and everybody who appears to have any conceivable interest in resisting the application has been notified and given an opportunity of appearing to oppose it. The numbers of persons or bodies of persons who were thought to be possibly affected—and some of them clearly are affected—were seven. The board thought that there were five and the master added two more. Of those seven persons, six have consented, in letters which I have read, to the making of the order which I propose to make. The seventh, a body, has not availed itself of the opportunity of either appearing before me or writing a letter, and obviously is, therefore, in effect, acquiescing. Even if it did not acquiesce, in point of fact I should have no hesitation in granting the application on the evidence which I have read.

I would not have given my reasons for my judgment but for this application being, apparently, the first of its kind. The matter is clearly urgent, it is in the national interest that the order sought should be made, and every possible person concerned has had an opportunity of objecting. I cannot see what more could be expected to have been done.

